"Revelations" had its debut Jan. 31, 1960, at the 92nd St Y, after which it became the signature choreographic piece for Alvin Alley American Dance Theater, and the most performed work of contemporary modern dance in the world. Alley II, AAAADT's junior company, will perform it at Celebrate Brooklyn! on Aug. 6.

Company member Solomon Dumas, 22 years old, had seen "Revelations," mostly on video, "in the hundreds of times" before performing it with Alley II. "I used to watch it religiously," he said.

Mr. Dumas first saw the piece live at 12 through a free Alley outreach program. "To be quite honest, I had never been exposed to dance, and I wasn't interested," he said. "My mother insisted I go."

His first impression? "I was amazed, I was just blown away."

He estimates he has performed "Revelations" more than 50 times. "I never get tired of doing it," he said. "It's beyond the steps; it speaks to humanity."

In 2008, a Barbie doll was fashioned from the likeness of artistic director Judith Jamison's performance in "Revelations." When asked whether the world was ready for a corresponding Ken doll, Mr. Dumas wasn't so sure. "Men and dance, certain people still can't wrap their heads around it," he said. "But I don't think it would be a bad idea."

Saturday's show in Prospect Park is free, and in addition to "Revelations," Mr. Dumas will perform a solo, "Doscongo," by the choreographer Robert Moses. "Hopefully someone will be blown away," he said.
