- Does the project address a need in at least one of the following areas: education, community life, health and human services, arts and culture or the environment?
- Could the project lead to permanent, enduring improvements in a community or the state?
- Will a diverse group collaborate on the project to achieve common goals?
- Can the program or idea be duplicated in other communities?
- Does the submitting organization clearly demonstrate sound fiscal management and accountability?
- Could the organization attract multiple sources of support for the project?
- Does the project address underserved segments of the population, such as racial or ethnic minorities, the impoverished and underprivileged or communities with fewer opportunities?

Restrictions and Limitations

Unfortunately, we are unable to support every organization and program. The Foundation will not support the following:

- Groups acting on behalf of individuals
- Organizations that discriminate on the basis of race, color, creed, national origin, disability or gender
- Churches or other religious organizations, except when they are conducting secular programs that will have broad public impact
- Projects that affect communities outside of Alabama Power's service territory
- Fraternal, athletic and veterans programs, except in cases where the programs will have a broad public benefit or help disadvantaged individuals
- Organizations already receiving multi-year support from the Foundation. Such organizations are required to wait at least one year after the current funding ends.
- Primary and secondary private schools
- Political organizations, parties or causes.
