Disclosure Materials

Certified B Corporations must complete a Disclosure Questionnaire to identify potentially sensitive issues related to the company (e.g. historical fines, sanctions, material litigation, or sensitive industry practices).

This component does not affect the company's score on the B Impact Assessment. If the company answers affirmatively to any items in the Disclosure Questionnaire that B Lab deems relevant for public stakeholders, then, as a condition of their certification, the company must:

- Be transparent about details of the disclosure issues identified on the company's public B Impact Report
- 2) Describe how the company has addressed this issue
- 3) Demonstrate that management practices are in place to avoid similar issues from arising in the future, when necessary.

In all cases, the Standards Advisory council reserves the right to refuse certification if the company is ultimately deemed not to uphold the spirit and integrity of the community.

In addition to the voluntary indication of sensitive issues in the Disclosure Questionnaire, companies pursuing Certification also are subject to a background check by B Lab staff. Background checks include a review of public records, news sources, and search engines for company names, brands, executives/founders, and other relevant topics.

Sensitive issues identified through background checks may or may not be within the scope of questions in the Disclosure Questionnaire, but undergo the same review process and are subject to the same possible review by the Standards Advisory Council, including ineligibility for B Corp Certification, required remediation, or disclosure.

Topic	Negative PR results
Summary of Issue	Blueland is a New York-based company that specializes in providing eco-friendly cleaning and personal care products.
	Results of the Background Check resulted in articles challenging some of Blueland products' environmental benefits claims and classifications. Blueland was challenged by The Clorox Company, maker of competing cleaning products. This challenge involved claims for some of the company's products which are designed to eliminate the need for single-use plastic by replacing some of the items, traditionally sold in disposable plastic bottles, with reusable bottles and dry replacement tablets. Clorox challenged the claims that Blueland's bottles are "Forever Bottles."
	The National Advertising Division (NAD) determined that in the context of the advertising at issue, consumers will understand the term to mean that the bottles can be used over and over again, provided that they are used as intended and with reasonable care. The NAD concluded that Blueland's use of the term "forever" to describe its bottles did not convey a misleading message.
	The NAD also determined that Blueland substantiated the claims that its tablet wrappers were both biodegradable and compostable. However, it has recommended that Blueland discontinue the claim "every piece of packaging – from our tablet wrapper, shipping materials, our Forever Bottles – is 100% recyclable," because these claims were not supported. The NAD recommended that Blueland modify its recyclability claims to clarify that, in the instances in which a Forever Bottle fails, it is only recyclable through Blueland's take-back program.
	None of these claims represented litigation, arbitration, class actions, or formal regulatory complaints against Blueland.
Impact on Stakeholders	Misleading advertisement claims can affect consumer product choices.
Implemented Management Practices	Blueland has updated its customer service FAQs to remove the 100% recyclability claim as well as expound on how the Forever

	Bottle can be effectively recycled.  Further, Blueland has revised its advertising materials to more clearly distinguish between its hand soap and spray cleaner products.
