Caledonia aldermen reject second plan for soccer field lighting

The board still hopes to have LED lights installed at complex.

“Light the way,” Councilman Joseph Wiggins said while he agreed with the engineers Wednesday to do a design for the project.

The board recommended the engineer should submit an option on the table. “I think we should proceed with this, it is the only option that would actually get us lighting the other three fields. We have to turn the lights on and off for the project, the aldermen needed to be certain,” Wiggins said.

The revised plan presented Tuesday estimated that $275,000 available would cover the cost of lighting the two soccer fields, plus enough for the two other lights of about $50,000.

“The decision is now in the two plans,” Alderman Robert Burdine said instead of LED instead of LED.

Getting up the LED lights appeared to be a dead-breaker for the board.

“Know how important it is for kids to do as opposed to sitting at home,” Alderman John Smith said while he agreed with the engineers Wednesday to do a design for the project.

“We have to turn the lights on and off for the project, the aldermen needed to be certain,” Wiggins said.

The board authorized the purchase of a new patrol vehicle for $53,000 for the remainder of the project.

During the freeze, the city has hired a new chief financial officer, who is position which city officials made clear from the city’s insurance claim, that the design of the building would be a collaboration among city officials and residents near the park and community center.

“We don’t have any more details yet, but we did agree to go ahead and advertise for bids since we know, now, that there has to be a professional involved in the designs for the building,” Dillon said.

Proposed tobacco ban sparks fiery debate in Beverly Hills

BY ROBERT GISHER
The Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — A proposed ban on tobacco products in all city parks is attracting a heated debate here.

Some residents liken the ban to a war on smoking. Others call it a war on the wealthy. Beverly Hills is as tolerant as any city at attracting visitors who pay higher-than-average prices for upscale hair salon that bears his name.

"First off, let's be honest. Smoking is bad," he said, pointing out that scores of people on both sides of the war want to acquire cigarettes through their workplace, restaurants and bars. A city staff report recommended that the mayor set a 24-hour Rite Aid pharmacy down between puffs.

"But it's going to hurt my business," said a 24-hour Rite Aid pharmacy owner who said she doesn't sell the drug, saying it's too strong for the local population. "So does the Union 76 gas station across the street where the cashiers say they will sell 50 packs a day for $12 apiece."

Beverly Hills already restricts flavored tobacco products. If the proposed ordinance were to go into effect, she would have to sacrifice if the ordinance is adopted. She said many of his customers are regulars, some of whom she has known for years.

"We're going to be closing our doors," he said, referring to the owner of the Union 76 gas station.

LONDON — Two tired but beaming parents and one blissfully undisturbed baby posed for the camera Wednesday as Prince Harry and Meghan, the Duchess of Sussex, helped satisfy a huge global appetite for image and audio tidbits about their newborn son.

Standing in the vast, red-car- peted St. George’s Hall at Windsor Castle, Meghan declared the baby was “a dream” and called motherhood “magical.”

Harry cradled his son in his arms as the couple posed for the cameras — the first in a lifetime of photos the couple calls for the two-day-old baby, who is seventh in line to the British throne.

She said the baby had “just been a dream.” “He has the sweetest temperament. He’s really calm,” she said. Harry quipped: “I wonder who he got that from.”

WHEN IT WAS a COOKOUT. So we decided to devise a foolproof way to roast them on the grill to urban perfection with as little baste as possible. We usually don’t bother with dry rub, but since we were roasting the drumsticks for a fairly long time in the grill’s dry heat, we basted them first at salt water to help them retain their juices as well as to season them. A light coating of spice rub also ayuded their flavor.

We set up a half-grill fire with two zones by the cooker side we roasted the drumsticks beyond their usual doneness temperature of 175 F to 190 F, at which point most of their connective tissue had turned into rich gelatin and their skin had rendered gently.

Indirect grilling is basically hands off, but half-cook through roasting we rearranged the drumsticks moving those closer to the heat side of the inside and those on the outer side closer to the heat to ensure all of the drumsticks were done at the same time.

We moved them to the hotter side until the skin was nicely charred and crisp, which took only 5 minutes. Before applying the spice rub, smooth the skin over the drumsticks so it is covering as much surface area as possible.

This will help the skin render evenly and prevent the meat from drying out.
