About

An experienced litigator and trial lawyer, Matt Kennison represents clients in high-stakes litigations and investigations, with a focus on antitrust, white collar investigations, and complex commercial litigation. Matt's clients—which include global automotive suppliers, technology companies, higher education institutions, construction firms, and energy providers—routinely call upon him to handle complicated and difficult investigations and litigations across the country.

In addition to Matt's commercial litigation and white collar practice, Matt also serves as a trusted adviser on behalf of clients across various industries, including health care, finance, education, and automotive, and assists clients in assessing and structuring internal compliance programs. Matt regularly assists clients in responding to DOJ, SEC, state Attorney General, and other regulators' inquiries, and his collaborative and creative approach generates opportunities for clients to effectively address the government's interest. Matt has also partnered with colleges and universities to act as the external investigator in highly sensitive Title IX investigations.

Prior to joining the legal profession, Matt served as a detective for the Long Beach Police Department, where he conducted criminal investigations into various felony crimes. The experiences Matt gained while working as a police detective, combined with his legal training and experience, make Matt a uniquely effective and elite investigator and litigator.
