The COVID-19 pandemic has presented challenges that have never been faced before. Where most disasters happen over a small area and enable the sharing of resources and expertise, the 2020 coronavirus crisis has affected almost every part of the world simultaneously. For The Salvation Army, which is at work in 131 countries, with strong links in a number of other nations, a worldwide response has been made possible by having local Salvationists, staff and volunteers available to react quickly to the greatest needs – often funded through generous donors and international contacts. This map gives a sense of the scale of the response but also demonstrates the huge outlay of resources that will have to be replenished over the coming months and years.
