

LONG BIO 2020

Sophia Clark is an enthusiastic young creator living in Guelph, Ontario. Her 2020 album, Minimalist, is a gorgeous 8-track collection to captivate you with resonant harmonies and stories to soundtrack your inner life. Apricot Eyelids is the lead single from Minimalist, followed by If This Is It (Cottage Song). Sophia's music is a deeply thoughtful exploration of how to move through a complicated world with a tender, sometimes aching, heart.

When handed a guitar at age 12, after years of conservatory piano training, Sophia began to create songs prolifically. As a teen she was a staple playing her originals at open mics, talent shows, local music events, and coffee houses around her hometown of Barrie, Ontario. Now in her twenties, Sophia's song-writing has matured with her, making for gorgeous music that echoes in your head week's after listening to it. You're likely to catch yourself humming her songs while looking out the window of a train imagining your life is a movie montage (we all do that!), or while snuggled by a wood stove with a warm mug in hand. Her lyrics offer careful observations of the everyday as though they could shatter if she were to choose the wrong word. Sophia's voice is clear and kind and simple in its delivery, with her choral background made obvious in the harmony arrangements on many of her recorded songs. Count yourself lucky to hear her played on local radio stations, with her songs transfiguring your usual drive home into something worthy of leaving on the engine for after you park just so that you can finish listening through to the final note.

Sophia is eager to perform more widely, and is currently writing her next album with hopes for a release in late 2021.
