In 1910, Hap Hampton built this structure which was intended to be used as a boarding house for Fort Casey construction workers. The house was never used for this purpose. A window pane with Hampton's name etched in glass remains in the house. The house was owned by John Gould, and after his death the house was in probate for many years. The house was used as a rental during this time, and finally became the property of Gould's great grandson, John Bruce. He and his wife Cora lived here for 25 years until they sold to Mr. Harts Drucksman (c. 1968), a Seattle jeweler. He, in turn, sold to Crockett Lake Estates, which sold to the Miller's in June of 1983.

1995: One contributing building; two contributing structures; one non-contributing structure.
