I’m a very huge Diana Ross fan, so, if I was going to be that close (to Detroit), I needed to go and see where my idol started. I started out impersonating her until I realized I wasn’t black and that I couldn’t sing.

DeBoer-Rowse Legal Team Finally Gets Paid

DETROIT – The state of Michigan is paying nearly $2 million to the lawyers who fought for marriage equality in the state.

Gov. Snyder and Attorney General Bill Schuette spent nearly three years arguing in favor of the same-sex marriage ban, facing off against a lesbian couple from Hazel Park who were seeking ways to extend the rights and protections from one parent to all of their children.

After a tireless fight that extended all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, Schuette and Snyder lost the battle and are now forced to pay a total of $1.9 million to the legal team representing April and Jayne DeBoer-Rowse.

April and Jayne, who have been together for 15 years, finally wed in August following the U.S. Supreme Court decision in June, striking down same-sex marriage bans and making marriage equality the law of the land. Together they have four children who will soon be legally adopted by both parents.

The couple filed 15 time sheets and affidavits with the motion, requesting compensation for 5,474 hours of work at a rate of $350 per hour based on attorney income summaries reported by the State Bar of Michigan.

Third LGBT Murder In Detroit Since January

The Detroit police are investigating the murder of a 30-year-old African-American male who was found Monday morning between Arizona and Brush Streets on Detroit’s east side. Officers believe the incident happened before 6:30 a.m.

The victim, who Equality Michigan has identified as Melvin, was found dressed in women’s clothing with a fatal gunshot wound to his body. Melvin was a sex worker, identified as a gay man and often wore women’s clothing while earning his living.

Early reports identified Melvin as a potential member of the transgender community, however, friends of Melvin insist that he did not identify as transgender, Equality Michigan reports.

“We have no words to describe the inexplicable and heart wrenching pain we are feeling right now. We can, however, articulate our outrage over this epidemic of violence aimed at our community. Enough is enough. As mainstream communities use our lives and our bodies as political fodder and comedy, our people are dying in brutal and violent attacks. We are not the problem. In the land of the free, we should be able to express our authentic selves freely and without fear for our physical safety, but this is not our reality. In the land of the brave, we lead the way. Because, in this world, openly expressing your gender or sexual orientation in a way that mainstream society regularly demeans, discounts and objectifies is revolutionary,” said Yvonne Siferd, director of victim cervices at Equality Michigan.

Danielle Woods, LGBT Liaison for the Detroit Police Department, told WXYZ news that DPD does not, at this time, see a connection between Melvin’s sexual orientation and his murder. Officers do not have any leads but are hopeful someone will step up and speak out.

This is an ongoing investigation. Anyone with any information is encouraged to call the Detroit Police or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-SPEAK-UP.

BRIGHTON – Working in the trenches on New York City’s lower eastside to organize immigrant residents to challenge the political and legal power structures was the moment Stephanie White knew her life was going to be forever entwined with the topsy turvy world of politics and social equality.

“Watching oppressed people band together and stand up to a local police captain, who was letting the cops be kind of irresponsible around the neighborhood,” she told BTL in an exclusive interview Monday, “and pinning him down and saying, ‘No, Captain, I need a direct answer from you – will you or will you not make your officers obey the law?’ Watching him stammer, and try to answer these folks – that was it for me. A-ha. It was just beautiful.”

That moment and decades of hands-on political organizing experience are about to be put to use as she takes the helm at Equality Michigan – the state’s anemic LGBTQ and HIV affected community and political organization.

The 46 year old native of the Kansas City metro area comes on at a time when the organization has been rocked by controversy – an aggressive, but ultimately failed, attempt to garner enough GOP votes to amend the state’s Elliott-Larsen Civil Rights Act; a controversial call to boycott the beloved Michigan Womyn’s Music festival over a trans-exclusionary policy; and five executive directors in a decade, just to name a few issues.

Also during the last two years, the organization found itself increasingly isolated, politically. When former executive director Emily Dievendorf left the organization earlier this year, the acting ED, Bill Greene, found himself weighing the political, funding and board relations issues which have consistently hampered the organization’s functionality.

But White said that in the vacuum left as Equality Michigan reorganized, an “exciting” level of grassroots activism has risen.

“She said she has noticed in the past half a year or so that there is a willingness to collaborate among various organizations to conquer the various issues related to equality.

“Everyone is saying, ‘I’m in,’” she said. “Our role in this puzzle is to be the political eyes and ears – and the political strategic thinkers,” White said of the organization’s broad mission in driving the equality agenda in the state.

While White is optimistic about the role the organization can play in coordinating and driving the equality agenda in Michigan, she is also stepping in at a time when the Board has just appointed Jim Murray, the president of AT&T, to its ranks. That appointment was seen by some in the political world as a head nod to incrementalism in policy development and advocacy. Murray is controversial because he worked with the state GOP leadership to craft a sexual orientation only bill to amend the state’s civil rights act, a move that left the transgender community behind.

“It’s important for me to say – for you to know, for everyone to know – that transgender equality is central to my beliefs and my commitment,” she said. “I am 100 percent committed to a fully inclusive nondiscrimination law.”

She said the incrementalism discussions happening with board members is “on-going” and “is not done.” But personally, she does not support that move.

“I think equality means equality for all,” she said. “I think when you leave people out of equality, that’s actually called inequality.”

“Adding White To The Rainbow
New Leadership Arrives At Equality Michigan

BY TODD HEYWOOD

Stephanie White said bringing local activism together, harnessing it, is going to be a key part of her vision for Equality Michigan and her leadership. BTL photo: Todd Heywood
“She’ll be great at working with people of different political stripes and bringing equality to the state of Michigan.”

– Mark Schauer – a former Congressman and Democratic nominee for governor. White was his political director during his 2014 gubernatorial race. He said in a phone interview that White would harness all the resources available “to put together” effective coalitions.

LGBT community is still learning and growing,” she said. “I think there are people all over our state that don’t get it; don’t understand why it’s not OK to leave some members of our community out, or why gender identity discrimination really is part of sexual orientation discrimination.”

She said the newly minted Transgender Advocacy Project at the ACLU of Michigan – and under the leadership of Amy Hunter, a transgender political operative from Kalamazoo – is going to be key in supporting conversations about gender identity in both the LGBT community and the broader community.

Forging Coalitions

At the end of the day, White said, bringing local activism together, harnessing it, is going to be a key part of her vision for Equality Michigan and her leadership. That includes, she said, engaging the broader progressive community as well.

And those who have worked closely with her talk glowingly about her ability to forge political coalitions to drive change.

She’ll be great at working with people of different political stripes and bringing equality to the state of Michigan,” said Mark Schauer – a former Congressman and Democratic nominee for governor. White was his political director during his 2014 gubernatorial race. He said in a phone interview that White would harness all the resources available “to put together” effective coalitions.

Schauer said White will bring a keen sense of political strategy and objectives to the organization, and drive a powerful agenda through that.

And what is on that agenda?

“Amending Elliott-Larsen, obviously,” she said. She also said it was important to battle against so-called religious freedom bills. Another key policy issue, she said, would be changing Michigan’s rules and laws related to gender markers on state issued identifications.

While such an issue may seem minor to a casual observer, the trans community has long reported that not being able to have an identification which reflects their gender identity – but rather their assigned gender at birth – can be humiliating. It results in outing people as trans, and can put people at risk of violence.

Addressing such violence is key to the mission of Equality Michigan, as well. The group runs an anti-violence project, which White called “huge.” She said she hopes to connect the lived stories of those who have experienced violence and discrimination with political lobbying efforts as well.

“It’s important to ground the organization from our, you know, kind of esoteric political analysis, and the lived reality people feel and experience day in and day out,” she said.

While marriage equality is a national reality, full equality is still not here in Michigan she noted.

“It’s easy to think that now that we have gay marriage – everybody wants to celebrate – ‘Hey, gay marriage, everything’s great!’” she said. “You and I know, lots of us know, that’s not the case. There’s legal equality and then there’s lived equality. A lot of us still struggle with that.”

Detroit Man Murdered After His 24th Birthday Party
Mylin Jenkins Remembered As ‘Beautiful Inside And Out’

By Jason A. Michael

Detroit – By all accounts, Mylin Jenkins had a bright future in front of him. He was an aspiring model who dreamed of becoming a dentist and moving to Atlanta or Los Angeles. He turned 24 on Friday, Oct. 2. Three days later, he was dead.

Jenkins was leaving a birthday party that had been thrown in his honor in the early morning hours of Monday, Oct. 5 when the tragedy occurred outside a home on Detroit’s west side. He was in the driver’s seat of his parked car when a passenger in the back seat of the car, identified as 17-year-old Devin Simms, shot him in the head. Simms then allegedly removed Jenkins from the car and sped off in it.

Later that day, Simms held a SWAT team at bay for nearly two hours as he sat armed and barricaded in a house on Ohio Street. Eventually, he surrendered without incident. Simms was charged with felony murder, carjacking, resisting and obstructing a police officer and felony firearm.

But if police believe they know who did it, Jenkins’s family is still struggling with why.

“Everyone seems to be just as shocked as we are,” said Jenkins’s sister Nygeria Ligon. “There are so many different stories.”

Most people, however, are simply talking about Jenkins and how special he was. He worked at Petco, was pursuing his associate’s degree from Oakland County Community College and was known for loving the night life.

“He was a real joyful person, fun,” said his brother Darrick McConnell. “You could be down or mad and he’d call you or walk in the room and your spirits would lift. Even if you were irritated with him you couldn’t stay mad at him for long because he had a great personality.”

And, above all, he loved to party.

“He was a turn up king,” McConnell said. “He could go all night with you. He could drink you under the table. He could dance you under the table. He was the life of the party.”

“That boy could dance his butt off,” said David Perrett, a friend of Jenkins. “We came out together. There was a large group of us who used to hang out together and he was the youngest person in the group. He was always just a really cool sweetheart.

“He had really positive energy and as long as I’ve known him he’s never been tied up in drama,” Perrett continued. “Of course, we know he was absolutely gorgeous, but he was also very talented and he would always keep you laughing and joking.”

Jenkins’s sister concurred.

“Mylin was beautiful inside and out,” Ligon said. “He had a great heart. He was very ambitious and loving... such a loving individual.”

Pugh Trial Postponed To Nov. 3 Amid New Allegations

By Jason A. Michael

Detroit – Former Detroit City Council President Charles Pugh has returned to the news over the past week as the start date for his civil trial nears. Pugh’s trial was originally slated to begin this week. But District Judge David Lawson pushed the start back to Nov. 3 in the wake of new allegations by a second man who has come forward to claim that Pugh groomed him for sex while he was underage.

In a sworn affidavit 22-year-old Nathaniel Hill said he was hired to be Pugh’s personal intern when he was a 14-year-old student at Cass Technical High School. Hill, who is currently serving 9-20 years in prison for carjacking, claims that while working in Pugh’s downtown condo he would witness pornography playing on Pugh’s personal computer and be subjected to body language that he interpreted as unwanted sexual advances.

“Many of the actors in the pornography videos were very young,” the affidavit reads in part. “It was clear to me that Mr. Pugh was attracted to teenage males... Mr. Pugh made it clear that he believed he could attract any young man he set his sights on.”

Hill is claiming he came forward because his story was so similar to Khody Sanford’s, the man who is suing Pugh. Sanford’s attorney is hoping to have Hill testify at the trial. In rescheduling the start date of the trial, Judge Lawson gave Pugh’s attorney attorney time to depose Hill and other potential witnesses.

While Hill’s claims have the potential to be damaging to Pugh, there is the question of Hill’s credibility.

“(The jury) will experience some issues of credibility with this witness,” Sanford’s attorney, Nicole James, told Fox 2 News. “This is someone who, my understanding is, is in prison now on a carjacking charge. And that is a very serious offense and a very violent offense.”

School Board Members Warned Placing Pugh At Boy’s Academy Was ‘Dangerous’

Also made public this week were affidavits filed by three members of the Detroit School Board who claim they made Detroit Public Schools emergency managers aware of their concerns with Pugh’s mentoring program at Frederick Douglass Academy for Young Men.

“My mom knows what is up and she is going to put a stop to the relationship.” Sanford continues. “If I can trust you, then the sky is the limit for you, sir,” Pugh said. “You can have whatever you need or want.”

What Sanford needed turned out to be $160 to pay for prom expenses, which Pugh agreed to give to him in exchange for a video of Sanford masturbating. Sanford made the video and received the cash. But shortly afterward, Sanford’s mother discovered her son was texting the councilman and put a stop to the relationship.

“Everything between us has to stop,” Sanford said in his last text message to Pugh. “My mom knows what is up and is going to report you.”

Eric Metaxas

I may be a grown up, but I read a lot of young adult fiction aimed at LGBT teens. Wait. I shouldn’t use the term “aimed at” less I fuel the fire behind Eric Metaxas’s idea that YA books are “disproportionately gay” and are trying to turn young people gay or at least make kids cool with the so-called sinful gay lifestyle.

In a recent commentary on BreakPoint which, according to their website, “provides a Christian perspective on today’s news and trends,” Metaxas proclaims “an alarming trend in youth lit.”

“The way to win over a culture is to capture the minds and hearts of its young people,” he says. “The gay-rights movement has certainly learned that lesson, which helps explain a current trend in youth literature. Anyone who reads books for teens these days will tell you that portrayals of gay relationships and characters are rapidly increasing.”

He’s right, in a way. Though what he sees as a bad thing, I see as a good thing. It’s true that there are more LGBT themes and characters being explored in YA lit. But it’s not because all of a sudden the gay-rights movement ramped up production.

When I was discovering I was attracted to girls and not boys in the mid-90s, there were books about lesbians out there, but I didn’t know that and didn’t know where to find them. I couldn’t just Google “lesbian books” and I certainly couldn’t ask a librarian to help me find them. One of the first books about lesbians that I read was “The Well of Loneliness” by Radclyffe Hall (even if you haven’t read it, the title alone gives you a pretty good idea of the suffering therein). In college I read “Stone Butch Blues” by Leslie Feinberg (more suffering).

There were YA books that I could have read in high school. “Annie On My Mind” by Nancy Garden, for example, was first published in the early 1980s. But like I said, I had no way of knowing that.

But today, there are plenty of books to choose from and I’ve read many of them. I want to know what today’s young people are reading. And I’m very happy that LGBT young people no longer lurk in the shadows without books that reflect their lives.

Metaxas sees something far more nefarious at play. “Authors who work to normalize homosexuality are trying to promote what they see as compassion, understanding and acceptance,” he says. “I believe they’re also trying to break down sexual boundaries of all kinds, to push what they see as ‘freedom’ as far as they possibly can.”

What’s wrong with “compassion, understanding and acceptance”? Unless, of course, you believe that LGBT people are unworthy of it and should simply be scorned.

As far as breaking down “sexual boundaries of all kinds,” that’s a common claim of the anti-gay right who think of LGBT people only in terms of sex. As if having sex – really freaky sex in the imagination of the anti-gay right – is the only thing LGBT people do or think about. It’s a fun way to dehumanize us.

Metaxas continues, “Even when there are no explicit descriptions, sexual themes are often introduced before kids are ready to deal with them in a mature way. Moreover, the way they’re introduced can be confusing to vulnerable and impressionable readers.”

Earth to Metaxas: all kids are exposed to sexual themes before they’re ready to deal with them in mature way. I would much rather have kids, gay and straight, read a book written just for them that promotes “compassion, understanding and acceptance” than learning about sex by Googling “boobies” and “wieners” on the Internet.

OPINION BY CHARLES ALEXANDER

I went to my first gay bar, the Silver Slipper, a dyke bar on Grand River, near downtown Detroit. Just 19, I used borrowed ID, escorted authoritatively by two ‘stone butches’: Speedy and Draino.

Lesbians sat in an upstairs balcony. Gays and “tourists,” downstairs. (Tourists came to gawk at us queers.)

Entertainer was porkulent Chi Chi LaTrine, aka Benjamin Ernest Franklin. He wore wide, be-ribboned picture hats, sang songs with lyrics of questionable OB-GYN soundness. (“Douche yourself with kerosene. Light it with a match. You will be the only queen with a blow torch for a snatch.”)

Chi Chi’s comedy routines closed with his trademark insertion of a champagne glass into his ample facial cheeks and mouth. (Sidebar: Franklin had a sociology M.A., and in the early ‘60s was the first openly gay person to speak to Wayne University psych classes.)

With teenage friends Gary and Richard, we hit the Scenic Bar in Toledo, Ohio. Soon our little circle – “Claudia,” (Richard) “Margo,” (Gary) and (groan) “Crystal” – took our sing-along road show to Cleveland, staying at the Y-M-C-A!

I met Marcus, who took me home, played Maria Callas arias from Verdi’s “La Traviata,” fed me a wonderful breakfast. It was magic, until I learned to my over-stuffed chagrin that my gourmet cook was yet another crossdresser. Two that summer!

Next came Big Apple week. Our threesome took the New York Central train – playing gin rummy for 13 hours – and booked into the notorious Sloan House Y. It was mid-July. No air conditioning. Sweat soaked outdoors in minutes. So, we slept at day; partied at night.

We took the train to Babylon – three hour ride – and a ferry boat to Cherry Grove. “Truman Capote’s there,” they told us. (Truman, who?) I had no sooner unpacked my things when the phone rang. “Hi! I’m Jerry. I saw you in the lobby. Can I take you to dinner?” He left two days later. Ever faithful at 19, I thought of Jerry for 36.5 hours, 36 seconds.

I was a stranger to that child as far as Michigan was concerned. Thus, in the event of a break up, the one legal parent held all the cards with regards to custody or visitation issues.

In 1988, the Michigan Supreme Court decision, that would not recognize marriages of same-sex couples to marry (and since Michigan would not permit same-sex couples have to be legally married. Frontline families did not exist and Michigan courts have acted as client, obliviously dragging the rest of the LGBT community to score one for their political agenda. Atkinson, came up with the concept of equitable parenthood. Atkinson, came up with the concept of equitable parenthood. Atkinson, came up with the concept of equitable parenthood.

I’m furious at those LGBT attorneys who represent these partners, lawyers who use the very same legal tools of oppression that harm all members of the LGBT community to score one for their client, oblivious to the harm it does to the LGBT community and their families down. Let me (take a deep breath and) explain.

For decades, Michigan family law and Michigan courts have acted as though LGBT families did not exist in our state. When a same-sex couple broke up, courts refused to take jurisdiction over matters concerning child custody, visitation and distribution of property. This also made it easy for same-sex partners to walk away from a relationship and behave as though it never existed, even if it meant children suffering the collateral damage.

It started with adoption. Although Michigan appellate courts have never specifically addressed the issue of whether same-sex couples could jointly adopt the children that they were raising together, some judges in Michigan erroneously interpreted the adoption law to justify taking children away from the former partner they once co-parented with.

I’m upset – no, I’m angry as hell – at certain members of our LGBT community. I’m outraged at those would-be partners in a same-sex relationship who, once the relationship sours, not only deny the existence of such relationships but also vengefully turn to discriminatory Michigan law to justify taking children away from the former partner they once co-parented with.

In the mid-50s, we had no role models. We suspected certain movie stars. (Tab Hunter, Barbara Stanwyck, newcomer James Dean). All wishful thinking. These Sen. McCarthy witch-hunting years were terror for “known homosexuals.” We had no choice but the closet.

not request custody or visitation. This also meant that LGBT co-parents – who were prohibited from marrying their partners – could be denied contact with their children but had no legal standing as equitable parents to petition the courts for parenting time.

Van is a flawed legal decision in so many ways, but most importantly in that it elevates the marital status of the parties over the best interests of children, which is what is supposed to be the main focus of Michigan courts in deciding child custody disputes. And yet it became the law of Michigan and for more than a decade, dozens of LGBT co-parents had their children taken away from them by their former partners (the legal parent) and have found the doors of Michigan courts closed to them. As a heartbreaking consequence, many of these co-parents never saw their children again.

The U.S. Supreme Court’s historic June decision in Obergefell v. Hodges – which held that same-sex couples have a constitutional right to legally marry and have their marriages recognized in 50 states – will usher in a new era in Michigan family law in which LGBT family relationships are endowed with the same rights, protections and responsibilities that are accorded to heterosexual married couples. However, will it help same-sex couples who broke up before marriage was available in Michigan, and who were raising children together? I believe that it should.

A LGBT co-parent should not be denied recognition as an equitable parent because she was unable to be legally married in the state of Michigan due to laws that have now been declared unconstitutional. Indeed, the Michigan Supreme Court just recently vacated a Court of Appeals decision denying a lesbian co-parent equitable parent status – based on the Van v. Zahorik ruling – and sent the case back to the Court of Appeals to reconsider in light of the Obergefell decision. That is hopeful. And yet, we still see legal LGBT parents denying their former partners co-parent status to have contact with the children they have raised together.

Seldom do the reasons for cutting off contact with the co-parent have anything to do with the best interests of the child. Usually the legal parent is in a new relationship and no longer finds it convenient to have her former partner involved in her and their children’s lives. And when that co-parent files a case in court arguing that she should be an equitable parent, the legal mom’s attorney argues the bad law established by the Van case to deny this co-parent legal standing to petition in court. Even if we engage in bad behavior, when we argue that our relationships have no meaning, no significance under the Michigan law, we undermine every argument our community makes for full equality. And we harm children.

Stop this madness, this selfishness. And until we do, my outrage will continue to boil.

Judge Says Georgia’s Gay Marriage Ban Can’t Be Enforced

ATLANTA (AP) – A federal judge in Georgia has ruled that the state’s constitutional ban on same-sex marriage cannot be enforced.

The ruling is effectively a formality. State probate courts have been issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples since a June 26 U.S. Supreme Court ruling legalized same-sex marriage nationwide.

Georgia’s constitution prohibits same-sex marriage and says the state will recognize only the union of a man and a woman as marriage and that same-sex marriages performed in other states are not legally recognized.

In April 2014, gay-rights group Lambda Legal filed a lawsuit challenging that ban on behalf of three couples and a widow.

U.S. District Judge William Duffey on Oct. 7 signed an order ruling in their favor and saying the Supreme Court ruling means the same-sex marriage ban can’t be enforced.

Alabama Judge: Feds Should Issue Same-Sex Marriage Licenses

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) – An Alabama probate judge is asking the state’s Supreme Court for a way out of issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

Elmore County Probate Judge John Enslen filed a petition Oct. 5 that says the federal government, not state offices, should issue same-sex marriage licenses. Enslen says the federal government is responsible for upholding and enforcing other laws created at the federal level.

The petition asks the court to order judges statewide not to issue same-sex marriage licenses or recognize licenses that Enslen says have been issued in contradiction to the Alabama Constitution.

Enslen also asks that the state declare it will recognize only same-sex marriage licenses if they have been issued by the federal government or by states that have their own gay marriage laws.

Openly Gay US Ambassador To Denmark Weds Partner

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) – The U.S. ambassador to Denmark has married his partner in the Scandinavian country that became the first nation to allow gay couples to formalize their unions in 1989.

Rufus Gifford, the U.S. envoy since September 2013, is a strong gay rights advocate and often appears with Stephen DeVincent, a 56-year-old veterinarian, at his side. The two were married Saturday at the Copenhagen City Hall. Gifford, a 41-year-old Boston native, wrote on Twitter: “26 yrs ago the site of 1st legal gay unions in the world. Humbled and emotional.”

Later in the day, he posted a smiling photo of the two, showing off their rings: “In the land that created fairy tales, we just started our own.”

Fire & Ink Four: Igniting The Genius In Us

BY MICHELLE E. BROWN

Imagine attending a family reunion and discovering that your family consists of some of the greatest creative minds alive who not only share your passions and your interests but come ready to share, encourage and inspire with ideas both familiar and brand new. Then imagine this dream family reunion is taking place not in some far off location, but in your own back yard. Well that’s what happened Oct. 8-11 in Detroit.

The event, however, wasn’t a family reunion per se but a reunion of sorts for those in the creative community. “Fire & Ink” is a gathering held every six years to bring together LGBTQ writers, journalists, academics, filmmakers and playwrights of African descent and heritage, from across the country and around the world. The last gathering, Fire & Ink III: Citizensh, was held in Austin, Texas in 2009. In 2002, the Fire & Ink Festival was held in Chicago.

Close to 200 participants from around the corner in Detroit to as far away as South Africa attended Fire & Ink IV: Witness. Some faces you knew – old friends continuing ongoing conversations. Then there were faces known only from social and other media – Facebook friends, living legends, authors and others – who we never thought we would meet but felt an affinity, a common bond and a shared struggle with.

The intention of Fire & Ink IV: Witness was to address the urgent question of what it means to bear witness as LGBT writers and their work continues the work of ancestors like James Baldwin in opening up new literary territories not just for a generation but for generations to come by intentionally welcoming and including new voices, young voices, seasoned voices with stories told, revisited and explored.

Then, after lifting us to new heights of creativity, it was over, but not before a discussion on keeping the fire burning brightly. 2016 will be a year of transformation for Fire & Ink. Besides a call for new board members, keeping the fire burning ironically includes the passing of the torch by co-presidents Lisa C. Moore and Steven G. Fullwood who will be retiring from the organization. Fire & Ink IV: Witness landed in Detroit with the message that we are doing it, this is how we’re doing it and we must do it. It planted new seeds of creativity, innovation and imagination for LGBTQ writers, journalists, academics, filmmakers, playwrights and individuals of African descent to chronicle our lives. We don’t have to accept what others have done to us or rely on others to do for us. We have only to look at us for genius. The genius is within us and we must tell our stories.

And what better place to inspire a generation of visionaries, dreamers and witnesses than in Detroit, a city rich in black history. A city where its predominantly African-American residents, including members of the LGBTQ community, have survived despite efforts to be excluded and disenfranchised and opted, in the most uncertain of times, to wage love, to fight for justice, bearing witness to the resiliency of the human spirit.

WITNESS was more than a conference – it was a reunion, a festival bringing together the best of the best and brightest creative minds. This year’s festival ending heralded the beginning of a new era for Fire & Ink. In 2021 Fire & Ink will be all new – new板 leadership, new technology, new evolving voices and new stories to tell. But one thing is for sure: black LGBTQ world citizens will continue to be living for and creating change and black LGBTQ writers, journalists, academics, filmmakers and playwrights will bear witness for history and generations to come.

JTCC Board Member Runs For Washtenaw County Board Of Commissioners

ANN ARBOR – Jim Toy Community Center board member Jason Morgan has announced that he will run for the Washtenaw County Board of Commissioners seat that will be vacated by Yousef Rabhi in 2016.

Morgan is currently working as the director of government and media relations for Washtenaw Community College in Ann Arbor. He served as district representative for former Rep. John Dingell, worked on former Rep. Bart Stupak’s congressional campaign staff, served as legislative aide to State Senate Minority Leader Mike Prusi and worked as assistant and scheduler to Stupak in Washington D.C.

“If elected, I will support a strong public safety and human services system, strengthen our local economy by creating living wage jobs and support investing in our infrastructure and neighborhoods,” Morgan said in a statement.

Morgan is also focused on community mental health budget and structure as well as housing concerns in the county.

His name will first appear on the ballots in the Democratic primary set for Aug. 2, 2016.

The county’s 8th District seat covers most of downtown Ann Arbor, the Georgetown neighborhood, Burns Park and some areas south of I-94.}

So far with less than a year to go, Morgan has been endorsed by Ann Arbor Mayor Christopher Taylor, Washtenaw County Board chair Felicia Brabec, State Rep. Adam Zemke and State Board of Education President John Austin.

Bill Would Allow Florida Churches To Say No To Gay Marriages

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) – A bill that would allow churches to refuse to marry gay couples won its first approval Oct. 7 even though its sponsor said churches already have that right and he knows of no cases in which a church has been forced to perform a same-sex wedding ceremony.

After listening to dozens of pastors, most of whom supported the proposed law and some of who opposed it, the House Civil Justice Committee approved the bill on a 9-4 vote, with all Republicans supporting it and all Democrats opposed.

“We think it’s a good idea to put this in law now because it’s difficult to predict where this is all going,” said Rep. Scott Plakon, R-Longwood, who is sponsoring the bill along with Rep. Bob Cortes, R-Altamonte Springs. “Some have said, ‘Well, it’s unnecessary.’ I would hope that that’s so, quite frankly, so there’s no harm in putting in an extra layer of protection.”

While the bill (HB 43) doesn’t specifically mention gay marriage, it says that churches and clergy do not have to perform a wedding or allow a reception if it goes against sincerely held religious belief. But it was clear during questions, testimony and debate on the bill that it is a response to the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision giving gay couples the right to marry.

While pastors and lawmakers acknowledged the state and federal constitutions protect churches, some pastors expressed fear that a future legal decision could diminish that protection and praised the bill for giving them added protection.

Pastor Gerald Bustin of the Open Door Community Church in Summerfield said the bill is “extremely necessary” for pastors.

“We will die before we will give up our religious freedoms in the United States to any group or any organization regardless of who they are, whether they’re government or whether they’re an LGBT organization or whoever because we will stand for God and what we believe God has told us to stand for,” he said.

Pastor Harold Thompson of Miami Beach Community Church said the bill creates a division.

“Search your heart. Look at the true intent of this bill. It is not to protect pastors, it is not to protect the church, it is to protect an agenda. It is nothing more than a wolf in sheep’s clothing, intending to deceive, intending to harm,” he said.

Democratic Rep. Lori Berman of Lantana said the bill was pandering to fear.

“This is legislation looking for a problem that doesn’t exist,” she said. “This bill is not just an added layer of security, it’s a clear message of disapproval of same-sex marriage.”

The bill has one more committee stop before it can be considered by the full House. A Senate bill (SB 110) sponsored by Sen. Don Gaetz has yet to be heard.

Campaign For A National Park For Stonewall Comes to Saugatuck

BY BTL STAFF

The National Parks Conservation Association, in partnership with the Saugatuck Center for the Arts and the Saugatuck Douglas Historical Society, will host a special program as part of the Center’s ongoing “Intriguing Conversation” series on Saturday, Oct. 17.

The event will begin with the Saugatuck Douglas Historical Society discussing local efforts to establish a gay history initiative, followed by a conversation with renowned Stonewall historian David Carter and Stonewall uprising participant Philip Bockman about the history of the 1969 Stonewall riots and recent efforts to create a national park at the site.

Carter attended college at Emory University, majoring in religion and received an M.A. in South Asian Studies from the University of Wisconsin. Soon after moving to Wisconsin, he became a gay activist and spent more time on activism than he did on studies. Carter founded the Madison Committee for Gay Rights and cofounded The United. He and two friends started what was apparently the nation’s second gay television series, “Glad To Be Gay.”

Carter moved to New York in 1985 and went to work for Chelsea House Publishers, where he proposed and helped launch two new series: lesbian and gay biographies and lesbian and gay studies. In 1998, with a grant from the Greenwich Village Society for Historic Preservation, he researched and nominated the site of the Stonewall Riots for the National Register of Historic Places. The Stonewall site was added to the Register in 1998 and the following year was made a National Historic Landmark.

Carter published “Stonewall: The Riots That Sparked the Gay Revolution” in 2004 and assisted with the WGBH film on the Stonewall Riots for the American Experience series as well as a BBC program on Stonewall. Carter lives in New York City.

Bockman was raised in the Midwest at a time when being gay was considered a crime and a mental illness. While a student at the University of Michigan, he was thrown out for being gay. Bockman then fled to New York City only to find that the great “liberal” city was in the midst of a crackdown involving raids on the neighborhood bars, and harassment for simply walking down the street. Bockman wanted to be a psychotherapist, but was told he could not, because people would find out his “secret” identity. So he studied English, taught high school and lived a “furtive” gay life – until Stonewall, which changed everything for him, as it did for so many others.

A Stonewall uprising participant, Bockman became part of Gay Activists Alliance, GLAAD and other political groups, and wrote for The Native, a gay newspaper, as well as Christopher Street Magazine. Fulfilling a lifelong dream, he became a psychotherapist at the age of 52. Bockman practices in New York City and resides in Philadelphia with his partner Paul.

The June 1969 events at New York City’s Stonewall Inn sparked a revolution in America. A weekend uprising by LGBT patrons against routine police raids on the bar inspired LGBT communities throughout the country to organize in support of their civil rights. Within two years following those historic events, LGBT rights groups were organized in nearly every major city.

America’s National Park System tells diverse stories and teaches valuable lessons about Americans’ shared heritage. From Yellowstone National Park to Gettysburg National Military Park to Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad National Historical Park, the U.S. National Park System has always grown to include and protect for future generations the underrepresented stories, like those at Stonewall, that have shaped the national identity.

For more information about the campaign to establish a national park at Stonewall, please visit npca.org/stonewall and follow the conversation online using #NatlParkForStonewall.
Clinton Says Jail Was ‘Right Thing’ For Kentucky Clerk

MOUNT VERNON, Iowa (AP) – Hillary Rodham Clinton says that jail was the “right thing” for a Kentucky clerk who refused to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

Speaking in Iowa Wednesday, the Democratic presidential hopeful said Rowan County Clerk Kim Davis was “treated as she should have been treated.”

Davis spent five days in jail for defying a court order and refusing to license gay marriages. Several Republican presidential candidates have vocally defended Davis, including former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee and Texas Sen. Ted Cruz.

“People are totally entitled to their private, personal beliefs, religious or otherwise, but when you take an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States, that is your job,” Clinton said, adding that people are free to agitate to seek to change laws.

Clinton spoke before over 700 people at Cornell College in Mount Vernon, Iowa, as part of a two-day swing through the leadoff caucus state. She also pledged to fight for gun control measures, seek immigration reform and defend the Affordable Care Act.

Clinton also criticized the Republican primary field, saying the rhetoric in that contest was reaching a “new low.”

“I think we all have to speak up and speak out when they say things,” Clinton said. “I’ve gone very clearly after the comments that not only they are just trying to participate in their school environments as their authentic selves. Legislation like this would further stigmatize transgender students and harm their health and well-being,” the group’s executive director, Michael Silverman, said in a statement Oct. 7.

2016 Presidential Candidate Ben Carson Compares Gay Marriage To Car Seats

President hopeful, author and retired Johns Hopkins neurosurgeon Ben Carson has a history of making offensive statements about the LGBT community and other minority groups. His opposition to same-sex marriage is well known but many believe that the Republican candidate’s recent remarks are out of this world.

Carson, in his new book titled “A More Perfect Union,” talks about the issues of altering laws to allow same-sex couples to marry.

“Laws and regulations should be designed to address normal situations while providing special mechanisms for the creation of exceptions in abnormal situations,” Carson writes, according to PinkNews. “Changing laws and regulations should be designed to address normal situations while providing special mechanisms for the creation of exceptions in abnormal situations.”

Democratic National Committee spokesperson, TJ Helmstetter, responded with a direct comment on both Carson and the Republican party for their views on marriage equality.

“We’ve heard it all before from the Republican field, and now we’re reading it in Ben Carson’s book,” Helmstetter said. “Carson, Trump, Bush, Fiorina, Rubio and the others – it’s no coincidence that they agree on so much. They would shut down the government to defund Planned Parenthood, and they’d all take our country backwards.”

Lawmakers Want Gender Restrictions In School Bathrooms

MADISON, Wis. (AP) – Two Republican lawmakers are proposing a bill that would bar transgender students from using the locker room or bathroom assigned to the gender with which they identify.

Rep. Jesse Kremer and Sen. Steve Nass want to require school boards to designate bathrooms and locker rooms as exclusive to one gender. They also want the state Department of Justice to defend school districts in lawsuits that challenge the requirements.

“This bill reinforces the societal norm in our schools that students born biologically male must not be allowed to enter facilities designated for biological females and vice versa,” Kremer wrote in a memo sent Tuesday to lawmakers.

Kremer tells the State Journal that the legislation is aimed at providing safety and privacy to students.

The proposed legislation, he said, is the result of a situation in the Kewaskum School District in which a student who was born female but identified as male repeatedly used a school bathroom for boys.

The Transgender Legal Defense & Education Fund said the bill singles out transgender students for discrimination.

“Transgender young people already face immense harassment and bias when they are just trying to participate in their school environments as their authentic selves. Legislation like this would further stigmatize transgender students and harm their health and well-being,” the group’s executive director, Michael Silverman, said in a statement Oct. 7.

Betty Olding and Jenny Schumacher met in 1972 and have been together for 43 years. They were finally married on Sept. 26 by Detroit Reverend Deb Dysert of the Metropolitan Community Church of Detroit.

BY AJ TRAGER

Every week, more and more LGBT couples are finally tying the knot. Couples that have been denied access to equal protection under the law are now able to share in the joy of matrimony, and Betty Olding, 71, and Jenny Schumacher, 83, are one such couple.

When Olding and Schumacher met in 1972, Schumacher was working as a nurse and Olding worked at AT&T. Schumacher was married, had three children and rarely, if ever, stirred the pot. She did what was expected and followed a closeted path that many in her generation did.

“I was always thinking in the back of my head about who I would be and who I was,” Schumacher recalled. “And then I found somebody who I had an affair with. That’s when Betty came into the picture. That’s when we got together and I accepted who I was. I got divorced and here we are.”

Over the last 43 years Olding and Schumacher have seen it all and stuck by one another through good times and bad times, through sickness and health. They were legally married before 70 family members and friends on Sept. 26 by longtime friend and Detroit pastor, Deb Dysert of the Metropolitan Community Church of Detroit. Their autumn wedding consisted of dancing, vows and the blending of the sands ceremony, their alternative to the more traditional unity candle.

They try to follow the rules of KISS, or “Keep It Simple, Stupid,” and don’t try to do anything super elaborate. Their September wedding was their third commitment ceremony following one in 1998 and then their civil union in 2001.

They spent much of their relationship keeping their love a secret. Or, at least, keeping it mostly quiet in public. Tennis shoes became a meaningful signal for them and their love. They now have tennis shoes printed on pins that rest on their necklines and had tennis shoes frosted onto their wedding cake.

Schumacher moved in with Olding in 1973 and gave custody of her children to her former husband. At that time Olding and Schumacher “couldn’t tell anybody” and they were worried what sort of treatment the kids would receive in school if the administration and the students were to hear about their relationship.

“That’s when we started our thing about tennis shoes,” Olding described. “We have a pin around our neck. We would say tennis shoes and that meant, ‘I love you.’”

Schumacher had a stroke in February
After almost 19 years together, Donald Chisholm and Steven Moore of Pontiac were married on Wednesday, July 1. They would like to enthusiastically thank Oakland County Clerk Lisa Brown, who officiated the ceremony, and her staff for accommodating their short-notice request to affirm their vows.

Lesbian Power Couple Finally Ties The Knot

BY AJ TRAGER

A lesbian power couple who have worked hard to improve LGBT equality in the state, Gina Calcagno and Nicolette Siragusa, have finally tied the knot. “We are thrilled that we were able to solemnize, legally, today, what we have been living for the past 10 years. It is our hope that we are one of the last couples to go through the trials of uncertain legal standing in our own relationship,” Calcagno told BTL.

Calcagno, former coalition manager of Michigan for Marriage, and Siragusa, a pastor with the First Congregational United Church of Christ in Grand Ledge, were finally married Oct. 1 before the Lansing City Capitol building after 15 years together.

Calcagno joined Michigan For Marriage in January and was pivotal in spreading the stories of many same-sex couples in the state who were eagerly awaiting the right to marry. Over the course of their partnership, Calcagno and Siragusa have been very active in establishing equal rights for same-sex couples in the Christian community and under state law. Since the U.S. Supreme Court decision in June, Siragusa has officiated the weddings of dozens of same-sex couples, many of whom have been together for decades.

Ten years ago they signed a domestic partnership in Cook County, Illinois, followed by a civil union in New Jersey in 2007. They held a church wedding a year later in Illinois. After moving to Michigan, Calcagno and Siragusa were one of the first to sign a domestic partnership in East Lansing in 2013.

The Oct. 1 ceremony was officiated by Nathan Triplett, mayor of East Lansing, who quoted part of the U.S. Supreme Court majority opinion written by Justice Anthony Kennedy in the same-sex marriage case Obergefell v. Hodges.

“While I’m proud that East Lansing provided an opportunity for recognition of loving relationships through our (domestic partnership) registry, I’m even more pleased that couples like Gina and Nicolette now have the equal marriage rights that they deserve and that our Constitution demands,” Triplett wrote on his Facebook.

Gina Calcagno and Nicolette Siragusa have been together for 15 years. They have participated in two domestic partnerships, a civil union and a church wedding over the years and were finally legally married on Oct. 1. Photo by Roxanne Frith Photography of this year, a situation that Olding says made her closer to her spouse.

“I never thought about saving money, or worrying about this or that,” Olding said. “I never thought about it. I have grown too, myself. Especially since the stroke. You take on a whole new responsibility. I just think that we grew into a oneness.”

They say the trick to a long-lasting partnership is honest communication. They value one another and agree that open and constant communication is the best way to ensure couples stay on the same page and connected throughout the curves of life.

“I think it’s wonderful that anybody can get married,” Olding said. “This isn’t the old saying that you take your U-Haul on the second date. You really have to think about this and you’re in for it. If you’re in it, there’ll be disagreements. You have to work together.”

They caution young couples who, in wake of the U.S. Supreme Court decision in June, are eager to get married to their partners. Schumacher and Olding think some young couples may rush into things and they offer their advice as often as it is well received.

“My advice: think about it. And talk. And talk. Honesty: that is one thing that we have tried to do with each other. We have gotten mad and stormed at each other. Bottom line to the whole thing is you need to talk about things and know exactly what you will do and why you are going to do it. Think. Talk and be honest,” Olding said. “I am excited for everybody getting married, but it is a commitment that is binding. And isn’t something that is just a flick of the pen. Think, talk and be honest. Then decide to go ahead with it.”

UAW-Ford: Driving Equality and Diversity
Making friends is easy when you have a cool car.

“What year is that?” is usually how conversations start says Rich Kwiecien, owner of three classic cars: a 1962 Ford Galaxie 500, a 1963 Lincoln Continental Sedan and a 1979 Lincoln Town Car.

“You don’t even have to know a person. All you have to do is go up, if you like their car, ask them what year it is and it takes off from there,” he says. “It’s kind of a weird thing in that you never talk to anybody that you don’t know so matter-of-fact for anything else. But when people enjoy their cars, it’s just one of those things that you have a bond or a real common interest in and everybody is always willing to talk.”

These bonds are what drive the Lambda Car Club Detroit. Founded in 1981 as the Gay Old Car Owners Society, the club is the largest LGBT collector car club in North America with membership of more than 2,000 people in 32 regions.

You don’t need a classic car to join, just an eye for a well-made car. Kwiecien has been a member since 2002, as he explains, “I’ve always liked cars.” His first car was a 1976 Pinto. “Those were the highlights of my life,” he says with a laugh.

Recently the club traveled up north for their annual Fall Color tour. And although driving anywhere in a classic car can be a leisurely experience, Kwiecien says leisure doesn’t come cheap.

“You should have a decent checking account,” he says about investing in a classic car. "I love chrome. It’s one of my most favorite things in the entire world. That’s why I love 50s and 60s cars,” he says. “Especially the late 50s, they were all about chrome – how much chrome you could put on the body and paint. That one (color of 1967 Buick) I believe is called fire mist red.” BTL photo: Alexander Godin

It’s very much a benefit if you are handy at doing stuff and you can make some repairs yourself. Otherwise you are writing a lot of checks.”

He adds, “But you know what, the enjoyment you get out of driving far exceeds the few times you have to write checks to have a repair made.”

Lambda Car Club member Troy Congdon comes from a family of General Motors workers. His father was a home mechanic, but he still leaves the repairs to the professionals.

“I want it to run right,” he says with a laugh. Congdon joined the Car Club in 2009 and owns a 1967 classic Buick. The car, he says, reflects his fascination with chrome and color.

And when you’re in a car that’s colored “fire mist red,” you don’t drive, you cruise says Congdon.

“It is very relaxing. I like the looks people give when you are driving a classic car. It’s a real mellowing experience. Especially when you are driving on the expressway and you’re just doing 60 mph when everyone else is racing doing 100 mph,” he says. “You sit back. Relax and drive.”

For David Struck, part of the relaxation of a classic car is having a car for work and a car purely for fun.

“Also, it’s the old adage of recapturing your youth. I always appreciate my modern car much more when I spend the weekend driving my classic car,” he says. “The first car that I ever owned was a 1968 Plymouth Barracuda Fastback. And it was the car that I said I was going to keep it forever. I drove it back and forth to college, put a 100 miles on it and swore I’d never get rid of it. Then one day something else caught my eye … I

Insider Scoop Into Ford GLOBE

BY AJ TRAGER

DEARBORN – Ford Globe, the company’s LGBT employee resource group, was founded in 1994 but called itself the “Ford Family” back then. The name was changed a year later to Ford Gay, Lesbian or Bisexual Employees – or GLOBE – and they adopted a mission, vision and objectives statement and designed an official logo. The group now has roughly 300 members across the world, with about 170 members in the United States.

Since 2004 Ford Motor Company has received a 100 percent on the Human Rights Campaign’s Corporate Equality Index – a measurement of how equitably large private businesses in the U.S. treat their LGBT employees, consumers and investors – and continues to remain a leader in LGBT corporate equality.

In June of 2000, Ford, Chrysler and General Motors were some of the first companies to adopt health care benefits for same-sex domestic partners of salaried and hourly employees. Implementation of the change took effect in August, and in September of 2000 two pilot training classes on sexual orientation in the workplace were held at Ford manufacturing plants.

Along with its participation in Motor City Pride, this year Ford Globe participated in Kentuckiana Pride, the Chicago Pride Parade, Cologne Pride in Germany and Brighton Pride in the United Kingdom.

BTL sat down with current chairman of the board Bill Peters and former chairman of the board Dr. Greg Stone. Peters joined Ford Motor Company roughly two years ago and works as a senior IT project manager in the application development project management office. Peters comes from a multi-generational Ford Family and lives with his partner of 15 years, Reggie.

Stone is director of occupational health and safety at Ford. Stone joined Ford in April of 1995 as manager of Health, Safety and Security in Ford in Australia. Stone was chairman of Ford Globe for five years and still serves as a board member.

Ford Motor Company GLOBE board chairman Bill Peters and former chairman Greg Stone. Stone joined Ford in 1995 and served as chairman of Ford Globe for five years and still serves on the board.

How did GLOBE form and who was involved?

Stone: The two founders were Alice McKeage and Rob Matras. They were the two people who had the meeting in the living room and really did all of the work. There were a few core founding people. Way back there was an ally outreach coordinator called Bob Burrell. Bob’s partner, Tony, still works in engineering here. Bob really was the don’t say that anymore about cars.”

Currently, Struck has two classic cars: a 1967 Chrysler New Yorker Coupe and a 1968 Chrysler Newport Convertible. He purchased the New Yorker within the last year and has had the Newport for about 15 years.

“My dad worked at Ford Motor Company driving test cars,” he explains. “When I was a kid he brought home a different car every night. It was pretty cool.”

Struck is the vice president and activities director of the Lambda Car Club Detroit and has been involved in the club for about 14 years.

“We do a lot of activities around town and to be able to socialize with my all my old cars when I didn’t do much of that before, I get to enjoy them with other people now,” says Struck, as he explains, a passion for cars is not limited to race, gender or sexuality. “People find us interesting, especially the straight car clubs – that we are a gay car club because they think that all gay men want to do is dress as women. They don’t understand that we’re just like them. And have the same passion as them.”

First one to do the ally outreach to the plants and so on, and he was very courageous because 10-15 years ago that was even a less friendly place than it is now, and Bob was an ally employee who faced a lot of challenges in doing that.

How has GLOBE changed since you joined?

Stone: It was originally formed because they needed to advocate for the company to change the policies and do the benefits and that sort of stuff, so there was a lot of advocacy and so on. And a couple of things happened: the policies and things were OK and then of course we went through a downturn, too, so a lot of things became ‘nice to do.’ We are really in the process of trying to rebuild our membership.

Why did you decide to join GLOBE?

Peters: Long story for me but I’ve known about GLOBE since inception. I’ve only been working for Ford Motor Company for 2.5 years now. I knew about it because they have a public facing website and they were in the news a lot for many of the things that they did early on for the company by being out there and getting the (domestic partner) benefits and making people aware. I was an agency contractor employee for a year and joined just shortly after the middle of that time.

What has been the most challenging part of assuming the role as chairman?

Peters: 1. Understanding the full impact that GLOBE has beyond what my narrow vision was – I knew what it means based on our objectives – but GLOBE has a much farther reach within and outside Ford. And 2. Understanding that and being able to consume that and absorb that within the position; being able to make sure that I’m not overstepping, too.

How is the role of GLOBE going to change now that we have marriage equality? What is the future of domestic partner benefits at Ford?

Peters: That’s interesting that you ask that. There are companies out there that aren’t sure if domestic partner benefits can stay domestic partner benefits – you’re just dropping the same-sex in front of it, because they are a domestic partner. You can be in a same-sex or an opposite sex relationship and need domestic partner benefits. But if you choose to get married then you would go under the policies of being a married couple. So, I think that’s going to be a challenge that not only Ford has but any company that has offered domestic partner benefits – to assess if that is something that that company wants to maintain by dropping the same-sex in front of domestic and keep domestic partner or say, ‘Now that marriage equality is here, you get married or you don’t.’ It’s new for everyone.

What does the future of GLOBE look like?

Peters: Going forward, it’s about helping to promote an inclusive environment within work and within opportunities in the company. There isn’t a single policy that we need to change. We can all with our husbands, wives or partners still get our benefits and discounts – it’s all there. I don’t think there’s anything policy wise that we need to advocate for. I go back to the HRC CEI index. A lot of that is on there and it explains a lot of that. The sought-after employers have the policies in place. I think our biggest challenge moving forward is helping the company understand what inclusiveness is. I think the company understands that. It is just how do companies do that.

Longtime BTL Advertiser Hodges Subaru Moves To New Location On Woodward

BY AJ TRAGER

FERNDALE – Hodges Subaru, Metro Detroit’s only Subaru specific dealer, has been a long-time advocate for the LGBT community and is committed to maintaining that relationship.

The premiere retailer of new and used Subaru vehicles began advertising with Between The Lines 20 years ago after a long-time LGBT client, Shea Howell, suggested that they do so. They started with two ads a month, but have since grown to have a much more regular ad presence.

“We cater to a lot of alternative lifestyles, couples or individuals,” said principal partner Felipe Mendiola. “So we like to stay with them and inform them with what is going on here and what we may have that they will be interested in.”

Mendiola joined the Hodges Subaru team in 1982 after marrying the owner’s daughter. He works very closely with principal partner Bill Garcia and together they run the Ferndale based dealership. After spending roughly 65 years at their former location just north of 9 Mile on Woodward, Hodges Subaru recently made a big move to 21205 Woodward Ave., just north of 8 Mile Road. The change is ideal for Hodges Subaru, which now has extended room for their service center and for exterior parking.

“It is amazing that we’ve been working in that small place,” Mendiola said.

Along with expanding the service center, Hodges Subaru now has an extended customer waiting area and the new car building has an open space and clear glass so that those passing by can see the available products.

Subaru has what the company calls the “Subaru Love Promise,” a promise to do right by the community and partner with nonprofit organizations and charities working in education, health, community, environment and animal rights. Every year Subaru owners and retailers participate in “Share The Love,” which gives back to five charities across the country by donating $250 per sale for every car sold between November and January. Last year Hodges Subaru donated to Almost Home Animal Rescue League and Haven, but has not yet released who will be the benefactor of Share The Love 2016.

Last year was the biggest year for Hodges Subaru, selling around 640 new and used vehicles. Subarus, Mendiola says, have really grown over the last decade.

“Before we were an unknown entity unless you were an avid car researcher,” Mendiola explained. “But now people are including us in their shopping list (a candidate to test drive.) Before it was always a challenge. We are a small company, very nimble in changing things. I think about 10 years ago they decided to really cater to American consumers. Developers added more leg room and shoulder room in the cars and changed design every 12 to 18 months. That’s what keeps and attracts a lot of people.”

Auto Companies Continue To Cruise Into LGBT Market

BY CHARLES ALEXANDER

It wasn’t too long ago that the right-wing American Family Association – known for getting its membership to boycott groups, organizations and products – targeted Ford Motor Company for running 2005 Land Rover and Jaguar sales ads in The Advocate. Ford reluctantly gave in, and for a time left the LGBT market alone. Since then several automotive companies, including VW and Audi, are including the rainbow market in important advertising strategies. Outstanding among these is Subaru of America, basing it marketing on its own initiated extensive research of gay and lesbian automotive preferences of style, color choices, driving performance and actual user feedback. As a result, the company continues to show marked LGBT profit gains, and garners LGBT buyer loyalty and support. (Lesbians take note: Subaru Research finds that “lesbians are four times as likely as other heterosexuals counterparts to own a Subaru Outback No. 1.”)

Shortly after the AFA Ford boycott, the New York Times commented on increasing automotive trends catering to our community in its groundbreaking automotive article, “Gay by Design or a Lifestyle Choice.”

Says Ramone Johnson, former Saturn engineer and a respected gay automotive journalist, who writes a yearly column “Top 10 Gay Cars” (About.com), “Driving a stylish car can be a way of taking control back and saying, ‘This is who I am.’”

He finds in his experience what he feels a gay man looks for in buying a car: soft lines, vibrant personality, fashion-forward red gauges and other styling cues.

A catalyst for monitoring and aiding automotive companies to understand and accommodate LGBT requirements in car choices and same-sex needs is Gaywheels.com. It’s been around since 2005, compiled by automotive specialist Joe LaMuraglia. (Joe drives a Mini Cooper convertible.) About Gaywheels he says, “We are dedicated to promoting responsive consumerism and affecting change by encouraging car shoppers to patronize gay-friendly companies throughout the vehicle purchase process.”

Gaywheels.com also provides key advocacy information about automotive companies that sustain fair treatment to LGBT employees and that provide requisite benefits for those in same-sex marriages. Covered also are automotive reviews, personal driver profiles and travel suggestions.

Las Vegas Legend Frank Marino On His Career As A Queen

BY SHELBY CLARK PETKUS

f you’ve ever been even near Las Vegas, Nevada, you’ve probably heard of Frank Marino. Whether it was advertisements for his longtime show, “Divas,” or even walking along the street named after him, Marino’s tenure as the longest running headliner in the city has cemented him as one of the country’s premier female impersonators.

Marino spoke with BTL before bringing “Divas” to Detroit at 8 p.m. Oct. 16 at MotorCity Casino and Hotel’s Sound Board, one of a few select locations that get to witness the tour. “There is no difference (between the Las Vegas and traveling versions of the show),” Marino says. “It’s basically the same show; I pick very few cities I go to. MotorCity Casino is one of the ones I’m really looking forward to.”

Detroit was specifically one of his favorites because of his love for Motown. “I want to put all the Motown acts in the show. I hope they’ll appreciate them as much as I do there.”

'DIVAS' IN DETROIT
Marino admits he’s only been to Detroit one time before. The reason? “I was going to Canada, and I made the limo driver stop because I wanted to go to Motown,” he says. “I’m a very huge Diana Ross fan, so, if I was going to be that close (to Detroit), I needed to go and see where my idol started.”

Marino even began his career impersonating the chanteuse. “I started out impersonating her,” he notes, “until I realized I wasn’t black and that I couldn’t sing. I had to find a white comedian to do, and that’s how I ended up with Joan Rivers ... but Diana was my first.”

In addition to Marino’s own drag persona, he’s most famous for his Joan Rivers impersonation. Rivers, who died last year, formed a relationship with Marino over the years (though it began with her attempting to sue Marino in the 1980s). “I got to be such close friends with her that her daughter Melissa invited me to the funeral,” he reflects. “I was going to take the act out of my show for awhile, and she said, ‘If anybody would want you to continue, it’d be my mom.’”

“Absolutely nothing.” Marino laughs. “But it sounds nice on paper.”

Though impersonating Rivers is close to his heart, Marino prefers doing himself. “I open the show as Joan Rivers, but for the rest of the show I do my own femme fatale character, which is just Frank Marino in drag,” he says. “A comedian in drag, like RuPaul would be a singer in drag.

“I am emcee and I am the star. The show opens with a big ‘Vegas opening,’ it’s got dancers and everything. Then I come out and I do Joan Rivers,” he adds. “Then I introduce all the famous female superstars. I’m bringing Diana Ross, I’m bringing Patti LaBelle; I have younger ones, too, like Rihanna, Cher, Madonna. There will be 15 different characters.”

Despite his fame as a female impersonator, and even with Logo’s “RuPaul’s Drag Race” and with the queens featured during the recent Miley Cyrus-hosted MTV’s Video Music Awards, Marino doesn’t think drag is as mainstream as some people seem to think. “I don’t think (drag) is anymore mainstream than it was,” he says. “I still think mostly drag queens are watching that show (‘RuPaul’s Drag Race’), and people that have been fascinated with it before. So I don’t know if that’s made it anymore mainstream.”

Nonetheless, Marino’s own drag show audience is composed of more than drag queens: “Middle American comes and sees my show. It’s Mrs. Smith from the grocery store. There’s everything from prom kids to senior citizens. Men enjoy it just as much as women, sometimes even more.

“I think more mainstream people get to see my show than on a show like ‘Drag Race,’” Marino says about “Divas.” “‘Drag Race’ is so far back on your cable channel that middle America can’t even find it, you know what I’m saying? If I can’t find it, the people that know nothing about drag aren’t going to find it either. I think by traveling around we’re making it mainstream. Our show is definitely one that men and women both love, and the ones who make it mainstream are the ones who did ‘Tootsie’ and ‘Mrs. Doubtfire’ and ‘To Wong Foo.’ I was in the movie ‘Miss Congeniality 2,’ and that has a drag sequence too. Things like that put it out there.”

After his tour, when he returns to Las Vegas with the other divas, look for Marino’s projected reality show. “I’m working on a reality show, so I’m hoping that soon I can add reality TV star to (my resume),” he says. “It’s just going to be my crazy life and the crazy, fun, colorful people around me.”

Colorful people might not involve other drag queens on the circuit – “I don’t really know any,” he laughs – but he does hope to work with certain celebrities in the future. “I would like to work with Diana Ross,” he laughs. “Anybody in Michigan who knows her from the good ol’ days, please hook us up!”
Scare Tactics: 10 Halloween Marathons For You & Your Boo

BY MIKEY ROX

Before the ghoulish parties kick off and trick-or-treaters roam the night, curl up with your own special cuddle monster for these scary TV-and-movie marathons sure to give a fright.

FearFest, AMC
Now’s your chance to catch up on the most talked about show on television, “The Walking Dead,” during the “Zombie Apocalypse” lead-up to the season 6 premiere early in October. Then settle in for a few classic chills as Oct. 31 draws closer with holiday standards like “Resident Evil,” “The Amityville Horror,” “Child’s Play,” and “Friday the 13th.”

‘Twilight Saga’ Marathon, FX
Let’s be honest – the only reason anyone watched the “Twilight Saga” was to catch glimpsing glimpses of Edward Cullen’s abs and Jacob’s perpetually shirtless pecs. Relive those quivers during replays of the vampire-versus-werewolf trilogy taking a bite out of Halloween beginning at 5 p.m. on Oct. 30.

Cinemax Horror Movie Marathon
The network’s After Dark programming swaps its skin for spooks on Oct. 31 with “Carrie,” “Dracula Untold,” “Sweeney Todd,” “AnnaLamb,” and more.

13 Nights of Halloween, ABC Family
If you prefer your thrillers and chillers with more bark than bite, tune into this festive but family-friendly schedule of semi-scary flicks like “Casper,” “The Nightmare Before Christmas,” and the seasonal can’t-miss “Hocus Pocus.”

TMC Horror
If you have a penchant for a particular genre of horror – namely rogue body parts (Oct. 9), scary kids (Oct. 16), literary horror (Oct. 23), and Val Lewton films (Oct. 30) – make room on your DVR for this weekly themed marathon that will feature titles such as “Mad Love,” “The Bad Seed,” “Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde,” and “The Body Snatcher,” respectively.

Halloween FREAKend Marathon, Nat Geo Wild
It doesn’t get much wilder – or weirder – than with multiple eps of nonstop freak show “World’s Weirdest,” featuring mutants, mole rats and murderous animal siblings, airing from noon to 7 p.m. on Oct. 31.

‘Scream Queens’ Marathon, FX
Catch up on FOX’s devilishly campy horror-comedy series starring Emma Roberts, Lea Michele, Nick Jonas, and original “scream queen” Jamie Lee Curtis, from 6 p.m. to midnight on Oct. 31.

Taylor Davis Dazzles Ferndale Fans With ‘Nerdy’ Violin Renditions

BY SHELBY CLARK PETKUS

Internet sensation Taylor Davis brought her viral violin songs and videos to Ferndale last week. The YouTuber is most known for her “nerdy” covers of video game, anime and movie music, as well as for her original compositions off of her 2015 self-titled album. She is known on YouTube as “ViolinTay.”

The performance, held at Ferndale’s The Magic Bag, opened with a large screen mimicking a classic video game opening. Salome, Davis’ friend and accompanying pianist, “selected” animated figures of both her and Davis on the screen before Davis came out to applause.

Davis opened the show with one of her most well known covers, a high-tempo rendition of “Dr. Wily’s Theme” from the original Nintendo Entertainment System game, “Mega-Man 2.” She would later close the show, pre-encore, with her most popular YouTube cover of the “Pirates of the Caribbean” theme.

After her opening, Davis proceeded to have a variety of videos play behind her, from her YouTube music videos to thematic clips; for example, shots of winter scenery were shown as she played the main theme from the video game “Skyrim,” known for its snowy setting. A unique twist to these videos came with her YouTube clips – Davis often perfectly synched her performance stylings with what she had previously recorded, often leaving a “double image” of Davis plucking the violin.

The violinist’s interactions with the crowd were brief, but genuine. She repeatedly thanked the audience for supporting her, particularly as this stop was part of her first ever tour. The Ferndale stop was special in particular, she noted, “Because Detroit used to be my home town. And it’s nice to be here for this weather!”

In favor of banter, Davis kept the music rolling. Original pieces like “Awakening” and “Reflections” would be followed by her self-proclaimed “nerdy covers.” Renditions of music from the Nintendo video game series, “The Legend of Zelda,” were the most prominent. A medley of “Song of Time” and “Song of Storms” from “The Legend of Zelda: Ocarina of Time” was her first foray into the Zelda music library. Later, she’d perform “Gerudo Valley” from the same game. At the close of the show, she would perform one encore song – a cover of the original “Legend of Zelda” theme.

Davis told the crowd at one point that video games often trumped video games in her life. “My mom used to incentivize me to play violin with video games,” she said, laughing. “She’d say, ‘OK, 30 minutes of violin, then you can play video games.’”

The performer also dipped into anime, or Japanese animation, themes. She performed “Grief and Sorrow” from the anime “Naruto” as well as “Brothers” from the show “Fullmetal Alchemist,” both of which she had recorded on her 2012 album, “Gaming Fantasy.”

Any in the audience who may not have been familiar with her more niche performances were treated to other more general performances, including a pop cover. In addition to more of her original pieces, like “Nebulous,” Davis also premiered her not-yet-published-on-YouTube video, “Hidden Falls,” for one of her more popular original compositions. The music video featured Davis performing in front of Oregon’s natural scenery.

The almost 90-minute show left Davis’ fanbase mesmerized, particularly for how diverse the crowd proved to be. The Magic Bag was filled to standing room of not only young fans but many middle-aged followers. Davis remained gracious to said fans for the rest of the evening, spending time to meet fans, take pictures and sign autographs directly following the show.

Taylor Davis’ music can be seen at www.youtube.com/user/violintay.

Garbage, the world renowned alternative act that got its start in the 1990s, will perform in Royal Oak Monday, Oct. 19. Scottish singer Shirley Manson fronts the band and is well known for her LGBT advocacy, having even stopped a concert to hold a gay moment of silence. Garbage is also known for its borderline gay anthems, including their song, “Androgyny,” off of their 2001 album, “Beautiful Garbage.”

After forming in Madison, Wisconsin, Garbage released their self-titled debut album in 1995 and rode a wave of visually arresting, female-fronted alternative rock bands. The album spawned the hit singles “Stupid Girl” and “Only Happy When It Rains” and was certified double platinum in Australia, the U.K. and the U.S.

The 8thx presented show is open to all ages. Doors are at 7 p.m., Monday, Oct. 19. Tickets range from $39.50-60. The Royal Oak Music Theatre is located at 318 W. Fourth St., Royal Oak. To purchase tickets, visit www.aos.com/events/279526/garbage-tickets.
