

Another Angel

Calman Hart & Joe Hart

At the side of her bed I sit in this chair
Holding her hand and stroking her hair
As she barely breathes I ask you to tell
Does heaven really need another angel?

It strangles the heart of a mortal man
That he has to give up when he's done all he can
It's out of my hands, I know it so well
But does heaven really need another angel?

Does it help when I beg and plead
Or am I just wasting my time
If it's just another soul you need
Can't you please take mine

The rest of my world is dark and unkind
So I hold on while her light still shines
With so much to burn in the fires of hell
Does heaven really need another angel?
