NAVIGATING WIC ADVOCACY
Advocacy is a broad term that encompasses various forms of engagement. Understanding the different types of advocacy will help you determine the type of advocacy that you feel most appropriate and comfortable engaging with.

Some forms of advocacy include, but are not limited to:
- Public education
- Media outreach
- Direct lobbying
- Grassroots lobbying
- Partisan political activity
- Litigation

PUBLIC EDUCATION
Public education of WIC through in-person forums, press events, and social media can elevate the successes of a WIC clinic and inform both the public and policymakers about the importance of WIC. These activities alone do not amount to lobbying.

Public education is a form of advocacy. It is not lobbying.

ADVOCACY TOOLKIT: WHEN ADVOCACY BECOMES LOBBYING

LOBBYING
Lobbying is a type of advocacy that intends to influence the outcome of specific legislation. The First Amendment guarantees your constitutional right to lobby in a personal capacity; however, you may want to assess your professional capacity and workplace policies beforehand.

According to federal law, there are two forms of lobbying.
- Direct lobbying is an individual’s attempt to influence a policymaker on a specific proposal.
- Grassroots lobbying is an individual’s attempt to mobilize others to influence a policymaker on a specific proposal.

All lobbying is advocacy, but not all advocacy is lobbying.

Under the federal definition, there are three elements that determine whether advocacy activity rises to the level of lobbying:

1. The advocacy must be in communication with a federal legislator or government official or employee in charge of developing the legislation/policy or with the general public that encourages the recipient to take action to contact a legislator or government official or employee;
2. The advocacy must refer to specific legislation or measures in a piece of legislation; and
3. The advocacy must reflect a view on that legislation.
