Partner Kristi Wolff co-authored the Nutritional Outlook article “Suing over Empty Space: Why Lawsuits over Slack Fill in Packaging Are Growing.” The article discusses the rise in lawsuits regarding slack fill, or the difference between the capacity of a container and the volume of the product inside. Kristi notes that there has been a recent flurry of litigation alleging that non-functional slack-fill deceives consumers about the true contents of packaged goods. They go on to outline the federal slack-fill rule and cover recent litigation examples, while suggesting that companies should not overlook the form of the packaging as a source of litigation risk.
