Notes:

“Such ceremonialism as Andrew had been taught touched no conscience, affected no heart and left the deep need of the soul unsupplied. But here was a fearless preacher tearing to tatters the priestly marks. He was preaching the necessity of repentance with electric thrill to the religious leaders to whom holiness was an abstract term—resolvable into outward acts rather than a practical principle of conduct. Formalists and hypocrites were rebuked as John the Baptist preached his severely searching doctrine, and told of One far greater than himself who was soon to come. Young Andrew, as a seeker after truth, was aroused.”

—Herbert Lockyer

“Andrew waited for the Messiah not vaguely or superstitiously but actively in living faith and was anxious to be found prepared to enter His service at His appearance.”
