

Dr. Hauke Egermann

Dr. Hauke Egermann directs the York Music Psychology Group at the Department of Music at the University of York.

After graduating the Hannover University of Music and Drama in Systematic Musicology, Media and Communication Science, Dr. Hauke Egermann moved to Berlin to receive his PhD in Philosophy, writing his thesis with the title: "Investigating Social Effects on Emotional Experience in Music Listening Using Physiological and Web-based Psychological Methods". Afterwards he started working at the Institute of Music Physiology and Musicians' Medicine in Hannover, followed by several positions as a researcher and lecturer, amongst others in Montreal, London and Berlin. In 2016 he became Assistant Professor and Director of York Music Psychology Group (YMPG) at the University of York in the UK. His research and teaching focus on various aspects of Music Psychology and Systematic Musicology by studying the production, mediation, and reception of music and sound with empirical research methods.