These stories are worth a click:

Frenchie Winery is the first of its kind to cater to a canine clientele. The vineyard has its own wine series, which is decorated with images of the proprietor's French bulldog, and even hosts a tasting bar for dogs that dispenses water. —Huffington Post

A show dog worth $27,000 has been reported stolen from its San Francisco home. The Great Dane, named Knight, could not have escaped its enclosure on its own or would not have left with someone it did not know, according to its owner. —CBS San Francisco

A Florida teacher could lose her job after students alleged she punished them by making them wear a pet collar used to keep animals from licking their wounds. The incident occurred with eight of her ninth-graders over two days in April. —USA Today

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is looking to change a loophole in an animal welfare law that allows for breeders who sell puppies over the Internet to scrape by without inspection. If the change goes through, Internet retailers will face the same scrutiny as in-person sellers. —AP
