more economical and natural conditions. They should be organised into one or more Co-operative societies which should collect the milk in bulk under hygienic control and transport it to the city under ideal conditions. The Societies would be able to engage competent staff and purchase all the modern implements, plants and modes of transport. The Co-operative ~~Sansk~~ Society could further help the Gowdas with loans at low rate of interest, afford them facilities to buy good food at cheap rates, improve the breed of cattle, take care of the dry cattle and supervise over the sanitation of the stables.

Private companies with large capital could also take up the city milk trade, buying milk from the indigenous producers.

6. Educational measures:- The public must be educated through lectures, demonstrations, exhibitions and the press regarding the danger to health of an impure milk supply and the precautions to be taken in handling milk. It is only when they demand and insist on whole-some milk will the supply of pure ^{milk} be forth coming. A great educational campaign must also be undertaken to overcome the ignorance and prejudice of the milkmen and to teach them the modern methods of economic and sanitary milk production.

7. Legislative Control:- The municipalities, Local Boards and Sanitary committees should exert more in this direction and efficient control on the production and distribution of milk should be exercised. Bye-laws regulating the location and the sanitary requirements for the housing of milch cattle, systematic examination of milk supply with a view to checking adulteration etc. should be rigidly put into force.

The organisation of suitable agencies, e.g., Co-operative Societies, private companies with capital for the collection, distribution of milk, and cheap transport of
