About

A skilled and proven litigator, Beth Johnson has more than 15 years' experience representing her clients before federal courts and agencies. With a focus on international trade issues – especially antidumping and countervailing duty investigations, reviews, and appeals – Beth also counsels her clients on U.S. Customs-related issues. She is a staunch advocate for U.S. manufacturing clients and industries, and works hard to help her clients achieve a level playing field in the domestic market.

A strong written and oral advocate, Beth is dedicated to understanding her clients' needs and presenting each client's case in a compelling way. She works well under pressure and effectively advocates for her clients even under extremely short timeframes.

In addition to her international trade work before the U.S. Department of Commerce, the U.S. International Trade Commission, and the U.S. Court of International Trade, Beth has also represented clients in commercial litigation, federal litigation under the Administrative Procedure Act, and in government contracts-related matters.

Beth is a recipient of the prestigious Burton Award. Supported by the Library of Congress, the Burton Award is given to attorneys who have demonstrated achievement in the law and legal writing. Beth has also been recognized by Washington, D.C. Super Lawyers and is an active member of the Association of Women in International Trade (WIIT).

She serves on Kelley Drye's D.C. office's recruiting committee and has served as co-chair of the D.C. chapter of Women At KDW, the firm's affinity group for women attorneys. Beth is valued by both clients and her colleagues for her steadfast work ethic and consistently high-quality work product.
