After the city-wide Erika scare, our partly cloudy week is running on the smoother side of life. And now that we're entering a new month, we have to start taking our inspirations up a notch. When we look at the cultural metamorphosis that is our city's current climate, we're inspired by the individuals who dedicate their lives to turning visions into reality. But what about those talented minds who have to work with a medium, like music, which can't be seen? That takes on an entirely new level of respect, one that Zach Larmer earns in every right.

He's a Jazz wunderkind, a musical director at Live! Modern School of Music, and the man behind the nightly bookings at Lagniappe. A Frost School of Music graduate, and a well-traveled soul, Larmer injects an encyclopedia-like knowledge into his sonic creations — a calculative technique that smacks you square in the face and wakes you up out of whatever trance you had fallen into. Swaying from influences in French Gypsy Jazz, Soul, and Bluegrass, the specific Jazz cocktail he serves is the epitome of a good time.

Check out his newest creations with the Zach Larmer Electric Band and get in the mood with our Tuesday Tunes:
