JMPA STRUGGLES WITH MANUALLY RETYPING PDF BANK STATEMENTS

Being an accounting company that offers a plethora of accounting services, JMPA regularly deals with a vast number of documents. The documents mostly include PDF bank statements that need to be further edited and manipulated. JMPA CEO, Cassie Muller, explains: “Almost all our documents are PDF bank statements that need to be imported to our accounting software. Before we can do that, we have to edit them in Excel, which is where we had our first obstacle.”

Cassie and his team first spent hundreds and hundreds of hours manually retyping every row and column into Excel.

“We manually typed the whole document from a printed version into Microsoft Excel,” Cassie says. “The main challenge we had was the time it consumed doing this manually.”

As the business grew, so did the need for efficient document management. So the JMPA team decided it was time to kick things into higher gear and try to find ways of accurately converting PDF into Excel.

“We’ve been receiving bank statements from one client for seven months that were not in Excel format, but in PDF. It would have taken our office at least three weeks to manually process this data into our accounting software.”

Determined to cut down on the time and cost of processing the bank statements, Cassie and his team started looking for a solution to their problem.

We downloaded the demo and converted the bank statements from PDF to Excel format without any hassle.”

After witnessing the accuracy of Able2Extract’s PDF to Excel conversion, the JMPA team realized how much time the software would save them on the back end.

“We purchased Able2Extract and converted the whole seven months of bank statements within a few minutes,” he continues. “This saved us at least 120 hours on one task.”

By introducing a powerful desktop PDF converter, such as Able2Extract, Cassie and the rest of the JMPA team were ready to reap the instantaneous benefits of automated PDF conversion.
