

DISCLOSURE MATERIALS

Certified B Corporations must complete a Disclosure Questionnaire to identify potentially sensitive issues related to the company (e.g. historical fines, sanctions, material litigation, or sensitive industry practices).

This component does not affect the company's score on the B Impact Assessment. If the company answers affirmatively to any items in the Disclosure Questionnaire and B Lab deems them to be material, the company must:

- 1) Be transparent about the disclosure issues identified on the company's public B Impact Report
- 2) Describe how the company has addressed this issue.
- 3) Demonstrate that management systems are in place to avoid similar issues from arising in the future.

In all cases, the Standards Advisory council reserves the right to refuse certification if the company is ultimately deemed not to uphold the spirit of the community.

In addition to the voluntary indication of sensitive issues in the Disclosure Questionnaire, companies pursuing Certification also are subject to background checks by B Lab staff. Background checks include a review of public records, news sources, and search engines for company names, brands, executives/founders, and other relevant topics.

Sensitive issues identified through background checks may or may not be within the scope of questions in the Disclosure Questionnaire, but undergo the same review process and are subject to the same possible review by the Standards Advisory Council, including ineligibility for B Corp Certification, required remediation, or disclosure.

This document contains a copy of the company's completed Disclosure Questionnaire and related disclosure documentation provided by the company.

IMPLEMENTED MGT PRACTICES	AB5 Consulting was 1 of 14 successful companies that have been awarded contracts by the UK government and the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority to come up with innovative approaches to remotely sort and segregate radioactive waste. The company provides services to their stakeholder clients to ensure the safe, secure and sustainable storage and disposal of radioactive materials. They achieve this through the use of innovative technologies and work at alternative source of nuclear power (fusion). Radioactive materials are mainly used for medical purpose, then for academic research, industrial purpose and energy production. For instance, the food sector uses radiation for safety purpose (elimination of bacterias). In energy production, nuclear fusion produces energy by the fusion of atoms, while nuclear fission produces energy by the fission of atoms. In terms of certification and safety checks, the company work with academics (such as the Italian National Institute of Nuclear Physics) to validate their safety processes, and they abide by the UK Nuclear Decommissioning Authority rules, whose nr. 1 priority is safety. They use technology and promote the use of technology to improve safety and security even further. AB5 has been an advisor to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to develop regulations for the safe transport of radioactive materials for instance, including in emerging countries, where medical and research devices need to be properly managed. AB5 is a member of the UK Nuclear Industry Association, UK Nuclear Institute, to ensure they get regular updates on safety regulations and general industry context. They take stakeholders' engagement very seriously and work with the nuclear bodies in the UK to ensure their actions are transparent and always benefit the safety, security of the public. The activities AB5 has been engaged so far are in paper form, as feasibility studies and advice to national or international entities such as the UK Nuclear Decommissioning Authority.
	While the company recognises that no process is risk free, their stakeholders have a robust risk management system. They have implemented methods and double checks for their solutions. They also claim to have created a positive impact by reducing the human interaction with the radioactive materials. The risk mainly lies with having an automated system but tests have been put in place to ensure they remain within regulations and protect mankind and the environment. There have been no instances of negative impacts as a result of our consulting services for nuclear power, radioactive materials or hazardous waste.
