Two Men Charged by Wayne County Prosecutor’s Office in Collaboration with Fair Michigan Justice Project

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

In the early morning hours of Nov. 17, a transgender woman was robbed and shot near Palmer Park. The victim, a 36-year-old known to most friends only as Chocolate, was walking on Woodward Avenue near Worcester Street when a SUV, a red GMC Yukon, pulled up alongside her. Suddenly, two men stepped out of the vehicle while a third remained inside. According to a victim’s statement and video footage conveniently captured by Project Green Light cameras, the men, later identified as Juyuan Alexon Williams, 19, and Charles Marion Brown, 21, demanded Chocolate throw her belongings down and run away. While she was running, Brown opened fire on her with a rifle. She was shot four times in the back and arm.

Police arrived quickly and gave chase. They caught up with the suspects when their vehicle jumped a curb and hit a concrete barrier in the area of Russell and Canfield. Williams was apprehended at the scene while Brown was picked up the next morning.

Brown, who was identified by police as the gunman, has been charged by Wayne County Prosecutor Kym Worthy in collaboration with the Fair Michigan Justice Project with various offenses. They include assault with intent to commit murder, assault with intent to commit great bodily harm, armed robbery resulting in serious injury, armed robbery, fleeing and eluding, use of a firearm in connection with a felony, felon in possession of a firearm, and being a habitual offender – a second offense.

Williams is charged with armed robbery resulting in serious injury, armed robbery, use of a firearm in connection with a felony, felon in possession of a firearm, and being a habitual offender - a fourth offense.

“On the eve of the national Transgender Day of Remembrance, this case illustrates the horrific acts of violence to which transgender persons are subject,” said Fair Michigan President Dana Nessel in a news release sent out on Sunday.

Chocolate was taken to Henry Ford Hospital where she is recovering. According to statements made by her family to Fox 2 Detroit, Chocolate has two bullets lodged near her spine and has lost feeling in her left side.

“I spoke with her family because I know her personally,” said Jeynce Mizrahi-Poindexter, transgender victims advocate for Equality Michigan.

“I told them to tell her that the whole community is concerned about her.”

Mizrahi Poindexter said the timing of the shooting – the 17th annual Transgender Day of Remembrance service honoring those lost to trans violence over the past year – took place later the same day.

“I thought that made the incident even more emotionally taxing,” she said. “We were literally preparing for the TDOR event when we found out. It made it even more emotional for me and took me to a dark place.”

Michelle Fox-Phillips, executive director of the Gender-Identity Network Alliance, felt much the same.

“When I’m not surprised that a trans girl was being shot at?” Fox-Phillips said. “It happens all the time. And it’s very tragic. Thank God her condition has been stabilized and they got two out of three persons.”

“I’m hoping that she makes it,” said Bre’ Campbell, executive director of the Trans Sistas of Color Project. “I would like to say I’m tired but I think I’m beyond that. It’s very hard to do this work with very little support. And it’s moments like this that are reminders that there is more work to do.”

That work includes embracing trans individuals in the community, Campbell said.

“I would challenge people today when we hear the names of the women we’ve lost that we still remember the girls that are still here,” she said. “It’s very challenging to look into the eyes of black trans women and tell them there’s nothing more that I can do.”

Jeynce Mizrahi Poindexter, transgender victim’s advocate for Equality Michigan, said the Day of Remembrance service is not something she looks forward to.

“This isn’t the premier event of the year,” Mizrahi-Poindexter said. “This isn’t something you get gussied up to come to. It’s not something you really look forward to because of what it represents. But we’re here to honor the ones we’ve lost and to love on them and to remember them because often we are in a society and operating system that intentionally forgets us.”

Mizrahi-Poindexter said that since she joined Equality Michigan last year, she has found that she must travel to uncomfortable places to do the work that is most profound.

“All spaces aren’t welcoming and we know that” she said. “But I choose to go into those spaces because that’s where the real work will happen...You have to go on the other side, and in many instances that’s crossing Eight Mile, and crossing populations and regions. Because this is not just a white trans woman thing, it’s not just a black trans woman thing. When they discredit us, when they don’t acknowledge us, when we’re murdered, we’re all bunched in the same group.”

On a brighter note, Michelle Brown spoke of the recent success trans individuals had in the elections that took place earlier this month.

“We saw trans people who were living openly elected in Virginia, California, Georgia, Pennsylvania and Minnesota,” Brown said. “But you know each one of those that we can be so proud of, we have to remember that each one of those 487 souls had that potential to make a change.”

The Transgender Day of Remembrance was founded by trans activist Gwendolyn Ann Smith in 1999. It started as a vigil to honor the loss of Rita Hester, a trans woman who was killed in 1998. The first service commemorated all the trans people lost to violence since Hester’s death. The concept grew quickly and today is commemorated around the world. To date, Hester’s murder, like most anti-trans murders, remains unsolved.

Canadian Group Resettles LGBT Refugees from Chechnya

BY HELEN PARSHALL

Kimahli Powell hopes that with international eyes on the crisis of LGBT people fleeing Chechnya, a light can be shed on the plight of LGBT refugees around the world.

Powell is the executive director of Rainbow Railroad, an organization based in Canada that works to help “LGBT people who have faced physical violence or face an imminent threat of violence, imprisonment or death” find safety.

“We are really the only organization in the world focused on this scope of LGBTQI emergency travel,” Powell told the Washington Blade during a recent telephone interview. “We immediately went to work when we heard that there were safe houses being established by the Russian LGBT Network (a Moscow-based advocacy group) for individuals that escaped Chechnya.”

Powell told the Blade that Rainbow Railroad has helped to resettle close to 50 LGBT people who have fled Chechnya.

The majority of them have resettled in Canada, but some of them have gone to other countries. Powell himself traveled abroad to meet with and interview victims ahead of their resettlement.

“The reality of our work is that the majority of the people we help don’t come to Canada, we are truly international in scope,” Powell said.

Distance was one of the factors in resettling victims from Chechnya, both to get the men away from the “stranglehold” of their families and the large Chechen diaspora in Europe.

“Canada’s commitment to the LGBT community coupled with the urgent nature of this crisis made it ideal for relocation for individuals fleeing Chechnya,” Powell said.

“These individuals will need community support in order to aid their resettlement.”

“What’s remarkable about Chechnya is that it truly was an international civil society effort, and that meant partnerships all over the world,” he added.

Powell stressed the work of supporting LGBT victims of state-sponsored violence like in Chechnya does not end with finding them safe locations -- or even necessarily start there.

“When people don’t choose to migrate when facing persecution,” Powell said. “These individuals, still, when I interviewed them, many of them said they just wanted to go home. This wasn’t a choice.”

In looking at current hotspots like Egypt and Azerbaijan, Powell said advocates’ reflexes should not be to immediately jump to “get them out.”

“It’s heartening that people took such outrage to Chechnya, and it’s a large part of what allowed us to intervene,” said Powell. “I want to see that same degree of interest and concern about the many other countries in the world that also have LGBTQI people facing persecution.”

“But it’s not our role to immediately reflex and say these people need to leave,” he continued. “It is about assessing the situation and determining where there are individuals at immediate risk who choose to leave.”

For Rainbow Railroad, this work is one of the “major human rights focuses” for the LGBT community.

“[Chechnya] was a powerful example of what happens when we work together. The fact of the matter is that we’re more connected than ever,” Powell said. “It was our connections that led us to our partnership with the Russian LGBT Network.”

“As we move forward to working with various governments, including the United States, we believe that this work should continue no matter what party is in power, what type of government is in power,” he added.

Victory Fund Endorses Three Gubernatorial Candidates

Potential to Triple LGBTQ Representation in 2018

BY BTL STAFF

The Victory Fund, the only national organization dedicated to electing LGBTQ leaders to public office, endorsed three candidates in their races for governor — with the potential to triple the number of LGBTQ governors in the nation in 2018. The endorsers, announced on Nov. 14, include Oregon Governor Kate Brown, the first openly LGBTQ elected governor in U.S. history who is up for reelection; Representative Jared Polis, who would become the first openly LGBTQ governor in Colorado; and Maryland state Senator Rich Madaleno, who would become the first openly LGBTQ governor in his state.

“Just one week ago LGBTQ candidates shattered lavender ceilings and broke down barriers across the nation — and we are fired up and determined to expand on those historic victories in 2018,” said Aisha C. Moodie-Mills, President & CEO of Victory Fund. “Oregon Governor Kate Brown remains the only openly LGBTQ person ever elected governor in the United States. But with wins for her, Representative Jared Polis in Colorado, and state Senator Rich Madaleno in Maryland, we can triple LGBTQ representation in the governors’ mansions next year. While it is essential and groundbreaking to have three outstanding LGBTQ candidates running for governor, we know their focus is on improving the lives of residents in their home states. We are thrilled to endorse these three constituent-focused gubernatorial candidates in their 2018 races — and Victory Fund will get to work on their behalf starting now.”

Moodie-Mills also released individual statements about Victory Fund’s endorsements of Oregon Governor Kate Brown, Representative Jared Polis and Maryland state Senator Rich Madaleno. As endorsed gubernatorial candidates, Victory Fund will provide campaign, fundraising and communications support throughout their run for office. All three candidates were endorsed by Victory Fund in previous elections.

Since 1991, Victory Fund has helped thousands of openly LGBTQ candidates win local, state and federal elections.

Sen. Bieda, Prosecutor Renew Calls for Hate Crime Protections

BY BTL STAFF

LANING - Sen. Steve Bieda (D-Warren) and Muskegon County Prosecutor D.J. Hilson have renewed calls for legislative action on Senate Bill 121, which would add gender identification and sexual orientation to the list of protections under the Ethnic Intimidation Act.

Currently, the Ethnic Intimidation Act says that a person is guilty of ethnic intimidation and subject to two years in prison if they maliciously – and with specific intent to intimidate or harass another person based on their race, color, religion, gender or national origin – commit, or threaten to commit, physical harm or property damage.

However, the law does not include sexual orientation and gender identity protections.

“Lawmakers have had this particular piece of legislation on their plate for two decades,” Sen. Bieda said. “How many more assaults will it take for them to realize that the current laws have done nothing to reduce hate crimes, and allow perpetrators to escape the fullest extent of the law?”

A recent case in Muskegon Heights – where a 17-year-old victim was lured, physically assaulted and stripped of his clothing by an attacker who recorded the assault and posted it on Facebook – spotlights the need for gender identification and sexual orientation protections. During an investigation, Muskegon Heights police officers used a recording to determine the attack was racially motivated, and that the attacker selected the victim because he was gay.

The Muskegon County Prosecutor’s Office, led by Prosecutor D.J. Hilson, sought felony hate crime charges against the attacker, but were unable to do so because sexual orientation is not covered under the current federal hate crime statute.

“I just get to enforce the laws that are made, and not make them,” D.J Hilson, Prosecuting Attorneys Association of Michigan president-elect, said. “We’re hoping that Sen. Bieda’s Senate Bill 121 will highlight the need to make a change in this particular law.”

For more than a decade, Sen. Bieda has introduced similar legislation to give law enforcement and prosecutor’s offices the tools they need to uphold the rule of law and seek justice for victims of hate crimes, but none has been passed by the Republican-controlled legislature.

In 1998, following the brutal murder of Wyoming college student Matthew Shepard, the Michigan House of Representatves passed a bill to add sexual orientation to the Ethnic Intimidation Act, but the bill then died in the Senate.

SB 121, his current bill, was referred to the Senate Government Operations Committee on Feb. 8 where it still awaits a hearing. Members of the community are encouraged to contact Sen. Arlan Meekhof (R-West Olive) to apply pressure to move SB 121 out of committee to get passed so hate crimes can be prosecuted as hate crimes in the state of Michigan. Meekhof’s office can be reached at 517-373-6920 or via email at SenAMEekhof@senate.michigan.gov.
Justin Trudeau to Formally Apologize for ‘Gross Indecency’ Convictions

BY MICHAEL K. LAVERS

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau on Sunday announced his government will formally apologize to those who were convicted of “gross indecency” before the country decriminalized consensual same-sex sexual relations.

He wrote on his Facebook page that his government on Nov. 28 “will offer a formal apology to LGBTQ2 Canadians in the (house of Commons) -- for the persecution & injustices they have suffered, and to advance together on the path to equality & inclusion.” The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reported Trudeau will also formally apologize to Canadians who were fired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the country’s military and civil service because of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Canada decriminalized consensual same-sex sexual relations in 1969.

MP Randy Boissonnault -- who is Trudeau’s advisor on LGBT and intersex issues -- in June confirmed to the Washington Blade during an interview at the WorldPride International Human Rights Conference in Madrid that the men who were convicted under the law would have their convictions expunged. Boissonnault did not provide a specific timeline as to when the Canadian government was planning to formally apologize to them.

“It will be an historic day for LGBT2Q communities and for Canada,” said Boissonnault on his Twitter page after Trudeau made his announcement. “Diversity makes us stronger.”

Egale Canada, a Canadian LGBT and intersex advocacy group, on Sunday said the “long awaited apology” is “one step closer to starting the process of healing.”

Canada is the latest country to formally apologize to men who were convicted under laws that criminalized homosexuality.

A law named after Alan Turing -- a gay British mathematician who was convicted of gross indecency in 1952 for having a relationship with another man -- that pardoned gay and bisexual men in England and Wales who were charged under a law that criminalized consensual same-sex sexual acts took effect in January. The governments of Germany, Scotland and New Zealand have also taken similar actions.

Then-Secretary of State John Kerry in January formally apologized to State Department personnel who were fired for “alleged homosexuality” during the so-called “lavender scare” of the 1950s and 1960s. U.S. Sen. Ben Cardin (D-Md.) has introduced a bill that would allow those who were fired during the “lavender scare” to have their employment records expunged.

Homosexuality remain criminalized in more than 70 countries around the world. Iran, Saudi Arabia and Mauritania are among the handful of nations in which those who are convicted of engaging in consensual same-sex sexual acts face the death penalty.

From the Kitchen Table to the Global Table: Astraea Celebrates 40 Years

BY MICHELLE E. BROWN

Around a kitchen table in New York back in 1977 a group of women decided that if there was going to be a women’s movement that prioritized the needs of lesbians and women of color they would have to fund it themselves. These phenomenal women were described as “a cross-class, multi-racial group of women activists.”

From these quiet beginnings the Astraea Lesbian Foundation for Justice, one of the first women’s foundations in the world, was formed with the belief “that even the smallest of gestures, when combined, could create, nurture and strengthen significant social change.”

On Nov. 13 the Astraea Lesbian Foundation for Justice celebrated 40 years of lesbian feminist activism, but this time it wasn’t around a kitchen table. The gala was held at New York’s Angel Orensanz Foundation and honored leaders from across the four decades whose commitment, passion, and work inspire others and meaningfully advance LGBTQI justice in communities this country and around the world.

Under the leadership of Executive Director Emerita Katherine Acey, the foundation established the nation’s first Lesbian Writers Fund in 1990, created the International Fund for Sexual Minorities in 1996 and in 2006 launched the U.S. Movement Building Initiative to support people of color-led LGBTQI organizations to collectively build their power and voice.

In 2017, the Acey Social Justice Feminist Award was established to honor lesbian and trans women of color over the age of 62 who have made significant but under-recognized contributions to LGBTQI movements and often have unmet financial needs as they age.

An accomplished filmmaker with a track record of leading exponential organizational growth and capacity building to visionary management, J. Bob Alotta took the seat at the head of the table following Acey’s tenure as executive director of the Astraea Foundation in 2011.

The “table” had grown since its beginnings in 1977 to include work supporting grassroots activists in over half of the world supporting countless struggles and successes in human rights for the LGBTQI community.

Did she know she would become a human rights globe trotter when she took on the role of executive director?

“I mean I don’t think I understood at all what I was about to get into in any way shape or form but certainly not around travel” said Alotta in an interview earlier this year. “I’m on the road, I don’t know probably 60 percent of the time maybe more and I do travel all over the world. You know my second week on the job I was in Kenya at this amazing conference of East African LGBTQI activists changed Faces/Changing Spaces. That was honestly my second week. And I realized in my first week that my passport had expired. And so, I had to rush and get that taken care of. It was like the first thing I almost did wrong on the job - not having an active passport - but I can assure you now I have the problem of running out of pages.”

We laughed about Alotta’s request for some “Woo!” before each flight from her Facebook community. It’s not like she’s afraid of flying but she explained, “The ‘Woo’ - well it really helps me. I’m like I can’t, this flight can’t go down. If like all these people are really invested in this being a smooth flight. I do know honestly believe in the power of the congregation very much. So, it settles my spirit a little bit to know folks have my back when I’m taking off.”

In celebrating its 40 years Astraea acknowledges that it has become a “multi-gendered, multi-racial, multi-identity organization” but it continues to honor the legacy of its founding mothers.

“I’ve been on many different continents and in many different countries meeting with LGBTQI folks. And while our conditions might be different, our cultures might be different without question the common thread or a common thread - there are many - is the incredible resilience and innovation that happens in and from our LGBTQI communities,” said Alotta adding, “You know I think that there’s this idea that innovation is the providence of some white men in Silicon Valley. That’s the most absurd idea in the world! We know that innovation lives in communities of color; that women are constantly being innovative; that there are more people being innovative people who need to be creative about creating their right livelihood to be in the place that they know themselves to be even if it isn’t always easy. That’s where innovation is born and that’s where creativity lies. And I see that over and over again.

“We’ve tried to really build work around and think about how to build strategies around that innovation. How do we foster it? We talk a lot about sustainability strategy and all of those things. And to me one of the greatest ways to ensure that we’re building successful strategies and sustainable environments for us all, is to is to harness and bolster the innovation that’s happening inside of our communities.”

A public foundation, Astraea raises funds every year for its grant making activities. Its website says its impact has been “from Missoula, Montana to Cape Town, South Africa” and it’s probably safe to add in many, many places along the way where over the past four decades the Astraea Lesbian Foundation for Justice has devoted over $31,000,000 to grassroots activists here and across the globe.

Strengthening and supporting LGBTQI groups that promote racial, economic and gender justice in the U.S. and worldwide with flexible general support grants ranging from $5,000 to $50,000 per year. “We really do fund nascent and emerging groups,” said Alotta. “Like often Astraea will be the first grant to an up and coming organization but we really stay with folks over time.”

From that kitchen table to today’s global table, the work goes on. Congratulations Astraea Lesbian Foundation for Justice for your 40 years working for racial, economic and gender justice.

Fifty years ago Detroit’s Washington Boulevard was a busy setting for exclusive shops, upscale restaurants, elegant bistros stretching sedately from Grand Circus Park’s popular Statler Hotel to Michigan Avenue’s prestigious Sheraton Cadillac.

Both hotel bars catered to a discrete, well-heeled, happy-hour gay clientele. Good manners expected. No camping it up. No untoward touching. No two-shots-and-a-beer, buddy-buddying. No Mary this! No Mary that!

At the Statler, offenders were handed a terse note: “Your patronage is not wanted here. Please do not return.”

For those engaging in the covert pastime of dalliance in sensual stalls of solicitation, the nearby Tuller Hotel was notorious, as were the Telenews theater balcony, Brass Rail Bar (where 50’s pop star Johnny Ray was arrested—twice by the same cop!), J. L. Hudson’s popular 13th floor men’s room, several park underground, tap-tap loos.

As a teenager all was terra incognita, but I learned the lay of the land from “experienced” trowlers who had navigated the watering spots first hand. I did venture cautiously into the Greyhound Bus Depot on Washington Boulevard to check out noonday comings and goings. (So to speak.)

I was cautious. And warned. “Miss Tillie [vice squad] goes there all the time. Mind your business. If you have to pee, just pee. Don’t look anybody straight in the eye!” Stories of arrests for merely peeking at a vice officer were many. “It’s your word against theirs. Case closed.”

Behind the Greyhound was an unexpected gay teenagers hangout called Mama’s, one diner star rating over downtown Hub Grill’s none. Mama’s was owned by the mother of thirty-something, Butch Jimmy (“BJ”), who had his share of impressionable teenagers. Myself included.

Mama—short, roly-poly faced—was of some slavic heritage. She wore her hair in a tight bun and dressed in basic black (no pearls). She got her sense of humor by osmosis, greeting regulars with a hearty hand flutter, loudly announcing, “Kud-de-vahs! Kud-de-vahs!” (“Whores! Whores!”)

Mama employed Frank, a cadaverous looking cook, who, while abusing hamburgers and squinting menacingly at potato fries, would tell anyone who’d listen that he had made his funeral arrangements and knew exactly where, and in what pastel satin-lined casket, he’d be buried. (R.I.P.)

During many visits to Mama’s I became friends with my Hub Grill idol, Rich. A Polish blond, Rich Suess liked dark-haired, swarthy types. Italians. Spaniards. Mood Indigos. (I was just a tepid Anglo-Saxon, dishwater, Brillo-pad brunet.)

For me it was important to act straight. I didn’t like hanging around with flammers. I knew that my day-to-day survival in this fairy-fag-hating world depended upon passing, looking like your average duck-tailed, occasionally hip-gyrating, pegged pants, Zoot suited groupie.

Rich looked straight as a 10-inch, no-nonsense nun’s ruler (until decades later when returning as a New York hair dresser, with a “FAB-you-luss!” ersatz Brooklyn accent). Just weeks into our newly formed alliance, Rich suggested hitting Toledo Ohio’s Scenic Bar.

It was a gas. Not to be passed up. (Or down.)

Eight transgender people across the United States were elected. They were joined by a number of other diverse voices, including the first openly intersexed public official, Betsy Driver, the first turbaned Sikh mayor, Ravi Bhalla of Hoboken, New Jersey, and many others. It was a big night for democracy, for diversity, and a positively huge time for transgender people.

Transgender themselves. Such would have been the death knell of candidacies in even liberal-leaning locations.

I would like to think I need not remind anyone what Harvey Milk had to say about hope, but it seems relevant to note at this point.

“So if there is a message I have to give, it is that I’ve found one overriding thing about my personal election, it’s the fact that if a gay person can be elected, it’s a green light,” said Milk “And you and you and you, you have to give people hope.”

On the 7th of November 2017, the transgender community, in the wake of so much hatred, was given hope. We can be elected, and that is no small thing – especially in the wake of the Trump Administration and so much awfulness focused on transgender people.

That night, transgender people young and old got some hope. There may be a transgender kid out there who, until that night, was thinking of ending their lives -- and now they might some day join Koonztz, Cunningham, Cannon, Roem, Matherne, Jenkins, Middleton, Titus, and other transgender elected officials. They now know that they can live out of the shadows, and be not only accepted within their communities, but represent them.

There will be more coming up; Kim Coco Iwamoto is in the running to become the Lieutenant Governor of Hawai’i, while Martin Rawlings-Fein and Mia “Tu Mutch” Satya are both aiming for seats on the San Francisco Unified School Board. I am sure that much like the night of the 7th of November, there are far more candidates out there that I don’t know of right now.

SO let us etch this one night down, as the day that those of us who are transgender were victorious in the face of so much adversity, and made a name for our community and ourselves. Let’s hold onto that hope, and let it guide us through these difficult times, and into a better future for us all.

Gwen Smith is pondering running sometime, too. You’ll find her at www.gwen smith.com

Smith: November Hope

Then Lisa Middleton won a seat on the Palm Springs City Council, Gerri Cannon got onto the Somersworth, New Hampshire School Board, and Phillippe Cunningham took a second spot on the Minneapolis City Council.

Surely seven was far more than any one could have hoped for, and yet we still weren’t done. Raven Matherne finished out the election with her win on the Stanford Board of Representatives in Connecticut.

Eight transgender people across the United States were elected. They were joined by a number of other diverse voices, including the first openly intersexed public official, Betsy Driver, the first turbaned Sikh mayor, Ravi Bhalla of Hoboken, New Jersey, and many others. It was a big night for democracy, for diversity, and a positively huge time for transgender people.

The 7th of November was the 40th anniversary of Harvey Milk’s historic victory in San Francisco, becoming the first out, gay elected official in the United States. It felt as if he was smiling on us all that night, as we moved forward.

I’m usually the first to talk about how bad things are right now for transgender people. And it does seem vital that we keep fighting. We need to respond to all these attacks, and keep moving forward. I’d be lying if I said I think any of those, at least in the short term, will be easy.

We’re being cast as the big enemy right now, and facing an onslaught of rights rollbacks under the current administration. We’re still seeing anti-transgender murders in the United States every two weeks or so. If I’m pessimistic, there are plenty of reasons for it.

At the same time, we can take this one moment, this one night, and take a bit of hope from it. As hard as our battles are, it wasn’t that long ago that no candidate would have even championed transgender causes, let alone been out as
SCOTUS Preview: The Masterpiece Cake Case

BY LISA KEEN

By one legal expert’s assessment, the Trump administration’s argument for allowing a baker to refuse service to a same-sex couple would lead to “anarchy.”

In a nutshell, the Department of Justice brief to the U.S. Supreme Court in Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado – a case that will be before the court for oral argument Dec. 5 – argues that selling cakes is like staging parades.

DOJ points back to a decision in the 1995 Hurley v. Irish-American Gay case in which the Supreme Court ruled that Massachusetts could not enforce its law against sexual orientation discrimination in public accommodations. The state had found the organizers of a St. Patrick’s Day parade in Boston violated the state law when they refused to allow an openly gay contingent.

The high court said enforcement of that law against the parade organizers violated the First Amendment right of the parade organizers to control the message of their event.

The DOJ equates the refusal of Jack Phillips, a Colorado baker, to sell a cake to a same-sex couple for their wedding reception to the refusal of parade organizers to allow an openly LGBT contingent in their public procession. (Ironically, just this year, the Boston parade organizers voted to let an LGBT contingent into the parade.)

Led by a former clerk of conservative Justice Clarence Thomas (Jeffrey B. Wall), the DOJ brief contends that, “Forcing Phillips to create expression for and participate in a ceremony that violates his sincerely held religious beliefs invades his First Amendment rights in a manner akin to the governmental intrusion in Hurley.”

It’s interesting to note that Phillips acknowledges on his shop’s website (www.continuetogive.com/supportjackphillips) that he took “less than 30 seconds” to refuse to sell a cake to Charlie Craig and David Mullins for their wedding reception. The 28 wedding cake designs featured on his website are beautiful and demonstrate an artistry, but only two include images that reference male-female couples and none conveys anything about anyone’s religious beliefs.

Ryan Karerat, a spokesman for the ACLU, which is representing the couple, said the couple was “turned away before they could discuss designs … as soon as [Phillips] realized the cake was for them.”

Nevertheless, Phillips’ attorneys at the Alliance Defending Freedom contend, “Phillips serves all people, but cannot convey all ideas or celebrate all events.” And DOJ contends that selling any wedding cake to the same-sex couple compels Phillips to express a message and “participate” in an event that violates his religious beliefs.

Robert Post, the Sterling Professor of Law at Yale University Law School, says that DOJ’s logic, if extended to other businesses, “would effectively undo anti-discrimination laws generally” and lead to “anarchy.”

“Almost all our behavior carries a message,” said Post, in a telephone press conference last week. “If I went around claiming I could hit you because it’s expressive -- I can make anything I do expressive…[and the] country becomes ungovernable.”

Mary Bonauto says the DOJ is trying to shift emphasis to the cake as opposed to the law obliging all businesses covered by the public accommodations law to serve customers.

The Colorado law prohibiting discrimination based on sexual orientation in public accommodations covers businesses that are open to the public, and can include a wide variety of businesses -- hotels, cabs, grocery stores, restaurants, doctor offices, pharmacies, and day care centers.

“There is no exception for creative or beautiful products,” said Bonauto, who argued for equal protection of LGBT couples in Obergefell v. Hodges. That case led to the 2015 decision that struck down state laws that banned recognition and licensing of marriage for same-sex couples.

Like Post, Bonauto says that, “if the Court accepts the Petitioners’ views, then there will be barely a shred of anti-discrimination laws in place.”

Not surprisingly, attorneys for Colorado and the same-sex couple (the ACLU is representing Craig and Mullins) put their emphasis on different previous decisions by the Supreme Court.

Ria Tabacco Mar, counsel of record for Craig and Mullins, said in a telephone press conference for the National LGBT Bar Association, that Phillips’ religious exercise...
The risk of continued discrimination is particularly acute, when those providing services to the public believe they are entitled, in the name of religion or free speech, to refuse service to others based on who they are.

- Lambda Legal Brief

Of the nine substantial LGBT-related decisions in front of the Supreme Court since Hurley, the LGBT side has won eight times. The only loss was in 2000 with Boy Scouts v. Dale. That case, too, involved a state law against discrimination based on sexual orientation in public accommodations. And there, too, the court ruled that enforcement of the law against the Boy Scouts was a violation of the group’s First Amendment right to “expressive association.” But like the parade organizers, the Boy Scouts group was identified as a “private” organization and not engaged in a commercial activity when it barred inclusion of gay scouts and leaders. (And like the Boston parade organizers, the Boy Scouts of America association has subsequently agreed to allow openly gay members and leaders.)

At the same time the Supreme Court held the Boy Scouts could exclude a gay scout leader, it acknowledged its willingness to carve out more exceptions to the Free Exercise clause of the First Amendment. LGBT activists had argued the school should be denied state funding because the school exercised its religious beliefs against homosexuality and against other religions in determining which children it would exclude.

“For as long as we have had anti-discrimination laws we’ve had challenges,” said a former DOJ official under the Obama administration, Samuel Bagenstos, during the ACLU’s press conference on the Masterpiece case. “… You could imagine any white supremacist business saying they discriminate against blacks because it sends a message…”

In a brief to the Supreme Court on the Masterpiece case, Lambda Legal, Equality California, and 11 other organizations detail numerous cases in which LGBT people have been discriminated against in the name of religion. They include a funeral home in Mississippi refusing to pick up the body of a deceased gay nursing home residence saying, “This goes against everything I believe in. I’m a Christian.”

Midwives who claimed their work was part of their ministry repeatedly turned down a lesbian couple in Tennessee, preparing to give birth to their child.

And “a California-resident lesbian couple was refused by a bed and breakfast in Hawaii, the owner telling them she ‘felt uncomfortable renting a room to homosexuals, citing her personal religious views’.”

“The risk of continued discrimination is particularly acute,” says the Lambda brief, “when those providing services to the public believe they are entitled, in the name of religion or free speech, to refuse service to others based on who they are.”
A Hard-Fought Love

‘Life is Beautiful’ for Casto-Thatcher Couple after Overcoming a Difficult Path

BY EVE KUCHARSKI

All day she had been debating on when to do it, and after a rainy Friday spent kayaking, Heather Thatcher, 43, was sure; she would do it that night. She and her girlfriend got back to their campsite, built a fire, and then, Thatcher excused herself for a moment into the camper.

“I had made a photobook with pictures of various points of all of our first year of dating,” Thatcher said. “I made this book and I wrapped it up and I had the ring and everything.”

When she reemerged with the wrapped gift, she took her girlfriend by surprise. “She opened it and started looking up and I had the ring and everything.”

By that point, Casto-Thatcher had caught on, but she made sure to translate the message at the end—just to be certain.

“I had to get my phone out to translate it all and the last line was, ‘Will you marry me?’ It was very nice,” Casto-Thatcher said.

And this proposal was especially so, as it mirrored the couple’s first meeting. “I was out with a couple of friends having a party and a bonfire. I was spending the night there, it was just the three of us,” Casto-Thatcher said. “I had been messaging her and then she asked, ‘Can I come over?’ I thought, ‘That’d be kind of nice.’ She came over for the bonfire and the second we met …”

‘That’d be kind of nice.’ She came over for the bonfire and the second we met …”

“We were pretty much inseparable after that point,” Thatcher said. “We dated for almost a year and I proposed to her.”

Thatcher said she knew immediately after seeing Casto-Thatcher for the first time that she was attracted to her.

“I was on OkCupid, scrolling through pictures and her picture popped up,” Thatcher said. “Her smile stopped me in my tracks. I thought, ‘I have to meet this woman.’”

And the timing was perfect.

Both Heathers were looking for a fulfilling relationship.

“We were both married to men previously. I was married for nine and a half years when my husband passed away,” Casto-Thatcher said. “I am bisexual, and my husband knew that I was attracted to women and it was never an issue. Then, when I was single and ready to date again, three and a half years ago, I thought, ‘Why am I not dating another woman?’”

Her coming out process was fairly straightforward.

“I had a little bit of fear telling my family and friends, but not one person gave me really negative feedback,” Casto-Thatcher said. “Most of them said, ‘Oh, OK.’ For me, it was pretty easy.”

For Thatcher, her path was more difficult. After coming out, she filed for divorce from her husband of 22 years and was forced to begin her life anew.

“Even my mom, and she’s since come around, she initially told me that she was disappointed which was really hurtful,” she said. “My niece is trans, and my sister and I have such a different perspective about this whole thing it’s crazy. My sister got really upset with my mom and called her, laid into her, and saw what she was doing and she’s been fantastic ever since.”

But she couldn’t win everyone over.

“All the people who said they were my ‘friends,’ none of them speak to me anymore. I was told I was going to hell, I was told the choices I was making were going to lead to death and that God would never bless me,” Thatcher said. “I had to start from scratch. I had a couple of friends through work and I’m much better for it.”

Fast forward through another happy year of dating to Aug. 4 of this year, and it was the couple’s wedding day.

“My mom and dad were visiting from Port Detroit. They were fantastic. Our photographer was fantastic, Derek Cookson, he was awesome. I was a little concerned with how the different vendors would be with us being a same-sex couple, but everyone was fantastic,” Thatcher said.

The two had no trouble with other vendors either.

“At the venue, Emerald City Designs did all of the tablescaping and flowers,” Casto-Thatcher said. “We made sure to say up front, ‘If you have a problem with it, we don’t want to see each other for the first time at a pre-ceremony picture session that nodded to the couple’s first official date at the Detroit Institute of Arts Museum. Hours later, the couple was married at the Waterview Loft at Port Detroit.”

“They were fantastic. Our photographer was fantastic, Derek Cookson, he was awesome. I was a little concerned with how the different vendors would be with us being a same-sex couple, but everyone was fantastic,” Thatcher said.

The two had no trouble with other vendors either.

“Don’t attempt to change yourself for anybody else, no matter how hard it is,” Thatcher said. “Even though it was hard initially on the kids, they see the benefits now. It’s so much better for them to see a loving, happy marriage than to see anything else.”

Icon Talks Being the ‘Water Hose’ During Divisive Times & the Politicization of Her Faith-Based Music

BY CHRIS AZZOPARDI

Reba McEntire has released a beautiful new Christmas album. The melancholy spirit of her friend Dolly Parton’s 1982 holiday staple “Hard Candy Christmas” is preserved on McEntire’s new reading, and her sparse version of “Mary, Did You Know?” featuring Christmas mainstays Vince Gill and Amy Grant engenders a spirited hopefulness even the secular population may find comfort in.

But it is two weeks after the Las Vegas shooting, and nearly a month before the CMAs, which emotionally honored the victims during its “In Memoriam,” when I connect with McEntire to talk about the new album and her holiday plans. Sticking to casual banter seems malapropos given the recent series of tragic and divisive events that eventually led to McEntire pledging to love you the best she can during the all-star musical opening of the CMAs.

How do you not talk about issues affecting all of us, even McEntire?

After all, the Country Music Hall of Famer performs in Vegas regularly during her residency, “Reba, Brooks & Dunn: Together in Vegas,” which recently announced additional 2018 dates. Moreover, the icon has wielded great influence as an entertainer – singer; Broadway, film and TV actress; gay favorite – during her four-decade career, and so when she pledged her support for marriage equality in 2014 to me during our last conversation, it felt especially groundbreaking. At the time, she spoke lovingly about her dear friends, Michael and Steven, who didn’t have the same legal protections as heterosexual couples. “It was not fair,” she told me, pointedly. Just over a year after our talk, Michael and Steven’s relationship was legally recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Now, any artist with clout is being called upon to take on other hot topics, as evidenced by the preemptive decision by CMA producers to enact a no-politics stipulation on journalists during the event (the provision was overturned by the time the show aired). But the pressure to weigh in on political issues can be felt even within the country music community, as Rosanne Cash pled for the genre’s influencers to speak out against the NRA in a Oct. 3 New York Times column called “Country Musicians, Stand Up to the N.R.A.” (Faith Hill and Tim McGraw recently called for sensible gun laws in an interview with Billboard after Cash’s call to action).

In addition to talking about her personal struggles with religion and being true to her musical roots, McEntire, 62, told me she looks to God for guidance on addressing the world’s affairs. Strikingly, she did clarify that her track “Back to God,” featured as an acoustic version on “My Kind of Christmas,” is purely a faith song despite various sites and social-media memes associating the song with President Donald Trump.

Do you have gay people in your circle of family and friends who you’ll be seeing for the holidays?

Probably so, yeah. I’ll be in Nashville before we go out of the country after Christmas, so I’ve got a lot of friends in town that we’ll be seeing after we get through with our show in Las Vegas on (December) 10th.

What special something do your gay and lesbian loved ones bring to your holiday festivities?

Friendship. And we hang out throughout the year, so it’s not much different around Christmas than it is throughout the year.

Just more eating.

A lot more eating – yeah, true! And lots of just hanging together and the reason for the season, which is the birthday of Jesus and we all celebrate that. It’s more of the same, just being great friends at Christmas like we are throughout the year.

Please tell me all of our favorite country gay icons – yourself, Dolly, Faith, Martina, and so on – have some kind of Secret Santa.

(Laughs) No, we don’t. Wouldn’t that be fun, though?

Do you do White Elephant exchanges?

Oh yeah, we do it with my RBI (Firm) team and we used to do it at Starstruck. Dirty Santa or White Elephants are really a lot of fun.

What’s the craziest gift you ever received during a White Elephant exchange?

Oh my gosh, probably an old dirty sweater!

I just spoke to your daughter-in-law, Kelly Clarkson, who you collaborate with on “Silent Night.” As I’m sure you know, she finally has creative control. Was there a time in your career when, like Kelly, you struggled to make the music you wanted to make because of label heads?

You know, I was very, very lucky to get to work with people who are open-minded. It wasn’t a situation of not getting to sing the music I wanted to and make the music I wanted to; it’s that when I got started I didn’t know, other than I had been raised with what I wanted to sing, and then when it got a little more contemporary with the orchestrations, I had to go to the head of the It’s your neighbors. You deal with all of it and your whole family. It’s your friends, it’s your children or your grandchildren, it’s not just your family. It’s your community, it’s your country, it’s your town, it’s what’s going on on your own music. So Jimmy was totally 100 percent for me doing what I wanted to do and I was very grateful for that.

Kelly is bold when it comes to expressing her social and political beliefs, and I understand her stepdaughter and your grandchild, Savannah, is really political. Do you have political debates within the family?

Nope. I don’t talk politics because I think there are a lot more things I can contribute to the world without arguing with somebody about politics.

My family has this rule, especially during holiday gatherings: no political discussions. I think that’s very healthy.

Do you have a similar rule?

I just don’t do it. When somebody wants to talk politics, I let ’em know that and we change the subject.

There seems to be a lot of pressure on public figures to take stances on some important issues concerning our country. During our last interview, in fact, you pledged your full support for same-sex marriages for the first time. A lot has happened since, including the recent shooting at the Route 91 Harvest country music festival in Las Vegas, and recently, Rosanne Cash penned a column in the New York Times encouraging the country music community to speak out against gun violence. For you, when is a potentially divisive issue important enough to talk about?

I think I’ll know it when it comes to me. I think I’ll know it when that happens. So, I can’t say it’s gonna be tomorrow (laughs), or what the topic is gonna be. I’ll know it – I think it’ll be told to me. I rely on God a lot to let me know what I need to be doing and I ask him for guidance, totally, all the time, every day. So when that’s needed, I’ll be the spokesperson.

Regarding the Rosanne Cash piece calling on the country music, did you feel a need to step forward?

This is the first time I’ve heard of it. She wrote a column in the New York Times asking country artists to speak out on gun violence and gun control. Basically, “Is the issue deeper than just ‘thoughts and prayers?’” It was a really thought-provoking column.

Well, good for her. Good deal.

How has what is happening in the world become personal for you?

It always has been. When you have children and people you love and care about, it’s not only your children or your grandchildren, it’s your whole family. It’s your friends, it’s your community, it’s your country, it’s your town, it’s what’s going on on your own music. So Jimmy was totally 100 percent for me doing what I wanted to do and I was very grateful for that.

Do you think you would benefit by going back to just the 6 and 10 o’clock news?

I really don’t know which is best. Are we overloaded with press? Do we need more? Do we need to know all of this? I remember that song that Anne Murray had out, “A Little Good News” (laughs). That’s what I like to watch – good news.

What does it mean to be an artist who can, in one night, bring together gay fans, conservative right fans and drag queens?

It means a lot to me because what we’re there for – my job is to entertain and to lighten the load off your back, and I hope when everybody walks through that door to come into a concert they leave their troubles at the door and they come in and join together and listen and enjoy and take away something that will brighten their day. Give them somethin’ to think about and improve their lives, hopefully.

Maybe there’s a message in those songs. I have always said, Chris, that I’m the conduit, I’m the water hose. I’m singing these songs because there’s a message in music, because it’s so healing, and so when I sing it, I sing songs that touch my heart. Hopefully when you’re in the audience and you listen to those songs it touches your heart – and in a way that I have no idea how it’s gonna touch your heart, but I hope that it does.

How did you feel about ABC passing on your TV project created by out “Desperate Housewives” and “Golden Girls” writer Marc Cherry?

I couldn’t believe it. I was devastated. I thought it was the greatest show. Everybody who I played it for was like, “Oh my gosh, I can’t wait to see more,” and I said, “Well, unfortunately, you’re not gonna get to because they didn’t take it.” Marc did a wonderful job. He’s a genius. I love him to pieces. He is so clever. And it was just such a good show. But we’re not gonna get to continue on, so my heart just hurt for that. We shot (the pilot) in March of this year, and I was really wanting everybody to see it.

Will we see you on TV aside from “CMA Country Christmas”?

I hope so! We’re looking at scripts now for next year and some TV movies and different things like that. You never know what’s gonna materialize. I talked about the Marc Cherry script for, gosh, four or five months and was so excited. Just knew it was gonna be a slam dunk. But you never know about the future. I just have to say, well, wasn’t in the plans, everything happens for a reason, timing is everything.
Getting back to music, your song “Back to God,” which originally appeared on your “Sing It Now: Songs of Faith & Hope” released in early 2017 and now on “My Kind of Christmas” as an acoustic duet with Lauren Daigle, was being associated with President Donald Trump by his supporters upon its release. I mention that because I grew up trying to reconcile being a gay man with my Catholic upbringing, and that was really a struggle for me because I didn’t know which I should choose or if I had to choose. So now, when I see a song like “Back to God” being politicized, I think of LGBT children who don’t side with the president but seek comfort from a song like “Back to God.” How do you feel about that?

I think that’s ridiculous.

But really there are memes and articles saying “Back to God” is essentially a Trump anthem.

No, no. It wasn’t at all. (The lyric) “give this world back to God” means we’ve got troubles, we’ve got things going on, people are worrying, people are trying to solve problems themselves. If they gave their problems and their worries up to the Lord, he will take care of him and you’ll have a peace that you’ve never experienced in your life. How anybody took that and politicized that is beyond my imagination. It’s totally a faith song. Faith-based, and of hope and of faith and looking for a better way of dealing with the stuff that’s going on. And my way of dealing with it is giving it to the Lord.

As a person of faith, what message would you like to send to LGBT people who may struggle with religion?

You know, sometimes I struggle with religion because there are so many, but if you read all of ‘em, all of the different religions, there is one underlying thing: God wants us to love each other. Treat people like you want to be treated and love each other—that’s not hard, but in a sense, it is. But that’s it. He just wants us to love each other, and I think that’s what we all really need to work on.

When I spoke to Amy Grant in 2013, she told me, “I know that the religious community has not been very welcoming, but I just want to stress that the journey of faith brings us into community, but it’s really about one relationship. The journey of faith is just being willing and open to have a relationship with God. And everybody is welcome. Everybody.”

Yeah, yup! And also, another thing: The secret of peace is forgiveness, and that’s hard. That’s really hard. But when you do, all of that hatred and resentment that’s eating up your heart and your stomach and your gallbladder and it’s just making you sick, if you forgive, all that goes away and it’s replaced with space that is ready to have more love put in and you find better relationships and more friends, so you gotta forgive and you gotta just love people.

Sounds like you found the secret, Reba.

(Laughs) Ya know, funny enough: I kind of think I did! Everybody says, “Oh yeah, I’ve known that for a long time,” and then I say, “Why didn’t I understand that?” It’s hard. It’s real hard to forgive. But it’s the best blessing in the world to give yourself.

Small Business Saturday is a big deal in downtown Royal Oak. The event on Nov. 25 is part of a national effort started several years ago in conjunction with American Express to encourage people to shop and buy locally. Customers who make purchases of $25 or more at participating stores that day will receive a free Royal Oak canvas tote.

Sean Kammer, manager of the city Downtown Development Authority, told The Daily Tribune the DDA bought 1,000 of the tote bags to hand out and filled them with coupons and gifts worth a total of about $20,000.

The bags will contain a book that can be stamped at participating businesses. Once a shopper has purchased 10 items they can drop the passport-like book off in a ballot box at Royal Oak City Hall. In return, the DDA will mail the shopper a gift card from a local business, Kammer said.

“We think Small Business Saturday is going to be unique in Royal Oak and an opportunity to introduce new faces at the stores,” he said. Participating retailers will be included on wayfinding maps that are being distributed.

Bianca Del Rio Comes to Royal Oak

Bianca Del Rio, the alter ego of seasoned comic Roy Haylock and season 6 winner of RuPaul’s Drag Race, is a self-professed “clown in a gown.” This hilariously hateful comic is known for her foul mouth and unapologetic humor, but her victims hardly have time to feel the sting before she zips on to the next topic. Besides, Bianca is quick to point out that she’s the biggest joke of all. The NY Times calls her “The Joan Rivers of the Drag World,” and Joan Rivers herself called Bianca’s humor “So funny! So sharp! Bianca’s first stand-up special, “Rolodex of Hate”, is available on Vimeo OnDemand, and her first feature film, “Hurricane Bianca”, is available on Netflix. Her second stand-up special, “Not Today Satan”, will be available on Vimeo OnDemand December 2017. “Hurricane Bianca 2: From Russia with Hate” will be released in 2018. Bianca is currently touring with her new stand-up comedy show “Blame It On Bianca Del Rio” to sold out audiences all over the world. Tickets are $39.50 for the all ages show at the Royal Oak Music Theatre at 7 p.m. on Feb. 23, 2018.

Author Spreads As Much Love as Possible

BY T. THOMAS ABERNATHY

Scott Stabile is an up-and-coming author based in Michigan where he lives with his partner. A passionate speaker and love advocate, Scott runs daylong empowerment workshops nationally and internationally. BTL recently spoke to him about his new book, titled “Big Love: The Power of Living With a Wide-Open Heart.” Stabile answered some questions about the book, his experiences writing it, and some of his hopes for the future.

If you had to give me a short elevator pitch for “Big Love,” what would it be?

I would say that “Big Love” is a collection of personal essays. Each one is about a moment in my life where I’ve been pulled from my center, and the tools that I’ve used to find my way back.

Let’s build on that a little. What made you decide to put this book together, and get it out there for people to read?

I've had a Facebook page for over five years now, and I've done a lot of writing on that. I tend to write about a lot of the subjects in the book, and share that with a community that's been continually growing. I write about ideas like compassion, kindness, moving through our fears, and being honest with our pain. Writing and posting on Facebook has been wonderful, but it also has limitations. Even when I write longer posts, they're still not as deep as you can go when you're creating a chapter in a book. So, I actually began taking some of these ideas that I wrote about on Facebook and really went deeper into the ideas behind them. I know that not everyone is on Facebook, and not everyone is on social media. I realized that if I wanted this message to reach more people, a book is a natural way to do it.

I know that, towards the beginning of the book, there’s a lot of darkness there, especially when you’re talking about your family. You’ve already told me a little bit about dealing with some of these issues, but did you run into any major challenges when getting this onto the page?

You know, it’s funny. I think the greatest challenge happened after the words were on the page. In the weeks before the book was coming out, I was like, “Oh, man, I just shared a lot of myself, and now everyone’s going to know everything!” So I think the panic about that set in in the weeks before release. As far as the heavier chapters go, when you’re writing about these heavy experiences in your life, it’s hard not to be taken back to them and feel what you were feeling. So a lot of the chapters were very emotional to write, but also really cathartic. Putting emotions onto the page is such a helpful release of energy. It was cathartic and powerful and nerve-wracking, especially when I knew it was coming out, but it was good.

Looking back on the book, now that it’s out, are there any messages that you’d like to share with our LGBTQ readers, especially ones who are struggling?

The truth is, I think the messages would apply to those who aren’t LGBTQ as well, but it certainly applies to those who are. You know, you don’t have to have my exact circumstances in your life to know that we can connect with each other. Because we all know pain, we all know sadness, we all know sorrow. By sharing my experience with these emotions and with these circumstances, my hope is that others will feel less alone in their story, and in their struggle, and in their shame, and whatever else they’re going through. I want people to understand that they are worthy, and they are beautiful, and they don’t have to do a single thing differently to be any more worthy than they already are. The other big message with the book for me is to really invite people to consider choosing love as a guiding force in their life as often as possible, and see what difference that makes in your life. We need to ask ourselves, “What does love invite me to do?” I think that’s the main message: considering love as your guiding force, and seeing how it changes your life.

If people want to follow your work and support the book, what are some resources for them to do that?

Well, the book is available everywhere. It’s available as an e-book, a hardcover in bookstores, there’s even an audiobook with me reading it.

An audiobook?

Yeah! I had to audition to read it actually, which was really funny. I’m glad they chose me.

They: Objects of Separation, Hate and Violence

Now through March 11, 2018, the Arab American National Museum at 13624 Michigan Ave. in Dearborn presents “They: Objects of Separation, Hate and Violence.” The exhibition explores artifacts and images from the early 20th century to present day that reflect and encourage separation, hate and violence. These items, even those sometimes excused as “harmless fun,” foster prejudice and discrimination. Created by the Jim Crow Museum for Racist Memorabilia at Ferris State University and expanded in conjunction with AANM, the exhibition can be explored Wednesdays-Saturdays, 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. and on Sundays, 12-5 p.m. Museum admission is $8 (ages 13 and up), $4 students and educators with ID, seniors age 59 and up, children ages 6-12. Free to museum members and children under 6. Students under age 18 are required to submit a permission slip signed by a parent or guardian. Ann Arbor Summer Festival Announces Mike Michelon as New Executive Director

The Ann Arbor Summer Festival Board of Trustees announced Mike Michelon has been appointed as the new Executive Director effective immediately. Formerly the festival’s General Manager, Michelon has been managing the festival’s business and operations since joining the staff in 2014. He succeeds Amy Nesbitt in leading the 35-year-old organization.

Michelon said, “I am honored to become the next director of the festival, an organization and community celebration that I’ve cared deeply about since first coming to Ann Arbor as a student. The Ann Arbor Summer Festival represents what’s best about our city and I cherish our opportunity to continue to engage the creativity, curiosity, and passion of our community and region through high caliber arts experiences.”

Michelon has been a part of the senior leadership of the festival since 2014. Prior to the festival, Michelon worked in the programming and production departments at the University Musical Society. Additionally, he has extensive experience in freelance Production Management, is active in student leadership development at the university and is a member of the Ann Arbor Rotary Club. Michelon is a graduate of the University of Michigan.

Wendy Lawrence, chair of the board of trustees and search committee remarked, “When we began the search process in June, we were extremely pleased with the caliber of the candidate pool. Mike’s leadership, diverse experience in arts administration and live event production, and his vision for the organization stood out. We are thrilled he has accepted our offer and we look forward to the organization under his leadership.”

Ken Fischer, President Emeritus of UMS, added, “I’ve known and worked with Mike Michelon for nearly a decade. Given his leadership qualities, ability to build teams and empower people, and extensive experience in programming and production, Mike Michelson is exceptionally well prepared to lead the Ann Arbor Summer Festival and to continue and enhance its unique and highly valued place in our community.”

Author Explores Queer Choral Musicking as a Social Practice with a Purpose

Why choruses? Author Julia “Jules” Balén seeks to answer that question in the book “Queerly Joyful Noise,” which examines how choral singing can be both personally transformative and politically impactful.

Balén points to Chorus America, the largest umbrella choral organization in the U.S., which estimates that “42.6 million people in the U.S. sing in more than 270,000 choruses today.”

Her intention with this book, as she writes in the introduction, is “not so much to tell individuals stories, though I certainly do that. Rather, these stories help me sketch a larger picture of queer choral musicking as a social practice with a purpose.”

A proud member of numerous queer choruses, Balén draws from years of firsthand observations, archival research, and extensive interviews to reveal how queer chorus members feel shared vulnerability, collective strength, and even moments of ecstasy when performing.

As they blend their different voices to create something beautiful, LGBTIQ singers stand together and make themselves heard. Comparing queer choral performances to the uses of group singing within the civil rights and labor movements, Balén maps the relationship between different forms of oppression and strategic musical forms of resistance. She also explores the potential this queer communal space creates for mobilizing progressive social action. She does this in three parts: “Finding Our Voices,” “Queer Organizing for Social Change,” and “Communal Erotics and Social Justice.”

A “Queerly Joyful Noise” serves as a testament to the power of music, intimately depicting how participation in a queer chorus is more than a pastime, but a meaningful form of protest through celebration.

The book is available for purchase online http://gaybe.am/kQ} for around $24.

Comparing queer choral performances to the uses of group singing within the civil rights and labor movements, Balén maps the relationship between different forms of oppression and strategic musical forms of resistance. She also explores the potential this queer communal space creates for mobilizing progressive social action. She does this in three parts: “Finding Our Voices,” “Queer Organizing for Social Change,” and “Communal Erotics and Social Justice.”

A “Queerly Joyful Noise” serves as a testament to the power of music, intimately depicting how participation in a queer chorus is more than a pastime, but a meaningful form of protest through celebration.

‘Detroit Concert for a Cure’ Comes to Ferndale

BY BTL STAFF

Cast members of the national touring production of “An American In Paris” (performing at the Detroit Opera House Nov. 28 – Dec. 10) will perform in a special concert to benefit Broadway Cares/Equity Fights AIDS and Ferndale’s Blessings in a Backpack http://www.blessingsinabackpackmi.org/ferndale/ – a “neighbor-helping-neighbor” program that is designed to help bridge the gap of the nutritional needs of children from the Ferndale School District.

“Detroit Concert for a Cure” starts at 7 p.m. on Dec. 4 at The Loving Touch, 22634 Woodward Ave. in Ferndale. Doors open at 6 p.m. for the 18 and over event. Guests attending can support the cause as they enjoy an intimate evening featuring cabaret-style performances by cast members of “An American in Paris,” as they perform some of their favorite songs and familiar Broadway tunes.

“An American in Paris” is the new Tony Award-winning musical about an American soldier, a mysterious French girl, and an indomitable European city, each yearning for a new beginning in the aftermath of war.

The evening, hosted by local drag superstar, Sabin, will also feature live and silent auctions and a cash bar. Admission for the event is $25 in advance or at the door. All funds raised at the event will benefit Broadway Cares/Equity Fights AIDS https://broadwaycares.org/ and Blessings in a Backpack. Tickets for “Detroit Concert for a Cure” are available service fee free at Woodward Avenue Brewers box office located at 22646 Woodward Ave. in Ferndale, or at the door at The Loving Touch on the night of the show. Advance tickets are also available by visiting www.thelovingtouchferndale.com.

Tickets for “An American in Paris” at the Detroit Opera House are available by calling the Fisher Theatre at 313-872-1000 or online at www.broadwayindetroit.com.

Celebrate the Holidays with Perceptions

BY BTL STAFF

Kick off the holiday season with a fun, fabulous evening surrounded by family and friends on Dec. 2 at Apple Mountain Resort, 4519 N. River Road in Freeland. Perceptions is excited to host the organization’s 16th Annual Holiday Gala with attendees who are encouraged to show off their holiday spirit in creative ways – if they so choose – and come prepared to dance the night away to the electrifying sounds of local favorite, Avenue 5.

“In the past, attendance was at its highest when the event was held at Apple Mountain. We’re thrilled to be back and hope the trend continues. The Holiday Gala is a wonderful night out celebrating the Great Lakes Bay Region’s LGBT+ community and allies, as well as the important work Perceptions does in the region,” said Gala chair, Beth Sibray.

Perceptions is a non-profit organization that brings sexual orientation and gender identity and expression (SOGIE) education, advocacy, networking, and resources to individuals and organizations in the Great Lakes Bay Region with the vision of fostering an inclusive and supportive community that inspires engagement, equality and respect for all.

The evening kicks off at 6:30 p.m. with an open bar and hors d’oeuvres. Guests will be invited to partake in a buffet dinner featuring sliced roast beef and herb roasted chicken along with various sides and salads. After dinner, a special guest speaker will take the stage. Stay tuned for a special announcement on our Facebook page later this month. Perceptions’ Harmony Diversity Choir is also scheduled to perform.

Tickets for the Holiday Gala are $50 each and are available for purchase online or through any Perceptions board member or Gala committee member. Visit www.perceptionsmi.org to purchase tickets.

While enjoying cocktails and dinner, guests are invited to browse the silent auction area for unique items and experiences. Raffles for other great prizes will be held throughout the evening. Businesses or individuals interested in donating to the silent auction or raffle are asked to contact the auction chair, Allison Matthew at allisonammatthew@gmail.com.

Visit www.perceptionsmi.org for more information.
