

Prairie-raised, Canadian roots artist Angela Saini is all about second chances and empowering others. With two European and five Canadian tours under her belt, Angela is a 2017 Toronto Independent Music Award Winner and BBC Radio has called her “massively talented.”

Angela goes back to her roots with new album “Hope on the Stereo.” Her early influences like the folk stylings and power of storyteller Ani DiFranco, meet the country influence of being born and raised in the prairies with first love Dolly Parton. Sprinkle in 10 years of playing in her high school rock band and growing up loving grunge music, and you get angelic vocals with a little stomp.

With a recent showcase during Eurosonic in The Netherlands and festival dates coming up this summer, Angela is poised to live by example. Empowerment and uncertainty can coexist; the road may be untraveled, but you’ll never know if you don’t take a chance.

“Radiates positivity.” Infectious Magazine

“Catchy hooks and memorable melodies.” The Daily Country
