"There Will Come a Day"

(Denver, CO) June 8, 2015 – Indie-folk singer-songwriter Amberly Chalberg is pleased to announce her upcoming debut EP, titled There Will Come a Day, to be released on Tuesday, September 22, 2015. Pre-orders for the EP will be available on Tuesday, September 8 on iTunes and other digital outlets, along with a free download of the single "The Forest Song (Love Letters)."

Recorded at Swingfingers Studios in Ft. Collins, CO, There Will Come a Day was engineered and mixed by Aaron Youngberg, a 2014 International Bluegrass Music Association (IBMA) Momentum Award nominee. The record features performances by some of Colorado's most notable musicians, including vocalist Andy Palmer (Grub Street Writer), guitarist Dave Preston (Matt Morris) and pedal steel by John Macy (Casey James Prestwood & the Burning Angels).

While billed as Chalberg's debut, There Will Come a Day represents a return to music for the emerging songwriter, who grew up playing piano and singing, but put it away for a time after high school. After marrying and moving to Denver, she again felt the tug to return to music. Her husband bought her a Gibson L-200 guitar and she began writing songs, and has moved forward ever since. Inspired by family, childhood, heartbreak and memories of home, the six songs on the EP draw from both timeless and current influences, displaying a musical range and lyrical depth that more seasoned artists sometimes fail to achieve. From the dreamy folk of "Float Away" to the old-school country of "Big Blue Truck" to the emotional, rock-tinged "Superhero," fans of icons as diverse as Bonnie Raitt, Willie Nelson and Brandi Carlile will find plenty to love about Amberly Chalberg's music.

Further announcements regarding preview singles and EP release shows are forthcoming. Amberly Chalberg is available to the media for interviews, and can be reached via the contact information below.
