Hier wo meine Brüder,
Hier, wo Christi Glieder, nach erkaempften Siegen
als ein Senfkorn liegen;
hier bei Jesu Schafen
wunsch ich auszuschlafen.

"Ich weiss, dass mein Erlöser lebt, une Er wird mich
hernach aus der Erde auferwecken."

Blume Gottes, warum brach
Dich so frueh des Gaertners Hand?
Er brach Dich nicht - Er pflanzte Dich
nur in ein bess'res Land.
Ruhe sanft in dieser Gruft, bis Dich Jesus wieder ruft!

THE HOEPNEN FAMILY

Forward:

Our family, as well as every other, has its history, whether recorded or not. We have searched for information through correspondence and personal interviews. If there are any errors, we shall appreciate your corrections, for they are unintentional, and we ask for forgiveness.

The Hoeppner Family reminds us of the rich heritage we have in our forefathers. Faith in Jesus Christ as Saviour has found an important place in the lives of our forebears. Although their search for new homes was not impelled by any missionary purpose or motivated by any desire to seek converts, the fact was and is that our forefathers were motivated by a search for a homeland where they could secure for themselves and their posterity, the opportunity of a decent livelihood in agriculture and other pursuits, and a place where they could enjoy complete freedom of religion without the slightest intent of interfering with the beliefs of others.

The historical literature has failed to evaluate their work properly and to give our forebears the recognition of outstanding merit they so richly deserve. This history or heritage forms the background of our present family, and has made us, to a marked degree, what we are today. It is now our sacred trust to hand down our heritage, both spiritual and otherwise, to our descendants, who have the perfect right to expect of us the same which we expected and received from our forefathers.

We owe it to each other today to take simple steps to get to know each other better, to preserve the record, and to further brotherly love and understanding.

The family record to begin with, was intended by the writer to be for his immediate family only. When this became known, interest spread and requests were made to include all of grandfather's family. This involved the writing of many letters. It was agreed to put on record the first three generations. Each family will keep its own record from there on, if no cooperative plan is made for future compilation.

Rec'd from P. Paetkau, Sperling, Man.
To perpetuate the story of this interesting genealogy of these early pioneers and to preserve facts and personal memoirs which unite the present to the past were the purposes of the writer.

Most of the information has been received from members of the older generation of the family, by listening to their interesting stories they had to tell concerning their pioneer days, showing among other things the jolly spirit that prevailed among them. Also there were letters from older relatives in Canada and in various parts of the U.S., the National Archives in Washington, and stories told by grandparents, parents and visitors.

To all I say a hearty thankyou for your interest and faithful assistance in gaining the necessary information in preparing this book.

The first Mennonite congregation on record was organized at Zuerich, Switzerland, at 1525. Here they were called "Taeufer" or Anabaptists (Re-baptizers). They did not consent to the union of baptism; hence came the name Anabaptists. As early as 1534 Anabaptist congregations were organized by Obbe Philips. Menno Simons was educated and trained for the priesthood in the Roman Catholic Church and served for many years. The beheading of an Anabaptist led him to further study. He consulted his R.C. pastor, Martin Luther, and several others, and found they did not agree. When some Anabaptists came to the vicinity and had gained a considerable following, he came to the conclusion that his church was wrong, and that only the believers' baptism had Scriptural authority. He was baptized by Obbe Philips in 1536 and became an Anabaptist minister. He was considered an outlaw under condemnation of death. He fled to the Netherlands where he became a missionary of the cause. He became an outstanding leader of the Anabaptists in the Netherlands and Germany, and organized more Anabaptist congregations. Thus his followers gave his name to the movement.

When the Duke of Alva was governor of the Netherlands, he boasted that during his reign of six years, he had put to death 13,600 persons (of whom 15,000 were Anabaptists). Some were burned alive, some strangled, some drowned in Rivers and lakes. Others were hanged by their thumbs, and some had their tongues burned to keep them from praying. Hundreds of them of all ages refused to redeem their lives by recanting, and went to the place of execution with joy and singing Psalms.

In those days of persecution, some of our forefathers fled to Moravia where the Protestants were not disturbed. Others went to Poland (later Prussia) where the Polish king granted liberty to settle there. As early as 1525, rumors were heard in Germany and Netherlands of religious liberty in Prussia. These rumors attracted many as early as 1530 from the Netherlands and other areas to the Danzig region. Many of these were Frisian Mennonites.

Some of the Prussian noblemen, heard of the work of the Mennonites in reclaiming swamp lands and building of dykes in Holland, invited them to settle on the lowlands of their estates on the Vistula River. These noblemen leased their estates to the Mennonites for a long period of time until finally the land became the property of the Mennonites.

Religious toleration was not a settled policy, but the Mennonites were granted this among other privileges. They were, however, often hindered in the exercise of their religion and denied some citizens' rights.

Again and again, citizens became jealous of, and complained about the Mennonites. They demanded their expulsion and even the confiscation of their property. Fanatical clergy joined them in their demands. But noblemen and their Polish kings as a rule confirmed and kept the promise made to the first settlers. This extended through several centuries.

When W. Prussia fell into the hands of Frederick the Great, the Mennonites were well pleased because Frederick had already shown himself friendly towards the Mennonites by promising them: Freedom from military service, freedom of religion and to erect their own church buildings, right to establish their own schools, and to enter any line of industry that was open to others, right to substitute an affirmation for an oath, and right to own their own cemeteries and bury their own dead. Militarism, however, soon caused the Mennonites grave concern, and the privileges granted to them did not last long, especially when on June 20, 1774, an order was issued compelling the Mennonites to pay annually, in lieu of military service, the sum of $3,500.00 for the support of the military academy at Culm.

After the death of Frederick, the new king Frederick William II, issued an edict to the effect that the Mennonites owning land property were forced to support the churches, schools and parish homes of the state. Then, too, no more Mennonites were to be permitted to buy homes in Prussia.

It was evident that both state and church were determined to stop the further growth of the Mennonites. "Ampered by heavy taxes, unable to secure new homes for their growing young people, and fearful of the future, they began to look for a new home.

The excellent reputation of the Mennonites as farmers and businessmen, and their high skills in various crafts were known to many prominent Russian officials, military and civilians, since the Seven Year War, when Russian troops occupied for varying periods of time the areas in Danzig and the Vistula Valley.

However, the main source of information about the Mennonites and their chief promoter and organizer of the Mennonite Migration to New Russia (S. Russia) was a certain George Trappe. Baron Stahl, high-ranking officer, and the Grand Duchess Maria Feodorovna, wife of Paul, the heir to the throne, were both particularly well disposed toward the Mennonites. They both recommended George Trappe to the viceroy Potemkin, as a man well qualified to assist him in recruitment of foreign colonists.

In his letter to Potemkin, George Trappe claimed to have spent some 23 years in or near the Danzig area. "He knew the Mennonites well, could speak their language (Plattdeutsch), knew all about their fame in farming and various other enterprises, and of the current threats to their well-being because of the issuance in Danzig of a number of new restrictions against the acquisitions of even the smallest piece of property, house or land. Later in letters from 1788 to 1792, he claimed acquaintanceship with Mennonites in other countries, including England.

After some preliminary correspondence with Potemkin, Trappe was chosen chief promoter, recruiter and organizer of the Mennonite migration to South Russia.
Hoeppner

How Trappe made the acquaintance with Jacob Hoeppner is not known. He himself suggested Jacob Hoeppner, (*Jan.3,1748) to the Mennonites as candidate to dispatch a delegation to spy out the land in the Ukraine, as well as act as negotiator with the Russian government about the terms of actual immigration. He also appointed a second delegate, Johann Bartsch, to serve as secretary.

These two delegates made an inspection trip to South Russia to decide upon a tract of land for Mennonite Settlement in 1786-1788, with all expenses paid.

They selected a tract of land around Breslov, not far from Kherson, for which they received high praise for having demonstrated real statesmanship.

After considering several possibilities, including America, they finally decided to accept the invitation of Czarina Catharina II. of Russia. The invitation was extended through her personal representative, George Van Trappe. She offered religious freedom, to establish their own churches and schools, and form local form of government; however, religious propaganda among the Russians was forbidden; pay entire cost of transportation to S. Russia; tax exemption for 10 years and exemption from military service. Loans of $250.00 and support to each family until the first harvest; 175 acres of land for each family; loans to be used to start factories and industries; and free use of crown forest land.

Reasons for offering these liberal terms to the immigrants were, she wanted to settle the area bordering the Azov wrested from Turkey, and that these well-kept fields and farms serve as example for the shiftless and roaming tribes in the area.

In a few years following this invitation, over 6000 persons left their old homes in Prussia and settled on the fertile steppes of southern Russia on the Dnieper and Molotschna River.

It has been estimated that about 6000 Mennonites located in the Molotschna and another 2000 in other regions during the period from 1788 to the immigration of Mennonites to America.

The deputies now requested and the Danzig officers agreed to issue passports to these disadvantaged people, and the first Mennonite immigration to Russia got underway in March 1788.
Hoeppner

According to an official report, Jacob Hoeppner departed on March 23, 1788, with a group of 47, and Johann Bartsch with a company of twenty on Nov. 12, 1788. 228 Mennonite families made up of 1073 persons departed from 1788 to the middle of 1789. This trek of journey in a caravan consisted of numerous vehicles and horses, many probably walking all the way. Those people not having their own means of transportation, and the heavier belongings of some other colonists, were moved by teamsters or on barges supplied by the government.

They travelled from Danzig to Riga in Latvia, and from there southward to Dubrovna in Latvia, straight east from Danzig, where they stayed for five months during the winter, in temperatures similar to those of Minnesota. In general they received good care. It was a distance of about 300 miles on water from Danzig to Riga, and 900 miles by land. For about 75% of the way they followed the Dnieper River. "All these people were poor; babies were born on the trip. There were children, adults and old people. What an undertaking! What courage and determination! It must have been an almost unbearable adventure southward through limitless steppes, brown and desolate under the mid-summer sun.

The trek lasted from Easter 1788 until the middle of summer 1789, about one year and three months. Here the first important difficulties arose and disappointments with Russian promises took place.

First, according to the 1787 agreement, payments in equal installments were to be made during the four months after the arrival in Riga. They should then have been made during the months of January to April 1789 for the 228 families. This did not materialize. The first advances took place in Chortitza October to December 1789. What should have been received in five months, took eight years to receive in full.

Second, in accordance with an agreement made by the immigrants prior to their advance from Danzig, Hoeppner and several other men were to leave before the other colonists and to proceed to Bereslav to receive the promised building timbers and to make various preparations for the arrival of the others. Hoeppner and his party left Dubrovna in March. When they arrived at the headquarters,
Hoeppner

Potemkin told them of his changed plan in respect to the place of settlement - from Breslov to Chortitza. At first glance the land appeared to be barren, treeless steppe and its soils were considered inferior to those of Breslov, as was its geographic location.

Third, the 228 settlers' families were to find 27,360 boards awaiting them on arrival - 287 were missing.

Fourth, when the barges with the baggage arrived, the owners found that many of the boxes had been looted of their contents and filled with stones; what was left, was badly damaged.

The disappointments of the settlers soon gave way to bitterness. It is no wonder that many settlers gave unrestrained expression to their distrust of the deputies, and experienced complete loss of confidence in the promises made by the government.

Curses and the fiercest accusations were soon heaped upon Hoeppner and Bartsch by these settlers who believed their leaders had deceived them and had sold the goods to Potemkin.

The deputies protestations that they were in no way responsible for these infernal delays made little impression upon the discontented colonists. The special favours of the government had accorded Hoeppner and Bartsch did not help matters.

Trappe ceased his recruiting activity and Potemkin became deeply involved in military affairs. Thus Hoeppner was called on more frequently to execute the orders from the higher headquarters.

The generally incompetent staff of religious leaders complicated matters because these men could not, or would not, understand the need for the separation of church and secular affairs. Their weakness contributed to some of the serious disorders in the colonies which led to the tragic decision of 1797-1798, culminating in the expulsion of both Hoeppner and Bartsch from church membership, with its consequences.

The government, making several inspections of their colonies, heard the charges against Hoeppner and several other Mennonites. Various suggested reforms were made by Ivan Brigontsy, new director of New Russian Colonies, for their settlement and relief measures which they finally received.
Hoeppner

Reports spoke very favorable for the Mennonites and their economy as a whole. However, their numerous memoranda, notes, etc., presented a very messy picture of the wrangling at Chortitza.

I shall mention only three of the most important of these controversies involving the Mennonite charges against Hoeppner and his brother Peter Hoeppner. These two had been the chief members of the committee receiving the lumber at Chortitza.

1) A group of Mennonites charged that these two had wrongly appropriated 287 bds., which were intended for construction of their homes.

2) The charges against Jacob Hoeppner, pressed in particular by the clergy and the mayors of the colonies, was that during the eight years prior to 1798, he had continuously created trouble and disorder which caused harm and disturbance.

3) His years of service had been characterized by "cunning behaviour and naked self-interest". Moreover, his brother Peter had always supported him in his misdeeds. Jacob Hoeppner was also accused of misuse of government funds.

In all the welter of material found in the Leningrad archives records in the area of controversy, there is not a single document which spells out Hoeppner's misdeeds or alleged acts of misbehaviour; nor have any records of Hoeppner's actual trial been discovered. This available material does not show any definite thoroughness with which either Brigontsy or Herrn HO. Rath Contenius looked into M. charges against the Hoeppners. What is disturbing is that both officials for two years, 1798-1799, i.e., before the trial of the Hoeppners, repeatedly used the expression, "as already found completely guilty". Yet the punishment to be imposed upon them and accepted by the court, failed to list their misdeeds specifically or to discuss them.

The eventual judgement of the court was that the two brothers were to be imprisoned, and they were required to reimburse the government for general expenses and the loans granted to Jacob Hoeppner in the amount of 1845 Rubles and 35 Kopeks. To satisfy the claims of the government in December 1788 Hoeppner sold all his livestock and 1801 all his other property. The collection of Peter Hoeppner's debts were more complicated, because he owned less livestock and a house of poorer quality.

The Hoeppners did not stay long in prison. Both refused to recant their "sins" or to admit having committed any "crimes". Both also refused to apologize and to beg for re-admission to the church.

As a result of the messy state of affairs in most of the colonies, including non-Mennonite colonies, there was utter chaos in the entire colonial system of government in 1801. The Ekspeditsia in 1801 revamped the whole machinery of government. On the occasion of the new emperor's coronation, Alexander I, in April 1801, a general amnesty was proclaimed. This of course included the Hoeppners. But at the request of Mennonite authorities, they were not permitted to return to their former homes.

Jacob Hoeppner and his wife and small children found a private home where he for several years operated a cheese factory. Eventually he was admitted as a member in the Frisian Mennonite Church in the colony of Chortitza, where he soon succeeded again in building up one of the finest farms in the entire settlement.

Bartsch did not share the fate of his colleague. Although also expelled from the church, he immediately bagged forgiveness for "wrong" actions. This was accepted, and he was restored to membership in the church. Later, however, he suffered the humiliation of being ordered to destroy several musical instruments possessed by the family. The guardians of the purity of the faith declared the owning and the playing of musical instruments dangerous flirting with evil.

And so Chortitza, despite years of great difficulties and bitter conflict, and dire predictions, did come through its trials and tribulations, and did expand over a period of years and eventually became one of the most prosperous of all foreign colonies in Russia.

In 1890, a century after the first Mennonite settlers came to Russia, the Mennonites erected a monument, a beautiful seven foot obelisk of grey granite, in honour of each of the deputies, Jacob Hoeppner and Johann Bartsch, and publicly acknowledged that they had been treated unjustly by their contemporaries.
Hoeppner

Historical and family fwayneology which is interesting to know and gives insight into the past, reveals that the deputy Jacob Hoeppner of Prussia, who led the Mennonites to South Russia, and for whom the one obelisk was erected, is our forefather.

The name Hoeppner occurs only a few times in the period before the emigration of 1788-1789 from Prussia to Russia. There seemed to be only three Hoeppners in the special Mennonite census in W. Prussia in 1766. These three came to settle in Russia.

Jacob rose on horseback from Holland to Prussia. He and Anton Hoeppner settled in the village of "Insel Chortitza", and Peter Hoeppner in the Village of Chortitza, which was not on the island.

Jacob Hoeppner was born Jan. 3, 1748 in Hakenduder, and his wife Sara nee Dyck was born Nov. 17, 1753 in Neustadtterlerwald. They had at least 4 children (record shows 9 children): Helena, born 1775, in Bohnsack, Maria * 1789 on the trip to Russia, and Elisabeth and Jacob were born on the island Chortitza in the 1790ties. They lived in Bohnsack about seven miles east of Danzig at the time of the migration to Russia. They settled on the island Chortitza in 1789.

Anton Hoeppner came from Kleinmasdorferweide, where he was born about 1760. His wife Catharina was born around 1760. They had at least five children, and settled also on the "Insel Chortitza in 1789.

Peter Hoeppner came from Einlage (Weichsel) and settled in the village of Chortitza in 1789. Peter Hoeppner was born about 1752 and his wife Anna around 1740. They had at least five children.

Elder David Epp was one of the men who secured the written Privilegium from St. Petersburg in 1798-1800, giving Mennonites Freedom from military service.

In 1870 the Russian government withdrew the promise to give the Mennonites this freedom. As a result thousands made up their minds that they would look for a new place to which they could migrate. After some investigation, they chose the U.S. as their future home.
Hoeppner

Apparently our family hailed from the Chortitza colony and the village of Bergthal, S., Russia. Excerpts from the list of passengers of the ship "Vaderland", which left from Antwerp, Belgium, transporting the Hoeppner family to America, shows that they arrived in Philadelphia on July 28, 1876. There 601 passengers on this list of which 538 were Mennonites.

The following members of the Grandfather Dietrich Hoeppner family were on the ship:

The following members of the family were not on the ship:

Mary - ∞ Johann Stoesz (who was in the milling business and came a year later)

Margaret - ∞ Abram Harder (owner and operator of a large general store)

Cornelius - it is said he was too much in love with his big draft-horse and farm business to leave; he also anticipated a settlement of the Mennonite-Russain concern

Jacob ∞ - had left for Canada a year earlier with his father-in-law Hiebert.

Upon arrival, Grandfather and family proceeded straightway to Minnesota, "atonwan Country, where they arrived on July 28, 1876. Here they homesteaded a 1/4 section of land in Adrian township -Sec.28- where he established his home. His neighbours south and west were several Irish Catholic families, such as Tom and Mark McDonoughs, Roods, Regans and O'Connors. Swedes were north and west of him.
Hoeppner

The first buildings constructed on the farm were a granary and a cabin by the former homesteader, who left the farm. Grandfather paid homesteader $100.00 for the buildings which he used for temporary housing.

Using the Russian style of architecture, they placed house, barn, stable and shop all under one roof. Many settlers did the same when they came here. But grandfather found the American style more convenient and practical. According to reports, the first building he constructed was a comparatively large barn away from the cabin which presumably became the leanto of the two-story house. Grandfather Hoeppner died there in 1882, before he had the place improved. Grandmother and family continued to complete the homestead requirements in 1883, and they continued to make it their home. The land is still owned by members of the family.

About the Author

Born Oct. 6, 1886, I was brought up on a farm north of Butterfield, Minnesota, the third of a family of seven. Sometime after the death of my wife, I thought it might prove interesting to the present and future generations to bring back the long forgotten early history of their experience in Russia.

Now a resident of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, since my graduation from the German Preparatory School, Mankato Teachers' College, and the University of Minnesota, and with additional training on a higher level in Supervision and Administration in Education, I have a full life of forty-two years of teaching and administration in public schools. I also was first president of the Senior Citizens Centre of Mountain Lake; and Justice of the Peace for many years.

Doch ich kannte die Gefahr noch nicht und die li tigen Anlaufe des Feindes, der umhergeht wie ein bruellender Loewe und sucht welchen er verschlinge 1.Petr.5.8. „ahre gingen dariuber hin. Ich feuerte zwar ein Gebetsleben aber die erste Liebe und der Friede mit Gott waren doch sehr verschwunden, Aber der Gott aller Gnade weckte sein armes, tiefgefallenes Kind. Es ging mir wohl eingerissen so wie dem Koenig David im 32. Psalm: ”Denn
deine "and war Tag und Nacht schwer auf mir, dass mein Saft vertrocknete, wie es im Sommer duerre wird." O es waren furchtbare Busskämpfe in dem Galuben, ich hatte die Suende wider den Heili-gen Geist begangen. O, nur der kanns recht verstehen, der Aehn-liches erfahren muss. Der grosse Gott, voller Barmherzigkeit und Erbarmen, liess aber das Licht seiner Liebe ins arme kranke Herz scheinen nach seinem Wort: "Dem Gerechten muss das Licht immer wieder aufgehen, und Freude dem frommen Herzen" Psal, 97,11.
Das glaube ich war eine wichtige Vorschule auf mein späteres Predigtamt, zu dem ich schon hier in Manitoba durch die Predigerwahl der Bergthaler Gemeinde anno 1887 den 17. Maerz in meinem
36. Lebensjahr berufen wurde und zum Aeltesten dieser Gemeinde anno 1903 und ordiniert Ostern den dritten Feiertag in meinem
53. Lebensjahr.

Und was soll ich noch weiter sagen von meiner armen Wenigkeit?
Ich stehe noch da, als ein Wunder der erbarmenden Gnade unseres grossen Gottes, der sein armes fehlervolles Kind in Geduld und Liebe getragen hat, in Christo Jesu, bis zu dieser Stunde. Und was ich in den dunkelsten Stunden meines Lebens gelernt habe bis hierher, ist die Vollgeltigkeit des Blutes Jesu meines Heilandes.
Indem er eingegangen ist um zu erscheinen vor dem angesehene Gottes fuer uns und hat eine ewige Erloesung erfunden. Heb.9,12.

Zum Schluss moechte ich noch alle Geschwister auf die Worte des Apostels Petrus verweisen: "Seid nuechtern und wachet; denn euer Widersacher, der Teufel, gehet umher wie ein bruellender Loewe und sucht welchen er verschlinge. Dem widerstehet fest im Glauben, und wisset, das eben dieselben Leiden ueber eure Bruder in der Welt gehen."

Nun zum Schluss mit Brudergruss und den Worten des Apostels Petrus 1. Petr. 5,8-11.
