

USDA AMS Weekly Shell Egg Demand Indicator

(Calculated estimate of demand for shell eggs based on current production and on inventory clearance rate.)

December 10, 2025

The Shell Egg Demand Indicator for this week is -6.10, down 10.4 points from last week.

This Week:

Shell eggs demand declines from Thanksgiving levels ahead of the coming December demand season. Wholesale prices for negotiated trading of loose caged eggs are unchanged with a weak undertone as demand for carton stock is moderate to good and that for loose eggs is in a wide range. Offerings and supplies are moderate to heavy and trading is slow. Wholesale prices for formula trading of carton stock are lower on reduced demand for sufficient offerings. Wholesale breaking stock prices are lower on light to very light demand for light offerings. Supplies are moderate to fully adequate, schedules full to extended, and trading is slow. The preliminary survey of retail outlets indicates a reduced pace of featuring of caged eggs with an increase in the average ad price on the limited test.
