

YELLOW PAPER PLANES

"Columbus, Ohio's Yellow Paper Planes are indie but not cutesy. They can be heavy but not aggro. Power pop for punks who like country. Folk music for folks who kind of hate folk music." – Ghetto Blaster Magazine

Current Release > first full length, "Building A Building" > March 2017

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING:

"Where the ohio four-piece give themselves a defining edge is in the juxtaposition between their powerful, uplifting highs and intimate, introspective lows...taking the listener on a journey that keeps them on their toes" – Hidden Herd

"The quartet's sound... explores shadier byways, taking unexpected sonic detours rather than hewing to the traditional verse-chorus-verse format. The best of these, a winding, seven-plus minute epic built around the idea of escape ("The more I come down/The more I want to get high"), swung between weary passages and more urgent moments, reaching its peak when the music nearly dropped out altogether and James bellowed "I'm still in this alone" like a man in desperate need of human connection" – Sensory Overload

"Combined with the orchestration of prominent guitar riffs and clever tune changes...Yellow Paper Planes serenades us with sobering lyricism that sparks powerful emotion. Their music flows so well and at times escalates to create an explosive sound that comes almost completely out of nowhere...It's the power the band has on stage that makes them so admirable." – The Indie Sound

"Something so mesmerizing I don't yet have a name for it" – Ear Candy Magazine
