

Webinar: The TCPA Thicket: Making Sense of the FCC's Latest Ruling

July 13, 2015

On June 18, the FCC approved a major TCPA Declaratory Ruling that redefines what equipment falls within the definition of an “autodialer,” specifies liability for calls to reassigned telephone numbers, provides consumers with a right to revoke consent by any reasonable means, and establishes new exceptions for financial and healthcare related calls, among other changes. With the order’s release on Friday, July 10, industry participants can finally begin to evaluate the implications of the FCC’s rulings on their ability to text or call customers and potential customers. Please join us for a webinar to discuss the FCC’s Declaratory Ruling and Order on Friday, July 17 at 12 PM ET. Kelley Drye’s TCPA Practice and Government Affairs attorneys will discuss the rulings, the prospects for appeals, and potential legislative responses to the FCC action.
