Twenty-one international leaders have steered The Salvation Army through a rapidly-changing landscape over its 155 years of existence. Each has followed the calling to – in the words of their Methodist predecessor Charles Wesley – ‘serve the present age’. Under their leadership, care and vision, The Salvation Army has been transformed from one man preaching in an open-air meeting in the East End of London to a worldwide movement with more than 1.8 million members in 131 countries.
