From the sweat-slicked walls of jam-packed queer spaces, to the expansive stages of Europe's biggest festivals, from the pages of Gay Times to the Chanel catwalk, from Berlin, to New York, to her London home, Elkka's beat opens up entire worlds.

Her 2024 debut album Prism of Pleasure was a proclamation of the creative values that the Cardiff-born artist has diligently crafted over a decade. Those same values that make her an all-feeling, genre-oscillating producer, DJ, label boss and founder of her own steamy FLINTA*-focused party: PRISM.

Inviting the likes of of BELLA, FAFF, LOVEFOXY, Fancy Shews, PRISM is unapologetically for the gxrls and if this wasn't clear enough you'll regularly hear Elkka jumping on the mic to say so as the parties reach their crescendo.

From the start, Elkka has pieced together her identity slowly and curiously. Building on early pop obsessions and sacking off the 'safe route' for life by dropping out of university to play and dance around London's queer club scene in her 20s, she has embedded herself in an ecosystem of women, non-binary, and queer artists. Today can regularly be found either in the booth or on the dancefloor of parties like Shoot Your Shot, Feel It, and the legendary Club Are, where she holds a residency for 2026.

As a DJ, she's known for galvanizing the clubbers on the barriers with free-wheeling but taut-feeling sets that travel from buzzing Detroit techno to recontextualized pop, Chicago and New York house classics and a through-line of queer defiance. Those that don't recognise dancer music roots tend to leave Elkka's sets having learned a valuable lesson. Her mixes, like the 2023 DJ-Kicks and her Radio 1 residency keep up that spirit, with her Essential Mix bagging Mix of the Year in 2021 against the likes of Ben UFO and Overmono.
