Moyra Davey has made a new work for Bergen Kunsthall's billboard space, on the back of the building. It is based on a photograph she took in the actual ‘Hemlock Forest’, just outside of New York City. The same image has also been used for a new print edition, made especially for Bergen Kunsthall and available to purchase in the bookshop.

“Hemlock Forest” is the first exhibition in Scandinavia by the New York-based, Canadian artist Moyra Davey. The exhibition takes its title from Davey’s most recent film, co-commissioned by Bergen Kunsthall and La Biennale de Montréal, and presented here for the first time.

Much of Davey’s work centers on the everyday of her own life — as an artist and filmmaker, as well as a writer and a reader. Initially known for her work in photography — which she has been making over the last three decades – in recent years Davey has developed a series of essayistic film works, layering intimate personal narratives onto highly engaged explorations of particular authors, artists and texts.

The new film, Hemlock Forest, can be considered a sequel to Davey’s highly acclaimed earlier film, Les Goddesses (2011) (also included in the exhibition), revisiting and developing a number of the themes and narratives she introduced in that work, some five years later. The two films literally bookend the exhibition, between which Davey presents new and existing photographic works. These include black and white prints made during the late 1970s and early 1980s, depicting her family, as well as a number of compositions of unframed, folded photographs — an important component of Davey’s practice that she began in 2009. These ‘mailer’ works are printed, taped, stapled and addressed to the artist, before being sent through the postal system to friends or colleagues, before being displayed in the gallery with the marks of their journey still clearly visible.

In a new series of ‘mailers’, Davey has used photographs taken during a research visit to Bergen in 2015 to produce a number of new compositions featuring images of forests and trees, some of which have been heavily reworked in digital post-production. The theme of the forest runs throughout the exhibition in a way that Davey herself has described in a recent interview as a twofold entry point to the new film: “I was preoccupied by the idea of truth and the highly subjective nature of my narrations. I liked the title Hemlock Forest because it suggested two things, the forest as a beautiful refuge, but also hemlock as a poison. In the film there’s a lot about opiates and alcoholism, poisons that we humans gravitate toward.”

In a large wall-montage, Davey’s images of trees are combined with, and partly overlapped by, a selection of framed black and white photographs, including portraits she made of her sisters from the late 1970s – which movingly echo two photographs by her son Barney, showing his friend Eric smoking in Davey’s apartment — and a group of works depicting smoke trails, by Davey’s partner, artist Jason Simon. Mary, Marie (2011) refers to Mary Wollstonecraft, the 18th century writer, advocate of women’s rights, and mother of the author Mary Shelley. Davey’s continued interest in Wollstonecraft is a driving force in both of the films shown in the exhibition. In Mary, Marie the images are close-ups of words, found within the book Letters Written During a Short Residence in Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, published in 1796, which contains a series of letters Mary Wollstonecraft wrote to her beloved Gilbert Imlay. They include descriptions of what she encountered on that trip around Scandinavia, tinged with an undercurrent of melancholy and sadness over their imminent break-up and her own failed suicide attempt.

Gallery 2 is occupied in its entirety by the series Subway Writers (2011/2014), presented as a continuous line throughout the room, and continuing into Gallery 1. Picking up on the ‘Code’ in Les Goddesses and one of the key moments in Hemlock Forest – where Davey recreates a scene from Chantal Akerman’s film News from Home (1977), shot by Babette Mangolte on the NYC subway – Davey’s Subway Writers sur-reptitiously captures ordinary commuters engaged in the act of writing whilst travelling on the New York subway; each lost in their own private thoughts in that most public of places.

GALLERY 3

In this room Davey shows two more ‘grid-compositions’ consisting of photographs of the Wollstonecraft letters, as well as from Mary Shelley’s diaries. In these works, the close up images of words on the page are each juxtaposed by a contrasting dipthyph: In the new work, Mary, A Fiction (2016), there are two pictures of trees, one of which is a detail from a 19th century painting on display at Bergen Kunsthall’s neighboring art museum KODE, and the other taken on Floyen, a popular hiking area on one of Bergen’s surrounding mountains. In We are Young and We Are Friends of Time (2012), Davey has included two photographs taken in her twenties while she was still living in Canada.

This room also includes portraits of the Davey sisters, made in 1979 before she left Montreal, as well as a new triptych, 3 Women (2016). The central image is a fragment of writing in Mary Wollstonecraft’s hand, a passage from her book A Vindication of the Rights of Woman (1792). It is flanked by an image of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark painted by her son Barney, showing his friend Eric smoking in Davey’s apartment, and a sequel to Davey’s highly acclaimed earlier film, Les Goddesses (2011) (also included in the exhibition), revisiting and developing a number of the themes and narratives she introduced in that work, some five years later. Les Goddesses (2011) is in many ways the prequel to Hemlock Forest. The film collapses together the lives and personalities of Davey and her five sisters, with those of the daughters of Mary Wollstonecraft. Davey’s film shows the artist pacing her New York apartment, reading aloud from notes she has written, then recorded on to tape, and which she plays back into her ear through an audio prompt. It’s a remarkably intimate, at times awkward device, wherein the slight but profound gap between the act of listening and then of speaking generates a sense of both distance and proximity, intimacy and occlusion. Set in the domestic spaces of her home but encompassing relationships and connections that span continents and centuries, the film flickers between various states of interior and exterior, inside and outside, the demands of life, and the life of the mind. As Awek Sen writes in a new essay on her work, both Hemlock Forest and Les Goddesses “seem to move restlessly between two unresolved anxieties … between risking what is too easy and risking what is too difficult.”
