As part of its diversity and inclusion initiative, Kelley Drye is partnering with Columbia Law School's High School Law Institute (HSLI), providing financial support and other service opportunities to this pipeline program. Now in its eleventh year of operation, the HSLI annually hosts some 120 high school students from New York City area schools each Saturday during the academic year. The Institute offers classes in criminal law and constitutional law along with college readiness activities and other educational development programs, including moot court and mock trial teams.
