About

Kirsten Sechler serves as the chief people officer for Kelley Drye, a law firm with more than 300 attorneys and professionals and eight offices throughout the country. As CPO, she is responsible for developing and executing human resource strategy in support of the firm's business goals and talent management approach. Kirsten helps advance a culture that attracts excellent lawyers and administrative professionals, and she is zealous in enabling lawyers and staff growth opportunities.

Kirsten oversees recruiting, talent development, organizational and performance management, and compensation and benefits. Having served previously as director of legal personnel, she has particular expertise managing lawyer compensation, policy development and promotion, lateral associate and on-campus recruiting, and professional development. Kirsten develops HR strategies that parallel the firm's long- and short-term business objectives and works with senior management to steward the firm towards future goals.

Kirsten is appreciated for her unwavering commitment to the firm and to the development of its people. For more than two decades, Kirsten has worked behind the scenes with Kelley Drye attorneys and staff to advance the firm and achieve success on behalf of clients. She is a trusted confidant, advisor, and coach to individuals across office, function, and level of tenure at the firm. Building on the ingenuity, creativity, and diversity of the firm community, Kirsten strives to foster a culture of continuous learning and relationship-building that makes the firm a good professional home.
