Based on the Spectacular Movie!

★★★★★ Spice is not cinnamon!

A Kid's Review on June 7, 2005

Format: DVD

Since people seem to be complaining that the movie is ridiculous because wars are being fought over "cinnamon", I will try to explain why the spice is so important:

-Spice prolongs life. That would be enough to make it worth warring over, but there's more, far, far more.

-10,000 years prior, machines wrestled universal power from the humans. After a Great Revolt-- the Butlerian Jihad, named for the family that was the driving force of the revolution--, computers were banned across the Empire. To replace them, human computers called Mentats came into existence.

-Some Mentats, after consuming vast amounts of spice, transformed into those "talking vaginas", Navigators. Only they could hold in their mind the patterns of space between a starship and its destination. Without Navigators' mind power, starships would be useless.

-Through a melange (oops! pun, read the book) similar to spice called the Water of Life, obtained in the same way, some females were able to obtain potent mental abilities. They formed an Order, the Bene Gesserit, and they were the Reverend Mothers. Their abilities include Truthsaying, the perfect lie detector, and the Voice, which forces all who hear to obey. Later, new Reverend Mothers recieved the Other Memory, the memeory of Reverends before them. Supposedly, someone will eventually be able to consume the Water of Life and recieve a sort of half-omniscience, where they can go into occasional trances and see the past, present, and future as one. The Reverend Mothers in the movie wonder if the hero, Paul Maud'Dib, could be this "someone".

-Spice is addictive! The Navigators, the Reverend Mothers, the Dukes and Barons and Counts, they would all die without it. Even the Emperor Corrino, who loves nothing better than the prospect of cheating death, would be killed if the spice no longer flowed.

Now, if cinnamon prolonged life, allowed for interstellar travel and psychic powers, were addictive, and could only be found on some distant planet, we probably would fight over it a bit. The movie didn't do much to convey how important the spice is, but I hope now everyone will stop complaining about the cinnamon. Now we can all appreciate it as a complex and amazing book and a darn good movie.

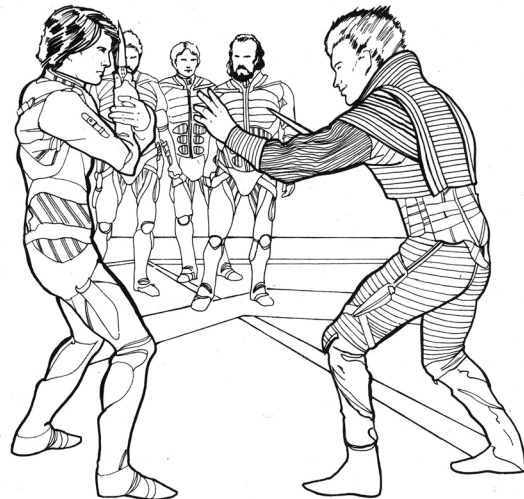

After Paul orders the Emperor to the prison planet Selusa Secundus, there's peace on the planet Arrakis.

Paul finally outsmarts Feyd.

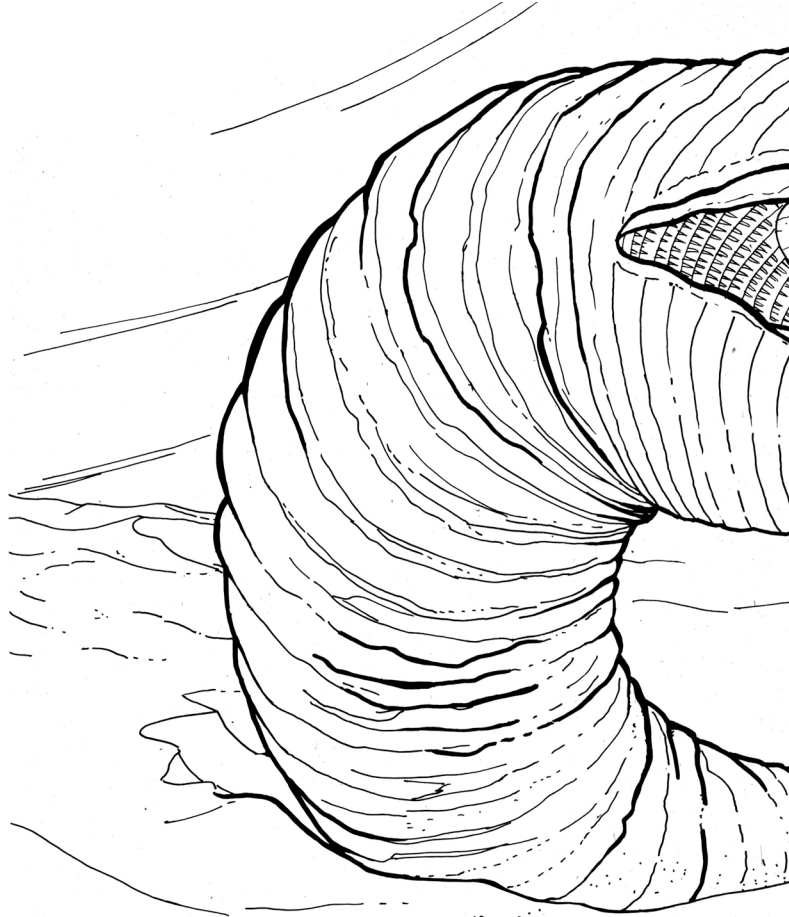

The battle is on. Soon the enemy will be destroyed.

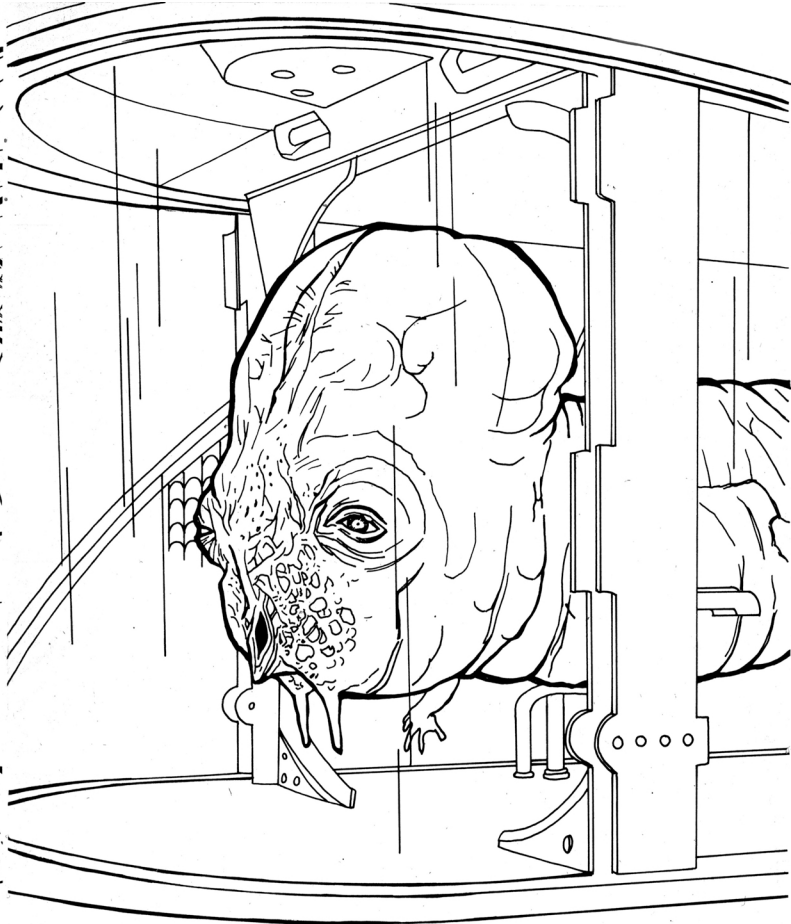

Meet the Atrides family, Duke Leto, Paul and Lady Jessica.

The Guildsmen bring the Third-Stage Navigator to the Emperor's palace.

Paul must soon learn to ride a sandworm.

The Third-Stage Navigator says, "Blend the extinction of Paul Atreides into your recipe and you will come with a meal to our liking."

This is Castle Caladan, the home of the Atrides family.

This is Alia, Paul's sister.

Dr. Yueh takes care of Paul's health. But unknown to Paul and his family, Dr. Yueh is a Harkonnen spy!

Jessica takes the Water of Life, water greater than water, water that frees the soul.

Paul teaches the Fremen how to prepare for battle with fighter robots.

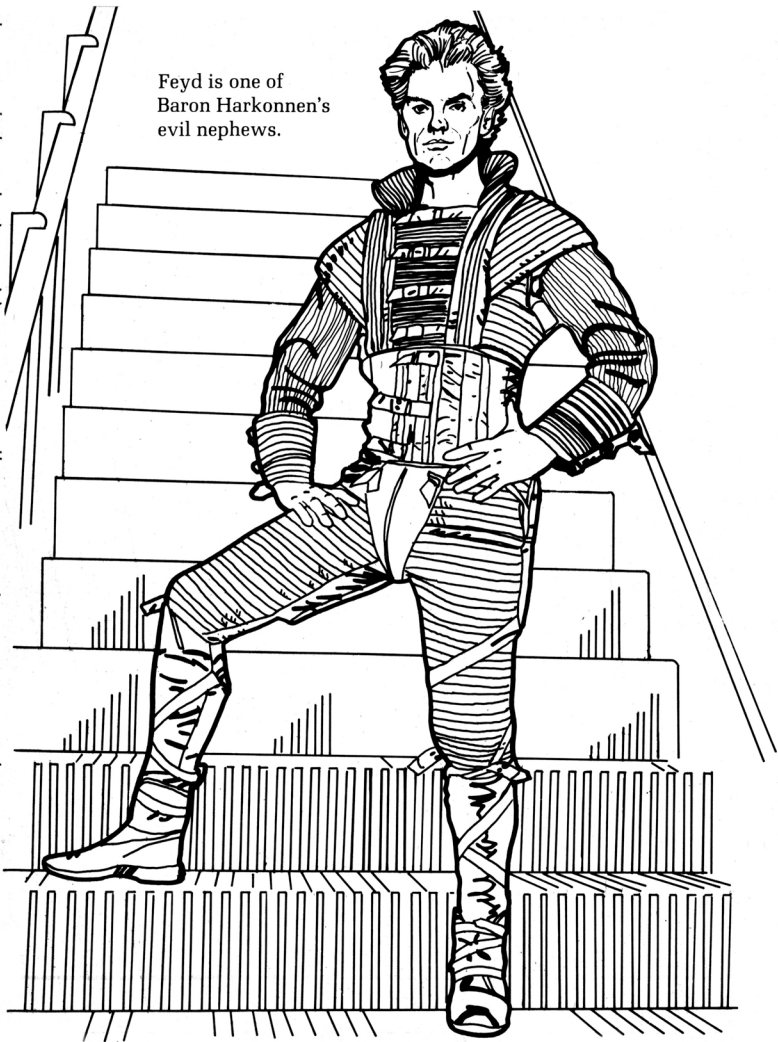

Paul is a good student. He is studying a filmbook about the planet Arrakis, also known as Dune.

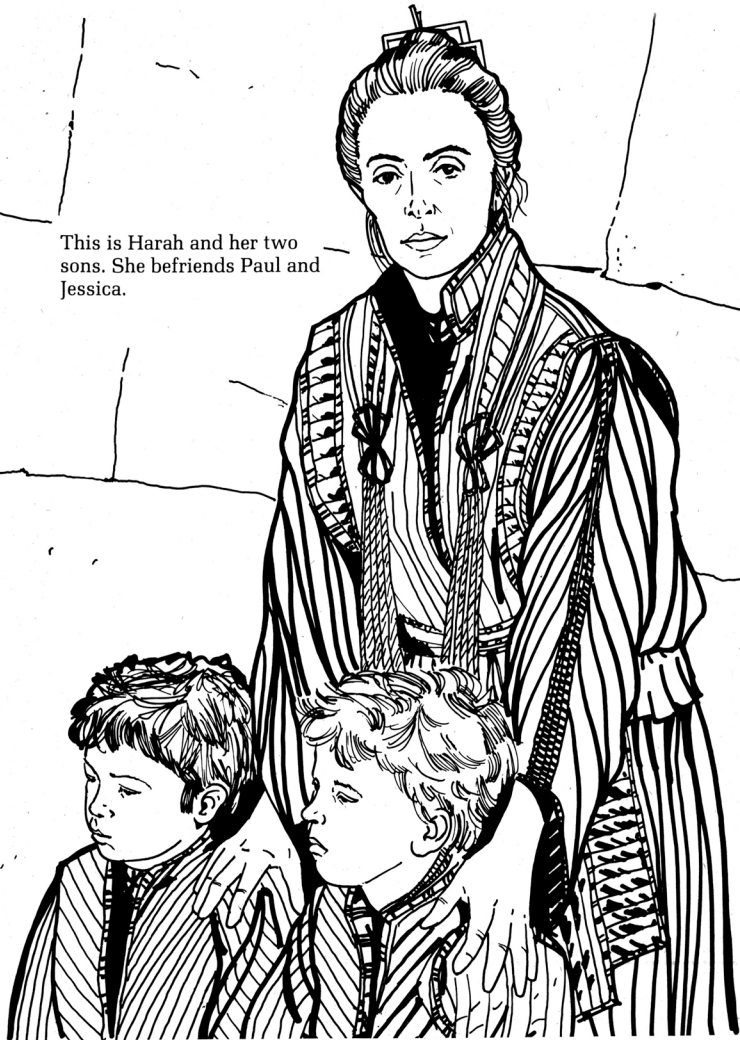

"We must go to the planet Arrakis and replace the evil Harkonnens," says Thufir, a trained human computer.

Feyd is one of Baron Harkonnen's evil nephews.

This is Harah and her two sons. She befriends Paul and Jessica.

"Guard yourself for true," says Gurney, Paul's self-defense teacher.

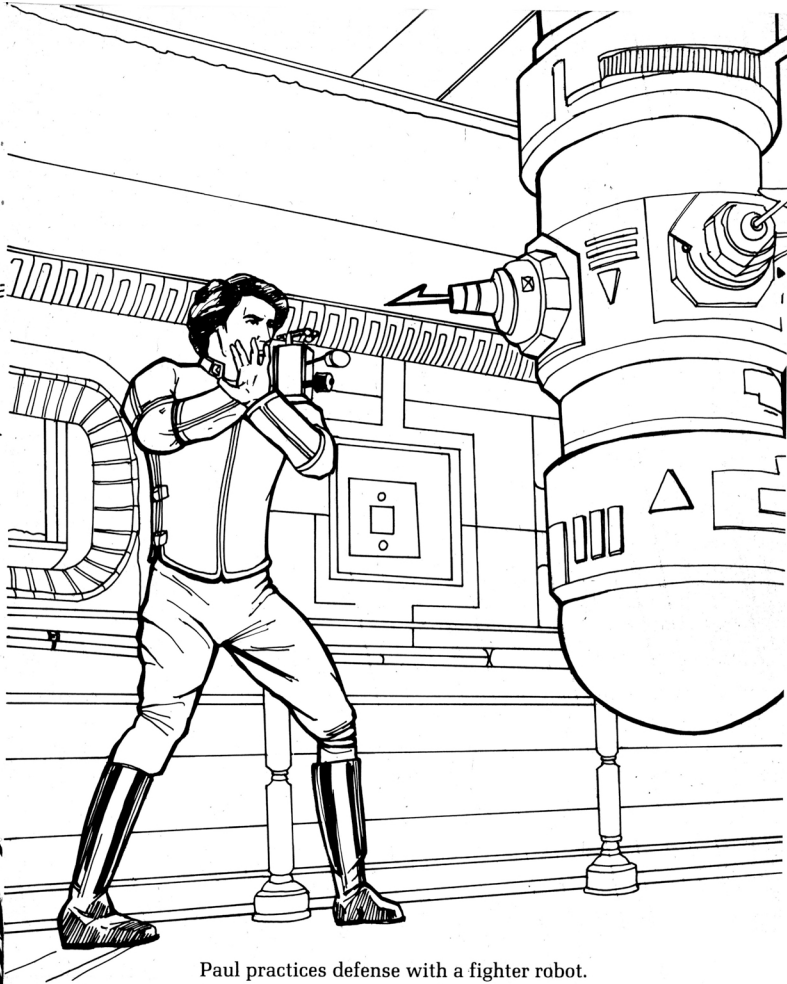

"It will be good to get to our new home, Arrakis," says Duke Leto to his son, Paul.

This is Stilgar, the leader of the Fremen.

Paul meets Chani.

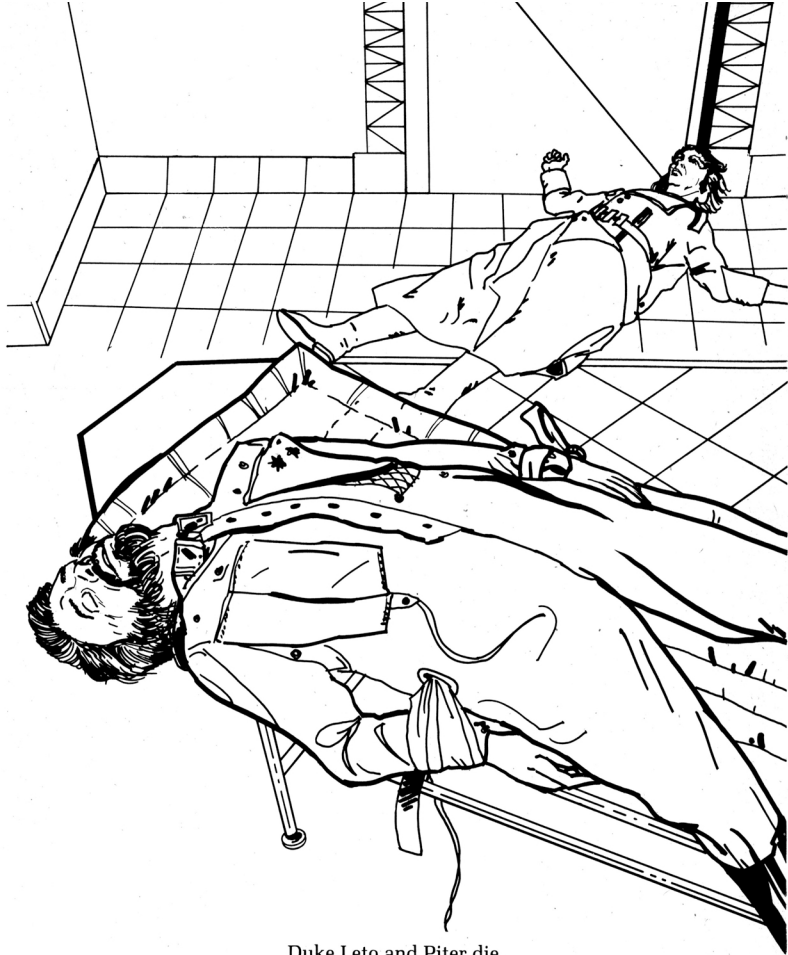

Paul practices defense with a fighter robot.

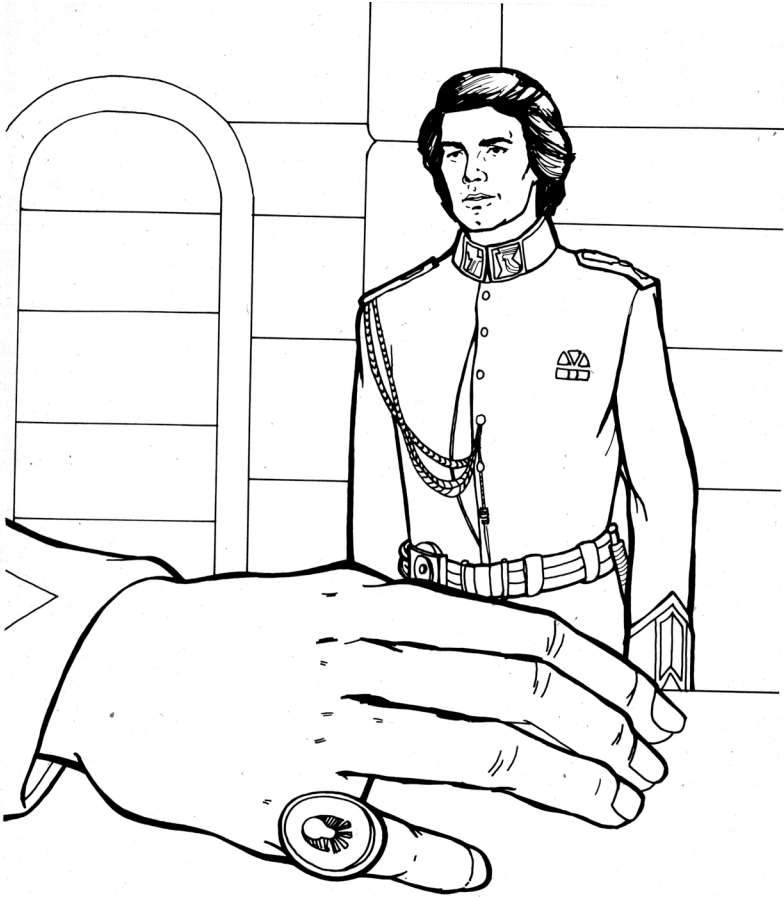

While Paul sleeps, the Reverend Mother asks Jessica, "Did you really think you could give birth to the Kwisatz Haderach?"

Duncan Idaho fights valiantly, but he falls at the hands of an enemy soldier.

Duke Leto and Piter die.

This is the Duke's special signet ring.

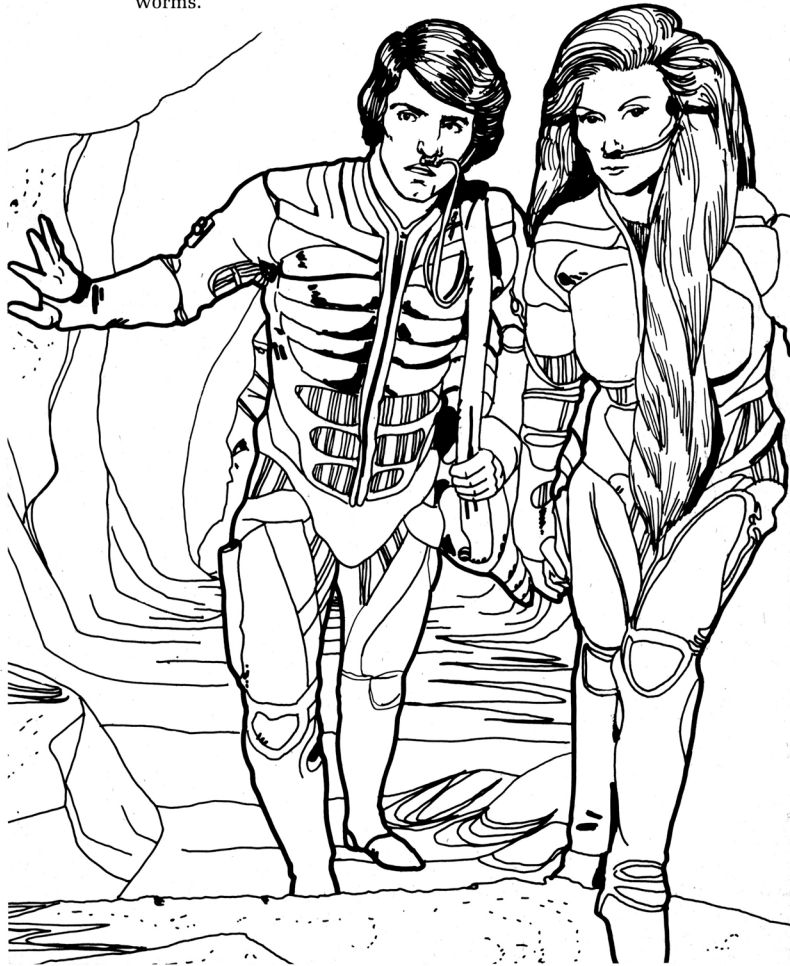

The evil Baron Harkonnen says, "I'll have Arrakis back for myself. The Duke must die."

Paul and Jessica are captured!

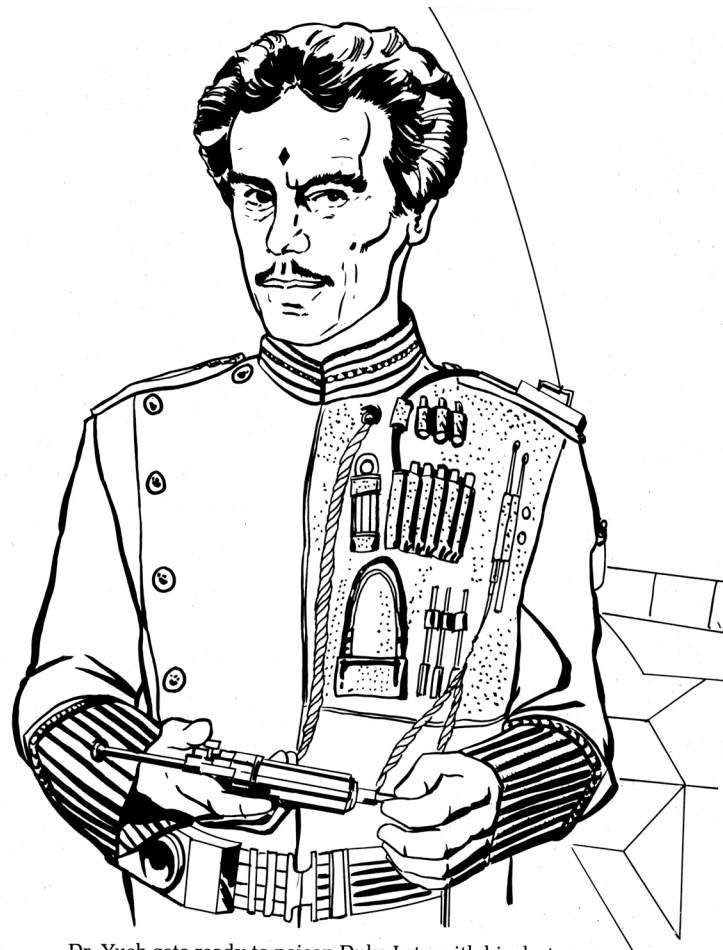

Paul and Jessica escape to the desert, only to be attacked by worms.

"You must take the pain test to determine whether you are powerful enough to overcome fear itself," says the Reverend Mother.

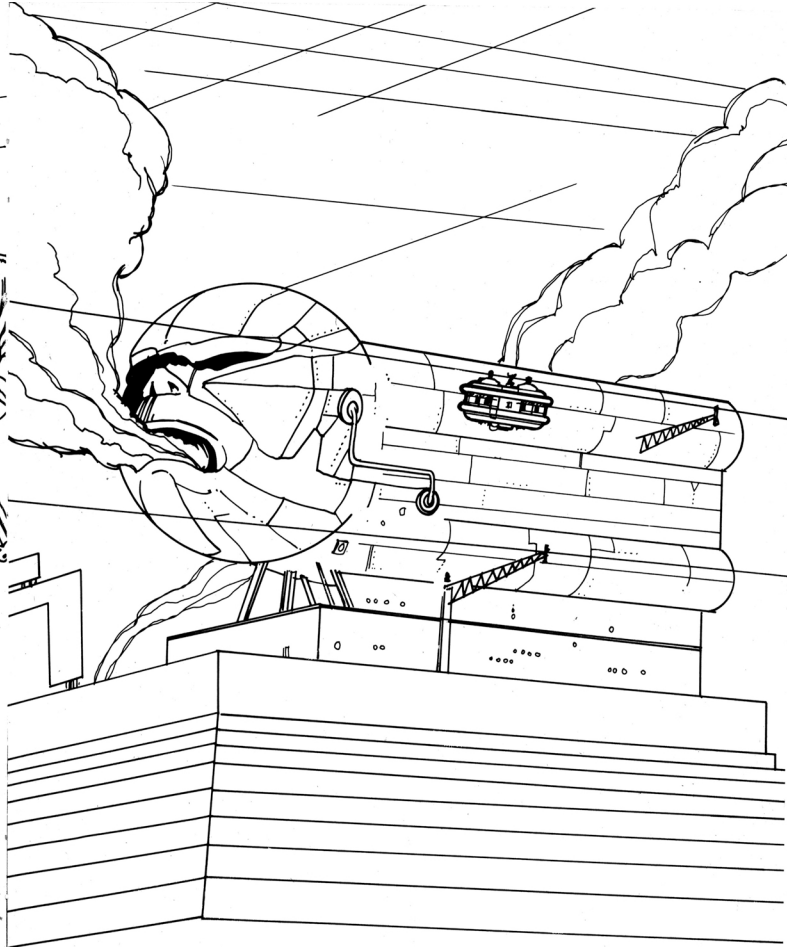

"I will burn away the sickness," says the Baron's doctor.

Dr. Yueh gets ready to poison Duke Leto with his dartgun.

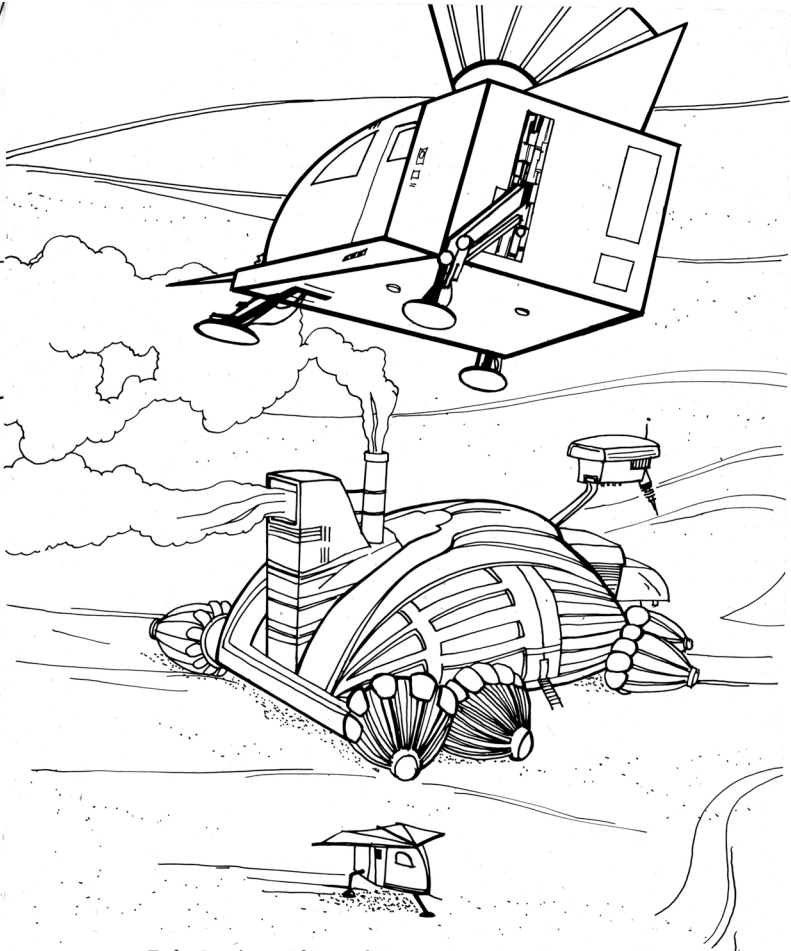

Rabban leads his Harkonnen warriors into battle.

Giedi Prime, the planet where the Baron lives, has many oil refineries and cable cars.

The Atrides are moving out of Castle Caladan.

Duke Leto's ornithopter hovers over a spice harvester.

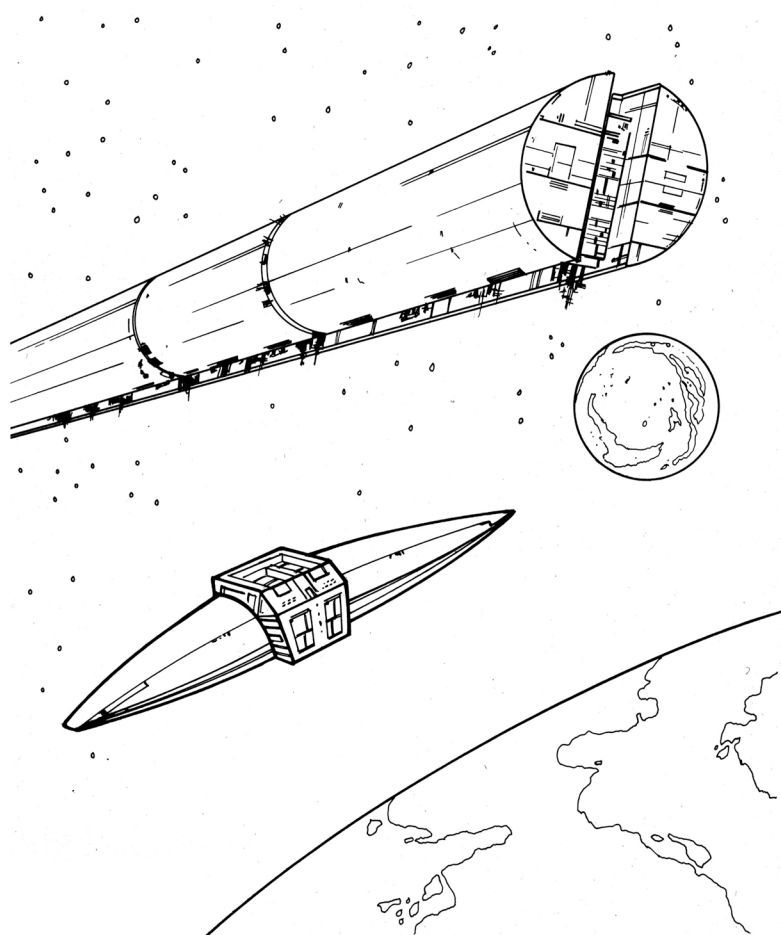

The men spot wormsign. Duke Leto orders all people out of the spice harvester.

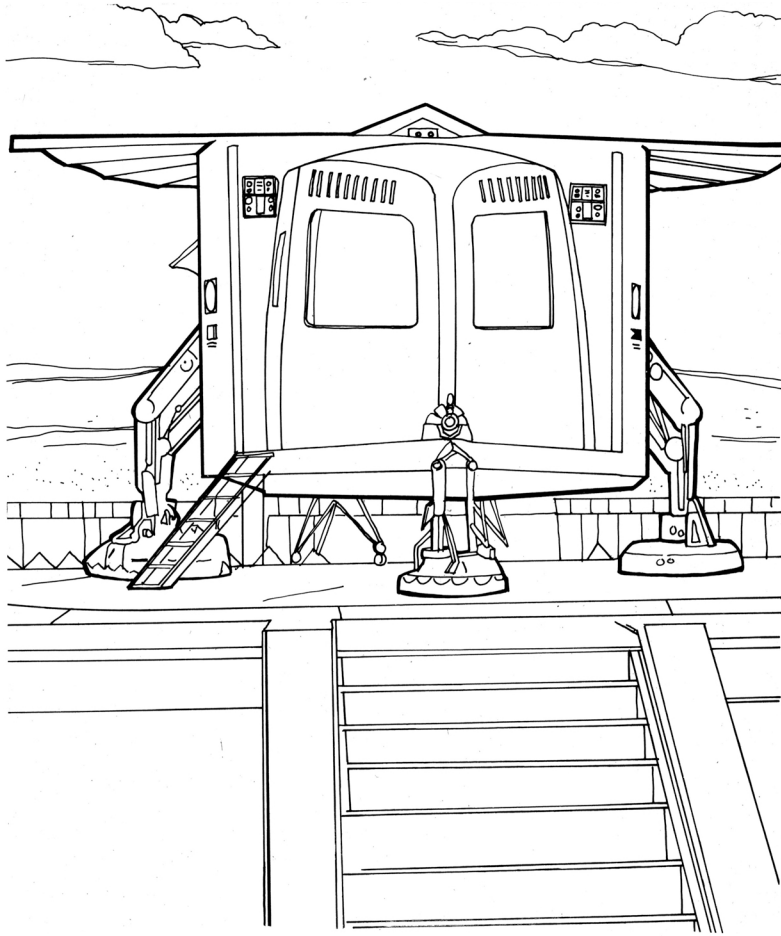

The Baron floats in mid-air!

The spaceship nears the Guild Heighliner, which will transport all the Atreides' spaceships through space.

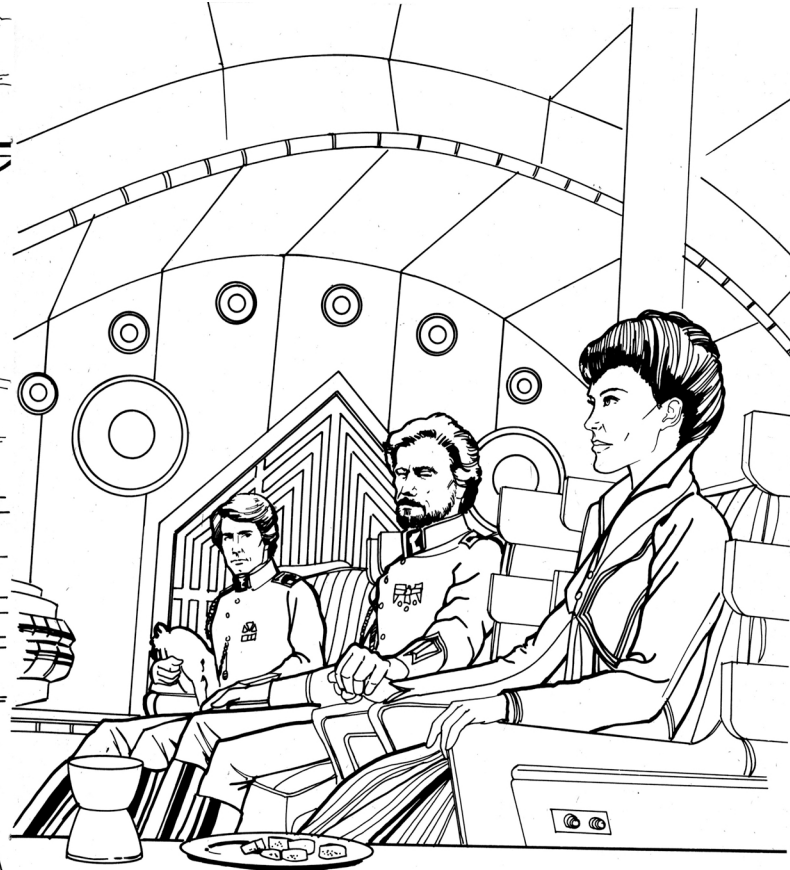

Dr. Kynes teaches Duke Leto about wormsign and spice harvesting.

The ornithopter is good for traveling over the desert.

The Atreides family leave their home for the planet Arrakis.

A traitor activates a hunter-seeker which could kill Paul.

Paul takes out his poison detector.

"It is known to us that you have a traitor in your midst," says Shadout Mapes, a Fremen servant.

This is a spice harvester on the planet Arrakis.
