

Law360 Reports on Kelley Drye and Jackson Gilmour's Merger

December 1, 2016

The merger between Kelley Drye and Jackson Gilmour & Dobbs was announced in the Law360 article, "Kelley Drye And Texas Firm Known For Enviro Practice Merge." Recognized as successfully litigating environmental matters, 11 Jackson Gilmour attorneys are joining and will remain in the Houston office. Partner William M. Guerry Jr. will co-chair the environmental law practice group along with Jackson Gilmour co-founder William J. Jackson. Mr. Guerry said, "We have been looking to expand and complement our long-standing environmental regulatory practice in D.C. as well as overlapping litigation practices, and [Jackson Gilmour] were an ideal fit, given their national presence and expertise in environmental litigation dealing with contaminated properties."

Mr. Jackson said of the merger, "I was skeptical at first when conversations started, but when I learned more about the practice and the lawyers, it became obvious this was a terrific opportunity."

The lawyers joining Kelley Drye in Houston include firm founders Mr. Jackson and John D.S. Gilmour, as well as Kenneth O. Corley, and William C. Petit.

To read the full article, please click here. Access may require subscription.