A Beautiful Day for GA GA, Steal the Bacon

STEAL THE BACON 2022

This year's steal the bacon was both competitive and exciting. Perhaps the campers were still hungry after lunch for they named their teams after food. Maple Bacon vs. The Breadsticks. A slow start gained momentum and saw several collisions. One collision victim was quoted as saying, "I was shaking, but I had to pull through for my team, knowing my number would soon be called". Maple Bacon won the first game and The Breadsticks captured contest #2. In the tie-breaker, The Breadsticks squeaked out a razor thin 2-1 win. When Mr. Kalis was asked about his opinion regarding the match, he said "It was the best year yet". All-in-all Camp Constitution can be proud of all those who participated. The fact that this article is being written by both a participant and a spectator guarantees that you got the whole story. ★ (Picture Page 5)

The Ga Ga tournament bracket of 16 was filled by playing 4 games and advancing the final 4 in each contest into the bracket. Those 16 then played and the top 4 advanced. A game amongst the last 12 yielded the final 4 and the bracket of 8 was set. A contest involving the elite 8 yielded two qualifiers in the final. The remaining six played and yielded the final two contestants. Gus was the last man standing when the last game finished. I THINK THAT MAKES 3 YEARS IN A ROW FOR GUS!!! ★

The Inflation Tax

Government spending is only part of the fiscal crisis that has engulfed the federal government. The other side of the deficit and debt debacle is: How does the government continue to raise revenue? Many Americans assume that government is paid for by taxes, and, in a broad sense, that is true: The only way that the federal government can raise money is via taxation. But those taxes take many forms, going far beyond the complexities of annual and quarterly income tax filings.

Under the U.S. Constitution in its original form, the federal government's powers of taxation were comparatively limited. Article 1, Section 8, clause 1, does grant Congress the power to "collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises" — but also stipulates that all such "shall be uniform throughout the United States." This meant that tax rates needed to be the same everywhere, and among all classes of people, a circumstance that prohibited taxing people of different incomes different amounts. Moreover, under the original Constitution, all "direct" or "capitation" taxes — i.e., any tax imposed directly on individuals (as opposed, to, say, sales taxes or tariffs, which are forms of indirect taxation) — were to be carried out according to a procedure called "apportionment." Similar to the way in which states are allotted representatives, direct federal taxes were to be apportioned according to a state's population. In other words, if a bill for raising a certain amount of revenue was passed, each state was required to contribute the percentage of the total amount equal to that state's percentage of the total population of the country. Because this requirement was often challenging to fulfill, it greatly dampened the enthusiasm of the states for direct federal taxation. It also meant that apportioned direct taxes could not be permanent; they would have to be reauthorized as populations changed.

Prior to the ratification of the U.S. Constitution, Congress had no authority to tax at all. This was hardly surprising, given that the American campaign for independence from England started as a series of tax revolts. Early Americans were deeply wary of the power to tax, and reluctant to grant any such power to the national government, until it became apparent that some means of raising revenue was essential. Insofar as taxes were necessary, the American Founders preferred them to be indirect, since indirect taxes are ultimately voluntary; tariffs and sales taxes are only paid if people choose to purchase the taxed articles. Tariffs in particular fell mostly on the wealthy, who could afford to buy luxury imported goods.

Direct taxes were generally despised for their involuntary and often arbitrary character; hence the Founders' efforts to circumscribe the federal use of them as much as possible.

Once Americans allowed themselves to be persuaded of the need for a permanent, graduated income tax, and the Constitution was amended to permit such a practice (the 16th Amendment), the Pandora's box of essentially unlimited modern forms of taxation was opened up. The odious "progressive" income tax — a core proposal of Karl Marx's communist program — began as a minor exaction imposed only on the very wealthy, but quickly evolved into the oppressive monstrosity that impoverishes modern Americans of every social class.

The 20th century also ushered in heavy corporate taxes, capital gains taxes, estate taxes, and taxes to pay for Social Security and Medicare — all of them direct taxes, and all of which impose massive burdens on Americans, especially the middle class. Of the total pie chart of federal tax receipts, Social Security, Medicare, unemployment insurance, and other retirement taxes account for 36 percent of the total, while federal income taxes account for a whopping 50 percent. (All figures are rounded.) Corporate income taxes, at 7 percent, are another significant piece of the tax pie, while estate taxes amount to about three percent. The remaining five percent of other taxes includes tariffs. Prior to the 16th Amendment, which allowed for essentially unlimited graduated income taxation, the government was almost entirely funded by indirect taxes such as excise taxes or tariffs, which presently make up a small sliver of federal funding. It is shocking to consider just how much the size and cost of the federal government has grown over the last century!

However, besides the forms of taxation that the general public recognizes as such, the federal government has also, over the past century, acquired another tool in its taxation toolkit, a tool that is both subtler and much more dishonest than all other forms of taxes. This tool is inflation.

Inflation is often thought of as the phenomenon of rising prices, and its cause is mysterious to many. Many economists erroneously or disingenuously ascribe inflation to economic "overheating," or to disruptions in supply, or to any number of other numinous causes. And while it is true that an event such as an earthquake, a war, or a hurricane can indeed cause prices to spiral upward, such effects are generally temporary and limited to certain products and specific places. True price inflation refers to the general, unending rise in prices across all goods, which has been a feature of the American economy since the early 20th century — but was not before that time. Since the teens of the 20th century, decade after decade, American consumers have watched prices of goods and services rise, sometimes slowly, sometimes rapidly, but always steadily. Savers have watched the purchasing power of their bank savings erode gradually. And purchasers of bigticket items, such as cars, houses, and college educations, have watched the cost of these goods spiral out of control, especially in recent decades. All of these familiar processes are the byproducts of inflation.

What is inflation, really? It is what happens when governments, with the help of the banking system, create new money and inject it into the money supply. This process is often styled "printing money," but in reality, most new money never makes it to the printing press; it is in effect created by computer entry.

When governments create new money — and, in the modern age

Pastor Whitney: Fighting The Good Fight

In June 2022 our church was censored by YouTube. YouTube removed the first Sunday sermon for the month of June and shut us down for 7 days including the third Sunday of June, giving us a first strike for a so-called violation of their community standards; specifically they claimed we were spreading medical disinformation. Now let's look at the wide angle on all this. Big Tech of which YouTube is an essential part pays no attention to the first amendment, even though it seems that is the basis of their business model; freedom of speech and freedom of the press. Clearly we see here an example of Big Tech coordinating with and carrying water for Big Pharma. The lies about the VAXX cannot be allowed to be published on YouTube.

And all of Big Tech is doing the same, FaceBook, Twitter and others. But why would YouTube do this? The word is out, people know you can't trust them, they will not allow the most important truths to be published. Why would they do this? Doesn't it hurt them in the long run as people turn away from their service? Why do they do this? Because there is another power directing their policies, that power has a different agenda than what you would assume an entity such as YouTube would have.

What has emerged in these past two years is a monolithic union between the nine most powerful spheres of influence world wide. Think of what we have seen across the globe, Big government clearly placed in the hands of the Globalists. That's why the election of 2020 was stolen. Trump wouldn't go along with the Globalists, so he had to go. Did you know that there were only three countries in the world, specifically three Presidents that stood against the conjoined powers of Big Pharma, Big Tech and the Globalists? Burundi, Tanzania and Haiti. Guess what happened to all three Presidents? They were all assassinated. In Haiti the assassination by goons saying they were from the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency. And what replaced those three good Presidents? People who gladly are now doing the bidding of Big Pharma, Big Tech and the Globalists. So all the governments of the world have been placed in the hands of the Globalists. Now there are five other power centers world wide that are also clearly playing to the same agenda, the Media empire as well as the Entertainment empire clearly are on board. So we are now learning that news on any mainstream media cannot be trusted. Even Fox plays games with the truth or will not publish the most important truths we need to know. Hollywood is also clearly on board; all the stars boasting about getting the jab and telling everyone else to do it.

Why do they call what they put on TV programming? Because they are using that box to program humans who voluntarily submit to the programming. They are telling you what to think and even training you how to think. One thing I now praise my father for, was that he never allowed a TV in our house. He said, "It rots your brain. Read a book." Growing up with that rule was hard when all the kids around you were talking about things you knew nothing about. At times I did resent that rule, but today I am grateful to God for the stand my father took. It prevented my mind from being programmed by Hollywood and the media.

Another aspect of their programming is called predictive programming. They want you to respond in a certain way to an event the globalist are planning to pull off. So they make a movie, for example Contagion comes to mind, way back in 2011, where they present a scenario that the wicked globalist were planning to conduct. That movie features international healthcare professionals (World Health Organization), government officials and everyday people who find themselves in the midst of a pandemic as the CDC works to find a cure. The movie is designed to move you emotionally to fear what you see happening on screen, so that when the pandemic is actually conducted 9 years later in 2020, you have already been emotionally preprogrammed how to respond to the Covid narrative, which is the Covid lie. By the way the full title of that movie is 'Nothing spreads like fear, Contagion'. They even had a map of the world like we saw at the beginning of Covid, tracking the spread of this disease. How did they know about this 9 years ahead of time? It's predictive programming, the globalists were planning what was to take place.

Now in addition to the Entertainment empire, clearly we are seeing that Big Business has joined the tyranny. Interesting that at the WEF, an elitist Globalist club, one speaker last month boasted that 90% of the biggest corporations around the world are fully on board with the globalist goals of the WEF. We have seen companies threaten job loss if you won't take the jab. And what about last month, June, they are all celebrating Pride. How is that in anyway contributing to their bottom line? It is not, but it is evidence that they are serving a master who is now in complete control of them as a business.

Now another clear world-wide power is Academia. From the University on down to pre-kindergarten, the globalist agenda is adopted and indoctrinated into the minds of every kid, every teen and every young adult. They are trained to believe all the lies put forth by this entire tyrannical monolith. They conduct all sorts of fake science to back up the lies they instill in the minds of their hapless students. There are exceptions, there are true scientists who are not on the take for research grants from Big Government, but they are few and far between.

The saddest world wide power center to me is the ninth power - Big Religion. The Pope is but one example, he is fully on with the globalist agenda and is working overtime to create a one world religion of which he will be the head.

But how many churches in our land and around the world folded to the de-mands of Big Government, big Pharma, and the Globalists?

In our country it was clearly north of 90%. And even leading lights among Evangelical Christians, such as Franklin Graham were telling people getting the jab is the loving thing to do, it is how you love your neighbor. So Big Religion as well has been weaponized by this same monolithic tyranny.

Big government, The Globalists, The Media, Entertainment, Big Tech, Big Business, Big Pharma, Academia, Big Religion.

These nine are all clearly now coordinated, reading from the same script, putting out the same messaging, reinforcing the same decisions, requirements, mandates, and threats to jobs to anyone world wide that will not comply with this monolithic tyranny. What we are seeing emerging is what is described in Revelation 13.

The Terrifying Beast - Revelation 13:1-4 "And I stood upon the sand of the sea," (commentators speak of the sea representing all of humanity in history, we are told In Revelation 17:15 the sea from which John's beast arises represents nations)

"And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy."

Pastor David Whitney has more to say on the subject. I include only a brief introduction to his 51st sermon in the series entitled, The Book of 1 Peter. In the remainder of the sermon, correlations are drawn between the scriptures and the events of the day as related to the 9 spheres of influence that now dominate our culture. Please contact him at dwhitney@theamericanview.com and he will gladly forward the complete text.

where gold and silver standards have been deemed obsolete, all governments are inflationary — it has the effect of reducing the value of money relative to other goods for which money is exchanged, because there is now more money in circulation in relation to goods and services available. Inflation depends crucially on general ignorance, and if the government were so crass as simply to print bales of money and distribute them freely, money would soon be worthless. Instead, governments use a range of tricky procedures to manipulate the money supply to their advantage, usually involving debt in some way. For example, "open market operations," whereby government issued debt is bought and sold weekly at special auctions by privileged brokers, is the most important way that the U.S. government (technically, the Federal Reserve, America's central bank, in coordination with the Treasury Department) manipulates the money supply. Other methods include raising or lowering the reserve requirements for banks, and raising or lowering the rate of interest at which the Federal Reserve loans money to member banks (the "discount window"). If the Fed sells more government debt, the amount of money injected into the money supply by the banking system to offset the new debt purchased will increase the money supply. If the Fed lowers reserve requirements or lowers the discount window, the demand for debt will rise, causing debt-based assets in the banking system to increase and the money supply to expand. Taking the opposite course for each of these actions ("tightening") will cause the money supply to contract.

While the Fed does both, over time, the net tendency is to expand, not contract, the money supply. This is because "loose" money policies always benefit the wealthy and well-connected. Inflation leads to higher prices for everyone, but it does not affect everyone at the same time. Newly injected money appears first in the large money-center commercial banks and investment firms that serve as privileged dealers for the Fed. Those firms in turn use the new money to purchase stocks, real estate, and other large-scale investments before the effects of the new money ripple through the rest of the economy. Such actions drive up the stock market, the bond market, the real estate market, commodities futures markets, and the like, all of which is enormously beneficial to those already leveraged in such markets. Eventually, of course, the new money finds its way into the rest of the economy, driving up prices at the supermarket and the gas pump. For ordinary Americans, inflation drives up the price of living while driving down the value of savings. It is, in other words, a type of tax — because the money created by inflation benefits the government enormously. It allows government to create new money by issuing debt, at the same time enriching the wealthy and powerful. The inflation tax effectively confiscates wealth from the poor and the middle classes and transfers it to the wealthy and to the government.

It is no accident that the 20th century was the century of Big Government and Big War. From the inception of the Federal Reserve in 1913 onward, the U.S. economy has been inflationary — but by that time, so were all of the major economies of Europe and the rest of the developed world. With inflation at their disposal, governments are much more willing to do unpopular and costly things, such as wage war, because they can appear to pay for them without raising taxes directly.

It should be clear that America's debt crisis is also a tax crisis. Taxes are, after all, merely the price we pay for government. Big Government requires Big Taxation, whether direct, indirect, or inflationary. To dismantle America's Big Government, it will also be necessary to get rid of the corrupt system of taxation that allows it to flourish. That will mean abolishing the income tax and all other forms of progressive direct taxation, getting rid of the Federal Reserve (the central bank that enables our age of inflation) and restoring the gold and silver standards of the past to force a return to monetary restraint. All of these will be necessary steps, if America is truly to win the war on Big Government. ★

Monday's Campfire

Due to rain, campfire was moved indoors. Early morning runners and swimmers demonstrated their prowess by performing a ceremonial lap around the chapel.

The festivities were kicked off with a rendition of Yankee Doodle, The Airforce Anthem, and When Johnnie Comes Marching Home Again. (Hurrah, Hurrah). Next, Marlee Newman juggled while accompanied by brother Gabriel, who played Fur Elise on piano. John Paul Godfrey got into the act with an excellent juggling performance of his own.

Mrs. White lead the group with the Bonnie song and graced us with a fiddle tune.

Avery Olden, Sofia Daniels, Jeremiah Pivot, Jonathan, Gus Kalis, et al performed a skit Joshua V. performed on the violin and Sophie impressed everyone by reciting Psalm 2 from memory.

Rebekah Krutov and Mrs Donna DeSantis sang "How Great Thou Art" accompanied by Mrs. Heath at the piano. The "Bind Us Together" girls sang and slapped while the rest of camp followed along. Franklin Soon blew the trumpet again and brought the evening to a close with Taps.

We shall never forget Patriotic Choir's performance of You're a Grand Old Flag and Oh, Susannah. There sure is an abundance of talent at this year's camp.★

Professor Willie Soon's Lecture "The Weaponization of Science Part I"

Professor Willie Soon's class was very educational and humorous at the same time. He brought in his own memes that people on the left created. I am looking forward to Part II. In the great words of Professor Soon: "I tell the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."
