

VISITING WINE COUNTRY IN SONOMA COUNTY WITH THE KIDS

July 5, 2018

By Joanna Mazewski, Taking the Kids Correspondent

The etiquette and rule of thumb when visiting wineries, breweries, or any establishment that serves alcohol is to leave the kids at home. Of course, the exception to that rule is if you happen to be somewhere in the Cotswolds in England, where pub life is family life. Luckily, on the West Coast and particularly in Sonoma County, California, that mentality is changing.

Paying a visit to the DeLoach vineyard winery

The DeLoach Winery, meanwhile, is yet another hidden gem near the Russian River Valley that welcomes family with small children. This might also be the one place that kids can learn about the organic wine making process and how local wineries are using cutting edge water conservation. Ask for a cellar tour along with a guided tour of the vineyards, sample rooms, and winemaking areas. The kids will be thrilled to get such a hands-on experience while mom and dad enjoy wine in an aesthetically pleasing atmosphere, with attractive bar areas, garden, and flowers everywhere. And mind you, the kids might even learn a word or two in French, too. Oui to vin!