

The Weavils are a band of great friends, and excellent musicians, who have been playing throughout the Northwest for almost 20 years. The Weavils play music that is fun to listen to, has great energy, and gets folks dancing! Throw in a lot of humor and good times on stage, and it makes it easy to see why this group has been a popular mainstay of festivals, pubs, weddings, and events for many years. The guys play their music because they love it, and enjoy sharing with their audiences.

The Weavils describe their music as “Americana” ranging from rapid fire bluegrass tunes, to the music of old-time string bands hailing from Appalachia; from the country twang of Jimmie Rodgers to a Cajun tune or two, and back again to the folk traditions of John Prine and Tom Waits. And they write some of their own music.

Let’s start the introductions with our newest, youngest and arguably best looking (there are five other opinions on that topic) member, Chris Davidson. His mandolin is a huge addition to the group, his vocals are spot on, perfect for traditional bluegrass music and he has written a number of outstanding songs. After his first full year with us, we made him a black belt Weavil! Mark Myers is a bluegrass legend, starting his music career in the Bay area, now firmly entrenched in the Seattle area. His dobro is amazing, his harmonica brings audiences to their feet, he also plays a mean guitar, and multiple types of steel guitars. Mark loves singing the kinda song that is a little rough and maybe a little rowdy. Dave Grout’s rich baritone is the kind of voice most would give up a significant body part to have, think Tennessee Ernie Ford kind of voice. He also plays the glass washboard adding percussion to the group. Greg Lawless is both the MC for the group and enjoys doing leads on his 5 string banjo, and a little ukulele now and again. Pun intended. Finally Pete Thorn’s guitar, and Mike Karbowski’s bass lay down the foundation for every song the Weavils play.
