Globetrotters to take the court in Columbus

COLUMBUS, Ohio - The Harlem Globetrotters are taking their talents to the Schottenstein Center in Columbus, Ohio on December 30 at 1 p.m and 6 p.m.

This basketball team, filled with amazing superstars, will be performing ball handling sorcery, basketball brilliance and family entertainment that will inspire fans of every age.

Tickets for this event range from $22 to $127. Also, a Magic Pass can be purchased which will get families on the court prior to game time for activities, pictures, autographs, and more. The Globetrotters will be around after the game as well to give out autographs, photographs and high fives.

The Harlem Globetrotter’s social media manager, Brian Penter stated, “My favorite part about being involved with the Globetrotters is seeing the joy we bring people at every show. The smiles on the kids and parents’ faces never gets old. Our team has long been known as 'Ambassadors of Goodwill' and we take great pride in using basketball to bring people together.”

Josh Romans, a fan of the Globetrotters states, “The Globetrotters are so fun to watch. They do some crazy tricks that a lot of NBA players can’t even do. They are a very talented group of athletes.”

The Globetrotters aspire to make a difference in the lives of people, as they continue to get involved in communities worldwide.

Penter claims that, “Our goals as an organization are to spread smiles, service and sportsmanship around the world through the game of basketball. We’ve been doing this for 92 years and hope to be doing it for many more.”
