Christmas greeting card design template

our favorites of the bad, the ugly and the totally weird. And if you feel inspired to create your own creation, you can always look at how to draw tutorials to help you on your way.01. Awkward smiles? Not? Then just bare your teeth (Image credit: Blairs)Many of us may seem something strange about sending a Christmas card with your picture on it, but it has long been a tradition among public figures – the first ever commercially produced card designed by civil servant Sir Henry Cole in 1843 depicted his own family, and family Christmas cards are a tradition in the US. The strangest thing about this 2014 card from former British Prime Minister Tony Blair and his wife Cherie is that apparently this shot, in which Cherie is seen holding her husband back from based on the photographer, was chosen as the best of the encounter. The comments on Twitter and his time ranged from strange to threatening, to terrifying.02.02. All Kardashian bling show there is no such thing as OTT at Christmas – click to see the card in all its glory (Image credit: David LaChappelle)The Kardashian-Jenner clan took family Christmas cards to typical OTT extremes with this 2013 bid, which cost a reported US$250,000 produce. The photo taken by David LaChappelle shows the family's women in black dresses, Kim in a revealing dress and Kris wearing a Metropolis-esque head, against a garish carnival backdrop decorated with neon lights, pop art, Olympic gold medals, dolls and graffiti to read fame, with magazines thrown in Rolling Stone on the floor showing Kanye West as Jesus for extra festive touch. She's hideous (or wonderfully) gaudy and perfectly captures the out-of-control consumerism of the season. The Santa rope descends the chimney into this scene (Image credit: Michele Fiore on Facebook)If Tony Blair's position looks aggressive on a Blairs 2014 card, it doesn't scare even half as much as this dose of festive cheer from Republican politician Michele Fiore a year later. Then a sitting member of the Nevada Legislature, Fiore embraced the American tradition of sending family self-portraits as Christmas cards by having his family dress in festive red and then pose with a terrifying arsenal of weapons in front of A Christmas bouquet apparently purchased to lay on Santa's grave. Even Fiore's grandson, then five, packs a semi-automatic gun. Fiore explained to Fox News: I think bringing firearms as a gift and giving weapons as gifts is a great gift, and I think again because Christmas is a family matter, our ultimate responsibility is to protect and make sure our family is safe. Ho ho ho!04! Random animals #InternationalCatDay the worst Christmas card in our collection. Perhaps the worst in the collection of each pic.twitter.com/3rXWR6d9QaAugust 8, 2017 Himmels feature strongly in the great Christmas tradition of greeting cards, from snow robins to airborne reindeer and penguins past the Arctic. So why not cats? The Library of Manchester Chetham thinks this card is the worst in their Edwardian collection and the choice of image looks as random as it is ugly, but, produced by Raphael Tuck and Sons in the early 1900s through artwork by French artist Maurice Bolanger, the randomness of the image and the message 'Splash with Loving Christmas Wishes' gives it a certain charm.05. Cringeworthy in-jokesHome a Christmas message from the Bake Off star (Image credit: @kimjoyskitchen on Twitter)There's nothing like appealing to popular culture for a few pop mentions and more Christmas puns and humour, like this delightful wish for the season from celebrity chef and TV presenter Paul Hollywood, a judge on The Great British Bake Off known for his appree for a damp fruitcake. It's so squirmy it's brilliant.06. Unfortunate compositionUmm... (Image credit: @PaulQPR on Twitter) As with any project, designers should pay attention to the composition, scale, color and juxtaposition of all design elements for the Christmas card. The snowman on this card sent by a company to its customers seems a little too excited about the upcoming holiday season. Read more: Themes Weihnachten mit HGTV Driver freut sich jeder!
