About

Lindsey Roskopf's practice focuses on a wide range of international trade issues. She advises clients on export controls, economic and trade sanctions, antiboycott laws, and customs and import laws.

Lindsey has worked with clients in the oil and gas, hydrographic survey, electronics, medical device, chemicals, aerospace, manufacturing, entertainment and not-for-profit sectors.

She regularly assists clients with identifying export licensing requirements, developing export licensing strategies, reviewing technology transfer controls, determining the export jurisdiction and classification of equipment and technology, and responding to government inquiries. She has extensive experience in advising clients on compliance with U.S. sanctions, particularly with respect to Russia, Venezuela, Iran and Cuba. Lindsey also has considerable experience in conducting internal investigations and making voluntary disclosures to the Department of Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC), the Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industry and Security (BIS), and the Department of State's Directorate of Defense Trade Controls (DDTC).

Lindsey also helps clients navigate the complexity of U.S. customs laws. She regularly advises importers on customs matters including tariff classification, tariff mitigation strategies, country of origin determinations, free trade agreement origin verifications, merchandise valuation, and the application of antidumping and countervailing duties. In addition, she assists clients with responses to U.S. Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) inquiries, seizure notices, and penalty notices, and she advises importers on filing prior disclosures.

Lindsey routinely helps companies with proactive compliance matters, such as developing or enhancing compliance policies and procedures, conducting risk assessments, and providing training.

Prior to attending law school, Lindsey worked in the audit group at a national accounting firm and earned her license as a Certified Public Accountant.
