

The Month in FCC Enforcement: October 2016

October 27, 2016

With the Presidential election approaching, the Enforcement Bureau seems intent on doubling down on its legacy of aggressive, principle-based enforcement. This installment of Steve Augustino's FCC Enforcement series features the FCC's $48 million settlement with T-Mobile over data throttling allegations involving its mobile internet services. He also examines another unusual "admonishment" and other enforcement items from September and October. To listen to this podcast episode, please click here.