Mr. Richman,

We hate your games! More specifically, our editors hate your games. We were cleaning out our office recently and came across the samples you sent us for a Christmas article. Guess what happened? We started playing them again and haven't put them away since. We haven't missed any deadlines yet, but if our addiction to the games continues, it's only a matter of time.

Anyway, while uncovering the games, we also uncovered a memo to ourselves to send you a copy of the article. It's enclosed and sorry for the delay. As you can see, the story is not exclusively about Strat-O-Matic, but your games do get plenty of attention. The way things are going around here now, a column on our involvement with Strat-O-Matic will probably appear sometime in the Spring or Summer.

We only have one complaint about your games. We just can't figure out the advanced fielding chart. For some reason we can't find anything written about it in the baseball game rules. Please let us know how to use it. You've got a bunch of sports writers scratching their heads between assignments, trying to figure out what 2=E(2) 1-5 means.

I guess you can tell we're hooked. And I guess that says something about the quality of your product. Congratulations!

Sincerely yours,

Scott Wasser

P.S. Are we entitled to use the coupon for six free teams that came with our samples? It's enclosed, along with an order for a couple of additional teams. See, I told you we were hooked!
