Transgender Student Wins Right To Walk With Chosen Name

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

BELLEVILLE – A transgender teenager recently won the right to be presented with his diploma in his chosen name rather than his birth name. Sebastian Newell, who attends Belleville High School, was initially told that while he could walk with the male students – Belleville High School separates male students and female students at its graduation ceremony – his diploma would have to be presented to him in the female name he had long left behind.

Newell was crestfallen. “I didn’t want to walk,” Newell told CBS Detroit. “I didn’t want to participate in commencement. Just walking with that kind of name that is associated with the opposite gender was terrifying. I don’t even feel comfortable when a substitute teacher says it out loud, so I can’t even imagine someone whispering it into a microphone in front of thousands of people.”

Michael Van Tassel, the Van Buren Schools superintendent, said that his decision was not a commentary on gender identity issues, but simply a matter of district policy, which states that a student must use their legal name.

“We have 400 students… and there is just no way that we can just read names off because somebody, for instance, has decided that they want to be called something different,” Van Tassel said in the CBS report.

Amid pressure and with permission from Newell’s parents, however, Van Tassel reversed his initial decision and agreed to let Newell graduate using his chosen name. Rachel Crandall, executive director of Transgender Michigan, said the superintendent made the right decision.

“He gender was never actually female,” Crandall explained. “His gender was always male. Forcing him to graduate as a woman would be forcing him to be something he really is not.” Crandall said that “respecting a person’s chosen name is really respecting them as a human being.”

Another trans activist, Transgender Detroit Executive Director Michelle Fox-Phillips, said the whole matter is really a non-issue.

“We have come a long way from the days when...” said Fox-Phillips. “But sexuality was not an open issue, even before the Stonewall riots in the 1960s. It did not go well with his old roommate in 1976 and 1977 when they lived in West Hollywood. Sadly, both of them died from AIDS.”

BY NORM KENT, PUBLISHER SFGN

On July 17, 2013, Major League Baseball held its 84th annual All Star Game at Citi Field in Queens, New York, the home park of the New York Mets. It was a day that would become special for the LGBTQ community.

On that afternoon, Bud Selig, then commissioner of MLB, challenged once and for all homophobia in the clubhouse. The commissioner held a press conference announcing that from that date forward it would be the policy of every major league club “to welcome all individuals regardless of sexual orientation into our ballparks.”

“Both on the field and away from it Major League Baseball has a zero-tolerance policy for harassment and discrimination based on sexual orientation,” Selig said.

It was nearly two years ago, and Selig declared that a workplace code of conduct “would be created and given to every player from the minor leagues on up. Training sessions and a centralized complaint system will also be instituted.”

The commissioner kept his word.

A year later, Selig would appoint a retired gay baseball player, Billy Bean, as a spokesperson for inclusion. Baseball’s non-discrimination policies are now posted in every locker room in all their leagues. The Park Avenue home of major league baseball has a fully staffed Office for Diversity.

John Rocker

We have come a long way from the afternoon in July of 1999 when John Rocker, the Atlanta Braves reliever, remarked to Sports Illustrated that he “could have played with AIDS right next to some dude who just got out of jail for the fourth time right next to some 20 year old mom with four kids,” he said.

He was excoriated for it even then. The remarks exemplified the homophobia that permeated the game.

Fifteen years later, John Rocker was a surprising representative for a new dawn. Last year, signing autographs in Cooperstown, New York, during Hall of Fame week, Rocker was a different person. He had just finished participating as a contestant in the popular TV show, “Survivor.”

“My ally and closest friend was a gay man and his partner,” he told SFGN.

Asked how he would feel today about gay athletes coming out in the clubhouse, Rocker remarked, “If a guy can hit my fastball, he should have a right to play. No one has a right to discriminate.”

Still, a lot of old timers have not jumped on the diversity bandwagon. When Hall of Famer Frank Robinson, 79 years old, and baseball’s first black manager, was questioned about Commissioner Selig’s initiative, he refused to comment on it.

In Cooperstown for the Hall of Fame ceremonies, he brusquely stated, “I am here just to sign autographs,” and ended the interview.

Glenn Burke

Glenn Burke played for the Los Angeles Dodgers and Oakland A’s in the late 70s and early 80s and was openly gay to his teammates, coaches and team owners. It did not go well with his old school manager, Tommy Lasorda. The tension became worse when Burke befriended Lasorda’s own gay son, who lived in West Hollywood. Sadly, both would eventually die of complications from AIDS.

Even today, Lasorda cannot talk easily about Tommy, Jr. But it did not stop him from setting up a memorial cancer foundation in his lad’s name.

He has evolved, too.

Lasorda, a fierce competitor and Hall of Famer, told SFGN, “I would start anyone in my lineup who could take two, single to right field and help me win a game.”

Many other retired players echo that thought. Tommy Davis, who in the 1960s played on over 10 teams in his career all over the country said, “First of all, you play to win. You form a brotherhood based on the talents teammates bring to the field, not to the bedroom.”

But sexuality was not an open issue, “back in the day.”

Terry Collins today is the manager of the New York Mets. He is a personal friend who coached me when I played for 20 years as a member of the Los Angeles Dodgers senior baseball fantasy teams in Vero Beach, Florida.

Collins was also Glenn Burke’s roommate in 1976 and 1977 when they both played for the Dodgers.

“Glenn was troubled even then, but the organization did not have any reach out programs in that era,” Collins recalled.

See MLB: Billy Bean, next page

This year, Terry Collins’ Mets were amongst a host of major and minor league teams that held clubhouse and locker room presentations highlighting diversity and LGBT inclusion in the sport. They were moderated by Billy Bean, a one time Los Angeles Dodger himself and former Detroit Tiger.

Extended briefs are available online at:

www.PrideSource.com
In fact, at the time, the Dodgers, the very same team that had broken the color barrier in baseball 30 years earlier, were so homophobic they offered Glenn Burke $75,000 to get married to a woman to cover up his homosexuality.

He declined.

Billy Bean

This year, Terry Collins’ Mets were amongst a host of major and minor league teams that held clubhouse and locker room presentations highlighting diversity and LGBT inclusion in the sport. They were moderated by Billy Bean, a one time Los Angeles Dodger himself and former Detroit Tiger.

“I have to look forward to a new generation of athletes who are much more receptive to inclusion than we experienced years ago,” said Bean, who came out in 1999 after he retired. “I can’t focus on past mistakes. I have to create new opportunities for today’s players, create a new vision we can aspire to.”

Bean used to live in South Beach and play softball in local gay leagues. He relocated to Southern California to continue his real estate career, after a short run with a Miami Beach restaurant. Today, though, Bean is busier touring minor and major league clubhouses and administrative offices, championing the former commissioner’s vision of inclusion.

Bean has been given a new life and new career, one not measured by balls and strikes, but by spirit and energy. He has brought that passion across the country, from the Rookie Career Development Program to diversity symposiums nationally.

“My goal is to create a conversation that is inclusive and accepting, and focus on that,” he recently told SFGN. He added, “Hate is not a virtue.”

It still isn’t easy.

“It’s not a lifestyle I agree with,” said Mets second baseman, Daniel Murphy, who identified himself as a devout Christian. Nevertheless, Murphy added it was nice to meet with Billy Bean. “You get to meet the man, not the stereotype.”

‘Out’ Executives

There was good reason for Selig to act. In September of 2012, Kevin McClatchy, the owner and CEO of the Pittsburgh Pirates from 1996 to 2007, came out of the closet to The New York Times, saying frequent homophobic excommunicated “outcast,” living homeless on the streets of San Francisco.

“It’s something that was wrong then, and never should have happened,” Alderson told the Wall Street Journal in March. “And it can’t ever happen again.”

Billy Bean added, “I know I won’t get everyone to be on the same page. Many of the older coaches come from a different generation set in their ways. And I know my work is not going to be a walk in the park, but it’s my responsibility to rise to the challenge and make it better for the next generation of major leaguers.”

Bean’s own personal journey was made into a video last month, and released on the baseball channel.

“I was humbled,” he said. “It brought back tough moments and rough reminders of the way things once were for me. But this new task gives me a chance to promote self-acceptance and change things. My heart and soul are in it.”

Outreach Outside of Baseball

Today, Major League Baseball is not the first sport to become inclusive and reach out to the LGBT community. The National Hockey League and its players’ association have initiated the “You Can Play” Project, to promote LGBT outreach and bring an end to bullying.

Its founder, Philadelphia Flyers scout, Patrick Burke, claims the NHL has set the standard for professional sports. His own son, a young gay college student, was killed in an automobile accident in 2010.

NHL commissioner, Gary Bettman, wholeheartedly supported Burke’s initiative. “Hockey is for everyone,” he said. “The official policy of the NHL is one of inclusion on the ice, in our locker room and in the stands.”

Representatives of all the major league sports were present in Palm Beach Gardens last October for the PGA’s third annual “Sports Diversity and Inclusion Symposium.”

The PGA of America is the host of a group whose partners include the U.S Olympic Committee, NBA, NFL, NCAA, NASCAR and MLB. The event was designed to recognize, celebrate and encourage diversification in the world of sport.

Cyd Zeigler, the founder and operator of OutSports.com, was one of the presenters. “LGBT organizational policies and practices” was one of the panel discussions. As baseball’s Lewis has stated, the era of inclusiveness in professional sports has not only begun, it is here to stay.

Whatever may have been in the past, Major League Baseball is finally at bat and in the game, from sending representatives to the LGBT Sports Coalition last year in Portland, Oregon, to Brian Cashman, the General Manager of the New York Yankees, reaching out this past summer to LGBT at-risk youth in a New York City social services agency.

LGBT Nights At MLB Stadiums

Baseball may have been late to the game, but more than a dozen teams also now have LGBT nights, none more popular than in Wrigley Field where a lesbian, Donna Ricketts, is one of the owners. Even before her family bought the Cubs team, Ricketts was a fund raising executive who led a Super PAC that has a mission to end discrimination against LGBT people.

In conjunction with SFGN’s predecessor, the Express Gay News, the Miami Marlins held an “out” night at the ballpark over 10 years ago. The Gay Men’s Chorus of South Florida sang the national anthem.

It was the sixth inning and the Marlins loaded the bases with none out. Mike Morse, who helped the Giants win a world series last year, came to the plate.

A loud and plastered Braves fan stood up and yelled, “This isn’t San Francisco; you fag. We got babes here on South Beach.”

If he only knew.

Sean Flynn, the Senior Vice President for Marketing for the Miami Marlins, is the individual who as far back as a decade ago promoted media partnerships with the Express Gay News.

In the inaugural issue of SFGN in 2010, the Marlins also took out the entire back page. “We have always recognized that South Florida is a diverse and accepting community, and we have tried to reach out to everyone. It’s the way it should be.”

Flynn had an inclusive marketing plan, but he was not helped when the Marlins brought Ozzie Guillen in as their field manager. He immediately created a stir for saying to the South Florida Cuban community which is the Marlins fan base that Fidel Castro was a nice guy he admired, and would not mind having a beer with.

Known for his off the charts comments previously, Guillen, while the White Sox manager, had once told the Chicago press, “You can’t make homophobic slurs and do gay bashing in the mass media... you have to leave it in-house.”

Guillen epitomized the homophobia permeating baseball’s soul. He reasoned that if you leave it in the locker room, “no one will say anything about it publicly because then everyone will know they’re a fag.”

Now retired, it is unlikely that the immediate past commissioner of baseball, Bud Selig, would agree. In fact, remarks as ignorant as Guillen’s may have inspired Selig’s vision for a newer tomorrow.

“Baseball is a social institution with an important social responsibility to be open minded,” he said. “It has to be part of our DNA. We have to be on the right side of history.”

In their offices, baseball is doing its part. When a baseball player finally comes out of the closet while still in uniform, the sport will have a chance to test out how their game plan is working. In the meantime, Major League Baseball is making a pitch to allow that athlete to step up to the plate with out fear of retribution.

Like Tommy Lasorda said, if he can take two inside and then line a base hit to right field, that will be all that matters.

Tigers Pride Night Sells Over 1,000 Tickets

BY AJ TRAGER

DETROIT — Just in time for Pride, the Detroit Regional LGBT Chamber of Commerce will host a Pride Night June 3 when the Tigers play the Oakland Athletics.

Nearly 400 tickets were sold the first week after the event was announced. At press time, the chamber confirms that nearly 1,000 tickets have been sold for Pride seating. Tickets are $40.

Help the LGBT Chamber support LGBT non-profit organizations in Metro Detroit by purchasing a $15 tagless Tigers Pride T-shirt. Shirts can be purchased at www.booster.com/lgbtchamber. As of May 19, 109 shirts have been sold and $850 raised to support local non-profit organizations.

LGBT and Ally Employee Resource Groups are encouraged to purchase group tickets; so far, the Metro Detroit Gay and Lesbian Softball League, Ford, Ally Financial, Comerica Bank and the Sheraton Novi Hotel have all purchased group tickets.

“It’s about the game. Just like having a Hispanic night, I go to support that community. We are part of the community too, and we’d like to support,” said Philip Silva, a software technician who works at Ally Financial downtown and has purchased a total of 22 tickets. “I’m glad they’re doing it (the pride night). Hopefully there will be more of them in the future.”

The chamber hopes to establish stronger LGBT inclusions in the Detroit regional workplace, and the collaborations with the major Detroit sports teams helps that initiative.

In the past few months, other sports teams in the Detroit area have hosted similar evenings; a Pride Night with the Pistons was in December and a Pride Night with the Red Wings was this spring. The Tigers event is sponsored by the DRLGBTCC.

LGBT Detroit Leadership Academy Presents Seventh Graduating Class

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

DETROIT – It’s the place where young leaders are born and bred. The LGBT Detroit Leadership Academy presented its seventh class of graduates at a ceremony Saturday that took place in the LGBT Detroit offices in Midtown. To date, the Academy has produced 47 young activists who are already making their mark on the movement. In order to graduate, students must attend six Saturday morning sessions led by leaders in Detroit’s LGBT community.

“The purpose of LGBT Detroit’s Leadership Academy is to prepare the next generation of leaders in Michigan’s LGBT movement,” explained LaKeisha Burchett, secretary of LGBT Detroit’s board of directors, who presented the graduates with their diplomas along with LGBT Detroit Executive Director Curtis Lipscomb.

“These students have learned the basics of public speaking, LGBT mobilization, inclusion and diversity, group processes and black LGBT history and herstory,” Lipscomb said.

LGBT Detroit Program Director Rhiannon Chester, a previous graduate of the Leadership Academy, spoke to the class via a prerecorded video message. She told the crowd of about 20 how impressed she was with the current graduating class.

“Today we welcome these young leaders into the fold,” Chester said. “Their efforts and talents were and are far reaching. They all have made a mark on this world in unique ways and we are grateful to be a part of nurturing their individual and collective genius.”

Chester cautioned the graduating class that the life of a community leader is not an easy one.

“A leader is a special type of person that is courageous and brave, even when quiet,” she said. “Leaders do the work. The work is not always between the hours of 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. The work is not sexy. And the work does not always mean being in the front. We need leaders on all levels and in all places. There is so much work to do.”

Nathan Strickland, another former graduate of the Leadership Academy and current LGBT Detroit health and wellness coordinator, warned the graduates about the risk of burnout.

“There are a lot of actions, movements and initiatives that you can take part in,” Strickland said. “But it can be very time consuming and exhaustive to take part in everything that happens in Detroit. So it’s important that you exercise self-care. You all have your own personal and social concerns that you are willing to fight for and those will be (the fuel) that will keep you motivated to do this work.”

Speaking after the class, the graduates talked about how much the program meant to them.

“I learned how to be more sympathetic, how to be more open,” said Taylor, a 22-year-old who just graduated from Wayne State University with a bachelor’s degree in music. “I’ve learned that there’s more than one way to contribute to a movement and that’s probably the biggest thing that I’ve taken away from this class.”

As for being voted class valedictorian, Taylor said she was honored.

“It was very inspiring and very humbling to know that people are paying attention to me and my voice and want to know what I think,” she said.

Taylor is an advocate for trans issues and she is “looking to create programs for trans women of color in order to foster healing and solidarity, and just growth of a largely marginalized community.”

Francis, 26, recently earned a master’s degree in social justice from Marygrove College. Her cause is sexual assault awareness.

“I learned the importance of telling and sharing our stories,” Francis said of her time in the Leadership Academy. “We need to write our own stories. Being out and LGBT and black, we are easily lost in the fold.”

Weatherspoon, 23, studied at Morehouse College in Atlanta before returning to Detroit, where he focuses on promoting financial literacy.

“I learned how to turn the ideas and thoughts that I already had into action,” Weatherspoon said. “And I saw how much hurt and how much of a need there is for healing in our community.”

Of the Leadership Academy’s current graduates, Lipscomb said he couldn’t be more proud.

“The Spring 2015 class is brilliant, intelligent and beautiful,” he said. “They’ve already shown leadership, philosophy and thought, education and expression. This enthusiasm that I witnessed in orientation at our first class was thrilling and insightful. I can imagine the contributions manifesting from this day forward and I’m eager to see it.”
Indiana To Spend $750K In Developing Ad Campaign To Undo Harm

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) – Indiana is going to pay a New York public relations firm up to $750,000 to come up with a plan to try to rebuild the state’s damaged image after widespread criticism over a religious objections law.

A contract posted Thursday to the Indiana Economic Development Corporation shows the quasi-governmental agency, which is exempt from some oversight faced by other state agencies, will pay that much to Porter Novelli for the first phase of the “reputation enhancement initiative.” The contract states the cost of the second phase of the public relations campaign will be determined after the scope of the work and other terms are decided.

The state has previously said it would spend $2 million on a public relations strategy to try to overcome the damage done after the General Assembly passed a religious objections law that critics contended was anti-gay. The public backlash, including many companies canceling travel to Indiana, led lawmakers to revise the law’s language to address the discrimination concerns.

The contract states the IEDC is collaborating with the Indiana Office of Tourism Development to strengthen Indiana’s “global brand reputation as a welcoming place to live, visit and do business.” The ad agency is expected to look at the ad slogan “Honest to Goodness Indiana” that was panned as too folksy when it was unveiled last year. The state tourism office designed the campaign with Indianapolis marketing company Williams-Randall.

The first phase of the contract with Porter Novelli runs from April 1 to Sept. 30 and calls for the ad firm to assess the perceptions and expectations of the state and to develop a campaign and strategic approach, including the development and design of a marketing campaign.

An email from the tourism office’s communications director, Jake Oakman, to local tourism officials last month made clear the reason for the need for the ad campaign.

“The Indiana Office of Tourism Development is partnering with the IEDC on this initiative to restore Indiana’s image after the recent political controversy surrounding RFRA,” Oakman wrote.
Jewish Gay Network Hosts Talk On Transgender Issues In Michigan

A special session of the Jewish Gay Network’s Annual Meeting will be held at the Holocaust Memorial Center in Farmington Hills on Wednesday, June 3. Zooey Sophia Pook will speak about “Transgender Issues in Michigan.” Pook holds master’s degrees in philosophy and communication and is currently working on a doctorate in rhetoric and professional communication. Her research is focusing on the ways that language and culture shape identity. She currently works as the coordinator of the “Sexual and Gender Diversity Resource Center” at New Mexico State University.

The meeting begins at 7 p.m., June 3, at the Holocaust Memorial Center at 28123 Orchard Lake Road in Farmington Hills. A dessert reception will follow.

New Study Calls For LGBT Adults Looking For Love, Sex

Angie Martell, J.D., M.S.W. and doctoral student in social work and sociology at the University of Michigan, is conducting a research project examining love, sex and intimacy among LGBT adults. The little researched area will be investigated in the study, titled “The Modern Love Research Project: A Study about Love, Sex and Intimacy among Adults.”

The study calls for LGBT U.S. residents between the ages of 35-55. Participants may be married, partnered or single. Participants will earn a $25 Visa gift card.

The informal interview process will last 1-2 hours and involve questions about life, experiences and the search for love, sex and intimacy.

Understanding The ‘Invisible’ Aging LGBT Community

ANN ARBOR – The Older Adult Services Program of the Jewish Family Services of Washtenaw County will hold a conversation June 17 on social, political, legal and medical issues that affect the LGBT older adult community.

Shari Robinson-Lynk, LMSW, ACSW, will give LGBT community members ways in which older adults can recognize ageism and heterosexism within their communities while discussing the various ways changes in everyday issues impact LGBT older adults.

Robinson-Lynk has nearly 20 years of experience as a social worker working solely with older adults. She has knowledge and experience in international aging, feminist gerontology, feminist anthropology and issues of diversity and cultural competence, especially LGBT studies.

The educational presentation is offered free of charge beginning at 7 p.m. at the Ann Arbor Jewish Community Center, located at 2935 Birch Hollow Drive in Ann Arbor. Registration is required. Contact Leah Zaas at 734-769-0209 or email her at leahz@jfsannarbor.org for more information.

Gay Man Begins Campaign For State Representative

BY AJ TRAGER

DEARBORN – In anticipation of the 2016 presidential election, the pressure is on for all elected officials to start gathering support for their campaigns, especially prospective candidates for state office.

State House Rep. George Darany is serving his third and final term as a State House Representative, and Brian Stone wants to take his place as the next Democrat to serve the people of Dearborn.

Stone has lived in Dearborn for the majority of his life, aside from serving in the Navy from 2008-2012. During his many assignments, Stone was able to see many cultures of the world and experience countries that provide different structures of support for their people; structures that Stone believes could benefit Michigan’s infrastructure.

The prospective candidate has strict concerns on roads, education, public transportation and how the state will position itself in future years to expand opportunities for state residents and provide the jobs and opportunities necessary that will not only keep college graduates in the state, but also bring more talent to the mitten.

Stone’s first kick off fundraiser will be held at 6 p.m. on May 22 at Habib’s Cuisine, 14316 Michigan Ave. in Dearborn.

During the event, attendees will have the opportunity to meet Stone, who will discuss his background and the upcoming campaign, followed by dinner. Tickets are $50 and offered at a reduced price for students at $35. Group tickets are also available. Email the campaign team at brian@votestone.com to purchase tickets and RSVP for the event.

Parting Glances

OPINION BY CHARLES ALEXANDER

“Let’s go to the Hub Grill for a bowl of chili and a trick.” was our weekend rallying cry as gay teenagers. A dollar or two – and our youthful, reasonably innocent good looks – could get us through a promising Saturday night.

Two sisters, Fran and Flo, and a scruffy cook, Uncle Jimmy, held bicarbonate-of-soda court. Fran rarely smiled and smoked nonstop. Flo, her hair worn in Rosie the Riveter upsweep, was all winks and confidential tease.

“Miss Thing, don’t you look all Hollywood. You gonna snag husband number five tonight, or is it six?”

I hadn’t sat down more than five minutes, far from outside viewing by straight tourists, when a talkative number at my elbow nicknamed Marshmallow – decades later transitioning into Interchange Leather Club butch – asked, “Are you a Browning King or Queen?”

Not knowing what Marshmallow meant – top or bottom – and wanting to be newcomer polite, I asked cautiously, “Is there such a thing as a Browning Prince?” “How about Princess?” ‘she’ clucked.

I soon got to know regulars by face and nickname. There was a spate of Miss this, Miss that. Little Bobby, Estralita, Taboo, Lady Chrysler, The Empress. I made friends and, importantly, I realized as a gay teenager I was not alone. My world was much bigger than I had ever hoped.

It was custom summer nights to stroll onto the streets to see who paraded in and out of the bars: The 1011, Silver Dollar, Barrel Bar, LaRosa’s, The Palais, a dyke hangout. (I had heard about LaRosa’s when I was 15. “It’s a queer bar. Fairies go there,” snickered a buddy one Halloween night when we spotted some guys in drag getting into a Checker Cab. If there was one thing I hated as a kid, it was being called a fairy.)

I weighed 175 lbs, buff in my penny loafers. Was 6’2”, and had a 30-inch Levi’s tempered waist. (I was told I looked like actor Carleton Carpenter – later gay mystery writer – who starred opposite Debbie Reynolds in a no-brainer B-movie, singing “Abba Dabba Honeymoon.” Circa 1950.)

Standing on the corner of Farmer & Bates Streets during those adventuresome nights, we underage teenagers flirted, flaunted, schemed to meet someone special – preferably older, reasonably butch – when the bars closed. Unfortunately, most nights I had to be home by 11 sharp.

When state laws don’t protect LGBT rights:

Horrors! Our State Can’t Have Municipalities Passing A Patchwork Quilt Of Non-Discrimination Ordinances!

As a Michigan citizen, I am outraged that precious time and tax dollars are being squandered by a legislature that appears more interested in making life miserable for LGBT people than making life better for all Michiganders.

The Republican controlled state legislature is so upset at the prospect of marriage equality that they have abandoned their legislative responsibilities and instead have focused on attacking LGBT people and their rights – again!

State legislators failed miserably to pass a road bill last year, and voters spanked them in the May 5 special election for not doing their job. We had hoped the Republican controlled legislature would have received the message that the people of Michigan want them to get to work on important things like fixing the roads, ensuring quality education for all children and addressing issues of mass transit.

But no. Our hope is dashed. They just don’t get it.

Instead, Republicans are going after LGBT people – our civil rights, our families and our ability to adopt children.

The most recent effort in the state House would have stripped away all the protections currently extended to LGBT people via local civil rights ordinances. There are now 38 local cities, towns and municipalities that extend protections to their LGBT citizens, but House Bill 4052 that extend protections to their LGBT people via local civil rights ordinances. There are now 38 local cities, towns and municipalities that extend protections to their LGBT citizens, but House Bill 4052 introduced earlier this month by state Rep. Earl Poleski, R-Jackson, announced he would not sign it unless it included protections for LGBT people, and since that was apparently the whole point of the bill, its sponsors have lost their enthusiasm for its passage.

A three-bill package that passed out of the Senate Families Seniors and Human Services Committee...
Occasionally I would hop into a car cruising the area. Nearsighted as I was, if the driver proved not my type, I'd say I'd left my wallet behind, please take me back and vanish.

One hot July evening I saw a tall, elegant guy stroll by, wearing requisite tight Levi's and white T-shirt in imitation of actors James Dean and Marlon Brando. “Who’s that?” I asked proud, black-and-bold Miss Bruce – actually a well-built factor worker – who knew everybody who took to the streets, like circling hawks of prey.

“That’s T.D., ‘Tall Dick,’” he winked. “He’s your kinda man, honey,” he elbowed, leaving me, new kid on the same-sex block, to make time and small talk. T.D. listened, smiled a lot, captivated me with his lanky presence. “Got time for coffee?” “Sure thing! Do you like Doris Day?” I asked.

As the LGBT community continues to make strides toward marriage recognition across the United States, many homosexual men are taking alternative approaches to finding “the one.”

Date-auction site WhatsYourPrice.com collected member data to discover the most generous gay cities in America, ranking the nation’s cities based on the generosity of single gay men offering dates in the area.

WhatsYourPrice.com, which boasts more than 87,000 gay members, calculated generosity according to the average first-date offer made through the site.

According to the study, the most generous city for gay men is Minneapolis. Whether it’s because Minnesota recently legalized marriage for the LGBT community, or simple Midwest chivalry, gay men in Minneapolis are the most generous in America.

1. Minneapolis - $446
2. Orlando - $395
3. Indianapolis - $391
4. Detroit - $300
5. Pittsburgh - $271
6. Memphis - $250
7. Atlanta - $249
8. Chicago - $241
9. Phoenix - $213
10. San Francisco - $202

“The LGBT community has always been recognized as generous, so it’s really no surprise to see gay men investing in a first date.” said Brandon Wade, founder and CEO of WhatsYourPrice.com.

As an LGBT person, it saddens me deeply that elected officials see me and my community as some sort of scary threat that must be controlled.

The possibility of full marriage equality may anger legislators who “hold deep religious objections,” but that does not give them permission to abdicate their primary responsibility to govern the state. We call on the state legislature to get back to the people’s business and stop attacking LGBT people.

Creep of the Week

Jeb Bush

Jeb Bush has finally weighed in on the plight of anti-gay Christian wedding vendors.

In an interview with David Brody for “The Brody File,” a Christian Broadcasting Network program, Brody asked Bush about so-called religious freedom laws. Specifically, he asked if Bush was O.K. with vendors like florists and bakers refusing to serve a same-sex couple if serving said couple violated their religious beliefs.

Well, Amen to that! I totally agree. Well, almost. I mean, I agree that it shouldn’t be so complicated. The question, “Can I tell homos to get lost because I don’t like homos?” has a simple answer: “Nope.”

Of course, that’s not Bush’s answer.

In other words, it’s okay to tell same-sex couples, “Sorry, hets only,” so long as you blame it on Jesus (or some other non-Christian religion, but let’s be serious here about whom Republicans are interested in protecting).

“A Big country — a tolerant country — ought to be able to figure out the difference between discriminating against someone because of their sexual orientation and forcing someone to participate in a wedding that they find goes against their moral beliefs. We should be able to figure this out. This shouldn’t be this complicated, but gosh it is right now.”

It should be noted that “big” and “tolerant” are not the same thing. I think he’s trying to apply the GOP’s “Big Tent” idea to the entire country. And we’ve seen how well that “Big Tent” strategy has worked for them. Everybody’s supposedly welcome inside, but only the straight, white, male and Christian folks get the real power.

Also, Bush is setting up a false comparison here which makes the same-sex couple the “bad guys.” If the idea of making a cake or putting together some bouquets that will be used when two people of the same sex pledge their love for each other in front of their friends and family makes you so sick and/or is so offensive to whatever Sky God you worship that you can’t even, then you are the one with the problem.

So go ahead and tell the couple, “Nope. Can’t. Gross.” But then don’t act surprised when you end up having to pack up shop because you’ve either violated the law (and, lucky you, it’s not illegal everywhere) or because your business suffers once the word gets out that you’re a hateful human being. Because you’re clearly in the wrong business if the idea of bringing any joy to a same-sex couple’s life is too much for you.

Oh, and no surprise, Bush doesn’t think same-sex couples should even be allowed to get married in the first place.

This is the same guy who told Fox News that he would totally invade Iraq all over again if given the chance, so he is full of great ideas!

Sadly, he didn’t weigh in on the morality of invading another country based on complete bullshit. My guess is that his feelings on that issue are, um, complicated.

Gillibrand Bill Would Prevent Anti-LGBT Adoption Bias

U.S. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand is announcing legislation to remove legal barriers to adoption by lesbian, gay and transgender parents.

Gillibrand, a New York Democrat, said Sunday she will introduce legislation this week that would prohibit discrimination against LGBT adoptive parents.

The Every Child Deserves a Family Act would prohibit any entity that receives federal funds from discriminating against adoptive or foster parents based on sexual orientation, gender identity or marital status.

Louisiana, Mississippi and Michigan prohibit same-sex couples from jointly adopting.

Four other states restrict same-sex couples from using the second-parent adoption process.

Gillibrand says the absence of a consistent national policy prevents thousands of children from growing up with devoted parents.

More Indiana Cities Offer Transgender Health Benefits

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — An initiative by the city of Bloomington has led to municipal employees in more than 30 Indiana cities and towns gaining access to transgender-inclusive health care benefits.

The Bloomington Herald-Times reports Bloomington employees didn’t previously have such benefits in insurance plans provided by the Indiana Association of Cities and Towns Medical Trust.

Bloomington human resources director Doris Sims proposed in June 2014 that the trust include insurance plans that cover gender dysphoria treatment. Such plans went into effect this year, with covered treatments including hormone replacement and surgeries.

The personnel manual for the city of Bloomington was recently updated to add transgender people as a protected class under its nondiscrimination policy. Mayor Mark Kruzan says it’s a “matter of respect” and “inclusiveness.”

Nevada Panel OKs Ban On Conversion Therapy For Youth

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — A Nevada Senate panel has approved a bill that would ban therapies aimed at turning gay young people straight.

The Senate Commerce, Labor and Energy Committee voted on Friday to approve SB353.

The bill is sponsored by Democratic Sen. David Parks and would prohibit social workers and psychotherapists from providing sexual conversion therapy to people under the age of 18.

Parks said the therapy is unscientific, unethical and can permanently damage minors during their formative years.

The bill was amended to remove language that addressed legal actions a victim of the conversion therapy could take against a therapist. It was granted an exemption from legislative deadlines in April.

DHS Publishes Draft Guidance On Blood Ban For Gay And Bisexual Men

On May 12 the Department of Health and Human Services published draft guidance on their proposal to move from a lifetime blood donation ban for all gay and bisexual men to a one-year deferment period.

In December 2014 when the Food and Drug Administration first announced the proposal, the ACLU concluded that the deferral would continue to function as a de facto lifetime ban, and that criteria for determining blood donor eligibility should be based on science, not stereotypes.

“As the ACLU made clear last year, this inadequate proposal must be seen as part of an ongoing process and not an end point. Deferral decisions should be based on activities presenting an elevated risk, not on the identity of a person or that person’s partner. The reality for the vast majority of gay and bisexual men is that this policy continues to stigmatize their intimate relationships and will indefinitely bar them from donating. In addition, this proposal leaves open the possibility that transgender individuals will continue to be needlessly barred from being able to donate,” said Ian Thompson, legislative representative for the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Williams Institute at UCLA estimates this revised policy will continue to exclude over two million men whom otherwise would be eligible to donate, depriving our hospitals of nearly 300,000 pints of blood.

The draft guidance is up for a public comment period of at least 30 days.

Jury Recommends Decades In Prison In Missouri HIV Sex Case

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — A jury is recommending at least 30 years in prison for a man convicted of infecting another man with HIV and endangering four others with the disease while attending college in Missouri.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reports that the St. Charles County jury on Friday recommended a 30-year prison term on the most serious charge against 23-year-old Michael Johnson.

Jurors convicted the former Lindenwood University student and wrestler on Thursday of one count of recklessly infecting another with HIV and endangering four others with the disease while attending college in Missouri.

The bill was amended to remove language that the therapy is unscientific, unethical and can permanently damage minors during their formative years.

2015 Motor City Pride Preview

BY AJ TRAGER

DETROIT – Motor City Pride has been Michigan’s largest pride festival for the last 25 years. This year, in anticipation of an affirmative ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court on the constitutionality of marriage equality, thousands of people will gather June 6-7 in Hart Plaza in celebration of love and identity, honoring the lives and experiences of the LGBT community and the strides in equality that have been made in the past decades.

With all the national attention on LGBT equality, this year’s festival is an especially important opportunity to raise awareness about LGBT issues and provide a safe space for the community to celebrate the successes they’ve had and to look forward to future solidarity.

The two day festival is expected to draw over 35,000 attendees who will spend the weekend enjoying a pride parade, family fun area, youth activities, senior activities, five stages of entertainment, delicious food from four food trucks and visit with over 100 national and regional non-profit, sponsor and sales booths. The family area, hosted by MCC Detroit, has been expanded and will provide a great, safe space for children to play.

This year the Pride and Pyramid stages will host headlining performances, the Festival Stage will host grassroots and spoken word performances and the Underground stage will showcase nightlife and sponsor a J-setting competition.

Admission is $5 per day with no charge for children 12 and under.

June 6

A wedding ceremony will begin promptly at 12 p.m. on the Pride Stage followed by back-to-back entertainment including Mouths of Babes, Lauren Fisher, Shangela and Darriene Lake before headliner Carmen Electra with Rich White Ladies takes the stage at 7 p.m.

The four other stages will provide entertainment throughout the day including a Miss Motor City Pride Pageant, a dance party, open mic and karaoke performances by the Coffee House Cabaret, Selina Style, Jason Michael, Evan Ficaj, Macho City and Dave Wheeler.

Beverage sales and entertainment end at 8 p.m. Participants are expected to exit Hart Plaza by 8:30 p.m.

June 7

The Pride Parade, sponsored by FCA US LLC and the FIAT Brand, will be bigger than ever and highlight many of the 323 couples that were legally married in the state on March 22, 2014 when the state’s ban on same-sex marriage was temporarily lifted. The parade is scheduled to begin at noon outside the Chrysler House and will follow Griswold until it reaches the gates of the festival.

Out Loud Chorus will take to the Pride Stage beginning at 12:30 p.m. followed by a Drag Showcase with Miss Motor City Pride and performances by Killer Flamingos, Garek, Georgie Porgie and Betty Who at 6 p.m.

The Festival Stage will showcase an InterFaith Service beginning at noon followed by a performance by Jamie Wilson and two hours of spoken word performances. Local DJs will provide day-long entertainment on the Underground stage with Showcases from Stiletto’s and Inferno on the Pyramid Stage beginning at noon.

Festivities end at 7 p.m.

Equality Michigan has worked closely with the Detroit Police Department to ensure that the safety and security of pride-goers is top priority for the weekend and additional security will be present in designated areas. Protest areas will be held in “free speech zones” so that they do not obstruct the entrance to Pride.

Motor City Pride is a product of Equality Michigan, the statewide organization committed to LGBT activism in the state legislature and raising awareness on LGBT issues. Sponsors for the 2015 MCP include FCA US and the FIAT Brand, MotorCity Casino Hotel, Delta Air Lines, MGM Grand Detroit, Fifth Third Bank, General Motors, UAW-Ford, Five-15, MCC Detroit, Comerica Bank, Whole Foods Market, Great Lakes Distributing, Menjo’s, Necto, Zipcar, TD Auto Finance, Inferno, Uber, Pride Source Media Group, Metra Magazine, Flame Magazine and AMP Radio.

It was little surprise when HBO’s “Looking” – a critically acclaimed but poorly rated TV series about gay men in San Francisco – introduced an HIV-positive character in season two. After all, the city was once the epicenter of the AIDS crisis and now has one of the nation’s highest rates of HIV-positive gay and bi men.

The real revelation, though, was that Eddie, the character Daniel Franzese (already popular from his influential role in “Mean Girls”) plays is poz, proud and body positive.

People with HIV are rarities on TV (the last series to have one was “Brothers & Sisters” in 2011), and when they exist there’s usually a lot of stigmatizing, handwringing and self-loathing around them, with singular storylines that play like a “very special episode.”

But “Looking” (and the season finale of “How to Get Away with Murder,” in which Conrad Ricamora’s character Oliver finds out he has HIV) broke the mold with an ordinary gay man who just happened to have HIV. Moreover, it was the first scripted television series to talk about PrEP, or Truvada, as pre-exposure prophylaxis.

“The brief conversation that we have in the Halloween episode happens in a way that I’ve heard PrEP come up amongst my friends... not too preachy,” Franzese told Plus magazine. “I really like the way that it’s handled.”

So did I. Eddie is sexy, healthy and – this is important – romantically pursued by an HIV-negative character. So that the pair can have sex without either of them worrying about transmission, the love interest begins a regimen of PrEP, the daily HIV prevention pill that the iPrEx study proved can reduce HIV infection by up to 99 percent when taken properly.

The fact that “Looking” handled PrEP in this manner may mean the tide has turned on PrEP, a prevention method initially debated – and actually lobbied against – by some gay men (notably AIDS Healthcare Foundation’s Michael Weinstein, who argued it was a “party drug” that would make users ditch condoms).

Today in many gay communities, on TV or otherwise, we’re increasingly hearing one thing about PrEP: It’s changing everything.

Both the World Health Organization and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention have begun recommending PrEP to gay and bi men and transgender women, in hopes of stemming the tide of the 50,000 new HIV cases each year in the U.S.

It’s not the numbers, though, that are interesting. It’s the sociocultural changes we see from PrEP. The social dynamics among gay men are changing. I’ve talked to dozens of men who are dating across the viral divide: poz and negative guys dating each other, marrying each other, becoming what romantics call “magnetic couples.” (The rest of us call them serodiscordant couples, partnerships in which one is poz and one isn’t.)

Between “treatment as prevention” (a method in which someone with HIV suppresses the amount of HIV in their blood, or their viral load, to “undetectable” levels and thus can no longer transmit HIV) and...
PrEP, many gay men are now having sex without the fear that they can transmit, or acquire, HIV, whether or not there are condoms involved.

My friend Alex Garner, who conducts HIV awareness and prevention programs across the country, says this has impacted how gay men now relate to each other because it’s eliminated a key emotional obstacle to love that gay men have had since the late 1980s: fear.

Like a lot of guys, Alex used to almost exclusively date other HIV-positive men, but PrEP has changed that. He told Plus magazine that the possibility of having a real relationship with someone who is serodiscordant seems much more realistic now because PrEP is available – and it changes the relationship too.

Despite Weinstein’s rants, PrEP really doesn’t seem to be used by wanton sluts who want to man-whore about town. (But, if it is, more power to the users, I say; the LGBT rights movements was built on sexual liberation, and PrEP is to gay men in 2015 what birth control was to feminists in 1970, but I digress.)

In fact, when someone is considering PrEP because their partner has HIV, it’s very often a sign that they love and want to build a future with that person, the exact opposite of one-night stands popular in hookup culture.

Weinstein’s ditching condoms theory seems inaccurate. At least one study from Brown University found that many HIV-negative men in relationships already ditch condoms because they want more intimacy in their relationship (and they do so even when one or both of the guys are having sex outside of that relationship).

Over half the men in that study said they’d go on PrEP, which is good because we know from another study out of Emory that nearly 70 percent of all new HIV transmissions for both gay and bi men and transgender women occur in a primary relationship. But the Brown researchers are quick to note: These men and women are willing to go on PrEP, not to suddenly ditch condoms once they’re on PrEP, but to protect themselves because they already ditched those condoms long ago.

Today, PrEP is appearing in dating profiles and on apps like Grindr and Scruff. Even sites aimed at HIV-positive men, like BarebackRT, report that HIV-negative men are now posting profiles there and touting that they are on PrEP. For generations of men and trans women who’ve lived in fear of HIV, suddenly having a prevention pill is a godsend. That it’s mired in controversy is no surprise; birth control was once as well for many of the same concerns.

But the bottom line is that Truvada as PrEP is one option, one of the best we have available today. Like birth control pills, though, it isn’t for everyone. Soon we’ll have a rectal microbicide, injectable pre-exposure prophylaxis, vaginal rings, and more. And when we do, I hope the writers of “Looking” get at least a tiny footnote in history for breaking ground on TV and for having helped destigmatize PrEP for a generation of LGBT viewers.

Rob Pruitt’s “The Obama Paintings” and “The Lincoln Monument” will be presented to the public for the first time at MOCAD, running until Aug. 2. Both works serve as monuments in themselves, as well as examinations of presidential monuments in general. The exhibition will spotlight how images of past presidents are disseminated and function in our society.

Rob Pruitt began “The Obama Paintings” as a means of tracking President Barack Obama’s presidency. Since Obama’s inauguration on Jan. 20, 2009, Pruitt has created a 2-by-2 painting of the president every single day, with particular imagery drawn from the news of that day. Upon completion, The Obama Paintings will comprise 2,922 paintings, incorporating such seminal events as his first State of the Union address to seemingly mundane activities.

The Museum of Contemporary Art Detroit is open 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays, and open 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursdays and Fridays. MOCAD is located at 4454 Woodward Ave., Detroit. For more information, visit www.mocadetroit.org.

Ann Arbor Fundraiser To Benefit Seniors, LGBT And Straight

Big Hearts for Seniors and the University of Michigan Health System present “Alive Inside,” an evening celebrating the power of music “to revive mind and spirit” at Ann Arbor’s Michigan Theater.

The May 28 fundraiser will feature performances by the Chenille Sisters, presentation of the film “Alive Inside” and more. Rob Reinhart, host and producer of Acoustic Cafe, the two hour weekly radio show that features an international showcase of new acoustic music, will emcee the event. Reinhart started his professional broadcasting career while still in college, pursuing his degree in psychology. Feeling the future of the human psyche to be limited, he threw himself into the infinitely expanding universe of radio and vinyl discs containing music. Over the last 20 years, Reinhart has also owned a small ad agency and radio production company, written and produced syndicated comedy for radio, voiced thousands of radio and TV commercials, consulted movie, television and internet media projects, created and hosted both Acoustic Café and The No Depression Alt-Country Radio Hour (produced with No Depression Magazine) and even been the voice of Radio Bonnaroo.

“Good radio,” he says, “is now one of the only media that isn’t designed to simply reflect the taste of the user. It’s still a community that brings together lots of different people. Neat, huh?”

A VIP event featuring pre-movie reception, refreshments and a free drink ticket will feature remarks by Reinhart, as well.

According to their website, the Chenille Sisters’ “performance is a blending of three uniquely gifted souls into a musical phenomenon that’s more poignant, funny and entertaining than any single performer anywhere – and oh, those exquisite harmonies! What these three women have in common are heavenly voices, a lot of witty wisdom and a passion for connecting with their audiences. But as in a constellation, each Chenille shines her own particular kind of light.”

The fundraiser will benefit Ann Arbor Meals on Wheels, the Housing Bureau for Seniors, the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute, Silver Club Memory Programs and Turner Senior Wellness Program.

The VIP reception begins at 5:30 p.m.; tickets are $50. General admission begins at 6:15 p.m., with tickets at $15. To purchase tickets or find more information, stop by the Turner Senior Resource Center at 2401 Plymouth Road, Suite C, Ann Arbor. Call them at 734-998-9350 or visit www.med.umich.edu/geriatrics/BHS.

“Tori Amos who?”
My dear friend, then boyfriend, must have been dumbfounded when I – a gay man – uttered these words that, in retrospect, are among the most naive of my life.

I rolled my eyes at him as we cruised the interstate, dismissively contorted my face, and swapped the Tori CD out for something else – something that would accord my young, inexperienced ears instant gratification.

I was just 20 then. Following a fortunate musical maturation in the years after, I was drawn back to that car ride and the twinkling magic of the Bösendorfer. Over time, I became completely swept up in the mesmeric awe of Tori Amos.

Now 32, I’ve curiously wandered through the pianist’s magical musical chasm – I’ve even enjoyed interviewing her many times – and with every fresh project or recently discovered rarity, I’m the one telling that same friend (who’s lately lost touch with Tori) that he is the one missing out.

So, friend, the time has come yet again. “Little Earthquakes” and “Under the Pink” have both been newly remastered and flexed beyond the back-to-back albums’ staples. (You know: “Pretty Good Year,” “Baker Baker,” “Crucify” and “Precious Things,” to name a few.) Both double-disc releases glean rarities performed in studio and on stage during each LP’s subsequent era.

And no, these reissues aren’t afterthoughts, especially for casual Tori followers. While record labels are infamous for putting out rehashed, “remastered” releases with nil new material to offer, fans can rest assured that Atlantic is mindful of the fact that a legacy artist like Amos deserves legacy treatment.

Perhaps the biggest sell for aficionados: The audio gets a noticeable upgrade, making subtle improvements to the original cuts while still preserving their original essence. Plus: Eighteen additional songs on “Little Earthquakes! Fifteen on “Under the Pink!”

Released during the chanteuse’s golden age, these seminal works were critical to the singer-songwriter’s repertoire, setting the stage for over 30 years of soul-baring artistic expression.

Looking back over those three prolific decades, her debut, “Little Earthquakes,” endures as her masterwork. To this day, it’s a lifeline to legions of self-actualizing queers who revel in the earnest emotions the then-29-year-old Tori confronted. “Me and a Gun” harrowingly detailed her own personal rape-at-knifepoint nightmare. “Crucify” took the piss out of religion. In all her commanding glory and groundbreaking artistry, Amos was vulnerable and translucent, skewering childhood ideals and wailing her way out of social exile.

And she took you with her. The journey would lead to another feelings-fueled outpouring two years later. As she slayed more demons and firmly established herself as an emblem of empowerment, “Under the Pink” once again expressed a deeply resonant facet of the human condition: the need to love and be loved.

No one knows these songs better than Amos, of course. She revisits them within the “Under the Pink” liner notes on the Deluxe Edition, explaining their emergence in her own words and offering longtime fans extra insight, a boon for Tori-philes already versed in every album cut and every B-side.

Among the B-sides on these packages: “Smells like Teen Spirit,” where Amos turns Nirvana’s grunge staple into an evocative whirl of piano-guided emotions, and the dizzying, delicate “Here, in My Head.” The latter, included on “Under the Pink,” is a live version from a 1994 performance in Bristol, and the track – clean and crisp – sounds particularly divine.

Included along with stage versions of “Past the Mission” and “The Waitress” is “Winter,” performed the same year in Manchester. Like a whisper in time, it’s just as you remember it: gripping, intimate, rich.

“When you gonna make up your mind / When you gonna love you as much as I do.” Simple yet profound, those words, spoken to her by her father, would find a hideaway in my heart despite my resistance to them at such a defiantly young age. Looking back, it’s hard to imagine I resisted them at all.

It’s even harder to imagine my life without the truth-baring salvation I’ve come to know as Tori Amos.
