WIC has been shown to positively influence a mother’s decision to breastfeed. In particular, breastfeeding peer counselor support has been shown to be effective in improving the breastfeeding initiation and duration rates of low-income women in the WIC Program and of women overall.

As the nation’s premier public health nutrition program, WIC is a cost-effective, sound investment—insuring the health of our children.

References