

Love's Rebels (Revolution)

© Kate Callahan 2017

I try to break the rules
I won't stand back and let privilege win while others lose

People are easy to ignore
We can choose that comfort
Or we can be more

And love asks this question of us
How are you made?
And do you have the stuff to trust
When rules break?

You can love the ones who don't fit in
You can end a war and let life begin
In the name of a revolution

You can build a bridge and make food
You can feed the ones who are scared of you
In time for a revolution.

And the impossible
Becomes the thing we want the most
As love's rebels

It's time we knew that life was made
To take impossibility and disobey

And love asks this question of us
How are you made?
And do you have the stuff to trust
When rules break?

You can mend a war with practice
Revolt against rules that strengthen it
In time for a revolution

'Cause the might love and the mighty sing and the mighty triumph by listening for signs of a revolution.

And when it all turns peaceful
And the rules of fear seem trivial
It's here, revolution.
