Amending Michigan's Civil Rights Law: Is A Ballot Initiative On The Horizon?

EEOC Advances On Employment Protections

Hotter Than July Kicks Off

THE LONG DUFF ROAD

Hilary Duff On Marriage Equality, Grindr & Why She Took A Break From Showbiz
OFFICIAL KICK-OFF EVENT
A VARIETY OF THE MOST SOUGHT AFTER BREWS WILL BE ON TAP
THURSDAY, JULY 30
5PM | NO COVER | LIVE ENTERTAINMENT 6-10PM
MINGLE WITH LOCAL BREW MASTERS
Join The Conversation @ PrideSource.com

Being able to see the community grow and see young people working with folks from my age group for the movement is what keeps me going. Hotter Than July is a space where a lot of this work happens.

– Robert Tate, “Party With A Purpose” See page 14

A great Sunday gathering in Flint celebrated victories and talked challenges ahead for Michigan’s LGBTQ community.

Marriage Equality, Amending Elliott-Larsen See page 7

Learn More About This Week’s Cool City: Ferndale

Access the online Cool City pages at Pridesource.com to learn about upcoming events, featured advertisers and community news focused on each of our Cool Cities.

Publicize Your Events Online And In Print Today
Head over to Pridesource.com/Calendar.html and tell us about your concerts, social gatherings, rallies and more and we’ll promote them online and in print with our calendar!
BY AJ TRAGER

LANSING – The State of Michigan Vital Records Department has decided to allow the spouse of a biological parent to be placed on a child's birth certificate for female married couples. Confirmed by Jennifer Smith, public information officer with the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services, if a female couple was legally married in any state prior to the child's birth, the non-biological parent will not have to file for second-parent adoption and will be listed as the second parent on the child's birth certificate.

Any lesbian couples that were unmarried at the time of the child's birth will still be required to apply for second-parent adoption.

“My understanding is yes, if two women are married and one of them gives birth, that both parents will be listed on the certificate,” Smith told BTL. “If they were legally married at the time of the child’s birth, then we would amend the birth certificate without an adoption.”

The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services is going through significant changes as the Department of Community Health and the Department of Human Services continue to merge. Smith reports that the state is looking for a consistent system that is uniform nationwide and is looking at what other states are doing to verify that there are no complicating factors.

“Hospitals will still issue temporary mother/father certificates, but they are welcome to change that — they can cross it out. Then we are made aware and we will file a replacement and issue a birth certificate that says ‘parent and parent,’” Smith said.

Unfortunately, for gay male same-sex couples with children, a second-parent adoption is still necessary if both parents want legal recognition of the child.

Equality Michigan Announces New Senior Staff

BY BTL STAFF

Equality Michigan, the statewide LGBT political advocacy organization, has announced the appointment of new senior staff.

Advocate and political strategist Jennifer Judd joins Equality Michigan as the newest addition to the team, serving as director of field operations.

“I am honored to be part of the largest LGBTQ Anti-Violence and Advocacy Organization in the great state of Michigan,” Judd said in a recent EQMI Newsletter.

Judd was born and raised in Saginaw County and has extensive background working on issue campaigns such as the Detroit Council by District Initiative and other political candidate campaigns. She has worked in fundraising for a national political party, worked for former governor of Illinois Pat Quinn, lobbied for the Affordable Health Care Act on Capitol Hill in D.C. and has worked on numerous political campaigns in Michigan, Illinois and Missouri.

Over the course of the summer, Judd attended Motor City Pride, Kalamazoo Pride and Up North Pride in Traverse City and has spoken with hundreds of new EQMI supporters and volunteers in the state.

LGBT advocates and supporters in the state still have much work to do before the LGBT community has full equality. Efforts will include working with both Democratic and Republican politicians so that state laws reflect the majority opinion of strong LGBT support in Michigan. According to EQMI, Michiganders support an amendment to the Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act, the state’s civil rights act, to reflect protections for sexual orientation and gender identity by a three-to-one-margin.

“I have been touring the state on an Equality Michigan ‘Listening Tour.’ I have been to Marquette, Traverse City, Alpena, Grand Rapids, Saginaw and Kalamazoo,” Judd said. “I have been meeting with regional leaders listening to the needs of these communities and discussing how Equality Michigan can be effective and relevant in these regions.”

Judd believes it is time to mobilize and begin educating Michiganders by having tough conversations with neighbors and family and by engaging members of the legislature to let them know it is time to modernize ELCRA to include sexual orientation and gender identity.

Contact Judd for more information on her upcoming work at Equality Michigan at jjud@equalm$.com.
HotWorks.org Presents the 13th Annual
Orchard Lake Fine Art Show®
July 25 & 26, 2015
West Bloomfield

- Voted in the Top 100 Art Shows in the Country the Last 8 Years in a Row; Juried by Art Professionals
- West Bloomfield, South of Maple, West of Orchard Lake Rd., plenty of parking behind Beaumont Medical Center
- Event Hours: Sat 10am-6pm; Sun 10am-5pm $5 Admission; 12 & Under Free
- Youth Art Competition for grades Kindergarten-8 or ages 5-12, sponsored by Kroger
- Kids – be sure to visit Ameriprise Financial’s Family Area – Make & Take Art That You Create!
- Text OLFAS to 31996 for a CHANCE to win $200 from one Artist in the Show

Art and pets don’t mix. However, if you choose to bring your pet, they must be on a short leash, no longer than 3’, and you are entirely responsible for your pet’s behavior and any damage to art work.
Analysis
Is A Ballot Battle On LGBT Equality Coming In 2016?

BY TODD HEYWOOD

State Rep. Brandon Dillon, D-Grand Rapids, had barely starting warming the chairmanship seat of the Michigan Democratic Party last week when he started a very public conversation among advocates and politicians. That discussion had been occurring for months, to be certain, whispered about in corners of the Capitol.

The question: With a recalcitrant GOP dominated legislature which refuses to move on LGBT equality, and with a positive ruling from the Supreme Court of the United States, is it time to ask Michigan voters to amend the state civil rights act, Elliott-Larsen, to include sexual orientation and gender identity as protected classes?

“I think that this is probably the moment,” Dillon said in an interview Sunday in Flint. “I don’t think the conversation is done, but we will have to make the decision very, very soon.”

Making that decision however is going to require the players at the table taking into account a lot of moving parts, political leaders interviewed for this story said.

How much money will it take? Conservative estimates come in at least $7 million, whereas most put the cost at $18 to $25 million. That’s serious money in a tight political year which is expected to see multiple questions and a contentious presidential battle.

And the more ballot questions put before the voters, the more likely they are to reject all of them out of hand, said leaders. Petitions are currently circulating to legalize marijuana, and there are discussions about an initiative to address redistricting issues in the state.

“This is part of the conversation,” said Sommer Foster, policy director at Equality Michigan. “I don’t think we can put Elliott-Larsen on the ballot if it’s going to be on there with seven other things.”

“You don’t go into a ballot initiative unless you know you can come out on top,” said Lonnie Scott, executive director at Progress Michigan, a liberal advocacy group in Lansing. “You want to know that this is the best strategy and that you have exhausted all the other legislative options.”

Scott said the legislature “has not done its job to protect the LGBT community.”

For nearly a decade, the LGBT community has argued that the ballot box is not the place to address the rights of any group of people in America, so that plays into the political calculus as well, said Kary Moss, executive director of the ACLU of Michigan.

“There’s a concern about subjecting rights to a popular vote,” Moss said. “The legislature should have gotten this done.”

Foster agreed with Moss.

“It is wrong to vote on minority rights; but that being said, if putting it on the ballot is the only way to protect people, then we need to do it,” she said.

Post-Marriage Exuberance

While there is an exuberance related to LGBT equality, post-marriage decision, that excitement may not translate to the ballot box.

Writer, activist and radio host Michelangelo Signorile calls “victory blindness” a significant stumbling block to full LGBT equality in his new book, “It’s Not Over.”

National polling still shows that in spite of recent high profile gains in the courts, a majority of Americans still have a fundamental discomfort with homosexuality and gender identity. That discomfort, Signorile points out, is fueling a new movement among right-wing, anti-gay advocates he likened to the battle to reverse Roe v. Wade. He said activists will use that discomfort to find wedge issues with voters, to separate the community and watch initiatives for equality fail.

Joe Munem, a Michigan based GOP political consultant, said there is such a separation in Michigan already. He pointed to the very public battle over an inclusive Elliott-Larsen amendment in last year’s lame duck session of the legislature. The GOP was ready to move forward with sexual orientation, but refused to push for inclusion of gender identity. The LGBT and progressive communities pushed back, refusing to endorse a noninclusive amendment, and the legislative process died.

“I think if you were to look at amending it for gays and lesbians in Elliott-Larsen, many Republicans would go for it,” Munem said. “I don’t think they are all the way there yet on gender identity.”

Strategy

Also at play are questions of long term and short term strategy. There are several variables playing out there. What happens if the voters reject an initiative? Leaders said it could delay protecting LGBT people with laws by a decade or more.

With a recalcitrant GOP dominated legislature which refuses to move on LGBT equality, and with a positive ruling from the Supreme Court of the United States, is it time to ask Michigan voters to amend the state civil rights act, Elliott-Larsen, to include sexual orientation and gender identity as protected classes?

Another strategy that could play out is allowing a redistricting proposal to take front and center. Michigan’s legislative districts have been tightly drawn to create very Republican districts and drive an ongoing GOP domination of the legislature. Right now, the legislature redraws legislative districts – with the party in control directing the process. Legislative districts are drawn every decade following the census.

If that proposal were to pass, it could set the legislature on a path towards loosening control of the body from the grasp of right-wing extremists by creating more moderate districts which provide more potentiality for progressives to win elections.

The flaw in this plan? It would take until 2024 at the earliest to start reaping the harvest of the initiative.

Also playing a role, said Dillon, is who exactly will be the opposition to such an initiative. Munem identified the Michigan Catholic Conference as well as some of the smaller small business advocacy groups as likely opponents.

The Michigan Catholic Conference, which was heavily involved in the 2004 initiative to amend the state constitution to forbid same-sex marriage, did not respond to inquiries from BTL on where the agency stood on a ballot initiative to amend Elliott-Larsen.

Community leaders will continue to discuss the political options in the coming weeks. Something Dillon said the Michigan Democratic Party will be a part of, but does not seek to “lead.”

“There are serious concerns on this,” said Foster. “But nothing has been ruled out yet. We’re all committed to coming to the table and having these conversations.”

Lawmakers Voice Support For LGBT Community

BY JAN STEVENSON

FLINT – Over 200 Genesee County residents and political leaders came out on a sunny afternoon to discuss how to move forward on LGBT issues July 19. A hot topic was how to move forward to amend Michigan’s civil right’s legislation, the Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act, to include LGBT people and gender identity.

“There’s a lot of friends and allies out there that support equality, and we want to make sure that they know that there’s people standing with them. Until we get full equality in this country, we’re going to keep fighting,” said state Sen. Jim Ananich.

“What we need here in Michigan first and foremost, and it can come from Washington or it can come from Lansing, is a nondiscrimination statute that protects for employment, housing and public accommodation,” said Mark LaChey, the chair of the Michigan Democratic Party LGBT and Allies Caucus.

“It also reminds us that there’s a lot further we have to travel when it comes to housing, credit or employment,” said U.S. Rep. Dan Kildee. “It’s still possible that people can be discriminated against just because they happen to be a LGBT member of our community, and that’s wrong.”

The new MDP chair, state Rep. Brandon Dillon, attended the summer mixer. He said he is excited about his new leadership position and the chance to work closely with the Party’s LGBT Caucus.

The event was hosted by Ananich, former Flint City Council Vice President Dale Weighill, and the LGBT & Allies Caucus of the Michigan Democratic Party. The mixer was on the terrace of the Flint Farmers’ Market.

Ballot Battle

Continued from p. 6

Progressives to win elections.

The flaw in this plan? It would take until 2024 at the earliest to start reaping the harvest of the initiative.

Also playing a role, said Dillon, is who exactly will be the opposition to such an initiative. Munem identified the Michigan Catholic Conference as well as some of the smaller small business advocacy groups as likely opponents.

The Michigan Catholic Conference, which was heavily involved in the 2004 initiative to amend the state constitution to forbid same-sex marriage, did not respond to inquiries from BTL on where the agency stood on a ballot initiative to amend Elliott-Larsen.

Community leaders will continue to discuss the political options in the coming weeks. Something Dillon said the Michigan Democratic Party will be a part of, but does not seek to “lead.”

“There are serious concerns on this,” said Foster. “But nothing has been ruled out yet. We’re all committed to coming to the table and having these conversations.”
Obituary: Sharon Hope Gittleman

BY JAN STEVENSON

Sharon Hope Gittleman, 56, had been a writer for Between The Lines until she became disabled eight years ago due to kidney disease. After two failed kidney transplants and an extended illness, she ultimately succumbed to complications of dialysis July 7.

Gittleman grew up in Detroit and graduated from Grover High School in Birmingham in 1976. She went on to earn a Bachelor’s Degree in 1980 from the University of Michigan and later graduated from law school at the University of Detroit. After passing her bar exams, Gittleman worked at several law firms and insurance companies in the greater Detroit area until she discovered her true passion – journalism.

In 1987, Gittleman left her legal career to become the editor at the Royal Oak Mirror where she remained for 11 years until the paper was sold in 1998. “She loved being a journalist,” said her brother, attorney Steven Gittleman, who described his sister as both intelligent and stubborn. “While at The Mirror, Sharon always insisted that the paper have at least one ‘feel-good’ story.”

After the 1998 sale of The Mirror to Hometown Newspapers she continued her journalism career as a successful freelance writer for many publications including the Detroit Free Press, the Macomb Daily, the Oakland Press and BTL. Her editors appreciated her clear writing style, attention to detail and her ability to understand and communicate complex stories, particularly if they involved legal issues.

Steven described Sharon being fearless as a reporter. He recounted when he and Sharon attended the 2001 North American Auto Show at Cobo Hall in Detroit during the height of the domestic partner debate. “Sharon marched right up to all the CEOs of Toyota, Daimler, Ford and GM and demanded to know what they were doing for their LGBT employees, specifically on DP benefits. The Toyota CEO was left open-mouthed,” said Steven.

Steven, who was a devoted caregiver to Sharon throughout her illness, said they had a close yet fiery relationship. “We would fight all the time,” he said. “One story I love to tell about Sharon was when we went on a family trip to Israel in 1979. We were in Beersheba near the Negev desert at a huge Arab market. Everything was for sale. This Bedouin guy came up to me and kept asking ‘how much’ in Hebrew. It took me a while to realize he was asking about Sharon and that he wanted to trade his camel for her because he was drawn to her red hair – a rarity in the Middle East. As I continued the negotiations, Sharon came up, and when she figured out what was going on, she started screaming. It was hysterical. I still think about that camel,” said Steven with a laugh.

Sharon loved needlepoint and knitting. She was an avid animal enthusiast and active member of the Detroit Zoological Society. She is survived by her brother, Steven Mark Gittleman. The funeral was at the Hebrew Memorial in Oak Park July 9.

EEOC Rules Sexual Orientation Is Protected By Federal Civil Rights Law

BY AJ TRAGER

WASHINGTON D.C. – The United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission July 15 issued a decision that employment discrimination based on sexual orientation is a form of sex discrimination that is outlawed by existing federal law.

The EEOC is responsible for enforcing anti-discrimination laws in the workplace and has held in a 3-2 decision following a complaint brought by a Florida-based air traffic control specialist against Secretary of Transportation Anthony Foxx that discrimination against LGBT employees is sex discrimination, specifically banned by the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

“Discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is premised on sex-based preferences, assumptions, expectations, stereotypes or norms. ‘Sexual orientation’ as a concept cannot be defined or understood without reference to sex,” the EEOC explains.

“IT follows, then, that sexual orientation is inseparable from and inescapably linked to sex and, therefore, that allegations of sexual orientation discrimination involves sex-based considerations.”

In 2012, the EEOC issued a similar ruling that discrimination based on gender identity or expression is also a form of sex discrimination that violates federal law, which set an important precedent for protecting transgender employees.

“The fight for basic civil rights protections for lesbian, gay and bisexual people just took a big step forward,” said James Esseks, American Civil Liberties Union’s LGBT Project Director. “Lesbian, gay and bisexual people all across the country now have a place to turn if an employer fires them because of their sexual orientation. This is a significant development because protections for gay and transgender people are almost nonexistent in federal law, and 28 states also lack state-level protections.”

Both rulings are landmark advances for civil rights. Now anyone who works for an employer with 15 or more employees can file a charge of sex discrimination with the EEOC if they can prove they were discriminated against because of their sexual orientation or gender identity or expression.

Despite the EEOC ruling, neither Congress nor state legislatures have passed explicit civil rights protections for LGBT employees. The ACLU argues that these protections should not be left to the courts because they may not all interpret this ruling with an even hand, and rulings like this one cannot provide comprehensive protections against sexual orientation discrimination in contexts such as public accommodations and federal funding, where there are no bans on sex discrimination to piggy back on.

Pilot LGBT Youth Workforce Development Program Launches At Affirmations Community Center

BY BTL STAFF

FERNDALE – XTL Youth Workforce Development Program is a 24-week pilot program designed to empower LGBT youth in Metro Detroit with primary and secondary skills necessary to be successful in workforce navigation.

Youth will be exposed to theoretical and practical applications of a plethora of skills used everyday by the Michigan workforce. The program will provide 12 weeks of interactive training and 12 weeks of on-the-job training.

The pilot period will begin in August 2015 and run through January 2016, with 15 Metro Detroit youth, ages 16-24, in participation.

Key program components will include soft skills development or “Skills To Pay The Bills,” which has been adapted from the Department of Disability Employment Policy, utilizing interactive skill building activities based on up to date, researched job skills. Areas of focus will include communication, problem solving and critical thinking, professionalism, enthusiasm and attitude, networking and teamwork. Youth will learn how to write a resume and cover letter and improve interview skills.

Hard Skills Development, or on-the-job training, will complete the second 12 weeks of course work, where youth will participate in working together as a team to successfully launch and manage a business housed in the Affirmations Marketplace. In addition to serving as mentors, a member of the Business Advisory Council will provide youth with ongoing guidance and counsel.

Those interested in the opportunity should contact Affirmations’ Youth Program Manager, Lilianna Reyes, as soon as possible. Reyes can be reached at 248-398-7105 and email at LReyes@goaffirmations.org.
2015 // AUG 8+9

WITH SPECIAL GUESTS/
SALT-N-PEPA
EN VOGUE
JACK & JACK
ALL 4 ONE
WHO IS FANCY
AARON CARTER

NORTHALSTED MARKET DAYS

NORTHALSTED.COM
Parting Glances

OPINION BY CHARLES ALEXANDER

For over 50 years Life magazine informed Americans about what was happening here and abroad. Photos and content were dramatic. Mostly conservative. Occasionally controversial. Once in awhile downright shocking.

Life folded in 1973; circulation 13 million. Readership, 10 times that amount. Its sister publication, Time, continues to this day.

Middle Class Americans woke up to the realization that homosexuals were growing in number. Becoming alarmingly visible. A social threat to be somehow remedied.

In 1964, San Francisco was not the dynamic gay center of Castro/Market Street, clone-look militancy. It hadn’t the high-density population complex of the 1970s and pre-AIDS 1980s, but Life’s wide-audience article – unintentionally, to be sure – served as a catalyst for early gay migration there.

Life opened its expose head on: “Homosexuality shears across the spectrum of American life: the professional, the arts, business and labor. It always has. But today, especially in big cities, homosexuals are discarding their furtive ways and openly admitting, even flaunting, their deviation. “Homosexuals have their own drinking places, their special assignation streets, even their own organizations. And for every obvious homosexual, there are probably nine nearly impossible to detect. This social disorder, which society tries to suppress, has forced itself into the public eye because it does present a problem – and parents especially are concerned.

“The myth and misconception with which homosexuality has so long been clothe must be cleared away, not to condone it but to cope with it.”

Accompanying the 14-page belly shock are a dozen photos. Nameless gay men clustered in dark bars or milling about on dimly lighted streets: “These brawny young men in their leather caps, shirts, jackets and pants are practicing homosexuals, men who turn to other men for affection and sexual satisfaction. They are part of what they call the ‘gay world,’ which is actually a sad and often sordid world.”

Gay bars are exposed: “As each new customer walks into the dimly lit room, he will lock eyes with a half dozen young men before reaching his place at the bar. Throughout the evening there is a constant turnover of customers as contacts are made and two men slip out together, or individuals move on to other bars in search of better luck.

“As 2 a.m. closing time approaches, the atmosphere grows perceptibly more tense. It is the ‘frantic hour,’ the now-or-never time for making a contact.” Sound familiar?

Here’s the early version of the gay agenda: “As part of its anti-homosexual drive the Los Angeles police force has compiled an ‘educational’ pamphlet for law enforcement officers entitled, ‘Some Characteristics of the Homosexual.’ The strongly opinionated pamphlet includes the warning that what the homosexuals really want is a ‘fruit world.’” (Not a cocktail.)

Gays in the military, 1964: “If we didn’t throw them out, we’d be condoning homosexuality. The services’ position has to be that homosexual practices prejudice morale and discipline.”

Life warns, “For the first time the Supreme Court has agreed to hear the homosexual case, but no legal procedures are likely to change society’s basic repugnance to homosexuality as an immoral and disruptive force that should somehow be removed.”

Life and Times have changed for the better. We’ve come a long way. What’s next?

Charles@pridesource.com

Landmark Advances In Nondiscrimination Employment, With Limitations

OPINION BY JAY KAPLAN

These rulings are landmark advances for LGBT civil rights. That is because protections against discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity are almost nonexistent in federal law and lacking in 28 out of 50 states, including Michigan.

Last week was a very important step forward for nondiscrimination protections for LGBT people. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the federal agency assigned to investigate complaints of employment discrimination in violation of federal law, issued a decision that employment discrimination based on sexual orientation is a form of sex discrimination in violation of Title VII of the Federal Civil Rights Act. Back in 2012 the EEOC issued a similar ruling that transgender employment discrimination, based on gender identity or expression, is also a form of sex discrimination in violation of federal law. The basis for both of these decisions is that in each of these cases the discrimination was motivated by gender stereotyping, in other words the employer’s perspective that the gay or transgender employee failed to conform to the employer’s notions of gender conventions. In Complainant v. Department of Transportation Safety, a gay male alleged that he was not selected for a permanent position as Front Line Manager because he is gay. He also alleged that his supervisor made several negative comments to him about his sexual orientation, which included admonishing him for mentioning his partner with, “We don’t need to hear about that gay stuff.”

Both these rulings are landmark advances for LGBT civil rights. That is because protections against discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity are almost nonexistent in federal law and lacking in 28 out of 50 states, including Michigan. Now anyone, in any part of the country, who works for an employer with 15 or more employees, can file a charge of sex discrimination with the EEOC if they are discriminated against because of their sexual orientation and gender identity, where the facts indicate gender stereotyping occurred.

A huge step forward, but there are limitations. First of all, while the EEOC’s interpretation of sex discrimination is now clear, not all federal courts agree that this theory applies to LGBT people. Second,
Employment

Continued from p. 10

The ruling doesn’t address all incidents of discrimination that LGBT people face in every day in Michigan. The rule is not binding on businesses with fewer than 15 employees (which make up the majority of Michigan employers) and it doesn’t change the fact that under current Michigan law, LGBT people can be discriminated against in housing and public accommodations (including a hotel or a restaurant or accessing medical services). We need to continue our efforts to amend Michigan’s Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act to specifically include the categories of sexual orientation and gender identity. We also need support efforts to pass federal laws that specifically prohibit LGBT discrimination in employment, credit, housing and public accommodation so that we have clarity within all our federal courts. We believe that everyone should be provided with one set of clear rules that everyone knows and everyone can follow.

The public support is there. Seventy percent of all Americans, including 65 percent of Republicans, support comprehensive nondiscrimination protections for LGBT people. With such strong support, we need to both encourage and persuade our elected leaders to pass legislation that accomplishes this. Make no mistake, the EEOC ruling is definitely something to celebrate and it is definitely progress. But it’s not the whole enchilada. Let’s keep working for comprehensive LGBT civil rights protections so that there can be no disagreement that LGBT people are entitled to fairness and dignity in all aspects of life.

Jay Kaplan is the staff attorney at the ACLU of Michigan’s LGBT Project. For more information about ACLU of Michigan’s LGBT Project, go to www.aclumich.org/courts/lgbt-project.
Now that the rainbow dust is starting to settle after all the big gay parades celebrating the Supreme Court decision, we can finally get down to the real business of marriage equality: aborting babies.

The two things social conservatives detest most in the world are abortion and same-sex couples getting married. On the surface, the two are not linked in any clear way. It takes a special kind of twisted logic to connect the two.

Thankfully Ryan T. Anderson, a senior research fellow at The Heritage Foundation, has the kind of skills one needs to blame the gays for abortion.

In a July 20 column on TownHall.com, your source for right-wing quackery, Anderson claims that “the breakdown of the family” is what drives abortion, and since the Supreme Court redefined parenthood by legalizing same-sex marriages, children are now at greater risk than ever before.

“The best protectors of unborn children are a strong marriage culture and people who take the virtue of chastity seriously,” writes Anderson. But with marriage now reduced “to a mere contract,” America is essentially flipping chastity the bird. And, Anderson warns, “Without a culture of chastity, we will never have a pro-life culture.”

In a “culture of chastity” people would only have sex after they were married and that sex-having would only go on in order to make babies. Anderson argues that since same-sex couples can’t make babies, they not only shouldn’t be allowed to get married, but they obviously should not have sex and should not be allowed to pursue reproductive technology in order to have kids.

“The more children that are conceived for same-sex couples through assisted reproductive technology, the more children that will be conceived explicitly and intentionally outside of a relationship with both their mother and father,” Anderson laments.

Never mind the fact that all credible research has found that two dads or two moms are just as good, if not in some cases better, than a mom and a dad. And that children conceived via assisted reproduction to these couples are never an “oops.” These are wanted, carefully planned for children.

“A just society makes sacrifices to ensure that children are known and loved by their own mother and father, while doing what it can to help children denied that blessing by misfortune,” Anderson writes, apparently unaware of or unconcerned by how unjust our society is when it comes to children who experience “misfortune.” Our foster care system, for example, is a mess. Read “To the End of June: The Intimate Life of American Foster Care” by Cris Beam and you’ll see how misguided Anderson is in claiming that the best way to help children is to keep them away from gays.

Of course, then Anderson reveals why he really hates reproductive technology: unused embryos, which each count as an abortion in his book. No surprise, he is against stem-cell research or using these embryos for anything other than making ‘babies.’ He’s against birth control, too, by the way. A “culture of chastity” has no need for it, obviously.

So there you have it. Since gays can get married now, straight people are going to just start extra-maritally bumping up a storm, creating a bunch of babies to abort while the gays “manufacture” (Anderson’s word, because the children of gays aren’t human apparently) kids and de-facto embryo abortions: hence marriage equality “puts unborn children at risk.”

Airtight logic. Everybody can go home now. Ryan Anderson has won this round of Insane Arguments. Stay tuned for Anderson’s next column about how the global warming “hoax” is perpetuated byhipster beard length.

BY D’ANNE WITKOWSKI

BY AJ TRAGER

YPSILANTI — Local trans masculine youth, Alia Ismail, spent his youth discovering who he was, moving to multiple cities around the state and attending Crestwood High School in Dearborn Heights, all while growing up in a bi-cultural family. Now living on his own and attending college, he has begun filming and sharing his transition in a documentary titled “Crossing The Divide,” set to launch in October 2016.

When he first came out as trans in his freshman year of college at Eastern Michigan University, Ismail had a hard time seeing how he fit into the trans community. The only trans people he had heard about were rich white people with supportive families. Ismail is a 20-year-old Arab-American with an estranged father and a little brother who looks up to him. He didn’t feel mis-gendered as a child and didn’t identify with the “born-in-the-wrong-body” narrative that is so often told.

“What do Caitlyn Jenner and Chaz Bono have to do with me? I’m just a queer kid with student debt who works at a coffee shop,” Ismail said. He looked for other trans stories that he could relate to, but couldn’t find any.

“Most things I watched just made me feel like an outsider, or it was explaining what transgender is. So I was like, ‘Why don’t I tell my own story?’ I want to be the little Laverne Cox for young trans guys.”

Ismail had a different presentation in high school and recounts his time there to be very segregated, bouncing between the white and Arab communities in the school. He grew up not knowing how to discuss his gender identity, but was naturally drawn to boys clothing and aggressive sports while reluctantly wearing girls clothes, per his mother’s request. Around the age of 9, things began to solidify.

“I always viewed myself as one of the boys. When I imagined myself in my head… I imagined myself at a young age with short hair,” Ismail said. “I always wore my hair in a ponytail. It wasn’t until I hit puberty when I felt a little uncomfortable.”

Ismail came out as lesbian his senior year, lost a lot of friends and started dating his first LGBT partner.

“There wasn’t anyone trans around me until I had my first girlfriend,” Ismail recounts. “They are now using male pronouns. He first told me when we were dating. I didn’t know anything about being trans.”

A year later he came out.

After Ismail told his therapist that he wanted to make a documentary about his transition, he put Ismail in touch with Lorne Clarkson, a trans man and documentary filmmaker.

“We were on the same page right from the start,” Clarkson said about his first meeting with Ismail. “We both just want to tell a story that other young trans people can relate to, something raw and unguarded. We want to talk about things like the feeling that you’re not ‘trans-enough,’ and how confusing it is when society starts treating you like a different gender.”

Production on the documentary has already begun. It will follow Ismail through his first year of transition as he begins hormone replacement therapy and navigates his new social identity. He’s excited to have started hormone therapy but is also nervous.

“I have no idea what my life is coming: Local Film Documentary For Trans Youth

BY D’ANNE WITKOWSKI

BY AJ TRAGER

YPSILANTI — Local trans masculine youth, Alia Ismail, spent his youth discovering who he was, moving to multiple cities around the state and attending Crestwood High School in Dearborn Heights, all while growing up in a bi-cultural family. Now living on his own and attending college, he has begun filming and sharing his transition in a documentary titled “Crossing The Divide,” set to launch in October 2016.

When he first came out as trans in his freshman year of college at Eastern Michigan University, Ismail had a hard time seeing how he fit into the trans community. The only trans people he had heard about were rich white people with supportive families. Ismail is a 20-year-old Arab-American with an estranged father and a little brother who looks up to him. He didn’t feel mis-gendered as a child and didn’t identify with the “born-in-the-wrong-body” narrative that is so often told.

“What do Caitlyn Jenner and Chaz Bono have to do with me? I’m just a queer kid with student debt who works at a coffee shop,” Ismail said. He looked for other trans stories that he could relate to, but couldn’t find any.

“Most things I watched just made me feel like an outsider, or it was explaining what transgender is. So I was like, ‘Why don’t I tell my own story?’ I want to be the little Laverne Cox for young trans guys.”

Ismail had a different presentation in high school and recounts his time there to be very segregated, bouncing between the white and Arab communities in the school. He grew up not knowing how to discuss his gender identity, but was naturally drawn to boys clothing and aggressive sports while reluctantly wearing girls clothes, per his mother’s request. Around the age of 9, things began to solidify.

“I always viewed myself as one of the boys. When I imagined myself in my head… I imagined myself at a young age with short hair,” Ismail said. “I always wore my hair in a ponytail. It wasn’t until I hit puberty when I felt a little uncomfortable.”

Ismail came out as lesbian his senior year, lost a lot of friends and started dating his first LGBT partner.

“There wasn’t anyone trans around me until I had my first girlfriend,” Ismail recounts. “They are now using male pronouns. He first told me when we were dating. I didn’t know anything about being trans.”

A year later he came out.

After Ismail told his therapist that he wanted to make a documentary about his transition, he put Ismail in touch with Lorne Clarkson, a trans man and documentary filmmaker.

“We were on the same page right from the start,” Clarkson said about his first meeting with Ismail. “We both just want to tell a story that other young trans people can relate to, something raw and unguarded. We want to talk about things like the feeling that you’re not ‘trans-enough,’ and how confusing it is when society starts treating you like a different gender.”

Production on the documentary has already begun. It will follow Ismail through his first year of transition as he begins hormone replacement therapy and navigates his new social identity. He’s excited to have started hormone therapy but is also nervous.

“I have no idea what my life is
Largest Trans Survey Calls For Participants

BY AJ TRAGER

Beginning Aug. 19, transgender and non-binary identifying people will be able to log onto www.ustranssurvey.org and take the 2015 U.S. Trans Survey.

The U.S. Trans Survey is a followup to the National Transgender Discrimination Survey, a resource for helping researchers, policymakers and advocates see the experiences of trans people over time, how things are changing and what can be done to improve the lives of trans people.

The NTDS was developed and conducted by the National LGBTQ Task Force and the National Center for Transgender Equality in 2008-2009 and has provided key information regarding the number of trans people who have faced discrimination or harassment in employment, housing, school, health care and other areas of life. The results were released in the 2011 report, “Injustice At Every Turn.”

The U.S. Trans Survey will be the largest, most comprehensive survey in the history of U.S. trans history, seeking a goal of 20,000 completed surveys by trans, gender queer or non-binary identified people from around the country.

“Over the years, transgender people have bravely told their stories in a monumental community wide effort to make the case for trans health care, program funding and equal protection of our civil rights. If we reach our goal of 20,000 completed surveys, we will have the kind of data we need to make our case to elected leaders, the media and funding sources even more compelling,” said Char Davenport, chair of the Michigan tri-cities chapter of Transgender Michigan.

The USTS will cover a wide range of topics that reflect the lives and experiences of trans people and is designed to more fully examine specific issue areas that disparately impact trans people, such as unemployment and underemployment, housing, health care, HIV/AIDS, disabilities, immigration, sex work and police interactions. Many of the questions included in the USTS have never been asked of trans people before. Like last time, the data set will be shared with advocates, organizations and academics for years to come.

In anticipation of the release of the survey, the National LGBTQ Task Force has designated July 28-30 as “2015 U.S. Trans Survey Awareness Week,” and is requesting that the trans community and allies of the trans community help find as many people who will pledge to take the survey as possible.

Tuesday, July 28 will be social media day and all advocates for the survey can take to the internet and spread the word through graphics and statements provided by NLGBTQTF. July 29 will be “email day,” and supporters can use the email template on the Task Force website to send around to members of the trans and non-binary community. Blog Day will take place on July 30, where people are encouraged to share their first-hand experiences online.

Check out the website www.ustranssurvey.org for more information, sign up to the email list and plan out Awareness Week activities.

If we reach our goal of 20,000 completed surveys, we will have the kind of data we need to make our case to elected leaders, the media and funding sources even more compelling.

- Char Davenport, chair of the Michigan tri-cities chapter of Transgender Michigan.
Party With A Purpose

BY ROBERT TATE

As the LGBT community celebrates 20 years of Hotter Than July, I can’t help but reminisce about what the community looked like when I was younger. I can’t help but smile at how we got here, and how far we’ve come. I also can’t help but to feel a sense of pride in having been involved with Hotter Than July, initially. I am filled with so much joy that our community still has this magnificent event 20 years later!

Being able to see the community grow and see young people working with folks from my age group for the movement is what keeps me going. Hotter Than July is a space where a lot of this work happens. We didn’t have this type of organization when I first started event planning. I can remember that all of my life; I wanted my own space to entertain. When I turned 21, I moved into my own home and one of my friends asked me to go to a bar with him. He took me to this bar called Gagan’s, which was down the street from Menjo’s on Six Mile Road. I had a blast that night, and I danced and partied and have not missed a beat ever since! I have been entertaining people for 40 years. Most folks know me through entertainment, and it seems like that’s the way that I have been able to keep people engaged. I told my friends a long time ago that anywhere I go, come with me. I still have most of my friends here with me today entertaining the community.

Twenty-eight years ago, we started a black LGBT social club called the Billionaire Boys Club (BBC). We had our events at places that most of our attendees had never been and ultimately enjoyed talking about the experience for days afterwards. We made sure that everyone had a good time and met new people who walked away from the event with a smile on their face. We never knew that we were doing anything special. All we wanted to do was entertain the community. We didn’t intend to break barriers, but we did. We reached so many people, and it helped us to understand that we were doing community work through entertainment.

About 20 years ago, BBC was an annual weekend event. Soon after that, we merged that occasion with Men of Color Motivational Group (MOC), another social organization. MOC was already active in the movement and I liked their vision. I thought that joining them would be a good idea. At the time, being partnered with a successful entity like Men of Color helped us to really bridge community and entertainment. We began to partner with additional organizations to support them in their events. Working with community based organizations led us to start Imagine This Productions about 15 years ago to help those organizations improve in their efforts. I now realize that I am an activist in a different kind of way. My way is to bring people together and network with community organizations. Entertainment and community are... different now, but they can be brought back together with the same flavor but for a different era. We did it 20 years ago and it can be done again.

Twenty years is a long time to be doing this work, but it’s also something that needs to be celebrated. People that were a part of this historic development need to be out celebrating something they were at in the beginning. Things have changed from back then, but I like what I see. It’s not perfect, but it’s still moving. At the end of the day it’s all about the community and the space that we make for ourselves. It’s all well and good to party, but let’s party with a purpose and continue building our community!

Robert Tate has been entertaining in Detroit for over 30 years. He is a founding and longstanding member of Billionaire Boys Club (BBC). The BBC has been entertaining the LGBT and allied community for over 20 years. They broke barriers for the LGBT community by having regal events at establishments that have not had African-American gays and lesbians attend. They sponsored and partnered with various organizations, such as Men of Color, KICK Magazine and Hotter Than July. In 2000 Robert started an event planning and social company called Imagine This Productions (ITP). ITP held a fundraiser for Doorstep, a homeless shelter, and had partnered with Ladies with A Current Affair, Picnap Productions and Pink Ice. ITP had various educational and promotional events tied to the community, such as the HTJ fundraiser, “An Evening of Art at The Charlevoix Gallery.”
This year’s HTJ starts as always with the candlelight vigil in Palmer Park on Tuesday. Speaking at this year’s vigil will be controversial Detroit City Council President Brenda Jones. A highlight of this event will be the installation of a memorial plaque in the park made of stone and bronze. The plaque will be installed at the blue spruce memorial tree in recognition of community members who are no longer living.

For the first time in a few years, an official HTJ opening party took place Wednesday, July 22. The theme of the party held at The Woodward, was “Wet & Wild.”

Thursday (July 23) is the annual HTJ Film Festival. This event will feature the Detroit premiere of the documentary “Collective Voices: Wisdom of our African American Lesbian Elders.” The film is directed by Debraha Watson, who will attend the screening and take questions afterward. Also showing will be the musical classic “The Wiz” starring Diana Ross. The location for the festival is the Cass City Cinema, located at 3420 Cass Ave. in Detroit.

The Annual Gathering on LGBT Issues, which was for many years known at the Genesis Summit, will take place on Friday (July 24) at the Michigan State University Detroit Center, which is located at 3408 Woodward Ave., in Midtown. Presenters include Noel Gordon, foundation project manager at the Human Rights Campaign; Marvell Terry, II, also of HRC; Lisa Whitmore Davis of AARP Michigan; and Phillip A. Simmons of Phillip A. Simmons & Associates. Rev. Roland Stringfellow of Metropolitan Community Church Detroit will present a keynote address. The four former presidents of Detroit Black Gay, Inc. and the Black Pride Society will be honored. They are Johnny Jenkins, Hank Millbourne, Kim Jones and Robert Clark, who will be honored posthumously.

The biggest event of the week will undoubtedly be Saturday’s (July 25) picnic in Palmer Park. DJ Tone, DJ Darryl G and DJ Matt Holidaye will play for the crowd and there will be an HTJ showcase featuring Fantaysa Dior, Raven Devine, Samantha Brazil, Davana Couture-Malone, Cierra Dior Malone, Innocence Rodeo, Jasmine Dior, Romeo Milliown and Rajhn Star-Studded King. There will also be performances by Charlie B. Keys, Tia Taylor, J-Leeb and Chalice B. Keys as well as a fashion show presented by Austin Christopher featuring the work of designers DL Perrett and LCM Glam Boutique.

Things wrap up on Sunday (July 26) with two events. The first is a worship service organized by Whosoever Ministries. It will be begin at 11 a.m. and take place at Ecumenical Theological Seminary at 2930 Woodward Ave., Detroit. The second is the annual brunch. Produced by Imagine This Productions, the brunch will take place at 1917 American Bistro, located at 19416 Livernois Ave., Detroit. This event is likely to sell out, so tickets should be purchased in advance.

For more information on Hotter Than July, visit www.hotterthanjuly.org.
2002 - Imani Williams at Kids Fair

1999 - Ashanti

2004 - Darren McCarroll

2014 Cruise

2003 Fashion Show

BTL Photos: By Jason A. Michael

BTL will be covering the 2015 events and posting online throughout the week.

View the Online Gallery

www.PrideSource.com
Hilary Duff On Marriage Equality, Grindr & Why She Took A Break From Showbiz

BY CHRIS AZZOPARDI

“I’m like the dorky kid on the bus who’s like, ‘Hi!!’”

It’s Hilary Duff, razzing on her cold-ridden, congested-sounding self as she does a nasally nerd impression. And though Duff is known to millennials (and their moms) for originating the dorky Disney icon in 2001 — which, she admits during our interview, has been “torturous” — the 27-year-old is ready to move on. Actually, she’s been ready. It’s the rest of the world that just can’t seem to let Lizzie go.

During an insightful and surprisingly candid conversation, Duff spoke about her career as a whole just hours following June 26’s landmark Supreme Court ruling, which granted full marriage rights to LGBT Americans. The child star-turned-music maker also talked about her latest album, “Breathe In. Breathe Out.”, eight years in the making; the long break she took to find her true self; and not knowing how to be a “totally normal girl who doesn’t give a fuck.”

You’re a longtime ally of the LGBT community, and you also have many gay friends, so you must have been thrilled about the Supreme Court ruling on marriage equality. What does that momentous moment mean to you?

Oh my gosh. I’m so excited. What a big day. It’s a huge step toward equality. Everyone should be able to be who they are, love who they want and marry who they want. It’s 2015: for us to still have judgment about people being gay is ridiculous, so I can’t believe it’s taken this long. It’s definitely a big day in history, and I’m just so excited.

Considering you’re not feeling well, you probably won’t be celebrating just yet.

Actually, I do have a party happening at my house tonight for my assistant / best friend. We just worked through her birthday during album release week, and I feel so bad, so we’re finally celebrating at my house tonight. But we’ll be celebrating (marriage equality) as well, I’m sure. It definitely deserves a big toast. Do you have a partner?

I don’t have a partner, no. Is being on Tinder key to finding “the one”? Perhaps you can give me some dating advice. What are Hilary Duff’s tips for finding a husband?

(Laughs) Obviously, I haven’t been so lucky. No — I don’t know. I would not, uh — I would not go with me on Tinder. I don’t know! God. Geez. Maybe the right thing will be in the air tonight.

Lately you’ve been a Tinder enthusiast; have you experienced Grindr?

Well, I haven’t physically actually experienced it, like I don’t have it on my phone or anything, but it’s basically the same thing as Tinder, right? I know because my makeup artist, who’s one of my best friends, has used Grindr a lot and he’s told me all about it. I get to hear all the stories.

And what are those stories?

(Laughs) I mean, I don’t wanna put him on blast. You know what’s crazy is, I feel like you guys hook up a lot more freely. I don’t know if that’s just me because I’m a little more cautious, I guess. I don’t know what it’s like to be a totally normal girl who doesn’t give a fuck about anything.

Because of your celebrity status?

I think so, yeah. And also, I’m a mom and I’ve always been a relationship girl. I’m always surprised when he’s like, “Yeah, I was just in France and I met a dude on Grindr and went over to his house,” and like, they got it done. I’m so fascinated by it.

Are you still on Tinder?

I’m not still using it. It was really fun for me for a minute; I wanted to experience something totally normal and also shock people. No one thought I was really on it — and I was really on it! So I integrated that into my video (for “Sparks”) and showed a side of me that’s really real, really normal. I strive for normalcy in my life every day.

Do your gay friends ever set you up?

Not so much. We go out a lot together, but honestly, when I go out I’m not on the prowl. I just wanna go out and have a good time, and a lot of times I feel like having someone I don’t know around would interfere with that. I only have a certain amount of time to enjoy myself.

What’s a good night for you?

Being with four or five really good friends that all know each other, so we all have a lot in common. Laughing a lot, having a few drinks and maybe dancing a little bit. Having a good meal. A lot of times we go to the Hollywood Bowl — that’s always a good time for me. There’s something about that place that’s magic.

Speaking of venues, will you be touring for this record? It’s been too long.

Yes, I will tour. It took me so long to make my record because it wasn’t where it needed to be. When I started making the record, I wasn’t like, “I have to get it out at this time”; I was like, “It’s gotta be right — after seven years, why be in a rush now?”

Halfway through the process of making my record I signed onto the show “Younger” (on TV Land) and that was really good for me because I think it helped get me out of — you know when you just need to shake it up? I was... terrified. My son had just started school and obviously I was going through a separation and I was like, “I can’t just up and continue work,” and then I was like, “Actually, I can and I’m going to.” This is a great project, and I love New York and it was really good for me. I put a pause on the record and then came back to it after Christmas; it was a great thing for me. It helped turn the record into a proper direction. So, now, “Younger” got picked up for a second season. I’ll shoot from September until December and then I’ll tour after Christmas.

A world tour?

I think it’ll be a world tour. I don’t know if I can set it up like how I used to for five months at a time. Obviously my child is my number one priority, but I think I can do a month at a time and then come back and then go back out for a month. And it’ll have to be a world tour because some of my biggest markets are in South America and Australia and Asia, so we’ll see. No promises, but that’s what I want to happen.

Your 3-year-old son, Luca, is so cute, by the way.

He’s naked right now and covered in tattoos.

If he were to come out to you one day, what would you tell him?

Oh my gosh. I would be so accepting. I just had a long conversation with one of my adult friends who has grown children who are about to go off to college, and he’s like, “I haven’t really had this conversation yet,” and I’m like, “You better do it now because if a kid doesn’t feel accepted by his family, and they’re getting ready to move into a new town, it will just create a divide. He’ll go find his life and you won’t be a part of that. He’ll go find where he is accepted.”

Ah, it could almost make me cry. I feel like… that must be such a lonely place if you don’t feel accepted by your family. I can’t imagine. So, 100 percent, I feel like I would notice all the signs and be the first one to bring it up if I had to, and I would want him to wholeheartedly be himself and know that that was accepted by me.

What advice do you have for youth who want to pursue showbiz?

Honestly, I don’t know. It’s a really hard road, to be honest. To make a transition from that is… I feel like even more so now than it was, your youth is totally taken away. You see these girls dressing like they’re 20 when they’re 14. With Instagram and all this – it’s a youth-sucker. Being 14 in 2015 is intense. I don’t know what I would’ve been like if I had all those outlets to pay attention to and all that babble shit. It’s kind of scary. It scares me raising my kid.

The industry is very fickle, and you just do what you can and know that all this stuff doesn’t mean anything. I mean, obviously, appreciate the opportunities and work hard, but there’s so much more to life. This industry is a tough one to crack, but then I look at someone like Miley, and as crazy as people might think the whole thing is, I commend her. She’s so wholeheartedly being herself and is unapologetic about that and she’s doing a great job.

By just being herself, she’s become an idol for the queer community. She loves who she loves unapologetically, and that’s a huge statement, don’t you think?

Yeah, I do. And she’s wickedly talented, so there’s that. As much as people wanna hate on her for wearing this or doing that or whatever it is people hate on her for, I think she gets the last laugh. At the end of the day, her talent backs it all up. I don’t always relate to everything that she’s doing, but I love that she’s unapologetically herself.

Your show, “Younger,” revolves around a single mom who realizes the effect age has on starting a new career. But how about maintaining a career, because you started young. You’ve been in this business for more than half your life. From your own experience, what is it like to maintain relevancy in an ever-changing business like show business?

Yeah, gosh. There is no secret code that works, as lovely as that would be. I think I have a few things working in my favor. As torturous as it has been at some points in my life to be Lizzie McGuire, I think that when that show came out, it was such a part of who I was, I didn’t feel like I was playing a part. The writers all knew me so well and were writing things that were happening in my life and things that I would say, and I was dressing exactly like I wanted. It was so me.

For whatever reason, that show grabbed people at a time in their life when they really needed her or related to her, so obviously I think I got a lot of fans from that who followed me into my music career. I’ve always been a very open and reachable person for them to relate to, but that’s one thing that has really tied us together and why I’ve kept fans for such a long time who have really followed my career and stuck by me and grown up with me.

In what regard was being Lizzie McGuire “torturous”?

I don’t think during the filming it was torturous. I loved it during the filming. I just didn’t love what a success the show was gonna be, and after that – four years, five years after that – and I was still Lizzie McGuire to people and that was super annoying. Now it’s not. I don’t care now. I’m grateful for it.

What would Lizzie be like now as an adult?

She’d be pretty rad. She would have stayed in school a little bit longer, and I feel like she’d be a sous chef or working at an architectural firm trying to make her way up but still fucking up at all times. (Laughs) I feel like she’d be cool – she wasn’t always a nerd! She was just, like, a nice girl. I feel like she’d still be that same way, but I think she would be getting drunk and doing normal things that everybody does.

Is getting drunk a normal thing you do?

Yeah, on occasion, of course. You gotta let your hair down every once in a while.

After “Lizzie McGuire,” was it hard to make the next move? Is it still hard to make the next move?

It is hard. Instead of me trying to calculate how to do it and how to be successful at it – a lot of people chose different ways than I did, like Lindsay Lohan and the Olsen twins and even Miley Cyrus – I just chose to bow out for a minute.

Why bow out?

I really needed it personally. I grew up in the spotlight and on tour and with everyone just knowing me and knowing me a certain way. At some point I was like, “I don’t even know if I’m that person anymore, and I don’t even have the time to figure that out.” I was just making records and touring and making movies, and then doing it all over again. I basically did a cycle of that four times, and by the end of it, I was like, “I’m done. I don’t enjoy this anymore. I’m not who I wanna be.”

So, I just took a break. Everyone thought I was just absolutely nuts because I was really successful and making a lot of money. And it was scary, because there was no guarantee that my career was still gonna be there. I think, personally, it was very healthy, and I’m proud of where I am now. My new record being top 5 on Billboard after working on it for eight years – I’m proud of that. I don’t need to be No. 1. I need to just do things that fulfill me and make me happy and hopefully connect with people at a certain level.

Desperation is a dangerous road, isn’t it?

Yeah. And having a child, too, puts a lot into perspective. I’m definitely grateful to still have a spot, and I wanna be an actress too and do a show. I can’t be where I used to be. I just have to be who I am now and be grateful for that. It’s good. I’m happy.
BTL ADVERTISERS

Affirmations ........................................... 1
Allstate / Nick Schrock ......................... 2
American Fireplace .............................. *
Automatic Collision ...................... 3
Chess Roofing ........................................... 4
Evergreen ................................................ 4
Ferndale Chiropractic ..................... 5
Ferndale DDA ................................................ 6
Fido ......................................................... 7
Green Thumb Garden Center ............. 8
Hodges .................................................... 9
Just for Us ............................................ 10
Level One Bank ....................................... 11
MCC Detroit ........................................... 12
Mejishi Martial ....................................... 13
Michigan AIDS Coalition ................. 14
Schmidt Law Services .................... *
Premier Care Pharmacy .................... *
S.P.I.C.E .................................................... 1
Suburban Buick GMC ................. 15
*Not shown above

To place an ad call 734.293.7200

Cool Cities

Ferndale

Pinpoint your ad dollars where they will do the most good...
Advertise in the next Cool Cities

2758 Coolidge Hwy, Berkley, MI 48072
248-439-0176 | 973-818-1100
Evgrntiques@hotmail.com | www.evgrntiques.com

An eclectic offering of rare, unusual, and useful antiques from American estates and collections. Asian, American, and Continental

A comfortable trip outside your comfort zone.

No matter how far you go, you travel with the confidence of Symmetrical All-Wheel Drive and X-MODE® now with SX-TECH™ and available EyeSight® driver assist technology.

The new 2015 Subaru Outback® gives you more reasons than ever to keep exploring.

HODGES SUBARU
Metro Detroit’s "Subaru-Only" Dealer
23100 Woodward Ave • Ferndale • MI • 48220
248.547.8800 • www.hodgessubaru.com
Hours: Open Saturdays 10-3 and Extended Hours Till 9 PM Mondays & Thursdays

20 BTL | July 23, 2015

The Print STOP Inc.
If you can think it, we can ink it
888-345-8010

Invitations • Newsletters • Menus • Color Copies • Typsetting
Letterhead • Brochures • Business Forms • Fax Service • Business Cards

SHOP LGBT

3172 W. 12 Mile Road, Berkley
Serving the community since 2001

Town & Country Garage Door, LLC
Your satisfaction is our top priority!

Same Day Service 7 Days a Week!

1991 Orchard Lake Rd, Sylvan Lake, MI 48377
TOWANDCOUNTRYDOOR.NET 248-213-7882
Ferndale’s Grasshopper Underground Celebrates 5 Years Of Championed Sounds And Diverse Music Programming

If you’ve ever been to downtown Ferndale, you’ve noticed the little spot on the Nine Mile strip full of lights dripping Woodward avenue in a swirl of colors and heavy dance music carrying through the streets. Grasshopper Underground has become an essential part of metro Detroit’s music scene and has contributed significantly to its growth. The boutique-sized venue provides patrons with an intimate party experience but brings in talent comparable to a multi-million dollar nightclub.

Celebrating five years of business, Grasshopper Underground is offering diverse music programming this summer, culminating in a massive Five Year Anniversary Party at the end of August. Unlike most entertainment venues, Grasshopper Underground is open seven days a week. While many venues are defined by the big acts they bring in, this is only one facet of Grasshopper’s operation. The newly renovated upstairs lounge gives patrons a perfect happy hour spot, full of people watching right on Woodward and Nine Mile.

Besides being open for a daily happy hour, the venue is keeping it fresh with a new vibe every night. Sundays are Reggae/Hip-hop night; Mondays patrons are encouraged to come with their favorite records for open vinyl night; Tuesday is industrial night; Wednesday begins with a yoga class from 7-8 p.m. in partnership with a x e t i c’s “Sound & Yoga” series and sets the scene for hometown heroes to assume the decks; Thursday nights 98.7 FM AMP Radio takes over with Top 40; and, finally, it all culminates with Fridays and Saturdays, which are reserved for world-class house and techno music.

No matter what kind of music you’re into, there’s something for everyone at Grasshopper this summer. With the rise and fall of many venues over the past five years, Grasshopper has sustained because of management’s passion for the music and their sterling professional reputation. “The talent we bring in love the club as much as those patrons that come to see them,” says owner Troy Ramroop in a recent conversation with Metro Times reporter Alysa Offman.

When asked about the five-year run, Ramroop says, “It’s been amazing. Tough at times. An absolute roller coaster. The situation has gone from people laughing at the name Grasshopper when we first started to being recognized around the world.”

He continues, “Personally, for me, I don’t know how to describe it. Others say I am too personally attached to this business but this is my dream and spending the past five years realizing this dream just makes me want another five years.”

Celebrating five years of championed sounds, the Grasshopper Underground is the premier destination in metro Detroit for fans of electronic dance music. From chart-topping international artists to Detroit’s hometown heroes, this boutique nightclub hosts the most in-demand DJ talent seven nights a week. Located at 22757 Woodward Ave., the Grasshopper Underground hours of operation is Monday-Saturday from 7 p.m. to 2 a.m. and Sunday 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. For more information, including a list of upcoming events, visit them at thegrasshopperunderground.com or facebook.com/thegrasshopperunderground.com.
A NIGHT TO REMEMBER: DISCO DIVAS

MARTHA WASH
THELMA HOUSTON, CHERYL LYNN,
MAXINE NIGHTINGALE, ANITA WARD
& TASTE OF HONEY

SOUNDED BY DJ STACEY “HOTWAXX” HALE

FRIDAY, JULY 24TH

2600 Atwater • Detroit, MI 48207 • 313.393.7128

CheneParkDetroit.com | ticketmaster®

All shows are rain or shine. Events subject to change. Prices slightly higher day of show. Lighted and secure parking.

Chene Park is a City of Detroit, Recreation Dept. facility, managed and operated by Right Productions, Inc.
For more than a decade, Bowler says, “I’ve been able to fully enjoy extreme sports.”

For Bowler, that challenge means getting extreme sports into the Twin Cities Pride celebration. And not just for the traditional participants: men.

About 10 years ago, Bowler says, women’s skateboarding was added to the X Games. However, BMX racing still has not made it into ESPN’s annual homage to extreme sports.

Bowler says that, very quietly, women have become a presence in the extreme sports world. But she knows of very few who self-identify as lesbian, or are open about it.

“We’re already being judged as women by the extreme sports community,” Bowler explains. “Most lesbians probably keep quiet. They don’t want one more issue to contend with.”

She assumes there are “tons” of lesbians – and probably plenty of gay guys too.” But, she says, extreme sports is one place where homosexuality is still not discussed.

She recalls one “aggressive” inline skater who came out in the 1990s. Bowler says his disclosure did not go over well.

Google searches for “gay or lesbian BMX riders” come up empty. There are a few online discussions about whether anyone is out in the sport. The level of discourse is not high. “It’s too manly a sport,” is one comment. Speculation about a rider with a pink bike is another.

After Tim Von Werne’s career was cut short under what one magazine called “a cloud of controversy,” gay skateboarders seem to have remained in the closet too.

Bowler has vowed to increase visibility of extreme sports, and of the lesbians and gay men who love it.

She envisions BMX racing, skateboarding and more as part of the 2016 Twin Cities Pride festival. “I’m tired of walking around every year at Pride, feeling like I’m ignored,” she says. “This is a real sport.”

The celebration at Loring Park already includes several sports, Bowler notes. Minneapolis and St. Paul are filled with gyms; cross-training is very popular. Why not add extreme sports into the mix?

She also hopes her work will bring visibility to the Fetal Alcohol Syndrome community. If others can see that she’s gotten involved in something athletic, daring and fun, they might be tempted to ride a bike or skateboard too.

In addition, many sports organizations march in the Pride parade. “The rugby boys are favorites,” Belstler says. WHAM – the Women’s Hockey Association of Minnesota – “marches” on rollerblades.

But, Belstler says, adding extreme sports may be easier said than done. Ramps and other equipment must be trucked in, and Loring Park is already filled to capacity.

Still, Teri Bowler is undeterred. She has a year to “ride” to the rescue of extreme sports.

Dan Woog is a journalist, educator, soccer coach and gay activist. His latest book is “We Kick Balls: True Stories from the Youth Soccer Wars.” He can be reached care of this publication or at OutField@qsyndicate.com.
Editor’s Pick

The Starr Commonwealth presents the Second Annual Starr Summer Youth Festival. The festival showcases the talents of Detroit’s youngest artists in a daylong celebration of the arts. Featuring hundreds of artists and performers ages 6-20 in music, dance, theater, visual art, film and a ‘Young Artists’ Market, the event also includes a tribute to Detroit artist Tyrre Guyton who will receive the Starr Art of Resilience Award for his work in supporting Detroit’s communities and mentoring young artists.

The free, family-friendly event also includes hands-on art activities and free lunches on a first-come basis for young people up to age 18. Starr Commonwealth is a social services agency serving Detroit youth and families for more than 100 years.

The festival will run from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday, July 25. Paradise Valley Park (formerly Harmonie Park) is located at 311 Grand River Ave., Detroit. Find more information at artofresilience.org.

Happenings

OUTINGS

Thursday, July 23

Pearl, Kaya, Trixie and Violet 8 p.m. Murray & Peter, 7006 E. 14 Mile Road, Warren. 586-208-3200. Neptix.com

Friday, July 24

A Night to Remember: Disco Divas Chene Park, Detroit. 313-393-7128. Cheneparkdetroit.com

Divas Night Out: The King & Queens Chene Park, 2800 Atwater, Detroit. Cheneparkdetroit.com

Second Annual HR Golf Outing/ Fundraiser 7 p.m. Holland is Ready, 4600 Macatawa Legends Blvd, Holland. Hollandisready.org

Blinddog Smokin’ 8 p.m. Tickets: $25. The Acorn Theater, 107 Generations Ball St., Ann Arbor. 734-994-3677. Autbar.com

Saturday, July 25

MAC Yard Sale 11 a.m. $1 T-shirts, dance CDs, GLBTQ DVDs, 25 cent jewelry, plus male postcards; 12 packs of assorted greeting cards, art work from past events, plus other miscellaneous items. Cash or check sales only, Michigan AIDS Coalition, 429 Livernois, Ferndale. Michiganaidscollection.org

Great Lakes Bay Pride 12 p.m. Great Lakes Bay Pride, Saginaw. Greatlakesbaypride.org/home2.html

Gay Straight Alliance in Berrien County 2 p.m. LGBTQ youth, friends and allies, ages 14-18. OutCenter, 124 Water St., Benton Harbor. 269-925-8330. Outcenter.org

Pride Mini Ball 6 p.m. StatusSassy.com, Detroit. StatusSassy.com

Ides of March 8 p.m. Tickets: $30-40. The Acorn Theater, 107 Generations Dr., Three Oaks. 269-756-3079. Acorntheater.com

Monday, July 27

Operation KIdsafe Safety Week Operation KIdsafe, 37720 Amrhein Road, Livonia. 734-237-1032. operationkidsafe22@gmail.com

Lansing Capital Roller Derby Summer Boot Camp 6 p.m. Six week, 12 session Roller Derby basic skills training camp. $60 due day 1 of camp, $80 at door. Boot Camp, 6 p.m. Six week, 12 session Roller Derby basic skills training boot camp. $60 due day 1 of camp, accepting cash or check. Open to both men and women. Lansing Capital Roller Derby, 7348 Old M-79 , East Lansing. lcrdbootcamp@mittenmavens.net

Always Something happening at the \\aut\ BAR

Weekly Events and Specials

Tuesday

Karaoke and 1/2 off wine

Wednesday

$1 off beer and free pool

Thursday

Trivia with Terry and Thirsty Thursday 1/2 off beer and well drinks with Student ID

Friday

Bistro Fridays Special menu à la carte, or prix frite 4-course meal for $20

Saturday

turn’\it\aut\ \night’

Sunday

Salsa Night $1 tacos

Like Us On

aut\ BAR

315 Braun Ct, Ann Arbor
(734) 994-3677 | www.AutBar.com

GLBT Books
317 Braun Ct, Ann Arbor
(734) 663-0036 | www.GLBTBooks.com

313.393.7128 // CheneParkDetroit.com
2600 Atwater - Detroit, MI 48207

ticketmaster*
Bawdy ‘Beaches’ Dispels Movie Version’s Sentimentality

BY TANYA IRWIN

If you are expecting many similarities between the PG-13-rated movie “Beaches” and the over-the-top raunchy parody “Beaches Be Trippin’,” you might be disappointed. The emphasis is definitely on the raunchy, and it’s definitely a show to hire a babysitter for. And don’t bring grandma, either, unless she can handle a plethora of F-bombs, blowjob jokes and a champagne glass that doubles as a dildo.

However, if you’re a fan of drag, quick wit and even a little improv, you’ll be right at home at The Ringwald Theatre’s annual “Summer Camp” production: director and writer Brandy Joe Plambeck’s take on the sappily sentimental “Beaches.”

Even the 10-year-old characters at the beginning of the performance are over the top. CC Bloom (Joe Bailey) smokes a cigarette and quizzes the lost-on-the-beach Hillary Whitney (Richard Payton) about the size of her father’s penis and whether his pubic hairs are bushy or neat (in a questionable exercise of trying to determine which hotel the hapless Hillary might be staying at based on such characteristics of her father.) This is bread-and-butter, of course, for the Ringwald, so regulars of the theater surely won’t plotz at all over the bawdy material.

Interspersed amidst the acting are videos of the two main characters’ pen pal correspondence over the years (with CC’s laden with R-rated language.) The correspondence is read aloud by the characters, which is the voiceover to videos. CC’s letters are riddled with profanities and vulgarities while Hillary’s are more earnest – yet both elicit chuckles. (Hillary talks about Jew camp and the over-the-top raunchy parody she hacking over to the audience.

Even the 10-year-old characters at the beginning of the performance are over the top. CC Bloom (Joe Bailey) smokes a cigarette and quizzes the lost-on-the-beach Hillary Whitney (Richard Payton) about the size of her father’s penis and whether his pubic hairs are bushy or neat (in a questionable exercise of trying to determine which hotel the hapless Hillary might be staying at based on such characteristics of her father.) This is bread-and-butter, of course, for the Ringwald, so regulars of the theater surely won’t plotz at all over the bawdy material.

Interspersed amidst the acting are videos of the two main characters’ pen pal correspondence over the years (with CC’s laden with R-rated language.) The correspondence is read aloud by the characters, which is the voiceover to videos. CC’s letters are riddled with profanities and vulgarities while Hillary’s are more earnest – yet both elicit chuckles. (Hillary talks about Jew camp and the wonders of her first crush while CC coos about being too permissive in allowing 7-year-old Victoria to get so many tattoos (which aren’t hidden by the child’s dress Herwat has donned.) Hewat’s body art had been on full display in a previous scene where the lean and attractive actor is wearing nothing more than Daisy Duke shorts, cowboy boots and a smile. Musical numbers are lip-synced for the most part, with the exception of Hillary’s minstrel rendition of “Free At Last.” Payton has a lovely voice which is underutilized in the production – but hey, she’s not the one who is supposed to be a singer/actress; that’s CC’s stich.

There is no intermission and the scenes quickly flow between live acting and the video-projected letters as the characters quickly age. Anyone who is even vaguely familiar with the movie knows Hillary dies at the end, and the play makes no attempt to keep the inevitable ending a secret. Once she births the baby that CC will end up taking custody of at the end of the performance, Hillary coughs into a hanky and then reveals a bloodstain to the audience. It’s hard to believe impending death could be a comedic device, but somehow in this production it is, with the bloody handkerchief prompting a chuckle whenever Hillary shows it to the audience.

Even after Hillary’s matter-of-fact death, the jokes continue to fly until the very last word of the very last scene. Nothing is sacred, and that’s OK, because laughter is contagious.

See more theater reviews at Encoremichigan.com.
Editor’s Pick

Noted Detroit painter Tom Parish brings a collection of paintings that abound with the essence of Venice to Robert Kidd Gallery in Birmingham. Inspired by the shimmering canals and architectural beauty of Italy’s “Serenissima” (the old serene one), Parish’s stylized realistic paintings are constructed from blocks of sturdy modernist color. The shimmer of rolling water, depths of captivating linear vistas and the classicism of craft are elements moored to the heart of Parish’s timeless imagery.

In addition to a career of full-time studio work, professor Emeritus Tom Parish taught painting at Wayne State University’s school of art for over 30 years. Parish’s works are represented in many important public, private and corporate collections both in the U.S. and abroad.

Tom Parish’s “Venezia!” will be displayed in the gallery until Aug. 15. Robert Kidd Gallery is located at 107 Townsend St., Birmingham. Call 248-642-3909 or visit robertkiddgallery.com for more information.

ART ‘N’ AROUND

Cruise the River with Friends
Please Join Us for our Annual River Cruise

Support Our GLBT Scholarship Mission & Enjoy a Detroit River cruise with Diamond Jack.
Including:
- Hors D’oeuvres
- Cash Bar
- Dance music by: DoublePlay DJ Services

Tickets available:
- Five 15 - (248) 515-2551
- Tickets & General Information - (586) 573-9932

Friday, August 7
8:00pm to 10:00pm
Boarding starts at 7:30pm
TICKETS JUST: $45.00 each

19th Annual Ferndale Pub Crawl
FriDay, July 31, 2015
Doors open 6:00pm @ Twist Night Club
22901 Woodward Ave. Ferndale, MI 48220
Bosco, Como’s, Danny’s Irish Pub, Dino’s Lounge, Ferndale Elks, M-Brew, One Eyed Betty’s, Orchid, Rosie O’Grady’s, Schramm’s Mead, Secreto, SOHO, Twist Night Club

Groups led by Detroit Derby Girls!
Benefits MAC Ferndale Auxiliary Police, Detroit Derby Girls, Ferndale Community Foundation

www.PrideSource.com | BTL
LATEST XXX VIDEO & DVD RELEASES! THE FINEST IN ADULT ENTERTAINMENT AT THE BEST PRICES!

UPTOWN SALE
$10 OFF ANY $50 PURCHASE
$20 OFF ANY $100 PURCHASE Regular Priced Merchandise Only!
July 20 - 31, 2015

BO-GO SPECIAL
BUY ONE DVD AT REGULAR PRICE (RED STICKER ONLY!)
GET A $5.95 DVD FREE YOUR CHOICE
August 1-15, 2015

16541 Woodward Ave. at McNichols next to "Deja Vu", Highland Park 313.869.9477
16401 W. 8 Mile Between Greenfield & Southfield Detroit 313.836.0647

Hours:
Mon-Sat 9am - 10pm
Sun Noon - 8pm
Ellen Page: ‘Lioness’

Ellen Page’s next project is called “Lioness,” and it sounds like the kind of film we need a lot more of. She’ll play US Marine Corps Lance Corporal Leslie Martz, a real-life American soldier in Afghanistan, and leader of a Female Engagement Team. Her job was to work with Afghan women, provide them with skills that would allow them to become more independent, and to gain secret information about their husbands, most of whom were Taliban. Martz’s story took place during the time of “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell,” however, so her second battle, as a lesbian, was with the very military she was serving. It also makes the story something of a period piece, even if the hairstyles don’t have to change. The film was written by Rosalind Ross (the El Rey Network’s action series “Matador”) with more casting and director to come. Until then, at ease.

Tig Notaro is ‘Punching The Clown’

Still don’t know who Tig Notaro is? You will, and very soon. “Tig,” the documentary about the lesbian stand-up comic’s year of cancer and heartbreak, a brutal rough patch that galvanized her career, brought her immense amount of media attention. The film made her, ironically enough, funnier and more successful than ever, and is already up and streaming on Netflix after premiering at Los Angeles’s Outfest. Building on this buzz, she’ll co-star in the indie feature “Still Punching The Clown,” from comic Henry Philips and co-writer/director Gregori Viens. Philips, whom you may know from “Jimmy Kimmel Live,” stars as a – what else? – stand-up comic struggling to make it. The film co-stars Sarah Silverman, Academy Award-winner J.K. Simmons, Mike Judge, Michaela Watkins and Clifton Collins Jr. Look for it to punch its way into arthouse theaters later this year.

‘Babadook’ director takes on lesbian tragedy

For her next project, Jennifer Kent, the filmmaker behind last year’s critically acclaimed horror indie “The Babadook,” is taking on a different sort of horror: the destruction of 19th-century lesbians in “Alice + Freda Forever.” Based on the non-fiction book by Alexis Coe, “Alice + Freda Forever” concerns 19-year-old Alice Mitchell, a Tennessean who pretended to be a man in order to marry her 17-year-old girlfriend, Freda Ward. Separated by force after their love letters were discovered, Alice slashed Freda’s throat with a razor, and was then committed to a mental hospital (for both the attack and for the “insanity” of lesbianism) where she died a few years later. The case became one of the tabloid tragedies of the era, and was responsible for cementing the idea of lesbians as violent, frustrated men in the culture. So… not exactly reflective of the current love-fest surrounding same-sex marriage, but in Kent’s capable hands, it’s going to make a fascinating film.

Somebody is still watching ‘Project Runway.’ Is it you?

We have never given up on loving “Project Runway.” Sure, it hasn’t produced a viable fashion professional since Christian Siriano – and that was so long ago people were still throwing the word “tranny” around on broadcast television and somehow getting away with it – but no matter, we love all the stitching and bitching and the way Tim Gunn has gone from most-valuable-sideman to Boss of Everybody. Heidi Klum, Zac Posen and Nina Garcia are back, of course, and the list of guest judges is, as usual, a mix of people whose opinions matter and those who have something to promote, even if it’s only the urgent message that they still exist. They include Kiernan Shipka – who apparently transformed into an adult when we turned our head for a second – as well as Paula Patton, Tracee Ellis Ross, Ashley Tisdale, Coco Rocha, Ciara, designer Lisa Perry and Spice Girl Mel B, among others. The new season begins Aug. 6, and remember: don’t bore Nina.

Romeo San Vicente’s next challenge involves you making him a very stylish sandwich. He can be reached care of this publication or at DeepInsideHollywood@qsyndicate.com.
Q Puzzle

You Can’t Tie the Knot? NOT!

Across
1 Protection for one’s head
6 Sweet dream spoiler
11 Prepare for phone sex
15 “I am ___ than grass…” (Sappho)
16 Hub-to-rim lines
17 Event for Geert Blanchart
18 Cara of “Fame”
19 Right on the button
20 What Dorian Gray never does
21 Porno film “ ___ 69”
22 “I Do” singer
23 “Chapel of Love” singer
24 “Beautiful Day” singer
25 Floorboard supporter
26 Earthen pot
27 Biblical prophet married to Gomer
30 Threesome member for Dumas
34 Gaza Stripper, e.g.
38 Rick’s old flame
40 Frame of mind
41 “Wedding Serenade” singer
44 50s talk-show pioneer
47 Homosexuality and more, in Leviticus
48 Sea eagles
50 LB/Les yeep
52 “Beautiful Day” singer
54 “South Park” composer Shaiman
57 “We ___ Family”
58 Vehicle for the high Cs?
60 Moola
61 Frightfully strange
63 Blue material, but not porn
64 Persona non
65 “We ___ Family”
66 Persona non
67 Diplomacy breakdown
68 De Wolfe of design
69 Rob on the screen
70 Lambda Legal Defense
71 Shirt spoiler
72 What a chicken hawk may raid

Down
1 Cathedral of Hope topper
2 Claire McNab’s inspector Ashton
3 Alaskan tongue
4 Slow, to Saint-Saëns
5 Emulates a peacock
6 We ___ Family
7 Overly permissive
8 Butler’s last words
9 Affluent, to Lorca
10 Walter portrayed by Danny Kaye
11 Where cross-dressers race
12 He did Moor good, then harm
13 Perfect serves from Mauresmo
14 It’s sometimes more
15 “Coffee, ___ Me?”
16 Floorboard supporter
17 Biblical prophet married to Gomer
18 Cara of “Fame”
19 Right on the button
20 What Dorian Gray never does
21 Porno film “ ___ 69”
22 “I Do” singer
23 “Chapel of Love” singer
24 “Beautiful Day” singer
25 Floorboard supporter
26 Earthen pot
27 Biblical prophet married to Gomer
30 Threesome member for Dumas
34 Gaza Stripper, e.g.
38 Rick’s old flame
40 Frame of mind
41 “Wedding Serenade” singer
44 50s talk-show pioneer
47 Homosexuality and more, in Leviticus
48 Sea eagles
50 LB/Les yeep
52 “Beautiful Day” singer
54 “South Park” composer Shaiman
57 “We ___ Family”
58 Vehicle for the high Cs?
59 New York Liberty game officials
60 Moola
61 Frightfully strange
63 Blue material, but not porn
64 Persona non
65 “We ___ Family”
66 Persona non
67 Diplomacy breakdown
68 De Wolfe of design
69 Rob on the screen
70 Lambda Legal Defense
71 Shirt spoiler
72 What a chicken hawk may raid

Solution below
20TH ANNIVERSARY
HOTTER THAN JULY
JULY 21-26
DETROIT 2015
VISIT • PARTNER • VENDER
#HTJ @DETROITHOJ 313-285-9733
HOTTERTHANJULY.ORG
DETROIT@HOTTERTHANJULY.ORG
REMEMBER PARTY VIEW LEARN CELEBRATE WORSHIP FEAST
CRISSCUT® CUSHION
BY CHRISTOPHER

DIAMOND CASTLE
Jewelers since 1902
39955 GRAND RIVER AVE, NOVI, MI 48375
T: 248.442.2440 | diamondcastlejewelers.com

The original Crisscut® is a trademark used under license from Christopher Designs. Use of the Crisscut® trademark is only allowed by authorized retailers.