

Settling Contribution Claims Without Jeopardizing Your Insurance Coverage

Mark L. Austrian

September 1, 2009

The article examined the impact of the decision in the environmental coverage case, Riggins, Inc. v. Hartford Ins. Co., in which the insurance carriers tentatively denied coverage and sought to derail a third-party settlement. The article provided practical advice for policyholders seeking to enforce their rights against insurers who refuse to consent to a proposed settlement. The article also discussed the purpose and application of a “consent to settle” and subrogation provisions.