EXILE

Life Sentence: A person who has previously been convicted of two or more serious offenses not committed in the same occasion shall be sentenced to life imprisonment and shall not be eligible for suspension of sentence, probation, pardon or release from confinement on any basis.

EXILE is a thought-provoking artist's representation of the socio-economic impact of mass incarceration in the United States. The installation is a visual commentary on the state of penal systems and their consequences on society, and the long-term effects on individuals and communities.

The installation features several elements, including a central pillar symbolizing the core issue of mass incarceration, surrounded by smaller installations that represent different aspects of the problem. The central pillar is surmounted by a series of staircases leading to a platform, possibly symbolizing the rise of the prison population and the socioeconomic impact of incarceration.

The installation aims to raise awareness about the exorbitant cost of incarceration, the collateral damage, and the spiritual and emotional toll on families and communities affected by mass incarceration.

EXILE is a call to action, urging the public and policymakers to consider alternative approaches to justice and rehabilitation, focusing on reducing the prison population and addressing the root causes of incarceration.
