Attention, Freshmen! This is a goon. A goon will greet you and help you move into Syracuse University. A goon will escort you around campus during Orientation week. You are very lucky, Frosh.

Orientation Week:

Getting to know SU

For Frosh who are eagerly awaiting "O Week" here is a brief resume of Orientation Week 1968. The Goon Squad and Traditions Commission hope to present you with a genuine welcome.

DORM REPS: To each dorm floor are assigned two Goons who are available to answer the questions that you may have. They will not only be with you on opening day, but throughout the week and semester to help you with personal, academic, and social questions which may arise. Use them to your fullest advantage.

ACADEMICS COMMITTEE: This committee seeks to create intellectual awareness at SU. To do this, Traditions Commission has assigned Academic Goons whose task will be to stress intellectual involvement to the Frosh, excite them to the academic events during "O Week," and to show that the social and academic aspects of a university can go hand in hand.

GOON SHOW: Bigger and better is the forecast for the 1968 Goon Show. Again talent and enthusiasm are used for leading roles, a chorus line, prop men, costume designers, and even scenery painters. And of course the most important aspect is that this presentation of the history of SU is an easy way for students to realize the significance of many of the traditions and "cuse" mannerisms. From the appearance of the first coed on campus, fraternities and sororities, the school colors of "pink and green," the kissing bench—all have their place in the background of Piety Hill.

INVITATION TO THE ARTS: This year's program covers the spectrum of the arts, and everything is presented free of charge. Scheduled activities are two plays, two films, a Culture a la Carte program where an afternoon is set aside for budding artists to experiment in ceramics and paints, and an evening of electric lights and music.

BIG CHUM PROGRAM: The Big Chum Program is an important part of the new student's orientation to Syracuse University. Upperclassmen are encouraged to write to their Little Chums during the summer to answer any questions or problems. This year a special pilot program has been initiated to include both male and female Big Chums, and its effectiveness will be tested. Last year's program of a Coffee and Fashion Show for Big and Little Chums will recur again on Sunday, September 17 at Gifford Auditorium.

PICNIC AND MIXER: Since several problems arose from the Picnic on the Quad and the Newcomer's Mixer last year, there will be staggered hours and more serving lines at the picnic, and a new location and a restriction to frosh and Goons instead of all upperclassmen at the Mixer.

TRANSFER STUDENT PROGRAM: The transfers must be welcomed just as any other new student is welcomed. Thus, the Goons will make the transfers feel a part of Syracuse and will let them know of the events planned for them during Orientation Week. This year we have scheduled a convocation in Hendrick's Chapel, a mixer at Kimmel, and a coffee at the Women's Building.

2,353 make up the Class of '72

From a total of 8,608 applications, 2,353 students have been chosen to enter Syracuse University as the class of 1972.

Eighty-five per cent of the incoming freshmen were in the top two-fifths of their graduating class in secondary school; 60 per cent were in the top fifth.

The mean scores for the College Board Scholastic Aptitude Tests were 575 verbal and 600 math.

Of the 1,199 men and 1,154 women, approximately 23 per cent come from private schools. Close to 45 per cent of the class is from out-of-state.

The northeastern states are most heavily represented. Ohio and Illinois send the largest number from the mid-west area. There will be about 30 foreign students in the class.

The Honors Program has been expanded and will include over 100 members from the Class of '72. Most of the students in the program will live in the new St. Mary's dorm complex where they will meet for seminars.

The breakdown of those entering various undergraduate programs is as follows: Business Administration, 170; Engineering, 174; Art, 172; Music, 39; Home Economics, 100; Liberal Arts, 1,492; Nursing, 42; Speech, 119; Architecture, 45.

Approximately 40 per cent of the class is on some form of financial aid.

"We make a concerted effort to meet as many of the applicants as possible, both here and in New York City," stated Jeffrey R. Fletcher, associate director of admissions.

In addition to the objective standards for judging a student, Fletcher explained, the staff of the admissions office takes into account subjective aspects such as a school counselor's recommendation, a personal interview and the essay written by the student when he applies.

Many students have the opportunity to tour the SU campus with an Orange Page guide during August.

Opening Day Schedule

The members of the 1968 Goon Squad will be donning straw hats and buttons to welcome you freshmen to Syracuse University on September 8. They will unload your cars, carry your belongings to your rooms, and help you get settled. Because there are only 290 Goons to move in nearly 3,000 freshmen, we are asking you to cooperate with our Opening Day procedure.

In order to prevent a large number of freshmen all arriving at the same time, we want you to stagger your arrivals at the Syracuse campus. Those freshmen who are coming from outside a 200-mile radius of Syracuse should, if convenient, move into their living centers between 8 and 11:45 a.m. Those freshmen who live within four hours of Syracuse should move into their living centers any time after 12:15 p.m.

We would greatly appreciate your cooperation with this schedule. Thank you.

Looking forward to seeing you September 8!

Ginny Steeper
Ron Beeber, Co-Chairman
Opening Day Committee

Projection '70

SU student tutors get academic credit

By NANCY BENOTTI

University students tutoring children from city grade schools in the Projection '70 program next year will receive two credit hours on a pass/fail basis.

To earn their credits, tutors will be expected to attend training sessions, read the manual now being written, go to special seminars during the semester and consult with an "in-service trainer" twice a week.

"It is really a more efficient use of time," said Bob Mussey, a former tutor who has been appointed administrative director of the program. Next year, for instance, tutoring will be done on campus.

Last year tutoring was done in churches in the city, he explained, and an hour was wasted every session bringing students from the University to tutoring places. Students got discouraged because of the time they had to spend traveling and wouldn't show up.

Besides saving transportation time, next year's plans include a weekend training session in September to help tutors teach more effectively, according to Bob. They will learn teaching methods and be familiarized with behavior and discipline problems they will face.

Bob and Gene Cain, another former tutor and director of training, are compiling a "comprehensive tutoring manual" this summer which will be required reading for the tutors. "We want them to be familiar with as many aspects of the program as possible," Bob said.

Fifteen experienced tutors will act as in-service trainers. Each will supervise 10 tutors. In addition to the two teaching sessions each week, tutors will be expected to meet for a half hour twice a week with their supervisers.

This child is one of those involved in the experimental "Projection '70" program. Students tutoring city grade school children this fall will receive two hours of academic credit.

The Class of '72 learns what not to do

The education of the Class of 1972 has been bracketed by events. It was on the threshold of high school when John F. Kennedy was shot. It was accepted at Syracuse when Martin Luther King and Robert F. Kennedy were slain. In between it saw the war in Vietnam creep closer and closer and watched campus after campus suffer upheaval.

Hence, you freshmen cannot be viewed in the same light as the Senior Class of Syracuse University. While we must decide now what to think and do about the war and the election, you still have time to observe and reflect.

From this observation you most likely will learn what not to do. This generation of college students could not elect a Senator McCarthy president but must leave that task unfinished for the next. Even if we had, it would have been up to the next geneartion to elect a better Congress.

On a smaller scale Freshmen can learn by the example of upperclassmen. When this year's seniors were freshmen, they elected a class president who resigned from office a month later and dropped out of college to — what else? — help fight the war in Vietnam. That was the year the freshmen class elected a legislature whose leadership managed to change three times before Student Senate declared it unconstitutional. The climax of the 1965-66 year occurred when 70 Watson dormitory freshmen went to the infirmary from Food Service poisoning.

We hope the Class of '72 will improve upon this record.

You will probably be wiser in the fallibility of man than we, but at the same time you must overcome some of the same problems. One is adjusting to University life — waiting in line to see your advisor, waiting in line to register for the courses you want, waiting in line to purchase books, and then falling asleep exhausted to dream of waiting in line for breakfast.

Your major problem will be reconciling your image of college with its realities. You will wonder what is so valuable about a seemingly irrelevant education. Perhaps you have already tasted this from the required reading list for freshmen. What does Rachel Carson's "Silent Spring" have to do with the total environmental pollution of the cities? "The Making of a President, 1964" is a book of excellent reporting and is about as related to 1968 as Barry Goldwater is to Nelson Rockefeller.

While encountering obstacles,, you will also find wonderful freedom and diversity here. Syracuse University is a polyglut of religions and nationalities and personalities. The poor and the rich have sent their representatives as well as the great Ameri can middleclass.

And you can walk from the open patio of Newhouse Communications Center to the towers of Crouse College in about five minutes. A very great distance indeed.

Competition is keen

Chancellor lauds Frosh

EDITORS NOTE: The following statement from Chancellor William Pearson Tolley is addressed to the members of the Freshmen Class.

It is a pleasure to welcome the Class of 1972 into the Syracuse family. This is a superior class, one that has already accomplished much and is rich in promise of future usefulness. As you cross the threshhold to maturity, we look for the further development of this exceptional potential.

You have been carefully selected from thousands of applications to become members of this community of scholars. The business of education is a sacred trust in which you have been chosen to participate. We know that you have the capacity to succeed, but you must prove this by your continued achievement. Standards will be high and the competition keen. We hope, therefore, that you will get off to the best possible start.

As members of a community, both faculty and administration are deeply interested in your growth and development. We look forward to the pleasure of meeting you, and we shall do everything we can to help you. We are at your service.

You will find Syracuse an exciting place to be. It is a University full of challenge and opportunity. Your years here should be among the richest and the most rewarding of your life.

Key to success

Determination

By Abe Wagner

Writing in his "Preface to Morals" some years ago, Walter Lippman said "We grow older, but it is by no means certain we grow up." For Freshmen, about to begin their college careers, Lippman's words have a particular significance.

It is indeed certain that you have grown older. Your very transition from high school to college represents an important stage in this process. What should also be inherent in this transition you are about to make is a certain measure of growing up; that second area Lippman speaks of.

This is not to imply that a necessary degree of maturity has not been reached. This is only part of the proglem of "growing up" in terms of the University.

It is most likely that you already know a great deal about Syracuse and college in general, at least from the physical aspect. But, if we are to go by past experience you have learned or thought little of what is really involved in a University education. One great educator has described a University education as a blending of three characteristics: emotional maturity, continual involvement, and the habit of accuracy into a "reflective mind." Thus, your college education cannot be thought of only in terms of four or so years at Syracuse, but rather as a mental orientation towards life.

The role of the University in providing such a 'University education' touches upon all three areas mentioned. While it assumes emotional maturity; helps to provide facilities for continual involvement and stresses the need for accuracy, the prime responsibility for success remains with you.

The first lesson is one that can be learned now, before arriving on campus. It is just this–if you are going to succeed, you are going to have to take school seriously. If this sounds like your teacher yelling at you, it isn't. Keep in mind that every year almost half of those that entered as Freshmen four years earlier fail to graduate.

The substance of this lesson does not lie in simply being studious. To get the utmost from Syracuse or any school demands total involvement in university life. The key to your success is self-determination. This is the difference between high school and college; success and failure.

Keep in mind that what you are joining is a "community of scholars." Despite the seemingly restrictive social and academic regulations, all the really important decisions are yours. How you make them from the very beginning may well affect your entire career.

Take with a grain of salt much of the sage wisdom of the "goons" who are here to welcome you to the campus. They have weathered the storm of their own first year here, but are by no stretch of the imagination near the end of their own Promethean journey.

Problems?

As a regular feature of the Daily Orange, we will solicit and attempt to answer questions about all phases of life at Syracuse University. Incoming students face many similar problems. The Daily Orange would like to try to assist, especially in areas of general interest.

Philosophy of law

If you're adventurous enough to want to spend three hours a week with the "Philosopher King and Master of Socrates," it's as simple as registering for Philosophy 122G (Philosophy of Law), taught by one one less illustrious than the master himself. That, at least, is one student's description of Dr. Meiklejohn, an opinion which seems to have more supporters than opponents.

Indeed, Aedile found, in its collection of student evaluations, that Dr. Meiklejohn, and not Philosophy of Law, was the subject of most of the comments. As usual, opinions were widely disparate, but the many who praised Meiklejohn did so with enthusiasm that leaves one in awe of the power of the man to inspire; and even those who were bored rather than awed, recognized the professor's superior qualities, as evidenced by the almost apologetic note of their criticisms.

One student said of the professor, ". . . not only does he speak well, but he puts all of himself into the lecture. He seems to want to teach more than any professor I've ever had."

This same individual considered Meiklejohn "my ideal of what a college professor and a wise, learned adult should be."

Another rated his knowledge of the subject as "incredible" and another mentioned his "gentlemanly handling of points and people."

On the other hand, one individual seemed to express the sentiment of several others in his evaluation of Meiklejohn as "extremely knowledgeable, analytic, perceptive, witty, profound, competent, eloquent, but dry."

It was difficult to extract a general consensus of the value of the course material and presentation. Although most agreed that the studies of Supreme Court decisions were generally interesting, many felt that the philosophies behind the law were not explored in enough depth. One student found the course "challenging" but felt that "the professor should offer more organization."

Others were of the opinion that the course was geared mainly to the interests of pre-law students and political science majors

"No, I'm not the Chancellor, why . . .?"

Dean Frederic J. Kramer

Kramer named new L. A. dean

Frederic J. Kramer, acting dean of Syracuse University's College of Liberal Arts, has been appointed dean.

The executive committee of the board of trustees voted the appointment at its July meeting. The board last May 31 approved Chancellor William P. Tolley's nomination of Kramer as acting dean with the retirement of Eric H. Faigle, who had been dean since 1950. Kramer, who has been on the Syracuse faculty since 1947, is also chairman of the German department and academic director of the East European Languages Program.

Kramer, a native of Batavia, Ohio, graduated from Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, in 1928. After serving as a teacher for one year in the Bucyrus, Ohio, High School, he began his graduate work in German at Ohio State University. He received his M.A. in 1930 and his Ph.D. in 1935, both from Ohio State.

He served as instructor, assistant professor and associate professor of German at Ohio State from 1933 to 1947.

As associate and acting dean of the College of Liberal Arts he had been closely associated with the pre-professional curriculum of the College and had direct responsibility for the past seven years for interviewing all applicants for professional education in medicine and dentistry.

Kramer is an honorary member of Alpha Epsilon Delta, the national pre-medical honorary fraternity, a member of Phi Beta Kappa and of Phi Kappa Tau Fraternity. He is a member of the Modern Language Association, the American Association of University Professors and the American Association of Teachers of German.

Kramer is married to the former Gertrude Wilson. They live in DeWitt and have four children: Barbara, Karen, Ellen and Frederic. Kramer is the author (with M.B. Evans) of an intermediate German workbook and a number of articles in various educational journals. He has studied and traveled extensively in Europe. In 1962 he was awarded the U.S. Air Force's Distinguished Civilian Service Medal for his service to the cause of education.

Three department chairmen appointed in Liberal Arts

Syracuse University Chancellor William P. Tolley has appointed three new department chairmen in the College of Liberal Arts. Donald W. Meinig will head the geography department, Myron I. Lichtblau was appointed chairman of Romance languages, and Ephraim Levin is the new chairman of Slavic languages and literature.

The appointments were effective July 1.

Prof. Meinig joined the Syracuse faculty in 1959. He holds a bachelor of science degree from Georgetown University and earned a master's and doctorate in geography from the University of Washington. In 1966 he was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship for research, travel and writing on the historical cultural geography of the American West. He has been an adviser on geography for the college division of Harper & Row, the publishers, and a guest lecturer at the University of Texas, Ohio State University, Pennsylvania State University, the University of Cincinnati and other schools. Among his books is "On the Margins of the Good Earth," published in 1962.

Meinig succeeds Prof. Preston E. James, who will begin a world trip in the fall.

Prof. Lichtblau came to Syracuse from Indiana University in 1959. He holds degrees from the City College of New York, Universidad Nacional de Mexico and Columbia University. He has written three books, including "The Argentine Novel in the Nineteenth Century," published in 1959.

Lichtblau has been acting chairman of the Romance languages department since February 1967. He serves as a consultant on Hispanic literature to Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers. He was recently named to a three-year term as a member of the bibliography section of the Latin American group of the Modern Language Association of America.

Levin came to Syracuse University in 1960. He earned a bachelor's degree, master's degree and Ph.D. from Harvard University. At Syracuse he has been a member of the Board of Russian Studies and a member of an interdepartmental committee for formation of a linguistics department.

He served as a consultant on linguistics to the Itek Corporation and as chairman of the subcommittee on courses of the University's Liberal Arts Curriculum Committee.

Levin is a member of the Modern Language Association of America, the Linguistic Circle of New York, and the American Association for Advancement of Slavic Studies. He holds the academic rank of associate professor and had been acting chairman of Slavic languages and literature since 1966.

Traditions-Frosh get beanies

Syracuse, like many other universities, has a quadrangle. It has a chapel, cheerleaders and a Chancellor. Yet Syracuse is like no other university.

What makes Syracuse different from all other universities is the tradition that has become part of its existence.

As the university grows, so does the collection of memories that we call tradition. The first Syracuse custom that you will participate in as freshmen is the wearing of the beanie that will distinguish you from the "lofty" upperclassmen. For seventy years the beanie has been the badge of the freshmen.

The orange of the beanie is itself one of Syracuse's oldest traditions. In 1872, the alumni association adopted rose pink and pea green as the school colors. The next year azure was chosen to replace the "dainty" green. These colors gradually became plain pink and blue, representing the "blue of heaven" and the "rose of sunset." But in 1890 still another change was made. The first and as of today the only major college to adopt one single official color, Syracuse assumed the orange as its own. It was chosen to represent the golden apples of Hesperia, the glory of the sunrise and the hope for a golden future. Blue is used as an unofficial complementary color whenever necessary.

Originally known as "Bill Orange," the Syracuse University mascot is now referred to as the "Saltine Warrior." This warrior stands guard over the Quad in the form of a bronze statue. This statue was a gift to the University by the Class of 1951. His live counterpart provides part of the color at Hill football games and has followed Syracuse teams across the country to urge them on to victory.

Walking on campus at noon, you will hear the chimes ringing from Old Crouse tower. This tradition is as old as its home. The bells have been rung daily since 1899, the year that John Crouse Memorial College was built. A concert follows every home football game played in Archbold Stadium. As the fans surge out of the stadium and across campus, the Saturday concert ends with the tolling of the score. This custom began in 1928 after the Colgate game and has become the traditional finale to a football afternoon.

At five o'clock each afternoon the Alma Mater issues forth from the Tower. The Syracuse University school song dates back to 1893 when it was written by Junios W. Stevens. He received his inspiration from the effect of the setting sun shining on the walls of Crouse College "long after dusk had fallen over the city and the valley."

Much of the tradition of the University can be located geographically. A brass sculpture of the Greek goddess Diana in the front foyer of the Main Library has been a good luck symbol for hundreds of Hill students. By rubbing the paw of Diana's dog and reciting a short prayer students are supposedly assured of success on any examination. This sculpture was a gift to the University in 1932.

The stone bench next to the Hall of Languages is the source of one of the University's most romantic traditions. It is said that any girl who kissed while sitting there will be assured of marriage.

There are many more traditions that each class will come to know and recognize as uniquely "Syracusan." Just this past year the Class of 1971 initiated the "Silent Cheer" to lead the Orangemen on at all football games and a mile long telegram of good luck at all away football games. And it is this wealth of traditions that sets SU apart from all others.

Through these traditions, all Syracuse students are enabled to share in that which was our past and that which will be our future.

The live counterpart of the Saltine Warrior, part of the traditions at SU, dances a tribal dance celebrating another SU victory on the gridiron. The Indian symbolism on his loin cloth has never been explained.

A changed Corner Store

Manager reviews plans

"My wish for this year," said Mrs. Melba Hrncir, Corner Store manager, as she conducted a tour of the remodeled store, "is that both students and faculty may get to know us better."

Mrs. Hrncir, who has recently been promoted from buyer to manager, has had the front display windows opened into the store, moved the music department downstairs, and added outlines, review notes, greeting cards, stationery and gift wrappings to the stock.

Where the stock room is now located upstairs, Mrs. Hrncir plans to have a technical and reference book department for the use of professors and graduate students, since technical and reference books are not now available in the immediate area of the campus. To achieve this, she will hold a stockroom sale.

In the other upstairs room, shelving sections are being added to achieve better display of trade books, all of which, with the exception of drama, education and music books, are now upstairs.

"If our campus authors will show enough interest," Mrs. Hrncir said, "we would like to have autograph parties to give the University community a chance to meet them."

From time to time during the year there will be publishers' remainder sales, she said, as well as displays of the books of different publishers.

Special courses, seminars for some

Honors Program improves quality

The Honors Program of the College of Liberal Arts was established to provide special educational opportunities for undergraduates who show promise for genuine academic achievement and an ambition to develop their intellectual abilities to the fullest. An important objective of the program is to aid students in qualifying themselves for serious graduate study, through the advice and special attention of outstanding faculty members.

In order to carry out the purpose of the Honors Program, many of the departments in the College of Liberal Arts have established special honors sections for freshmen and sophomores. These courses are open to Honors Program members and other students who obtain departmental permission to enroll in them.

Far from restricting its attention to students in the Honors Program, the Honors Council, its governing body, attempts to further the cause of quality education at Syracuse in a number of ways. These include the preparation of lists of outstanding students which are distributed to the faculty, information for those interested in foreign and graduate study, and assistance to those attempting to win graduate fellowships. Furthermore, the improvements made in the different Liberal Arts departments due to the efforts of the Honors Program have proved beneficial to all students.

However, students selected as members of the Honors Program do enjoy special benefits. Freshmen, sophomores, juniors and seniors in the Program take part in special curricular arrangements including: honors sections of regular courses, introductory or continuing courses not normally open to students at their level, tutorials or special reading courses, and appropriate advanced or graduate courses. The student's background, ability and willingness to work, as well as the department's offerings, are the determining factors in the number and type of courses which can be taken. The Honors Program itself offers a seminar required of all freshmen and sophomore members of the Program. This fall individual sections of the seminar will discuss such varied topics as: "God Without Gods," "The Humanity of Science," "The Black Man in American History," and "Public Opinion and Public Policy," among others.

A special benefit for members of the Honors Program is the possibility of foreign study. Syracuse University and Bedford College, University of London, have an arrangement for a handful of junior Honors Candidates majoring in philosophy or sociology to spend a year studying at Bedford. Freshmen interested in preparing for consideration for this opportunity should plan to elect philosophy or sociology courses in their freshman year.

Seniors who graduate as members of the Honors Program receive a degree "with honors" in their major field. Approximately 100 freshmen have been admitted to the Program for the fall. They will join about 80 sophomores, 100 juniors and 45 seniors. Students may apply to join the Honors Program during each semester up to the beginning of their junior year, and are judged on the basis of their college and high school performance, faculty recommendations, and their applications.

What do we do next?

Parents, like incoming freshmen, are slightly befuddled when they first view SU happenings. Here a flock of parents eye the scene on the quad during "Parents Weekend."

Arthur Fritz appointed Financial Aids Director

Arthur J. Fritz has been appointed director of financial aids at Syracuse University, Chancellor William P. Tolley announced today. Since October 1967 Fritz had been associate director of admissions and represented that office on the financial aids committee.

He succeeds Brian J. Mosher who left the University to become director of the Association of University Public Health Administrators in Chicago.

In his new position Fritz is responsible for the administration of the University's financial aid program for students, including general scholarships, federal grants and loans, student work opportunities, and some graduate fellowships.

Fritz is a 1962 graduate of Syracuse University and had been a member of the admissions staff since 1963. As director of financial aids he is on the staff of Dean of Student Services Jim G. Carleton.

Fritz, 28, is a member of the Association of College Admissions Counselors and is a former director of the alumni pre-college counseling program. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. Fritz Sr. of 815 E. Front Street, Berwick, Penna. He and his wife Katryn live at 100 Goodrich Ave., Syracuse.

Teach love, justice

Willie addresses educators

Miami Beach, Fla., July 23 -- "If we can help deal with the twin problems of racism and poverty and help create a sense of community in which people turn toward each other rather than against each other, we will have raised up a nation that is great and no one need call it 'the great society' for all who experience it will know," Charles V. Willie, chairman of Syracuse University's sociology department, said

Willie spoke to educators attending the National University Extension Association Conference at the Deauville Hotel. His topic was "The University in a Time of Social Crisis." He said in remarks prepared for delivery (9 a.m.) at the conference: "We must teach our students about living in community. We must teach our students about human interdependence. We must teach our students about social and community development and about ethical relationships between man and man. We must teach our students about love and justice as well as about law and order."

Willie noted a change in universities and said students will play a greater part in formulating future academic policy. He said: "Dissension between students, faculty and administrators is no cause for real alarm. It grows out of the necessary confrontation that could lead to conciliation and ultimately cooperation between these three components of the university. You cannot have the cooperation without confrontation."

Linking the university with the community, Willie said: "I am convinced that our institutions, with good intentions, may pursue inappropriate goals in the community based on faculty information if guided only by the intelligence of the administration. A community of scholars must gather into its decision-making councils ideas and information from all of its people, from all of its resources, if its actions are to be relevant and wise."

He added: "A college or university cannot participate effectively in the governing of a community if it cannot tolerate the participation of students in the governing of the institution." He urged that the university "put its own house in order, if it is to have a major impact on the community at large."

He said one of the duties of the university is to "do more than develop leaders for the Establishment. We must develop leaders for people of high low status, leaders for the rich and leaders for the poor, leaders for black and white people."

He said the colleges and universities in the country must face three problems: "racism, poverty and violence. If we do not, there will be no society for our leaders to lead."

He urged that colleges and universities "facilitate responsible confrontations" in society. "Such confrontations provide self-correcting experience in our community and national life. This is why colleges and universities must extend their training to leaders of both in and outside the Establishment. . . .for it is only with good leadership that responsible demonstrations are organized to alleviate specific problems and to achieve stated goals," he said.

Willie then spoke of a plan for a Syracuse University program in which continuing education would play a large role: "If it seems appropriate for Syracuse University to develop a continuing education program for leaders of action organizations of disadvantaged people, the University not only would involve its own faculty but would recruit visiting faculty from among the leadership of several of the more successful social action groups in larger cities. A major limitation of the current movement for organizing disadvantaged people is that the experiences of others who have been successful are seldom shared with those who are just beginning. The University could serve as a catalyst bringing together the newcomers and the oldtimers in the field of community action."

Willie said field work in seven smaller cities in the state is being done this summer by Syracuse and a report will be prepared in the fall before further action is taken.

Willie holds a dual appointment as professor of sociology in the College of Liberal Arts and the Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. He was appointed department chairman in sociology in 1967. Willie is a graduate of Morehouse College where he was a classmate of the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King. He earned his master's degree from Atlanta University and his Ph.D from Syracuse. He has been on the faculty since 1952.

Budget director leaves SU

Syracuse University's vice president for administration and research will leave September 1 to become president of Wichita State University in Kansas.

Dr. Clark D. Ahlberg is former director of the budget of the State of New York under Governor Harriman and is the man who bears most of the responsibility for SU's budget.

What is more, he is a staunch Democrat invading traditionally Republican territory.

"I was born and raised in Kansas. I thought that coming to Syracuse wasn't much change. I'm used to being a member of a minority," said Dr. Ahlberg.

Wichita State University is formerly the Wichita Municipal University. It has the equivalent of 11,000 full time students compared to Syracuse University's 15,000.

"Although Wichita is part of the state system, it is unique with a local board of trustees with limited functions appointed by the governor. This board was originally given the job of paying off the $1.5 million debt acquired before it became part of the state system."

"In the process of paying off the debt it raised excess money and bought additional things for the University," said Dr. Ahlberg.

Although the state legislature appropriates most of Wichita's budget, Dr. Ahlberg did not think the change from a private to a public university would be a drastic one. In addition to a local board of trustees, Wichita has an endowment association to raise money from private sources.

"Our public institutions are becoming more and more like private institutions and our private institutions are becoming more and more like public ones," observed Dr. Ahlberg.

Syracuse has been haunted by the thought of being incorporated into the state system. A few students demonstrated in favor of such a move last year when it was announced tution was going up $200 and also that the University had to adjust its budget to keep from finishing the year $500,000 short.

"Next year will be a very tough, difficult year for SU and the budget reflects it. But we have no reason at the moment to be more apprehensive than the budget plans," said Dr. Ahlberg.

He said it had been very difficult deciding to leave SU.

"Syracuse University is a very democratic university. I was once offerred the presidency of a small liberal arts college but it was too stuffy, too sure of itself. This University questions itself."

"Horizontally, there are few positions between a professor and his dean. The lines of communication are short and open. A vice president here is on the same social plane as a professor who comes to talk with him.

"For that matter, the distance between me and you is not very great," he said, speaking to a student.

Houses 284 women, 469 men

St. Mary's opens in fall

By CINDY FELZER

The new St. Mary's complex is open for occupancy in September. The women's dorm of the complex will house 66 freshmen women as well as sophomores, juniors and seniors. One-hundred forty of the 469 men in the men's dorm will be freshmen.

Located west of the Veteran's Administration Hospital, the $8.25 million complex will consist of a 13-story men's dormitory; a nine-story women's dormitory; a three-story dining hall, lounge and multipurpose building; a 250-car garage and recreational terraces and fields. Next to the University buildings will be the 23-story Toomey Abbott Towers, a home for elderly people, with shopping facilities, built under the management of the Syracuse Housing Authority.

The geriatrics building is included in the complex only as a structural convenience.

"Syracuse University needed a new dorm, while the city simultaneously was looking for a site for Toomey Abbott Towers. The Housing Authority and the University agreed on the same architect to create the total complex with architectural integrity," according to James V. Latorre, assistant to the vice-president of administration and research.

"The main contact between the students and the elderly," said Latorre, "will be visual, within the plaza, the stairways, and the terraces of the various buildings."

The close living arrangement does provide excellent opportunities for service organizations, and "There is a fair probability that the organizations will do some servicing," Latorre said.

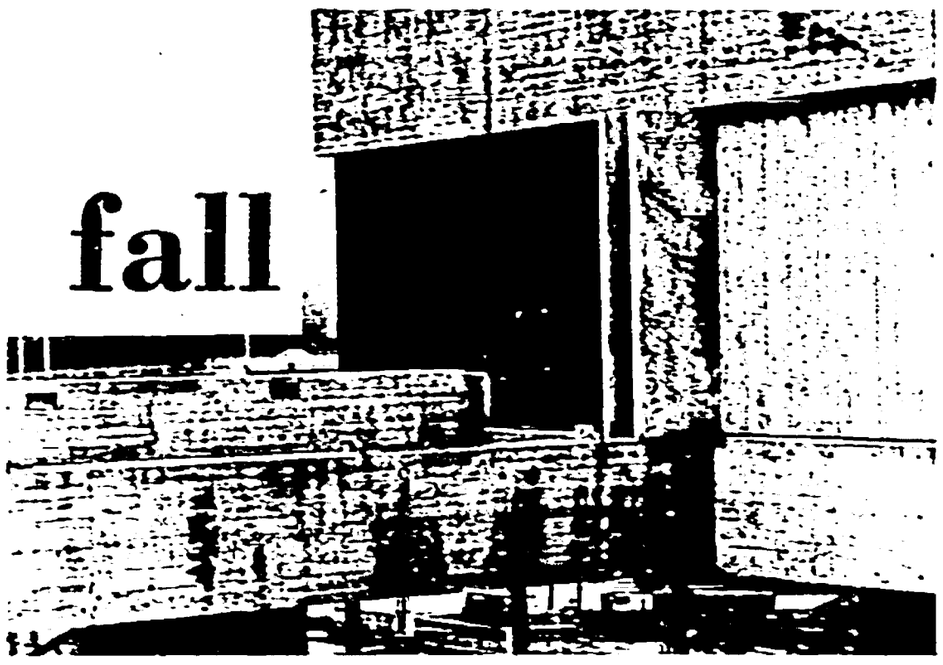
Each dorm has four different types of rooms, the pattern varying on each floor.

The room distribution in the complex is as follows: 111 split doubles for women, 120 for men; seven open doubles for women, 84 for men; six four-women suites; 12 three-men suites and 15 singles for women and 12 for men.

In the women's dormitory, which houses 284 people, there are four floors with divided doubles and singles, three floors with two suites and divided doubles, and on the eighth floor are the open doubles with separate study cubicles for each student.

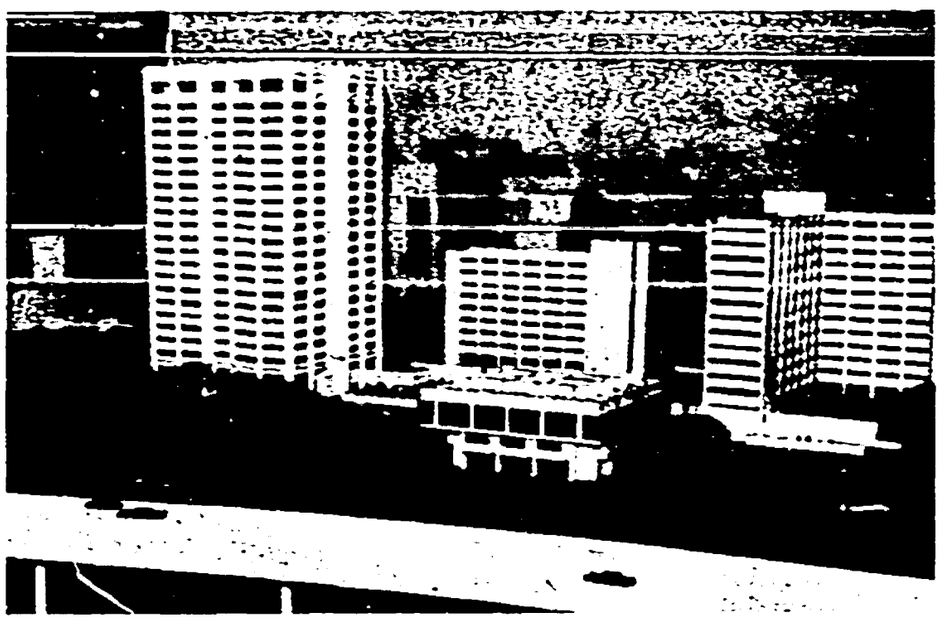
The 12 floors in the men's dormitory, which houses 469, are similar, consisting of a combination of split doubles, singles, suites and open doubles. The open doubles, as in the women's dorm, have associated study cubicles which can be locked for individual study and privacy.

There are 16 typing rooms in each dormitory located at the ends of the buildings in order to limit the noise.



Within each room is a built-in dresser-wardrobe unit, as well as a built-in desk and bookcase.

All the lounges and corridors in the complex are carpeted as is the dining room. Individual rooms were not carpeted as they are in Haven in order to eliminate extra maintenance problems, according to Latorre.



The dining area, capable of serving 1,000 to 1,500 persons during a meal with a seating capacity of 550, is setup to have several different serving areas similar to the "scramble system" used at Kimmel Dining Hall.

Sharing a common lobby with a common mail room and control desk, both dorms will have access to a family room, guest room, T.V. room, music rooms, a 10,000 volume library, associated reading space, two study areas and a multipurpose room capable of holding 200 persons.

Concerning access to campus, the complex is no further from Hendrick's Chapel than is Mount Olympus, and closer than are Booth, Dellplain or Haven. The St. Mary's complex is approximately seven minutes' walking distance from the main campus, either going around the Veteran's Hospital to University Place or up the hill to the steps between the White Hall and Crouse College.

Work continues on the St. Mary's Complex Dining Hall, the part of the four-building complex slated to be finished last.

The architect's model of the completed complex includes the 23-story Toomey Abbott Tower for the elderly (left), the nine story women's dorm in back of the three-story dining hall (center), and the 13-story men's dorm (right).

Snodgrass: Professor and poet

W. D. Snodgrass

By LAUREN JOHNSON

Poet and teacher W.D. Snodgrass, a casual man, opened the conversation in the interview. He leaned back against the wall, arms behind his head and feet on the desk. "Now what do you want to ask me?"

The obvious topic is poetry. After all, Snodgrass won a Pulitzer Prize for his book "Hearts Needle" and has gathered other awards along the way. A volume of his newest work, "After Experience . . ." was recently published.

As candid as he is informal, Snodgrass began speaking about his poetry. "I first became known for writing very personal poems." he said. "My first poems were about my daughter, a daughter I lost by divorce."

"My poems are often based on personal experience, but sometimes, not." He went on, "It was true of them fifteen years ago; it may not be now."

Snodgrass manages to look exactly like what he is, a cross between professor and poet. Bearded as one would imagine a poet, and with the absent air attributed to professers whenever he stops to contemplate what he wants to say, he enjoys comparing the role of the poet in America, which he feels to be less than important, to his role in the rest of the world, especially in the iron curtain countries.

If not envious of their writing conditions, Snodgrass has a slight tinge of envy for the poet's audience in the communist countries. They are controlled, but "the only reason they hold to 100,000 copies is the paper shortage." "Here," he adds, with ironic humor, "a poet doesn't have any audience, so nobody cares what he says."

Snodgrass had some ironic words for the other half of his experience, teaching. "If an older teacher is good, he'll stay. But if a young teacher is good, he'll be gotten rid of within two years."

Before his present post at S.U., teaching English 150, a standard background course, although started by poet George Eliot, Snodgrass taught at Cornell, University of Rochester, and most recently he was a professor of English at Wayne State University in Detroit.

The poet's only classroom connection with poetry comes in the School of Speech, where he teaches oral interpretation of poetry, and in his dealings with some creative writing and poetry students on an informal basis. "We're absolutely overrun with poets," Snodgrass points out with humor. "There are too few poetry courses to go around. They're up for grabs."

The fact that Snodgrass restricts his poetry to these classes and keeps 150 a background course is a source of student criticism.

Jeff Dilson, a student in his class, says, "I expected some sort of creative approach, an approach that would show us the creative mind. Instead of that we're getting more of the standard approach to literature, and he doesn't need to teach that."

While student opinion varies, faculty opinion is squarely with him. Chairman of the Department of English James H. Elson says of Snodgrass, "He's working out very well. We're lucky to have him."

Snodgrass, however, does not seem totally convinced of this. While he tactfully says, "I'm not really settled in yet," he also admits that he can't really say he is enjoying his work.

Professor Dike has been quoted on Snodgrass, calling his a "restless innovator, not satisfied to repeat what he has done before. "Many students feel pressured by the university, the system. How much more sensitive is the soul of a poet!

The Promethean: SU's other estate

By BRUCE CHADWICK

Syracuse University is one of the few schools in America that has two journalistic organs – the Daily Orange, paid for by the University – and the Promethean, paid for by advertising, student support, a wing and a prayer, and the grace of the Almighty.

The Promethean was born 3 1/2 years ago when two senior editors of the Daily Orange bolted to form the PRO. They made it a weekly off-campus newspaper. Many said it was too radical, too leftist and too one-sided. Many others said it was great.

The PRO got its name from Prometheus, the ancient Greek who faced eternal suffering for giving man fire. That is the driving force behind the PRO – to battle the dragons and the gods – sometimes to win, sometimes to lose, but always to try.

Its official motto is Dante's famous saying: "The hottest places in hell are reserved for those, who in time of moral crisis, remain neutral."

This year's editor is senior Bruce Chadwick. He was formerly sports editor of the Daily Orange. Last year his predecessor, Harvey Schwartz took over the PRO when it was dying a slow and painful death in the winter, changed it from a newspaper to a magazine and made it successful. Schwartz put out six editions in five months. Chadwick took over in mid-April and put out four editions in a month.

The Promethean was founded with two intentions: 1) another point of view was needed on a campus this large – the view of the Daily Orange was too limited, and 2) The University's board of publications served as a latent censoring organization.

Today there is a change. Chadwick said: "We still believe that there must be two points of view on this campus, but we don't feel the board of publications is any kind of censoring agency. From my experiences with them as a board and as individuals I think no finer group of people could be found anywhere. Our 'gripe' is that they pick very calm and conservative editors. The Daily Orange is not doing the job it is supposed to do on this campus. It isn't the board's fault – it's the fault of the DO. That's why we exist."

The PRO was originally given out free. After six months they had to sell it to pay expenses. This fall Chadwick is toying with the idea of giving it away again.

During its critical periods the PRO was saved by a large donation by the class of '68 and by the faith of the student body. The Pro has always sold over 1,000 copies. This couldn't be done, they told Howie Schneider and Carol Rubright, the original co-editors. They did it, and continue to do so.

Jim Klurfeld succeeded Schneider and Rubright as editor. He headed the paper in '66-'67. T.J. McCarthy and Joan Kramer were elected co-editors for the '67-'68 school year, but Schwartz replaced them in December, '67. He was succeeded by Chadwick last April.

The Promethean office is located at the student government office, 401 University Place, on the third floor. Chadwick invites any interested Freshmen to drop in during orientation week or call Chadwick. "We need all the help we can get," Chadwick said. "We are especially interested in Freshmen, who can make the magazine greater in the years to come."

And so the Promethean goes on, paying its bills to the amazement of all, a journalistic experiment that couldn't work, shouldn't work – but did.

Book review: Updike's 'Couples'

Adultery is mark of stagnant culture

By DON ONDREYKO

COUPLES. By John Updike. Knopf. 458 pp. $6.95.

Last year, a grotesque Hollywood comedy entitled "Divorce—American Style" depicted the desacralization of sex and marriage in the modern American culture. The film was extremely depressing, especially since its stars, Dick Van Dyke and Debbie Reynolds, had always been typical innocent Americans in the public eye.

This year, John Updike's new novel, "Couples," brings the same theme to the literary genre. His setting for extramarital gymnastics is Massachusetts, not California, but his characters are no less American than Dick and Debbie.

Obviously, John Updike has little respect for our culture. Science and business have depersonalized life. Governments and international relations have become destructive. Art has been replaced by duplication. Religion is lost in a forgotten language.

As a result, relationships between humans are more on the level of those between machines in a factory. The machines, however, are so insecure that clannishness and isolation are necessary to fend off all the fearful creatures of authentic existence. Involvement is now practicable only in input-output terms.

The trouble is that the factory—or clan of couples in Tarbox, Mass.—loses its creativity, for the individual craftswoman has prostituted herself to the rules of the system. Children are no longer born, they are "manufactured," and some never pass inspection.

John Updike has a knack for selecting an individual or group which ipitomizes the maladies of our culture. In "Rabbit, Run," it was Harry Angstrom, who felt the need for an escape from a meaningless existence. In "The Poorhouse Fair," the inmates of an old folks' home showed all the symptoms of cultural decay.

Now, in "Couples," Updike picks on Piet Hanema, a contractor who is not allowed to build the kind of house he would like to build, believe in a God he needs, nor love the woman to whom he is married. But, whereas Harry Angstrom ran from it all, Piet simply holds on to the outer rim of the carousel.

Piet, unable to find fulfillment and personalism in church, vocation, or wife, turns to adultry. In the Tarbox society, however, this is not unusual. There, the outsider is defined as the person who views adultry from a moral standpoint. In his very amorality, Piet is one of the clan, and therefore contributes to the stagnation of that clan. Even guilt becomes a matter of convenience.

Therein lies the body of the noval—more than four hundred pages of adultery. The reader comes to know each character not as a living, working human being, but rather as an element in an ever-changing maze of sexual relationships. What is most frightening, however, is our realization that without these relationships, there would be no reason for this society to exist at all.

So what is Updike's final judgment? His implied conclusion is that we have reached a point of cultural stagnation from which there can be no return. The evidence for this is almost a little too obvious in the metaphors he uses at the end of the novel: Piet gets squeezed out of his contracting partnership, the Tarbox Congregational Church burns down, and Piet's wife divorces him.

The divorce is especially fatal in Updike's view, for it is not the accepted thing in Tarbox society. Divorce has too many moral connotations. And to make it more serious, its imminence causes the wife-swapping to come to a near halt. With this last resort gone, the society has no choice but to drown in stagnancy.

Updike's judgment, then, is a destructive one, and therefore not unlike the assessments he has made in previous novels. His writing, however, shows improvement, although his first novels were excellent works of literature. The improvement is most noticeable in a greater sense of continuity and an increased ability to grasp the poetic within the routine.

The only flaw in the novel that I would complain about is that Updike occasionally lapses from novel-writing into story-telling. Because of the nature of his subject-matter, however, this does not become too much of a problem.

"Couples" accomplishes quite a lot, and, whether for better or worse, it is bound to become a best-seller. It undoubtedly confirms John Updike's position as one of the top American novelists today.

In review:

'Incident' flawed

THE ALGIERS MOTEL INCIDENT by John Hersey, Bantom Books. ($1.25) 334 pages.

Although John Hersey has undoubtedly written some fine books in the past--for example, "Hiroshima," "A Bell for Adano" — his latest book is not without flaw. The book concerns an incident which occurred during the 1967 Detroit riot. Three Negro youths were shot to death at close range after having been beaten. "Men in uniform" were allegedly responsible for the fatal shootings.

The story as presented is fragmented and disjointed at best. It takes the reader at least half of the book before all the characters involved are remembered. Before that happens, the reader finds himself continually flipping back to the beginning where Hersey has providentially listed the characters.

For all these criticisms Hersey has provided some interesting insights into the lives of the policemen involved and the families of the slain youths. Even here Hersey omits a great deal.

Hersey illustrates the inequality of the justice that was dispensed to the Negro community. The mockery Judge Schemanske made of the legal system is poignantly portrayed.

The "frustrated Kerner Report writer" has also provided his own contribution to riot literature although not officially. He feels that the double standard that exists in black-white sexual relations has a great deal of significance not only for the Algiers Motel incident but in the riots as well. At the Algiers Motel were two white prostitutes who were considered by the police to have been sexually involved with the slain Negro youths.

All of the facts regarding the murders will probably never be known. The trials have only begun. Hersey has tried not to prejudice the reader. To a limited extent he has accomplished this. The reader is pro-Negro at the book's conclusion but not so pro-Negro as to do something constructive to insure justice for all of America's citizens. —CAK.

DO Sports Dept.

Renegade editor recruits

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

If you wish to make your mark at Syracuse by having people curse behind your back, the sports page of the DO is a good place to start.

Sports editor Mike Greenstein has been enduring remarks for two years, and rumors that he takes out his vengeance on his reporters are just that: rumors.

However, since two of his former writers are now stuffed in the Field House Trophy Room, he urges all frosh interested in sportswriting to come in and see him during Orientation Week, or shortly thereafter. (Actually, he says this only to be formal — he will gladly take you in January or June, if you are still around, and if he is.)

His office is on the second floor of the Student Publications building, at 1101 East Adams Street, between Walnut Park and University Ave. The sports office is readily recognizable, as it is the only office on the second floor with wall to wall pictures. Greenstein can also easily be identified by his sloppy fedora, chewed up cigar and sneering look. He is also the only hippie in the place.

If you cannot find him there, look around campus for a flower covered 1962 Tempest, and follow it to the nearest bar.

It is advised that aspirants for the position of sportswriters a) be human; b) know sports; c) be patient; d) bring clippings if they have them; e) register for the one credit course Journalism 1A, even if they are not thinking of a journalism major. None of this, of course, is mandatory, as the DO is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

There are also positions open on the vast staff for females, as either writers, photographers or secretaries. Girls should disregard all insulting remarks made here about Greenstein and report in person with their credentials.

Projection '70...

Any problem which can't be worked out in consultations with the supervisors will be taken to Projection '70 administrators and, if necessary, to professionals.

Working with Projection '70 volunteers are Dr. John Wilson of the math clinic who is the professor in charge of the course, Dr. Frank Green of the reading clinic, Dr. Pete Knoblock and Dr. John Johnson of the special education department, and Dr. Bob Cohen of the pyschology department.

Because most of the tutees are Negro, they will use integrated textbooks. Tutors will teach reading and pronunciation using words familiar to the children.

Members of Projection '70 will visit cottages and dormitories during Orientation Week, explaining the program to new students and looking for volunteers.

From the anticipated 300 applicants, 150 will be selected; those with experience in Projection '70 will usually have priority.

It is important to have extra applicants to draw from, Bob pointed out, because if a tutor is not doing the work required of him, he can be replaced immediately.

Right now, Projection '70 needs money. The class of 1970 originally funded the project, but this year the class is involved in other projects and much less money will be allocated to Projection '70.

The program has a $7,000 budget, most of which is used for transportation costs and teaching materials. Various foundations are being checked for grants. If no money is found by September, Projection '70 will minimize its expenses and operate on a skeleton basis.

Forestry Frosh Strongest Ever

More than 305 freshmen and 115 transfer students will enter the College of Forestry as undergraduates this September. It will be one of the largest enrollments of new entering students in the history of the College.

Preliminary statistics from the admissions office indicate that this will also be the academically strongest freshmen class to ever enter the College. Approximately 84 percent of the entering freshmen will rank in the top two-fifths of their high school graduating class, and the mean scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test of the College Entrance Examination Board have reached new high's on both the Verbal and Math tests.

As is generally the case, the bulk of the students will be coming from New York, although as many as fifteen other states will be represented as far west as California and Montana and south to Louisiana. New Jersey sent the largest number of out of state students with Pennsylvania close behind. Foreign students will be coming from Greece, Turkey, and India.

This September's freshmen may have the most women students among its class that the College has ever enrolled.

The first few days on campus will be full of orientation activities. The College of Forestry's, New Student Convocation will take place on Monday, September 9 in Marshall Hall auditorium and will be followed by a New Student Reception that evening in the Rotunda of Bray Hall. On Tuesday, September 10, the Student Council Convocation for new students will take place in Marshall Hall auditorium.

Take a look, Frosh

The Daily Orange Freshman Edition traditionally bubbles over with enthusiasm and glowing words for Syracuse University. In this section, however, we seek to present a more balanced view.

The stories on the advising system and the drinking rule discuss two of the more negative aspects of college you will soon encounter. The stories on this page discuss the courtship between you and Syracuse and some of the important influences that brought about your union. The Mayfield Library and film stories emphasize two of the more positive aspects of SU.

We hope you will approach SU critically, always attempting to separate the myth about college from the reality. In this way we hope you will preserve some of the idealism you shall bring with you. So take a look, Frosh.

Two profs research

How you chose Syracuse

By ELIZABETH REYES

How did you happen to choose Syracuse University?

An uncle recommended it... Good size, good location...Good reputation...Good business school in the East...Encouraged by my guidance counselor...My parents and I seemed to agree...Well, it's a long story...

Usually, it is a long story and a very complicated one. But be assured that someone is aware. Two Syracuse professors, Dr. William P. Ehling of the Journalism School and Dr. George G. Stern of the Psychology Department, have researched the high school-to-college process.

Dr. Stern and Dr. Ehling both realize the great number of how's and why's behind that critical college decision. Their long-term studies are leading to a clearer vision, perhaps even a clearer pathway, for the high schooler headed for college.

Dr. Ehling, together with Dr. Harold D. Holder of Baylor University, has conducted the CODE research project for six years now. CODE--co for communications and de for decisions--has been carried out on the Syracuse campus through the Communications Research Center, the Psychological Research Center and the Computing Center.

CODE is on a search for a new guidance and selection theory and a more realistic communications system between the student and the college.

Dr. Stern and his associates are likewise on a search: for a functional design to achieve that optimal fit between the student and the college. After the collection of data over a period of 15 years, with the help of various researchers stationed on college campuses across the United States, perhaps the end is in sight. Dr. Stern's research material is all included in his completed manuscript "People in Context," soon to be published.

It is a complicated story, this choosing of a college. So, it has been broken down and analyzed from two different vantage points.

Dr. Ehling's research efforts have centered on the communication-decisional aspects of the high school-to-college process. CODE asks: How do high school students obtain information about higher education? And how might the student-college communication be improved?

Dr. Stern, influenced by social and psychological theory, breaks down the transition problem in other terms. His factors are personality and environment. His studies are of people and situations. His question is: which kind of student is attracted to which kind of college?

Dr. George Stern

Dr. Stern has spent 15 years collecting data on why students choose the colleges they do. The data will be published as a book, "People in Context."

To obtain his student data, Dr. Stern formulated the College Characteristics Index and the Activities Index, which are administered annually to the new freshmen. From the results of these two tests come the fibers for his pattern of student personalities interwoven with various "college cultures." On one hand are 2,000 colleges and on the other hand are the diverse types of the personality continuum. Dr. Stern stands in-between.

Some interesting results, isolated from their relative role in the total research project, may be noted. The C.C.I. indicates that all students have the same stereotyped expectations of college before they begin. But the Activities Index, on the other hand, reveals that particular colleges attract specific personality types.

Dr. Ehling collected data for CODE in September, 1962 and 1963, by means of his "College Information-Decision Questionnaire," which was filled out by 5,000 Syracuse freshmen. The questionnaire is composed of five sections: criteria of college choice, information sources, personal influences, college perception and demographic, and attitude. On one hand are the multitude of specifics and statistics of the decisional process and on the other hand are Dr. Ehling, Dr. Holder, and the Computing Center. They are at the stage of narrowing and filtering data.

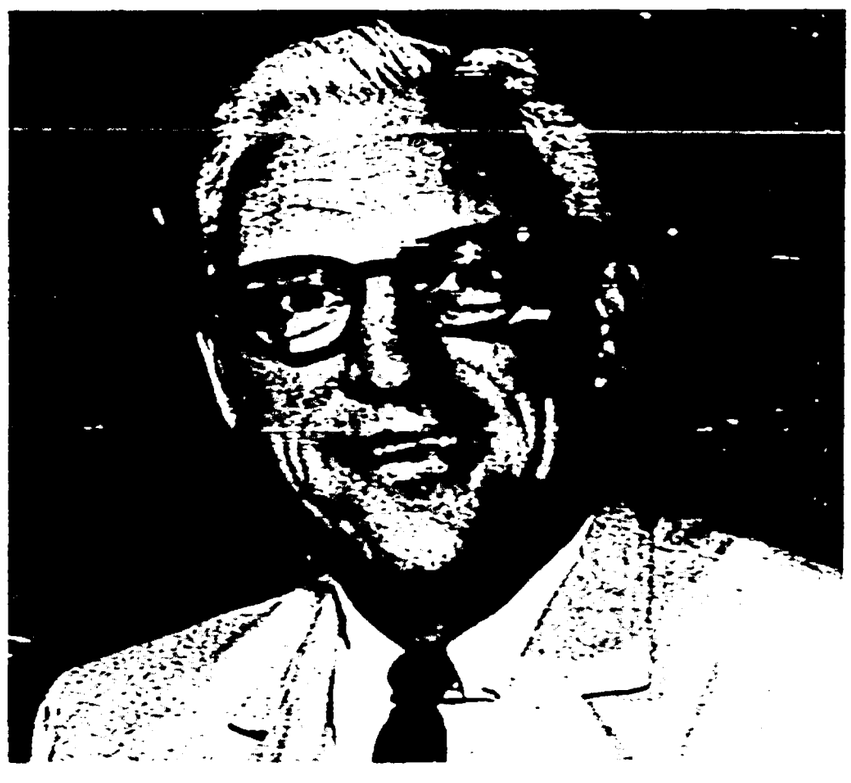
Admissions

How you're picked

"Admitting students to an environment in which they cannot succeed is cruel," says Lester H. Dye, director of admissions at Syracuse University.



The committee on admissions seeks individuals who can succeed in this particular university and does not use College Board scores as its chief criterion, he pointed out.

Each application is reviewed by Dye or a member of his staff, who stresses "the worth of the individual, not as determined by a computer."

Associate Director Arthur J. Fritz and Assistant Directors Clyde C. Cawley, Jeffrey R. Fletcher, Jan W. Kilehmainen and Pauline K. Madey comprise the staff and applications are routed to them in regard to special interests. For instance, Mrs. Madey handles foreign student applications and Fritz the athletes.

The offices receives from 9,200 to 9,500 applications, from which approximately 5,000 must be selected. Statistics from previous years on the number of withdrawals, those who decide not to come, indicate that slightly under half of the 5,000 actually become the freshman class.

In practice?

Prohibited: "The possession of any intoxicating beverages . . . or their use in campus buildings or living centers or at any University funtions, except . . . " Dates and Data

By LINDA JANSEN

Something there is about a rule. It's got to be enforced or practiced.

Syracuse University has a drinking rule. Sometimes it's practiced and occasionally enforced.

The long history of Syracuse's drinking rule requiring a dry campus was substantially modified February 12. The Committee on Student Life which passed the change established Standing Committee Number 1 to process campus groups' petitions to serve alcoholic beverages as part of a campus registered social function.

The administration now recognizes weekend wet spots on the dry campus. Most things are either dry or wet. Syracuse is neither.

Under the old rule, groups were particularly apt to get caught drinking because more people were involved. Students now seen drinking in their rooms, at athletic events, or at unregistered social events can still be suspended. But the understanding between the administration and students is that the former won't look, and the latter had best not get caught.

"Only 15 to 20 per cent of the cases brought to Student Court involved drinking," according to Tim Stebbins, a former member of the Student Court which hears individual violations of university rules. He also said, "If I were the Dean of Men, I could catch a thousand students this week."

The cases before the Court last year involved one girl punished for washing her hair in beer and some more flagrant misuses of alcohol. Students appear to believe the administration's non-enforcement of the university rule is likely to continue. What are student practices?

One store owner on Marshall Street estimated he sold four hundred six-packs to students each week. Another could not estimate how much beer was sold to students because, he said, it's impossible to distinguish between non-students, and some things a businessman's ethics "just don't allow him to disclose."

But the amount of alcohol bought doesn't give a complete picture in itself. Merchants queried said drinking was heaviest on weekends, at football and picnic times, about twice as much as weekdays.

Group infringements are handled by Inter-Fraternity Council's judicial board. Ben Levine, former IFC president, noted that paper bags were checked outside the stadium, and that students know how to handle themselves.

"Drinking misuse at football games was an inconvenience to those around the offenders. Punishment in such cases is strict," he said. "But the judicial board was organized late, and only two or three drinking cases were handled last semester."

Students admit drinking is widespread on campus, but it's not chronic drinking. "This rule change," according to Lorraine Olderman, "recognizes that drinking is part of any big weekend."

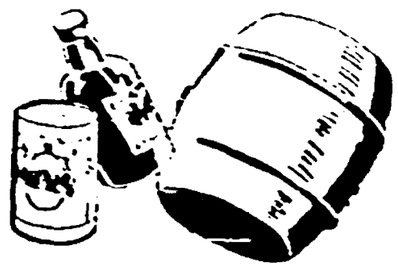
Some students think the present rule change makes the drinking issue one bit fuzzier and harder to enforce. "This has been a big step in attitude change for the administration," said one student. At the same time other students have said, "It just legalizes what's been going on."

Students who aren't pleased with the rule change maintain it isn't promoting individual responsibility. "Because the present rule recognizes only controlled group responsibility, it shows a lack of trust in students' judgment," commented Peg Johnson.

The reoccuring gripe is that the present drinking rule doesn't distinguish between use and misuse of alcohol, between drinking and being drunk.

When "the misuse of intoxicating beverages" was made part of the university rule in 1946, it was considered a big change. No liquor was allowed on campus, but there was some clear cut student freedom.

The 1941 rule had been, "The traditions and principles of the University prohibit drinking of any intoxicating liquors." Change came with the returning World War II service men.



The drinking rule had not been regularly published in the "Desk Book" or "Rules and Regulations" booklet, because it was a policy based on tradition and principles.

At the turn of the century, when the University required under-graduates to live in dormitories, the rule had to be spelled out. Change in the sixties, students feel, came about by pressure.

Peter Jeffer, president of Student Government, in 1966-67, sipped a can of beer defying the rule before an administration representative at a rally in DellPlain protesting the regulation. The Student Court refused to punish him, and resigned when the administration overruled it to give him a minor punishment.

The drinking rule change also reflects the student freedom that the Sixties generation has been demanding. And when birth control pills and marijuana are available, drinking seems to many students like a minor question for the individual and a senseless restriction in New York.

Student Court suggested a change in the drinking rule before the DellPlain incident last year. "You can't have a drinking rule so absurd as this one;" said Tim Stebbins, "it contaminates all the rules."

The present rule with its provisions for social drinking has come as close to a wet campus policy as possible without legalizing campus drinking.

One head resident suggested the policy had to be gradual because of the University's relations with the Syracuse community and parental attitudes. Other head residents have said the drinking rule doesn't coincide with their moral standards and they would not automatically turn in a student on his first offense.

A totally wet campus is not advocated by all students who drink. Many say "Not yet." The present rule allows drinking on campus only under specified conditions.

In a telephone conversation one fraternity brother was asked how much illegal drinking he thought went on on campus. "None," he replied. And when asked again commented, "This is a University telephone."

Because there is the discrepancy between rule and practice even in the administration, student drinking is still in practice a matter for the individual to make his own decision AND take his chances.

In reviewing the application, committee members look at the high school record first, in particular the grades and class rank. They use profiles of the secondary schools for descriptions of academic and socio-economic factors to put the grades and rank into perspective.

The recommendation by the guidance counselor gives additional insight into the student, his ability and potential. Like the autobiography, the counselor's statement often reveals special factors of health and family or latent potential.

Dye orders the criteria for selection as high school marks, class rank, counselor's recommendation, standardized test results (including the Scholastic Aptitude Test) and proposed program of study at Syracuse.

He describes high school activities as "an important part of the obituary," but added that it is difficult to judge in terms of the student's motivation and contribution.

He said he is looking for "young people who can grow and develop and still have room for activities."

If an applicant is interested in a particular field such as art or music, the recommendation by that dean, based on the portfolio or audition, is important. Dye draws a parallel between recommendations by deans and those of athletes by coaches. The statements are considered, but the applicant must still meet admissions standards.

As in other private institutions, said Dye, children of alumni of Syracuse are treated slightly more liberally. An Early Decision plan for children of alumni, by which those qualified can be accepted in the fall, was instituted this year.

Also started was the use of four candidates for degrees in higher education to interview prospective students. As an experiment, Assistant Director Cawley was placed in New York City last semester to conduct interviews; he met some 5,000 students and visited about 110 schools.

Conferences, PTA meetings and college planning panels bring the name of Syracuse before the public. Syracuse's unique academic structure of seven professional schools to which a freshman can be admitted is one element which is stressed.

Besides Liberal Arts, these are Engineering, Business Administration, Home Economics, Speech and Dramatic Arts, Art, Nursing and Music. Dye points out that this gives an opportunity for transfer within the University without the "insecurity of uprooting" to another campus.

Choosing a college . . .

CODE, according to Dr. Ehling, has already yielded some interesting information after preliminary analyses of data. The computed results place the student's information sources in this order: college catalogs, conversations with friends and discussions with teachers.

Computed results furthermore reveal that the topics most often discussed with the prospective college student are, in similar order: academic requirements, finances, location, and social atmosphere.

Dr. Stern and Dr. Ehling are very aware of the transition problem from high school to college. They are examining, they are theorizing, they are speculating, they are approaching. Most of all they are understanding.

Dr. Stern, having concluded "People in Context," relates the college-choice phenonmenon to three main social-phychological influences: 1) "narrowings," the student's environmental structures, such as family and social class; 2) personal choice, the individual's own measure of confidence and independence; and 3) the college's choice, based on standardized consideration of grades and records.

Dr. Ehling, still deep in data analysis of CODE material, has made a number of general observations on the transitional process: 1) the entire system is more complex and more variable than current guidance theory even admits; 2) the college-bound student is an independent, purposeful decision-maker, not a passive, malleable adolescent; 3) a student's information-search behavior is nevertheless patterned, inefficient and wasteful.

Based partly on the research efforts of these two professors, one a psychologist and the other a journalist, high school graduates may someday have an efficient college and student "operation match."

General student ($100) fee

Fee uses hard to specify

By HENRIETTA FIELEK

As any undergraduate catalogue will certify, SU charges $2,000 yearly in tuition plus a $100. general student fee–and students pay it.

The concrete term "tuition" attached to the $2,000 discourages challenge on the uses of the sum. "General student fee," however, is sufficiently vague to prompt any general student to investigate why the fee exists and what it pays for.

Almost all schools have a student charge of some kind, usually calling it a student activities fee or merely a general student fee.

The problem at Syracuse, said the dean of student affairs, Jim G. Carleton, is "one of nomenclature. Students are accustomed to thinking of the $100 as a student activities fee while it is not. The University organizes no student activities as such. It does provide student services, however."

The services he refers to are, generally, health service privileges, copies of the Daily Orange, admission to athletic events, psychological and vocational testing and the facilities of the Reading Improvement Center.

In 1956, when the tuition was raised from $800 to $900, Chancellor William P. Tolley said the University had several alternate ways to raise money. Maintaining the same tuition while adding a special student fee was only one of them.

The next year a student fee of $50 was added, as an official news release stated, "to meet the general increase in faculty salaries and because of the reduction in the purchasing power of endowment income due to inflation."

"The rationale behind the fee," Dean Carleton said, "was to consolidate a number of small expenses that the students were paying separately prior to the introduction of the fee."

In 1958 the University, which had introduced the student fee as an alternative to a rise in tuition, increased the amounts of both. The student fee was increased to $100 while the tuition reached a new high of $960 a year.

For the $100 the Syracuse student is entitled to everything in general and nothing in particular. To understand this it is necessary to review briefly the accounting system of the university.

According to Dean Carleton, all income of the University whether from tuition and fees or endowment is deposited in the University's general fund. From this fund all University expenses are met, including salaries and upkeep of the physical plant.

The $100, therefore, is not channeled into a separate fund for student services but travels the same route as the rest of the University's money.

Dean Carleton added that a breakdown of the fee would show that the University invests more than that amount per student for student services.

The former president of Student Government, Peter Jeffer, researched the origins and uses of the fee and cited, in an interview, two reasons for its creation. The first reason, already mentioned, was to help balance the University budget. The other factor concerns the presence of the State University College of Forestry on the Syracuse campus.

Jeffer explained that since the forestry school is state-controlled, Syracuse University trustees are unable to adjust the tuition. The students of the college, however, use the same facilities and are entitled to the same services as any Syracuse student.

The general student fee of the foresters, excepting $35 which, as the School of Forestry business office explained, is retained by the state, also goes into the general fund.

Dean Carleton said he was not sure if this was a deciding factor in the introduction of the fee but could not dismiss its possibility.

Can the student expect any more for the $100 than he already receives? Probably not, since no differentiation is made by the school officials between that fee and any others. The general student fee is merely an extension of the general student tuition.

Not up to par

Dorm libraries

By JAMES GREIG

The Syracuse University library system is not adequately serving the student body by providing easy accessibility to books, according to Morell Boone, the University's former residence librarian and Booth dorm director.

Boone thinks that the student at a university should have ready access to all library materials.

"The library has to come to the student, the student should not have to go to the library. Library service must be just that, especially for a student."

Boone, a certified librarian and library consultant with experience in the Pennsylvania school system, was asked by Dean of Men David Tatham to examine the living center libraries at Syracuse University.

He completed an extensive, critical report, "Residence Facilities based on a Learner-centered, Independent Study Approach," which was submitted to Tatham for action shortly.

Boone was supported by the Syracuse University School of Library Science. The major problem, he says, is that although the residence libraries have some direction, they lack professional guidance. He proposes that the University "organize a system of six individual libraries, bound together for economic efficiency. Each dorm should choose its own book collection, but the system should pay for the books."

When asked if the proposed new centrally located library will solve any problems, Boone replied that re-location of books will not significantly improve the situation. "A new central library still limits the accessibility of books."

Boone points out that Syracuse is no Harvard, as the residence facilities fall short of that figure, and range from poor to excellent. Boone called the Lawrinson library excellent, and hoped for its expansion, but rated the Dell Plain library, the largest, fair. Sadler is fairly good, but Watson, Booth, and Kimmel all "need help."

The women's residence centers, because of alleged financial difficulties, are not equipped with libraries. The male residence facilities receive priority, although Boone points out that in Haven Hall, for example, adequate space for a potential library exists.

Boone stated that Dean Tatham recognizes that books must be brought to the students. "He is trying to find out where we are and where we should be going. The purpose of dorm libraries is to make the dorm more than a sleeping center. It can be truly a living center, and also a learning center."

Successful authors

They went to Syracuse, a university of color and question, paradoxically personal and indifferent. But they went to Syracuse–and they are our writers.

Among the list of writers native to Syracuse are Joyce Carol Oates, John A. Williams, Richard Elman, Stephen Crane, Walter Schneir, Shirley Jackson, Harvey Jacobs, and Dorothy Thompson. Together they compiled work in all areas of writing: essay, short story, novel biography, autobiography, play, and article.

To delve back into histories of man, especially those of a writer, is a curiously satisfying experience for any interested person. Papers, books, scribblings, letters, notations, pictures, and citations are those things characteristic of writers.

While investigating the back grounds of the mentioned persons, such links as established faculty, manuscripts from The Mayfield Library, records from the Syracuse Archives, periodicals from the Carnegie Library, and friends with lucid memories were valuable.

Dr. D.A. Dike, professor of English, can offer valuable information on many writers. Walter Schneir, class of 1950, is a co-author with his wife of the recent Invitation to an Inquest. Schneir and his wife have done extensive research on the Ethel and Julius Rosenberg trial involving charges of espionage and the sale of atomic secrets to Russia, says Dike.

Another writer, Richard Elman, class of 1955, does free lance writing. He has published a novel, "Coat for the Czar," many feature articles such as "Ill at Ease in Compton," and some poetry. Presently he is finishing three new volumes: a novel and two non-fiction books related to sociology.

Stephen Crane, born in Newark, New Jersey, as the son of a Methodist minister, emerged from conventional and pious beginnings. For twenty-nine years he witnessed episodes of poverty, cruelty, fear, and death-experiences recorded clearly and bravely as newspaper reporter and as writer of fiction and poetry. His method was naturalistic and impressionistic as seen in his novel "Maggie: A Girl of the Streets" (1893) or in "The Red Badge of Courage" (1895).

From the beginning Crane showed more interest in observation than study according to records for boxing and baseball. In his brief stay at Syracuse he is remembered for having completed one semester of freshman English. A member of Delta Upsilon when the old DU house was standing, Crane used to go to the top room in the turret to smoke, undisturbed and uninhibited.

Two writers, perhaps not as well known, John A. Williams, class of 1950, a Negro who has written on Negro life, and Harvey Jacobs, class of 1950, an executive for ABC, who has written fiction for Esquire magazine, are among the list of Syracuse writers.

Further exploration, however, uncovers a myriad number of facts about three outstanding personalities: Shirley Jackson, Joyce Carol Oates, and Dorothy Thompson.

Shirley Jackson, a distinguished novelist and short story writer, was a student at Syracuse who kept to herself and lived within herself says John S. Mayfield, secretary of the Syracuse Library Associates. She has published at length in England. Among her books are ghost stories such as "Haunting of Hill House" which sharpen the mind and imagination of the reader. Other books of interest are "The Lottery Hangsman," "Life Among the Savages," "Witchcraft of Salem Village," and others. Within the past five years Shirley Jackson came to Syracuse and gave a reading at Gifford Auditorium. She presented an interpretation of one of her stories for an adult audience and second for children. At the same time she was awarded the Arent's Medal, given to the outstanding alumnae or alumnus.

A more recent graduate of Syracuse who achieved acclaim for her book, "By the North Gate" is Joyce Carol Oates. In 1959 Miss Oates won the Mademoiselle fiction contest. Since then her articles have appeared in Short Story International, Southwest Review, Colorado Quarterly, Epoch, Arizona Quarterly, and Cosmopolitan. In 1963 "The White Fine Mist of Winter" was chosen to be part of the O. Henry Awards anthology and Best American Short Stories. "Stigmata" and "Upon the Sweeping Flood" have also been hailed with the same volumes.

Miss Oates has also written "Studies in Short Fiction," "With Shuddering Fall," "Upon Sweeping Flood," "A Garden of Earthly Delights," as well as essays on people such as Shakespeare, Melville, Conrad, and Samuel Beckett.

Film Forum and UU prosper

Is Syracuse a cinema oriented campus?

The college campus is always affected by social change or new modes of expression. To some observers the Syracuse campus appears in the midst of a film awakening, in which feature films are playing an integral part.

"There is no question," says the Rev. Norman O. Keim, adviser to the Film Forum, "that the Syracuse campus is becoming cinema-oriented by its recent response to recent film showings."

Coming to Syracuse University seven years ago, the Rev. Mr. Keim found no organized film group on campus. Interest was low and there existed a lack of stimulus to promote the showing of top films.

Gradually, however, interest began to grow as University Union provided feature films for the student body.

One main problem that faced University Union and all subsequent organized film groups was the lack of good equipment. The only projectors available were 16 millimeter.

Since all recent films have been produced on 35 millimeter, these groups were limited in their selection of films.

The University could not appropriate enough funds in its budget to purchase better equipment, so last year Film Forum, sponsored by the United Campus Christian Fellowship, purchased the 35 millimeter equipment.

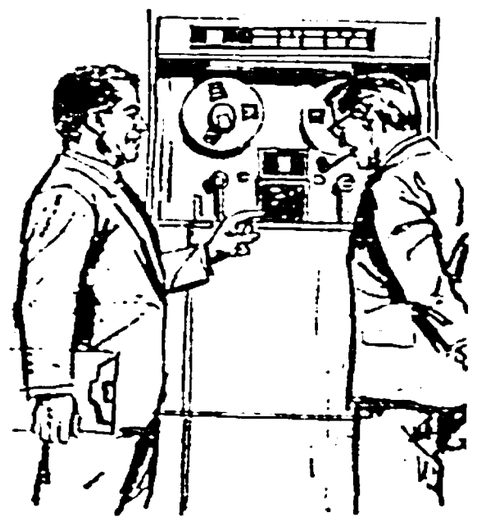
Jason Squire, a junior majoring in television and radio, and co-ordinator of Film Forum stated, "The real turning point in the success or failure of films on campus was the purchasing of the modern equipment."

"No longer were we limited in what could be shown."

Squire, a self-defined film critic, believes the new equipment, which is on a par with that in theatrical houses, increases the professionalism in which the movies are shown.

Extensive improvements have taken place during the Rev. Mr. Keim's seven years on campus.

"The major improvement, of course, is the better quality and number of films being shown. This is possible because of the excellent equipment available."



"What we are doing now basically is showing the best of the art-type pictures, many of which ordinarily do not come to a town like Syracuse. We have a number of theaters, a dozen or so theaters in Syracuse. They're virtually all of the commercial type, and they don't really want to take a chance on some of the more arty type of pictures.

"We show a lot of foreign films. The Polish film, of course, has been very strong over the past ten years, and now the Czech film is at its height. And of course now the Hungarian, Bulgarian, Rumanian film is just coming into its own.

"We ran an "East European Film Festival last year where we showed a number of the more popular films," added Rev. Keim.

A surprising fact is that many films shown are first run art films. "Marat-Sade," which played to more than 5,000 people during its recent run at the Regent Theatre, was shown for the first time in Syracuse.

Rev. Mr. Keim pointed out, "A few years back average attendance was 200 to 300 people for a showing, while this year the average has climbed to 1,200."

University Union has found great success with its Friday night movie. Gifford Auditorium is always packed with film goers every week.

Hillel's showings are received equally well, as that organization has succeeded in presenting top motion pictures.

In an attempt to stimulate student film makers Film Forum has initiated grants of $250 toward the production of the student's film. The Forum has awarded three this year.

A recent innovation on the Syracuse campus is the Film Festival, under the auspices of Film Forum. Last fall's presentation proved very successful with such well-known personalities as Jack Valenti and Otto Preminger as guest speakers.

Film Forum produced a two day retrospective to highlight the career of Henry Fonda. The actor visited campus during the two days and spoke with film students and toured the University. In addition, several of his films were shown and his latest, "Yours, Mine, and Ours," was given its premier showing.

Film Forum plans to produce similar retrospectives, although it recently received word that Gregory Peck would not be able to attend one planned for him.

The modern films of today are geared toward the college audience. Their message then, is directed predominately toward the college student.

The question arises then, to what extent the campus is affected by films.

Jason Squire feels the campus is not cinema-oriented. "The campus is not cinema-oriented now, but it is headed in that direction eventually. It could be as soon as one year."

"This process cannot be forced, it is evolutionary, and must come naturally, and it eventually will," he continued.

We are visually oriented in this modern age, he believes, and with the greater abundance of good films available the campus cannot be untouched by its effect.

Squire believes the great acceptance of films is evident because they are "involving and personal."

The qualities that the campus lacked several years ago, such as equipment, good films, organized leadership and a stimulus toward production are now present. The upcoming year will hold the answer to the real effect that the cinema has on campus.

Ecumenical movement

Sects work toward unity

By CHARLENE CANAPE

"For everything there is a season, and a time for every matter under heaven:
a time to be born, and a time to die;
a time to plant, and a time to pluck up
what is planted..."

A time to work together toward a common goal—unity among Christians.

This is the aim of the ecumenical movement, especially at Syracuse University.

"There are approximately 250 recorded Christian denominations in the world today," said Rev. Charles Borgognoni, chaplain of the Newman Association. "On campus, six different sects have full time chaplains, another ten have part time chaplains, and there are still others without chaplains."

Current records show the break-up of religions at S.U. as: 3,000 Catholics, 2,400 Jews, 1,200 Methodists, 900 Episcopalians, 400 Lutherans, 50 Friends, 40 Christian Scientists, 50 Moslems, 40 Buddhist, 40 Hindus, and 1,600 divided among United Campus Christians, Baptists, Disciples of Christ, Evangelican, United Bretheren, Moravian, Reformed Church in America, United Church of Christ, and United Presbyterian Church.

"Such divisions are hardly a sign of love and openly contradict the word of Christ while hindering the preaching of the gospel," said Father Borgognoni.

These divisions are being softened by the University Religious Council made up of chaplains from 12 different religions.

"The Religious Council serves as a clearing board for planning activities with one another," said Father Charles. "For example, there was an ecumenical service once a week during Lent, and we held a Sedar service at the end of Lent."

"Ecumenism is the restoration of unity among all Christians because Christ founded one church," Father Charles explained. "This is what we are trying to do—to bring the aims of the movement on an international level to a college level."

The movement has encountered some opposition from Catholics who feel that although the church exists in the modern world, it should definitely not be a part of it.

"One of the duties of a Catholic should be to recognize the sign of the times and take an active part in ecumenisism," said Father Charles.

Although Father Borgognoni does not think unity is near, he does think progress has been made.

"Just the fact that we use Hendricks Chapel for Masses is amazing. Years ago it would have been unheard of," he said.

The advances made cannot be termed advances toward reuniting the church, because there never has been a monolithic church. Even before the Protestant Reformation religions such as the Orthodox, Cops, Cesarianites, and the Hussites existed.

Protestants were probably the first to realize the need for resolving differences among Christians. Throughout the 1930's, it was Protestant world meetings that set the stage for groundwork in church unity.

Reverend Dr. John H. McCombe, Dean of Hendrick's Chapel said, "Men of good will in both traditions have always sought unity. Efforts to bring about understanding and unity in the modern era, since the turn of the century, has gone dramatically forward."

The main obstacles to unity are the disagreements of the two religions over the primacy of the Pope, the celibacy of the priesthood, and the position and function of the Virgin Mary.

While the Roman Catholic church has taken a strong stand against birth control, the Protestant Church endorses and supports family planning.

One of the results of ecumenicism has been to produce a dialogue between competent experts of different churches. The aim is for one side to reach a clear-cut conclusion on an issue and convince the other side of the logic leading to that conclusion.

Cooperation and understanding between Christians and non-Christians has also resulted. The Sedar service held at the end of Lent, for instance, was led by Rabbi Elefant, head of the Syracuse Hillel, the largest hillel organization in the country.

The Moslems are in the process of becoming a member of the University Religious Council and will be celebrating their Feast of Ramadam in Hendrick's Chapel.

According to Dean McCombe, another activity among the religions has been Operation Volunteer where students are linked to various churches in the city.

Cultural affairs, such as art exhibits, are held in Hendrick's Chapel with all faiths participating.

"The word ecumenical comes from two Greek words which mean 'of the same household,'" said Dean McCombe. "We are learning that in today's world our former divisions are a scandal. Truly all men are part of the family of God. We must see every man as our brother. The ecumenical movement is helping to build tomorrow's world where good will and mutual understanding will be facts of life and the hard stuff of reality."

Buried beneath White Hall

Archives serves as memory bank of SU

By MARY McDANIELS

Mention the word "archives," and immediately the picture comes to mind of a dusty museum where a miscellaneous assortment of curious mementos are kept locked in glass cases.

This, according to James Owen, S.U. archivist, is a common misconception. Housed (buried?) in two small rooms in the subbasement of E.I. White Hall, the University Archives, are the records of nearly one-hundred years of S.U. history: a "personal record" of the University.

The contents of this "personal record" (with the exception of the records of the present administration) are open to inspection by anyone: serious researcher and "weekend historian" alike.

In one of its most important functions, Owens says, the Archives material serves as a guide for faculty and staff who, by examining past successes and failures can more constructively plan future policy, governing non-academic as well as academic matters.

The first-time visitor, after threading his way through the labyrinth, may feel even more confused when he reaches his destination.

File cabinets line one wall of the main office; a desk opposite the cabinets is piled high with clippings waiting to be mounted and filed. In the second room, more file cabinets are flanked by rows of bookshelves.

Closer inspection, however, reveals a systematically preserved "memory bank."

One file is devoted entirely to photographs of the University and its faculty over the years. Also on hand are blueprints, abandoned plans for campus expansion, and an assortment of catalogues, pamphlets and other items published by the University.

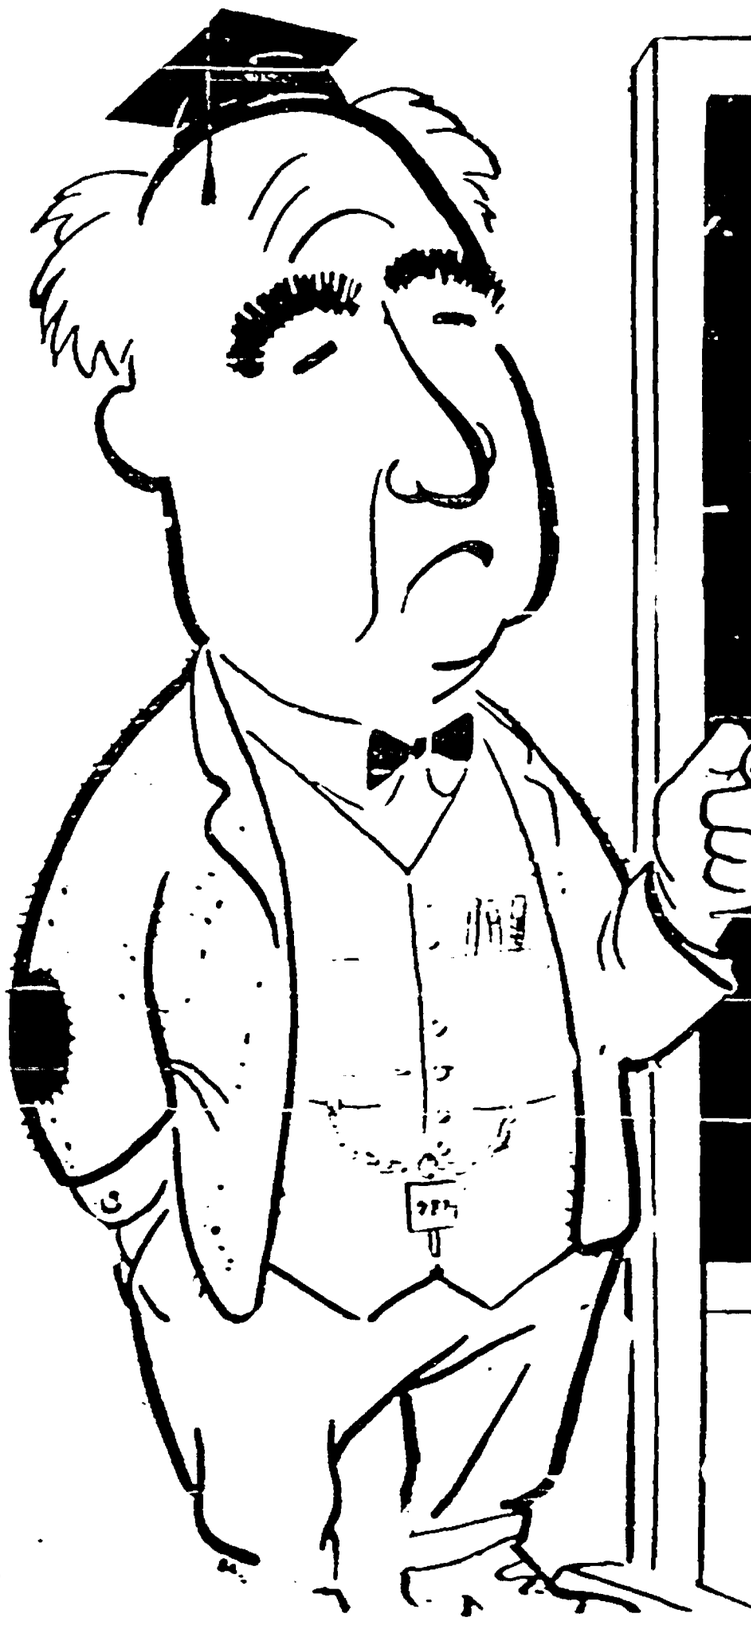
Original copies of every thesis and dissertation are preserved, not so much for their individual content, but rather as an historical record of the variety of research which has been done here.

Remember "The Sword" (1963)? How about "Dilemma," "The Argot," "The Spectre" and "The Vamp?" These "rebels" (. . . and don't forget the "Pro"), along with such familiar student publications as the "Daily Orange" and the "Onondagan" are bound and kept.

The most active file, according to Owens, is the extensive clipping file. Students, he said, find this file a valuable source of information for term papers.

A portion of the file is devoted to faculty: a sort of miniature "Who's Who" with a folder for each professor containing clippings about him.

The liviest, and without doubt the fastest-growing of the clipping files is the one on controversial issues. In it are articles on all student/faculty involvement in debates, demonstrations, along with opinions and "opinionateds." The issues range from civil rights to Black Power, from Vietnam protests to drugs on campus to Food Service.



The S.U. Archives, in preserving the records and other historical items such as photographs and publications, is the memory of the institution: its intellectual and cultural historian.

Although cramped and practically hidden, the Archives performs a vital service for the University in preserving its past for constructive use in the future.

Director of psychological research

Prof. Stern: a 'person-oriented' researcher

By JUDY CULLATHER

The intense gaze must be that of either an extremely acute person or of a psychologist, for the amount of eye contact he maintains is extraordinary.

In this case it is both, for the regard belongs to George G. Stern, director of the Psychological Research Center at Syracuse University.

Dr. Stern has the rare gift of concentration which makes the person speaking with him feel at ease just by sensing the concern. As one of his associates phrases it, at the moment of your conversation with him "you are the sole focus of his attention."

Stern is a "person-oriented researcher" and his sensitivity lends depth to his studies, especially those concerned with students and student concerns. When he speaks of his research with masses of students, he reveals an awareness of the individual behind the questionaire (or behind the notebook in an interview).

The College Characteristics Index and Activities Index which he developed are perhaps most familiar to Syracusans, for these surveys are given to incoming freshman. The data from these form the basis for some of his theorizing.

The Freshman Myth, treating the misconceptions of college held by those entering college, is one such theory. "The Book on Bardot's Bottom" is the rather intriguing alternate title to "Myth and Reality in the American College."

In explaining the myth, Stern differentiates between two aspects of institutions: developmental factors related to the individual, and control factors which include among them those for continuation of the institution.

The selective liberal arts colleges are mostly concerned with personal development, minimizing control, he believes, while some institutions will maximize control. None every actually minimizes the personal factor.

Prospective freshmen however, according to Stern, tend to expect both. They expect academic opportunities and extracurricular programs which exist together nowhere.

He says that the most outstanding of their expectations is not the opportunity for freedom or play but the maximization of chances for self-expression, individuality and creativity.

The more hardened upperclassmen and the faculty, according to Stern, agree on control elements of the institution and theirs is an essentially realistic evaluation. Trustees have a different but still inaccurate picture while the administration shares the view of the freshmen.

"Evidently they both read the same literature," he says.

Before his term expired as president of the Dunbar Association, an inner city settlement house, Stern became sufficiently incensed with a Wall Street Journal series on race relations and the War on Poverty to write a letter of correction to the editor.

In it he refuted the Journal's assumption that "the black community of America can be satisfactorily represented by those outside it....Channels to black leadership should be developed now."

At present Stern is on a local committee on school integration and better education for the disadvantaged.

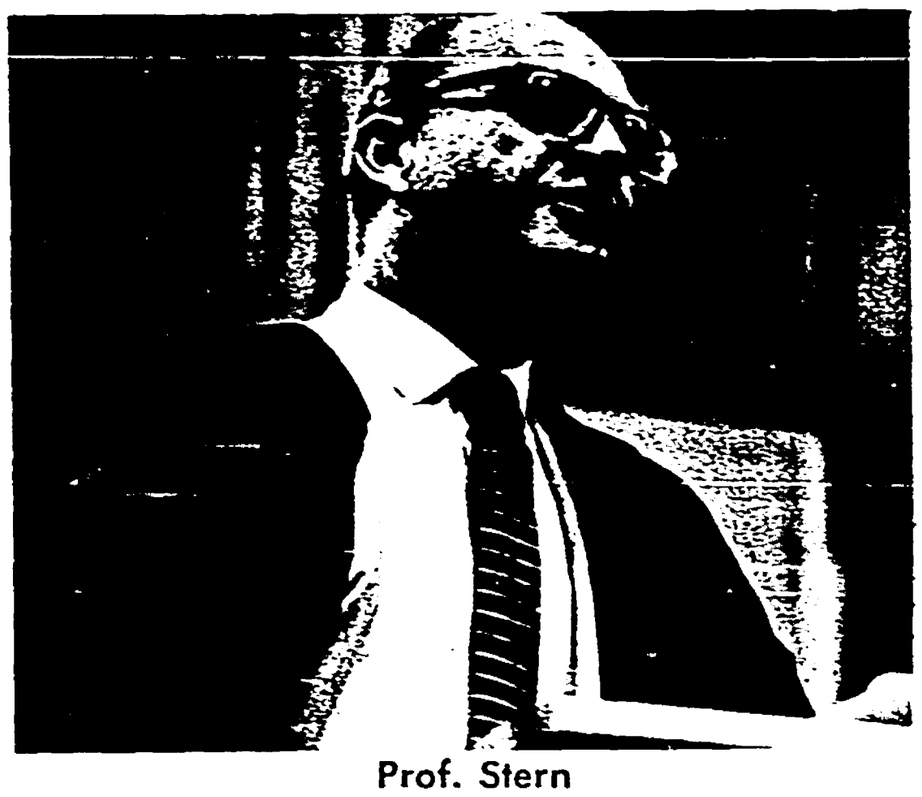
He is also on a panel, formerly part of President Johnson's Scientific Advisory Committee, which is developing a package for subsidization of students and Negro higher education.

The dynamism which enables Stern to apply himself effectively in so many fields has led to the warning "you can't keep up with him."

The Reverend George Dolch has not found this to be exactly true. Stern is on the advisory committee for Rev. Dolch's doctoral dissertation dealing with student attitudes, and, according to Rev. Dolch, he always has time to meet a pressing situation.

"He has an unusual ability to see through vague gropings to the real objective and come up with a perceptive response."

Dolch also notes Stern's flexibility, the mark of a good researcher. "Effective research demands that the researcher be ready to reappraise in the light of new discovery. Only thus is he able to keep his results timely and of maximum benefit."



When Stern is questioned about previous work of his, this trait becomes apparent. For instance, he calls a paper on the transition from high school to college "an early attempt to get at what we later did in a more straight-forward manner."

Other topics he has treated include unconscious motivations of teachers, the personality structure of theology students, the intellectual climate of college environments and a paper called "Some Characteristics of Honors Candidates (at SU), Class of 1967."

Many of these are incorporated in a book soon to appear in print entitled "People in Context: the Measurement of Environmental Interaction in School and Society." One section of this is devoted to a comparison among Marian and Bennington College students and senior women in the College of Liberal Arts at Syracuse.

He found, among other things, that students would not be interchangable; that is, for transfers to Syracuse from either small all-girls' school the greater freedom would not compensate for the loss of the advantages that come with a tiny school where students share a common background.

He also used Syracuse to illustrate differences among the students of individual schools within a university. Forestry students, for instance, share traits not common in the School of Business Administration.

Prof. Stern

Stern, who got his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1949, has been at Syracuse since 1953

The Xeroxed WORK sign in his office, part of the artwork scattered throughout the department, is particularly appropriate for this man. And he is not a stuffy scholar either; his book-laden office is relieved by framed color comic strips.

As he sits in his characteristic pose, hands held behind head, one Hushpuppied-foot on the other knee, totally engrossed in the person with whom he is speaking, one cannot help but be impressed with him as a professional and as a man.

A minority of one

Lone Maxwell Republican is also a gifted teacher

Who, me . . . ?

By CINDY FELZER

An open door into his office, a friendly smile and a bellowing hello: this is Michael O. Sawyer, a student's professor. He is also one of the best liked and most respected people on campus.

Speaking of his offices in Sadler dormitory and Maxwell, "Everybody should have two offices," said the dignified looking political science professor. "Besides avoiding the too great separation between the faculty and the students, I get to meet and talk to different students in the Sadler office than those that come to this one."

Leaning forward from behind his neatly ordered desk, Dr. Sawyer, in an interview, emphasized his endless fascination with human beings, and how important it is to him than many of his best friends are students.

"Why did I become a teacher?" he said, repeating the question. "I had to eat, and besides I like books and ideas and people and social problems, and I didn't want to become a physician. So that left either a teacher or a lawyer. I combined them and have the best of all possible worlds."

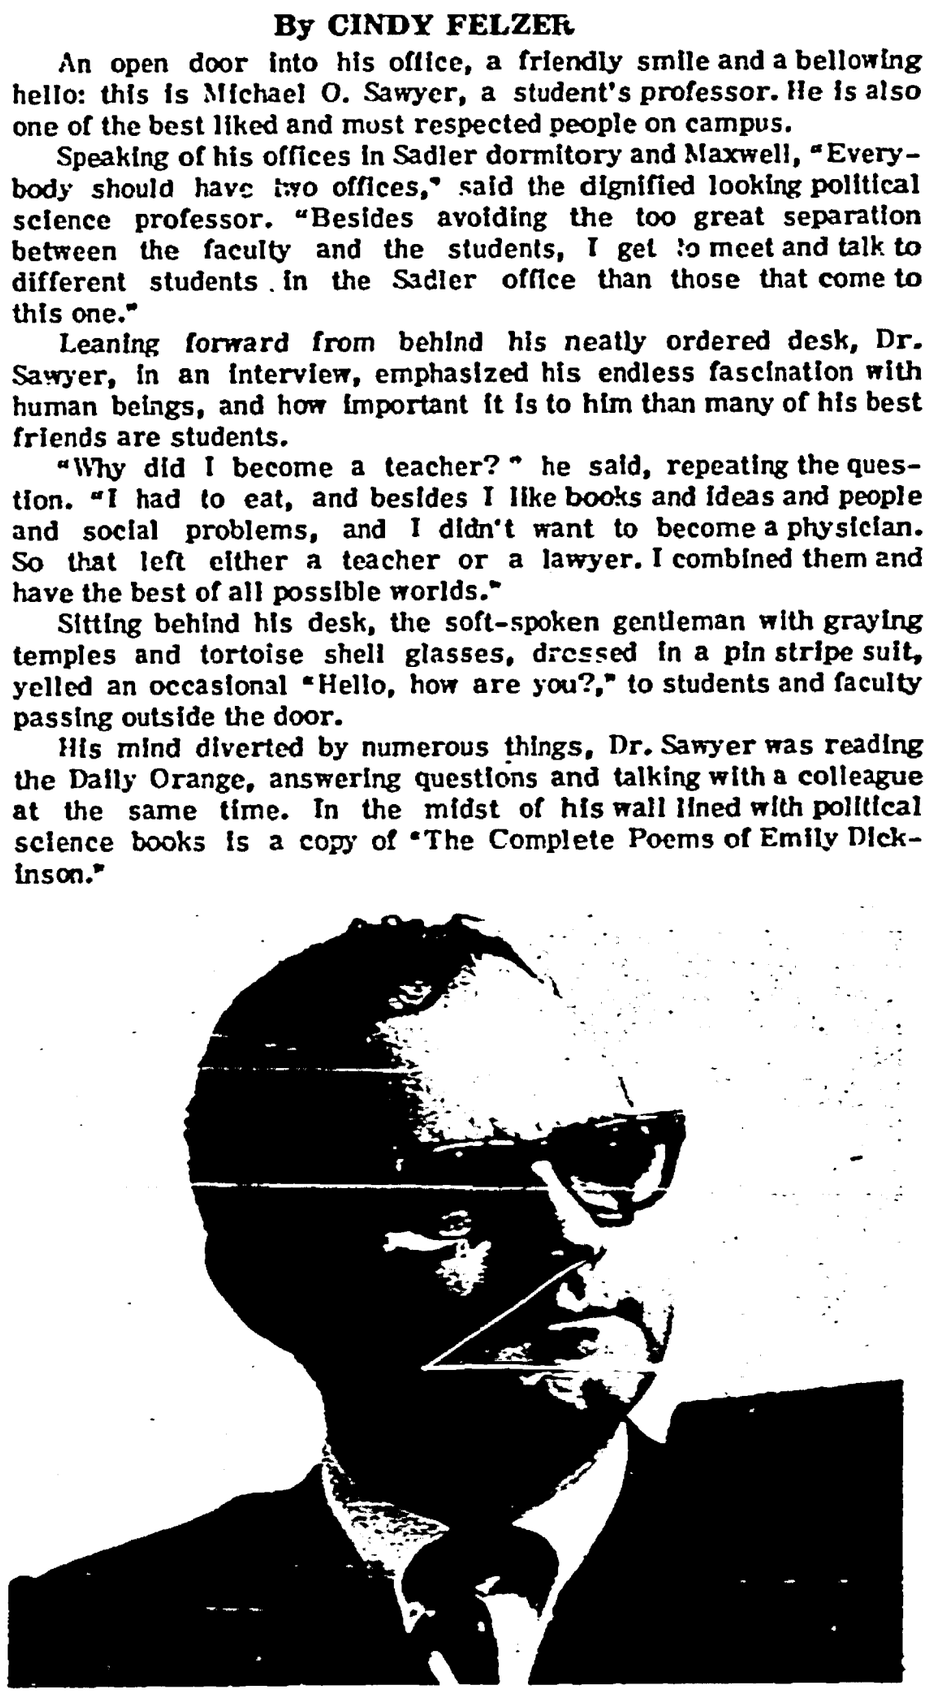
Sitting behind his desk, the soft-spoken gentleman with graying temples and tortoise shell glasses, dressed in a pin stripe suit, yelled an occasional "Hello, how are you?," to students and faculty passing outside the door.

His mind diverted by numerous things, Dr. Sawyer was reading the Daily Orange, answering questions and talking with a colleague at the same time. In the midst of his wall lined with political science books is a copy of "The Complete Poems of Emily Dickinson."

"There are a thousand things that can be done to increase intellectual emphasis," he said looking up from the paper, "one important thing being the establishment of a residence college."

Dr. Sawyer seemed interested in this endeavor as he explained that he would like to see the establishment of a residence college as promptly as possible. He would like to see it go beyond the present planning for a residence college in the St. Mary's complex to include students of the same academic major. He would divide the entire Liberal Arts college into approximately ten residence colleges.

"This would produce a place for middle size loyalty and greater communication between the students and faculty as well as limiting the separate worlds," he says.



"There are two cultures, the student dorm culture and the classroom-faculty culture," Dr. Sawyer said. "The worlds are too far apart."

The only Republican in the Maxwell School amusedly leaned back in his chair to tell of a Republican underground within the Maxwell School.

It is natural, he said, that a teacher's viewpoint, particularly a political science or government teacher's political viewpoint, will come through in his teaching.

"It's perfectly alright for a teacher's views to come through when teaching," he said, "as long as when he is uttering an opinion, he labels it an opinion, and that he allows people to disagree with him."

Dr. Sawyer follows what he says, for according to one of his students, "Dr. Sawyer is an excellent lecturer, and very forceful, although he doesn't try to force himself on the students."

Prof. Sawyer

In addition to his academic work, the 49-year-old professor is and has been active in party politics in New York State. His many community activities have included the following: vice-chairman of the Onondaga County Republican Committee; Board of Directors, Republican Citizens Committee; Advisory Committee, Joint Legislative Committee on Election Law, State of New York; executive director, Committee on Bill of Rights and Suffrage, New York State Constitutional Convention.

He has been also a consultant on reapportionment to the New York State Attorney General, on budgetary policy to the New York State Senate, and on convention politics to the National Educational Television.

Dr. Sawyer is a national consultant for Upward Bound, as well as a tutor for Projection '70.

Although interested and active in party politics, a teacher in political science with a law degree from George Washington University, Dr. Sawyer denies any interest in running for office.

"I wouldn't want to run. I've got a better job. Hurray for people who do run for office and like it. I have too great a regard for my privacy."

Concerning the national Republican campaign, Dr. Sawyer supports Rockefeller. Speaking of his personal "chemical reaction against Mr. Nixon," Dr. Sawyer said, "Although Rockefeller is older than Mr. Nixon, he paradoxically is younger; he is fresher and has a greater appeal to the young."

John S. Mayfield

Collects birds' eggs, books

Sitting behind his large wooden desk with piles of books, papers and assorted curiosities, John S. Mayfield is comfortable.

He smokes, taking long draws which give him time to think before answering.

At 64, Mayfield is balding, husky and a lively Texan. His smooth southern accent enhances his easy going, good-natured attitude.

"I never work, this is fun," comments Mayfield about his job as curator of manuscripts and rare books at Syracuse University. He works mostly with the Mayfield Library, his private collection donated to Syracuse University in 1964.

Authors included in the collection are; George Bernard Shaw, Lord Byron, Algernon Charles Swinburne, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Robert Browning, and Robert Frost.

Mayfield has been collecting for over 40 years.

He began collecting bird's eggs, then cigar bands, then stamps and finally his collecting habit culminated in the area of books.

Mayfield grew up in Austin, Texas, where his father, the youngest man ever elected to a state senate, worked.

After graduating from the University of Texas in 1930 the young Mayfield went to Southern Methodist University for his master's degree, and at the same time headmaster of Peacock Military Academy and Junior College.

He studied at Columbia University taking graduate courses in preparation for the state department.

"My father wanted me to follow him in politics," explained Mayfield.

While at Columbia, he worked for Macy's Department Store in the book department which contained part of the William Randolph Hearst Collection.

"At the end of the week I used to pay Macy's because of all the books I bought," said Mayfield.

He went to Washington and worked in the General Accounting Office. Lyndon Johnson was also in Washington working for Congressman Kleeberg from Texas.

Mayfield then became chief of recruitment in the personnel department. It was a political job. Democratic senators would try to get constituents jobs through him.

After Pearl Harbor, Mayfield joined the Navy as Lt. Senior Grade. He was assigned to the South Pacific where he "didn't miss any of the big battles."

He still collected books. "Wouldn't let a little war stop me," he said.

Mayfield did not like to talk about the war. "It is rough and dirty and bad," he said.

Yet he said he would like to go to Vietnam. "I don't know anything about the rightness or wrongness of the Vietnam war but I'll support my country. If my country is in danger, I'm ready," explained Mayfield.

After the war Mayfield returned to Washington and worked for the War Assets Administration and then as director of personnel in the Pentagon. He did not like these political jobs.

Finally in 1951 Mayfield began working with books in the Department of Libraries in Maryland. He was in charge of consolidating all the state's libraries.

In 1961 he and his collection came to Syracuse.

Although Mayfield did not follow his father's political ambitions, he did succeed in establishing a fine collection and a respect among scholars and collectors.

"Mayfield is very erudite; it is hard to keep up with him," said Frank Slye, a retired General Electric executive and a book collector and dealer.

"Mayfield has compiled a magnificant collection. I break the 10th commandment everytime I see it," Slye said.

"Mayfield is also a man you can jolly with and who will jolly right back," explained Slye.

Harold J. Nisnoff met Mayfield while he was supervisor of the photography department at Syracuse University.

"Mayfield is quite a gentleman. He is not only a scholar, he is an uncommon scholar with down-to-earth common sense," commented Nisnoff.

He takes his work seriously, but not too seriously," Nisnoff said.

Mayfield describes himself as "shockproof."

Even the young generation does not shock him.

"Some of the things done today are plain vanilla compared to the things done when I was in school," he said.

"I like this generation but I think there is a lack of thinking today, casualness in other words," Mayfield explained.

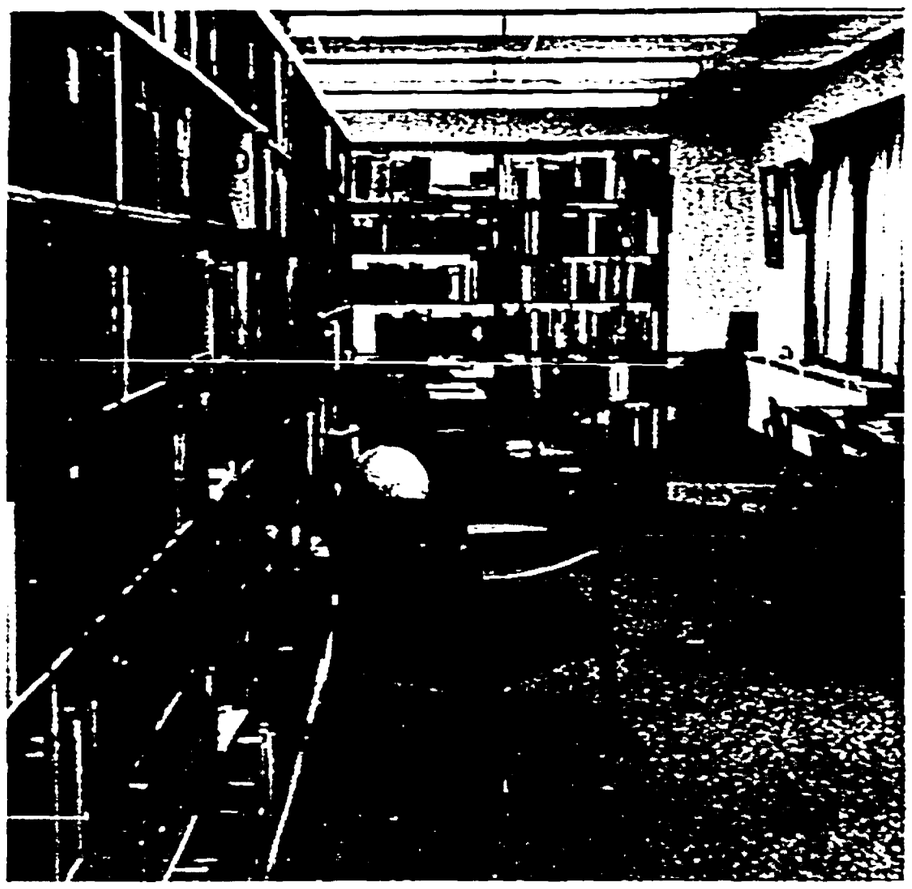
"I'm surprised what gets published because it is poor grammar," Mayfield said.

"In Cold Blood" was "poorly written," said Mayfield. "Capote was not the man to write it and I told him so," he added.

Mayfield likes Hemingway but feels F. Scott Fitzgerald is dated.

"Death of a President," Mayfield feels is "corny as can be."

Mayfield does not like to look at the past. "The past is secure, the past is but a prologue," he said.



"I am looking toward the future," Mayfield stated.

When the new library is completed, Mayfield and the Mayfield Library will move into the sixth floor.

Mayfield plans to stay with his library and keep collecting. He is as much a part of the collection as the books themselves.

John S. Mayfield applies a protective cover to the dust jacket of a rare book. He is the curator of the Mayfield Library, insured for $1,250,000 by Lloyds of London.

Room for quiet contemplation and study is one of the features of the Mayfield Library.

Above the Marine Midland Bank is a different kind of treasury. A treasury of more than 50,000 books and manuscripts insured for more than $1,250,000 at Lloyd's of London.

It is the Mayfield Library.

John S. Mayfield, curator of manuscripts and rare books at Syracuse University since 1961, and his wife, Edith, donated their private collection to Syracuse University on November 20, 1964.

The collection contains first editions, privately printed works, autographed works, manuscripts, letters, original oil paintings, and books with unusual bindings.

Of particular interest are the journals and letters of Mayfield's father, Sen. Earle B. Mayfield of Tylor, Texas. His correspondences trace the political career of President Lyndon B. Johnson, a close family friend.

The works range in date from the year 1200 to the present. Special emphasis is placed on English and American literature of the 19th century.

The most complete selection is the works of Algernon Charles Swinburne, Mr. Mayfield's favorite author.

Dr. Cecil Y. Lang, while he was a professor of English at Syracuse University, did extensive research in the Mayfield Library. He values the Swinburne collection as "incomparably the most valuable and most extensive in a private collection in the world today."

The oldest work is Pali Literature, the sacred literature of Buddhism.

The most recent works are by Claudia de Lys who writes about superstition.

Contained in the collection are such authors as: George Bernard Shaw, Robert Browning, Jack London, Walt Whitman, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Robert Frost, O. Henry, and Lord Byron.

The library is small but well organized. Each book has 11 cross references. Duplicate catalogue cards are in the main library.

Mayfield believes that there is "a wealth of material that could be used most profitably by scholars and students in the preparation of theses, dissertations or articles."

Tucked in between the stately books are curiosities. Each shelf is unique and intriguing. On one shelf Mayfield has placed all the things he found in books such as leaves, letters, clippings, pieces of cloth and photographs.

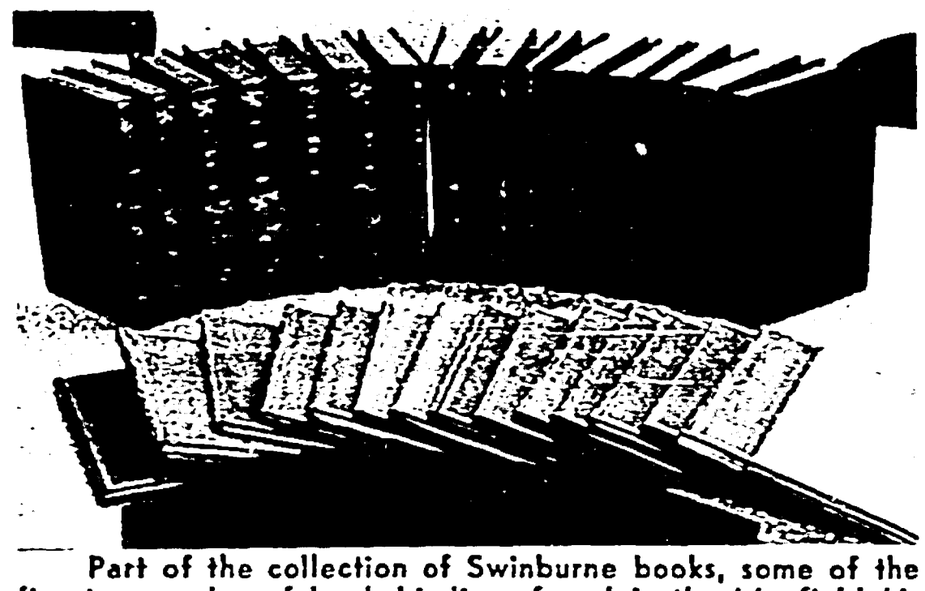
There is a Confederate rifle propped in a corner. Currency of the Republic of Texas dated 1839 is stacked on the shelves.

Numerous pictures, paintings, busts and momentos of famous authors are displayed.

A charming collection of miniature Bibles are also exhibited.

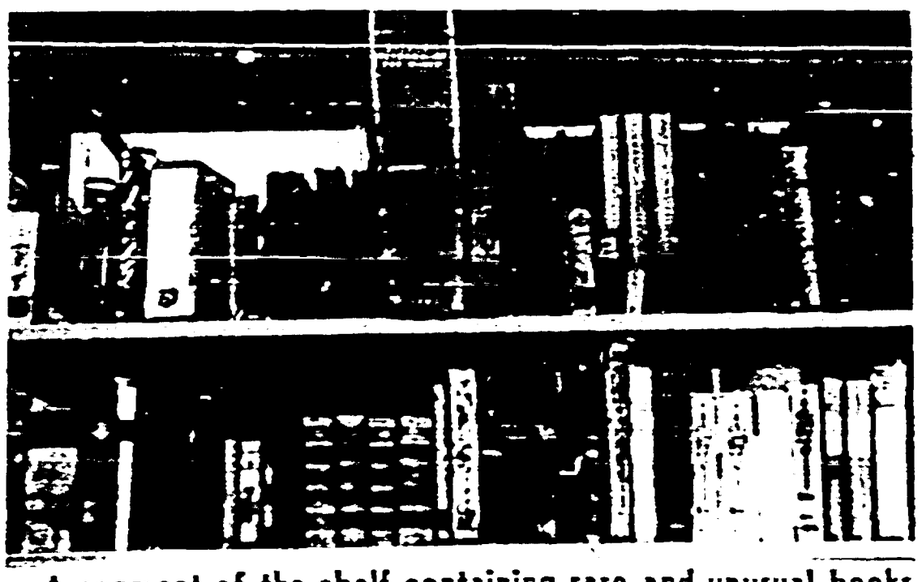
Mayfield has included his entire collection which does not stop with just books and manuscripts.

At first glance this modern, attractive library does not seem unusual. As you stroll through the shelves you cannot help but become enthralled with the fascinating written material and objects. Each shelf contains a collection of the unusual.



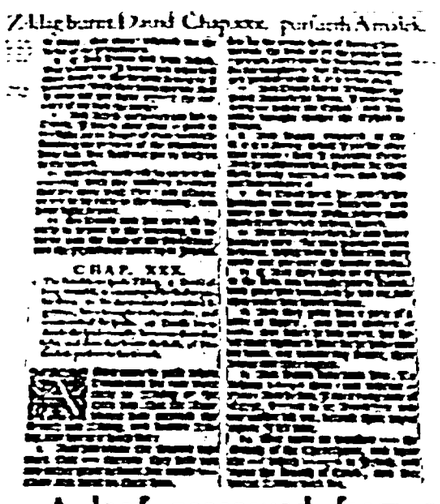
Mayfield is still collecting works for his library. He uses his own money so he does not have to justify to anyone. His collection is his "Own baby."

Mayfield began collecting when he was a young boy. First it was birds' eggs, then cigar bands, then stamps, and finally his collecting habit culminated in the area of books. He has been collecting for over 40 years.



"All students are welcome to study or research here," said Mayfield.

The library is open from 9:15 to 3:15 daily.



"Enjoy Here the Pleasure of Quiet and the Dignity of Learning," is the motto hanging over the shelves.

"Useless. Totally useless."

Ex-frosh, Dean Cope react to advising system

By CHARLES HIBBERT

"Useless. Totally useless."

That is how one disgruntled freshman evaluated the often-maligned faculty advisor system at SU. This response proved to be typical, though not unanimous, in a random sampling taken in Watson Dormitory of frosh reaction to the system.

This same freshman echoed the disenchantment of many of his peers by suggesting that the academic advisory system, as it is known in official channels, be completely eliminated from the University.

This more radical view was not as popular with freshmen, however. As George Hashim, from Pittsfield, Mass., put it, since freshmen are new and unfamiliar with the University, "you have to have it."

Dean Alfred H. Cope of the College of Liberal Arts, in a 30-page pamphlet prepared for all advisors, states, "An academic advisory program must provide a student with an opportunity to understand the requirements for the best alternate programs of study appropriate to his individual potential, interest, and resources."

Advisors don't advise

Does the average advisor achieve this purpose? The general concensus among freshmen is that he does not. One aspect of the advisory system that falls under constant attack is the unfamiliarity of the advisor with the course of study followed by the advisee.

Dean Cope defends the advisor by stating that no man can be expected to be familiar with each and every one of the 1,500 courses offered by the University each semester.

All freshmen who were interviewed conceded this fact, but several contended that their advisors were distressingly unfamiliar with even the basics of the various courses of study, as exemplified by the freshman who was allowed to take Psychology 5 last semester and later discovered that the course is open only to upperclassmen.

Indifference?

This incident brings up the question of indifference on the part of the advisors. The average advisor is assigned 22 students. Dean Cope maintains that "it is up to the student" to take the initiative to bring up personal academic problems. He says that oftentimes, the freshman has not taken the time to read the wave of pre-orientation material he receives during the summer and is therefore unaware of his responsibilities.

Many freshmen suggested that a full-time advisory staff be maintained by the University, but when reminded that tuition costs would undoubtedly skyrocket under this system most conceded that the current method, though inefficient, is the most practical.

Two suggestions

Two of the more practical suggestions for change were 1) required appointments with one's advisor at mid-semester, and 2) assignment of students to advisors by class as well as by preference in order to make each advisor's job more specific.

Students hoped that appointments with the advisors would effectively force academic problems out into the open and prepare the student better for the second half of the semester.

If an advisor is assigned students who are all in the same class he might be able to delve into specifics a bit more in an attempt to familiarize himself with the needs of his advisees.

It was evident in talking with these students that the rapport the administration seeks to establish with them is decidedly lacking, and the advisory system is not much help. One Watson resident relates that his advisor simply signed his blank Director of Studies card and, without consultation, told the student to fill in the course list himself.

Some are pleased

Not all of the students interviewed were displeased with their advisors. Those enrolled in the professional schools, like Steve Richards from Yonkers, seemed to be satisfied with the system. Richards, an architecture student, pointed out, however, that the nature of his course of study is pre-determined, thus eliminating any immediate need for counseling.

Most of the discontent was centered in the College of Liberal Arts where students have the greatest need for competent advising.

Indifference to the system was common. Mike Morrison from Buffalo, noted that student problems should be stressed more, while some, like Charles Mason from Rochester, simply had "no opinion."

In almost every case, however, students were satisfied with the type of advisor they were assigned. The assignment of advisors is a meticulous process designed to fit the interests of the student as he has indicated on his preference card.

No Computers

The use of computers to assign advisors is ruled out because, according to Dean Cope, there are simply "too many variables" involved. He said that the Liberal Arts office has been "amazingly accurate" in pairing student with advisor.

As far as foreseeable changes in the faculty advisor system are concerned, Dean Cope intends to center his efforts on preparing the student better for the meeting with his advisor rather than changing the system itself.

A more detailed pre-orientation letter will be sent to incoming freshmen, and orientation programs in the professional schools are now being initiated.

Dean Cope said that a major overhaul of the advisory system itself would cost upwards of $400,000.

The advisory system, then, is here for good in its present state unless someone would like to hand Dean Cope a fairly substantial check.

A chronic problem

But nevertheless it is a chronic problem on the SU campus that faces the system - that of a lack of communication between the administration and the student body. Dean Cope says that the system is faulty from an idealistic point of view, while the concensus among freshmen is that the system is faulty from the student's point of view.

The results of poor advising are confusion, unfulfilled requirements for graduation, and jumbled courses of study. These three elements plague SU students, particularly in September and February, and efforts are being made to eliminate these pitfalls.

As long as the advisory system at least carries with it the premise of being student orientated, then some changes obviously should be made. An impasse of outlandish proportions, however, does not exist. Dean Cope himself says that it is a "maneageable problem." Perhaps before long a meeting of the minds between student and administrator will bridge this gap and make the operation of the advisory system satisfactory to everyone in the University community.

'Very liberal here'

Flunk-out policy

By AUDREY SHEPPARD

Soon after joining Syracuse University's freshman class each year, a number of its members depart via flunk-outs and drop-outs.

"The University," said Marjorie Smith, dean of women, "encourages students to pursue an education. A student is advised to take a leave of absence, for example, only in rare cases such as when he needs time to think."

The flunk-out policy, she continued, is very liberal here. Situations are reviewed individually, with an eye to the interests of the student.

Acceptance to Syracuse is granted each spring to students deemed capable of surviving academically and socially. Why, then, do some freshmen bend under stiff academic requirements, while others fail to adapt to the away-from-home environment?

Perri Peters, a 19-year-old education major in her second year, has received a 1.1, a 1.6 and a 2.0 respectively on a 3.0 system. Perri attributes her improvement to being able to choose courses which interest her. She feels that her problem during her first semester was in discovering what was expected. A survey of courses by instructors, including course content and requirements, was Perri's suggested remedy.

Agreeing with Miss Peters that academic problems begin almost immediately upon entrance was Geffrey Reis, a 19-year-old sophomore international relations major from Lafayettehill, Pa.

Reis said that Orientation Week should be geared to academics more than it is. He pointed out that many upper-classmen are still unfamiliar with proper use of the library.

This, he felt, was an example of a skill which could be taught during Orientation.

Closer attention by head residents and closer contact by the administration are part of the solution to freshman drop-outs. Joan Zofnass, a freshman speech pathology-pre-medical student believes that knowing there is someone to talk to, that someone cares, is part of the answer.

Dean Smith revealed that a large percent of those who leave school come back. Those who flunk-out may reapply after a calendar year, and many do.

Some students leave to go elsewhere, often nearer to home in order to defray expenses, while some join the Peace Corps or VISTA.

Those who enter the working world, said Dean Smith, often discover the value of an education. They return to Syracuse or attend night school.

Dean Smith summarized the problem by saying how difficult it is to get students to settle down the first week.

"With all the new freedom they think there's always another day."

Campus fringe

Non-students about 'M' St.

By PAT MIKULSKI

It breathes, moves, evokes sensations and impresses all who visit Marshall Street, Syracuse, New York: a living collage.

The restaurants emit the fragrance of hamburgers and french fries. Music shops, situated at either end of the campus block, assault and appease the ears of the passers-by.

While utilizing the varied facilities of "M" Street, the same people always seem to be present. Why? The answer is simple.

These are the people who belong to the campus fringe, the non-student hangers-on.

Toward them the attitude of the students seems to be one of mild hostility and dislike.

Marilyn De Long, sophomore journalism student, claims that the non-students are pushing into an area where they are not wanted.

"They're always there. They just hang around. Besides, they have such an easy life, no classes. Maybe I'm jealous."

Mary Anderson, a 5'6" sophomore French major living in the Ambassador, frowns at the mention of the non-students. She feels that they all belong to the hippie movement of which she doesn't approve. They are invading an area connected with campus, she says, to which they have no right.

However, not often explored is the effect that campus life has on the fringe.

John, a man of 24, has lived near the campus for four years. At first he simply liked the idea of hanging around and associating with students.

"I used to hang around "M" Street and drink cokes and coffee. I know a lot of the kids and I like talking to them." He used to play guitar for groups entertaining for fraternity and sorority parties. "I made a lot of friends this way."

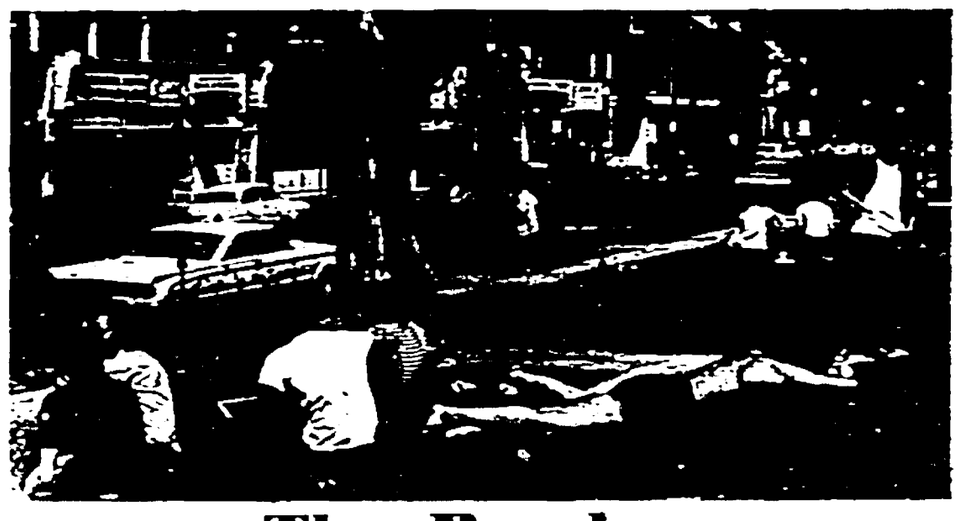
"After a while," he says, "I wanted something I could add to the conversation, I wanted to learn. Which was a new experience for me." Now he is officially enrolled in several courses and has hopes of attaining his degree in English.

Sheriff, a fond nickname for a 5'8" young man with long blond hair, did well in high school. He enjoyed his art courses and mechanical shop classes.

"I never had much use for history or French."

After graduation from high school he decided to travel before he settled down. He has been to San Francisco several times, Mexico once, Florida many times and often spends weeks at a time in Greenwich Village in New York.

"I feel that I've learned a lot about people. That's just as important as learning in classes to me."



His wanderings brought him to Syracuse where he has rented an apartment. Now he, too, is taking several courses.

"I know I couldn't settle down enough to spend all day in classes and all night booking." He doesn't know if he'll ever get a degree.

While the fringe may disturb some students, the University seems to be doing some good for these people. Proximity to higher learning has encouraged some to improve themselves. After all, that's what Syracuse University is about, isn't it?

Disillusionment, alienation . . .

One thing the catalogue didn't mention

By SHELIA PAYTON

Alienation is one thing the college catalogues don't mention, but it's a reality from which no institution can escape–not even Syracuse University.

Cathy Dorman, a 20-year-old freshman majoring in French, described the feeling of alienation and the atmosphere at Syracuse which causes it this way:

"This school is a four-year fantasy sequence. The first time you come here it makes you laugh. Nothing else is funny so you come back to keep laughing.

"As Will Rogers said, 'We don't have too much time in this place so get as many laughs as you can.'

"But you can't laugh very long in a plastic bag, can you?"

Miss Dorman explained that the alienation was not "physical" but "mental."

"You can learn here, but whatever you learn is learned in spite of the school."

She feels there is a lack of imagination in the teaching methods in too many courses.

"A lot of kids here just work for grades. There's nothing to motivate them to learn."

This situation she attributes to the large size of the school, and the large number of graduate students teaching courses.

She also feels the school (especially the Liberal Arts College) does not allow enough leeway for the individual.

"I came here to learn, and I'm bogged down in requirements," she exclaimed.

"I'm not saying that you don't get a chance to choose from a variety of areas; it's just that you're so confined in those areas."

Miss Dorman thinks the Liberal Arts College should reaccess its program so that it will produce what she called the "well-rounded specialist."

Another student, 19-year-old sophomore Kat Farnham, feels the estrangement at the University goes beyond the academic level.

"Even among groups like sororities there is no unity. One house is always competing against the other.

"There is no unifying force here on campus–no student union or any place where students, faculty, and administrators can get together and talk on an informal basis."

Miss Dorman agrees with Miss Farnham.

"You really learn by talking to people or to an instructor on an informal basis–not in the classroom. But you're one of how many students who want to talk to the instructor; and he only has so much time.

"This place is supposed to provide common ground for meeting people, but it can't. It's too big," Miss Dorman said.

"The only thing that keeps this campus together is apathy and paranoia."

Miss Farnham added: "The Greeks are apathetic and the "hippies" are paranoid.

"To be neither, you have to forget the University, which you can't do and still graduate."

"To do anything at this University that's worth-while, you have to pay extra, and most people just can't afford it.

"Even the drama students have to pay to see plays."

Resident advisers (RA's) who often have to deal with problems of alienation agree, to some extent, with the students' analysis of the problem, but they also place a little more responsibility for this situation on the student's shoulder.

"Student-faculty relations aren't what they should be," said Judith Kideckel, head resident at Washington Arms Dormitory, "but this is not due solely to the faculty's disinterest.

"A lot of kids here are extremely social-minded. The University has the reputation of being a 'fun school.' I've also heard students say they used it as a 'safety school' when they were applying to colleges."

Miss Kideckel thinks the admissions standards should be raised and the tuition lowered so more academically minded people can attend Syracuse.

"The academic opportunities here are very good," she said. "Students just don't take advantage of them.

"Those few who really want to meet faculty members do so."

Another contributing factor to the problem of estrangement is size, according to Miss Kideckel.

"Students aren't aware of what's going on because there are so many forces in the University that it's hard to keep the campus informed."

Roger Harris, an RA at Kimmel Hall, also feels lack of communication contributes to the feeling of alienation.

"There seems to be a credibility gap between the students and the administration.

"Students seem to feel the administration doesn't care about them."

Harris said that student respect for administrators seems to be sliding downward because the students don't feel the administrators are being truthful or sincere.

One way he suggests for solving this problem is to do more for the student–like build a student union.

Like Miss Kideckel, Harris also believes academic standards should be raised to bring in a more academically inclined student body.

How does the administration react to these comments and criticisms?

Miss C. Joan Parrish, women's vocational guidance counselor, feels the sense of alienation is a natural and genuine one.

"The college experience is a search for being. It's an exciting process, but also can lead to the serious predicament of alienation for the individual."

She feels the University encourages searching.

"The very fact that it is engaged in higher education supports the statement that it is in favor of searching."

She attributed the "credibility gap" to the institutional nature of the university.

"Because the University is an institution, it tends to be more conservative. But it is trying to change its ways a little."

She also explained the discontent of students in terms of the disillusionment of dreams.

"Too many people come to college expecting it to be steady intellectual stimulation. But this is not so. Most intellectual work is dull and boring."

Alfred H. Cope, assistant dean of the College of Liberal Arts, agrees with her.

"Any individual who says he cannot find intellectual stimulation is putting on a pose.

"No society is going to be completely intellectual all the time."

He also agrees with Miss Parrish's statement about the natural occurence of alienation.

"Alienation is a common phenomenon throughout society, especially between generations."

Dean Cope feels the University atmosphere is changing to a more academic one, contrary to some statements.

"Students who enter Syracuse now have higher college board scores, and expect more from their college experience."

He feels the University has some problems in student-faculty relations, but he added that through action on the findings of the Danforth Report, these problems can be eventually solved.

Dean of Women, Marjorie C. Smith, also recognized the problem of student-faculty relations. But she did not attribute it to the faculty alone.

"It's hard to have faculty contacts with students," she explained, "because faculty members have heavy loads.

"Also, a lot of them live a long way from campus."

She feels faculty contacts should be initiated by the student.

"Those who want more contact usually try to do something about it," she said.

"We try to give students a place here at Syracuse, but part of the responsibility for finding that place lies with the student."

Alienated?

College "is a four year fantasy sequence."

Elixir for alienation

The following section of the Freshman Edition is meant to acquaint you with some of the major organizations at Syracuse University. It is by no means complete, but it will give you an idea how you can invest your energies and extend your education beyond the classroom while at SU.

In addition, remember the words of the Dean of the Maxwell School, Stephen K. Bailey:

"As the New Testament predicted, you will find self by losing self. Public Service is in fact an extraordinarily potent elixir for alientation. With all of its maddening frustrations and occasional disappointments and corruptions, public service is a way of making people whole by recapturing a sense of community and of common purpose. It is to modern life what the dance was to tribal communities — a sharing of creative joys and energies which heal the deep fissures of splintered individual souls."

When students get together . . .

. . . Somethings got to give.

Demonstration against demonstrations

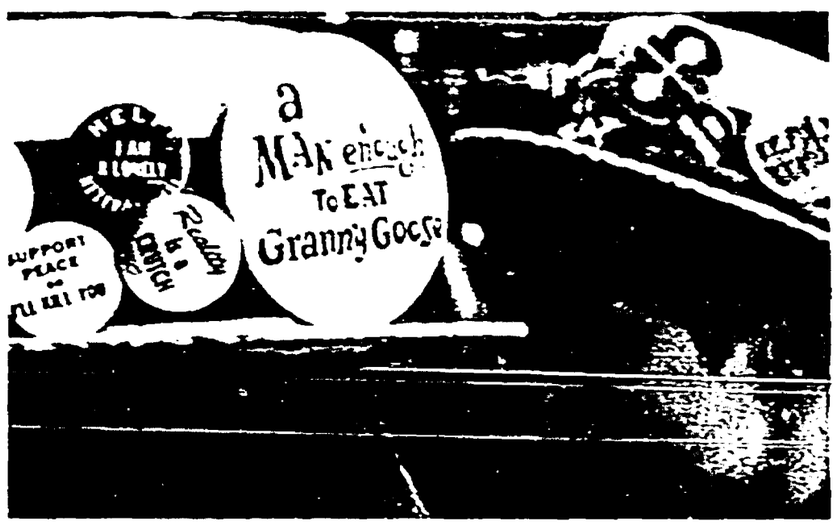
Hundreds of students gathered on the quad in front of Hendricks Chapel to applaud speakers who denounced the seizure of SU's administrative building. The gathering heard Marshal Rosenthal (upper left), a graduate student representative of those who seized the building, and Dean of Student Services, Jim G. Carleton (upper right).

Letter

Goons ready to take you away

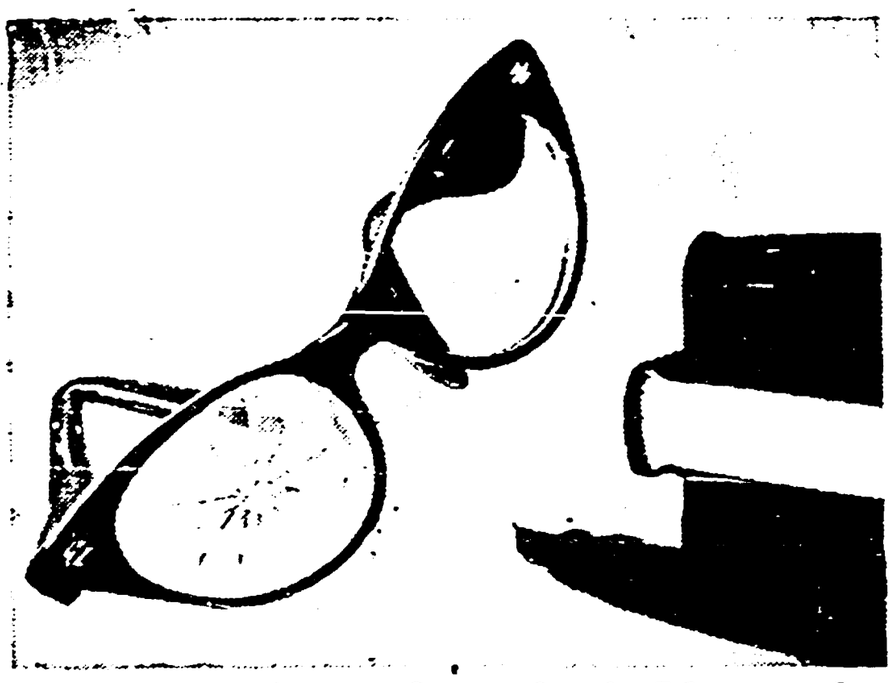
Dear Frosh,

Syracuse University is waiting to take you away. Starting September 8, Syracuse will give you a room key, a meal ticket, a beanie, and a campus map. Syracuse will offer you concerts at Crouse, exhibits at Lowe, plays at the Regent and beer at the Orange. Syracuse will introduce you to HBC lobby, the DO, TGIF's and M Street. It will be a new, wonderful, wacky world—perhaps too new and too wacky. That's where the Goon Squad comes in.



Goon Squad is a Syracuse tradition, just like the Saltine Warrior and the Orange. But Goon Squad isn't just a mascot, or a color. Goon Squad is 290 sophomores in odd straw hats who are going to introduce you and Syracuse University to each other.

We're going to unload your cars and move you into your rooms. We're going to lead you around. But most of all, we're just going to be there to help and be friends.



A year ago we were wearing the beanies. We remember how we felt when we met our roommates, kissed our parents goodbye, got a blind date with an upperclassman. We remember how we smiled just to have something to do. We remember how we appreciated anyone who smiled back. We remember and we understand. We also know what happens a month later and each month after that as Syracuse becomes more than a group of buildings and people come out from behind the smiles. We know that Syracuse is wide, wacky and wonderful, and we want you to become part of it.

Welcome to Syracuse, Frosh. We'll be waiting to meet you September 8, so get ready to be taken away!

Sincerely,
Goon Squad '68

Folk Society

Working toward a concert

Do you like folk music? If you had come to Syracuse two years ago instead of now it would have been your tough luck. With folk music relatively popular throughout the land, Syracuse had somehow missed the boat. True, if one was really interested he could seek out the cliches that were bound to exist, but the people who made the records were nowhere to be seen. The one major attempt at a coffeehouse theater ended in financial failure.

Not at all happy with this state of affairs, a few interested students got together and formed the Syracuse Folk Society. The group set its goal at getting good folk music out into the open, for those performing locally and those of national reputation who would otherwise never come to Syracuse.

After receiving a good initial response, the Society held several small coffeehouse meetings with live local talent. This made it possible for those interested to gather in close knit groups to live the music, and for many, to discover the music for the first time. As on Folkworld and Folkways, two radio programs to be discussed later, the music performed covered the whole spectrum — from the traditional forms of blues, bluegrass, and mountain music to the contemporary sounds of the urban blues and the new writers.

Finally, the Society was able to bring nationally known artists to the Syracuse campus. First, in October came Steve Gillette, a singer-songwriter whose works have become folk standards, and rock hits. Those in attendence paid no admission. Then in April, the Society presented Tom Rush, the well known Bostonian whose career has spanned over six years and as many albums, with appearances at every major campus, concert halls, festival, and coffeehouse in the country.

Bolstered by the overflow response to the Tom Rush concert, the Society is working this summer on plans for future concerts that will, like our meetings, bring the whole of the music to Syracuse.

Those who are interested in learning more about the Syracuse Folk Society, and the music that forms its basis can stop at our table on the patio of Huntington Beard Crouse Hall during registration. Or, those who possess an FM radio you can tune into WAER at 88.3 FM and listen to Folkways and Folkworld, the city's only folk music programs. Folkways, heard Mondays at 9:00 p.m., features a wide variety of folk styles with an emphasis on the contemporary scene. Folkworld, heard at the same time on Wednesday, covers much of the same area featured on Folkways, with an additional emphasis on traditional music, along with the country and urban blues.

Tom Rush as he appeared in concert at Crouse College Auditorium last April, sponsored by the Folk Society.

Traditions Commission Selects the Goon Squad

T.C.—What's T.C.? Nebulous answers range from Tecumsech Club, Thomas Corcoran, to Top Cat. Traditions Commission is a feeling which cannot easily be described. It's a combination of pride, spirit, devotion, hard work, fun and friendship. The students who make up the Commission come from every phase of campus life, and yet they are probably the closest organization at Syracuse University.

This cohesiveness is brought about because the members of T.C. have a common goal and purpose, and because they are all hard and devoted workers. The goal of Traditions is to make Syracuse University an institution whose students are proud and aware of the entire University.

Specifically, Traditions Commission is a group of about 30 active members. They are responsible for the running of Orientation Week, selecting, organizing and directing Goon Squad activities, instilling a sense of spirit into the students, and maintaining old traditions and creating new ones at S.U.

This group is selected as first semester sophomores, who in turn were selected for Goon Squad in the second semester of their freshman year. Applicants for Goon Squad number nearly 1,000, from which 270 are selected. Almost 200 of these Goons apply for Traditions from which 20 are selected each Spring.

Once the members are selected and after a certain amount of merry-making, T.C. settles down to the business and readies itself for the next year and Orientation Week. First they are divided into groups which are in charge of various activities during "O Week" and throughout the year. Next comes the selection of Good Squad by average, application and an interview. Then preparations are made for you, the incoming freshmen, where Traditions and Goon Squad attempt to welcome you, the new members of Syracuse University.

'69 ON: color and tradition

The key words for the 1969 Onondagan, Syracuse University's yearbook, are impartiality, color and SU traditions.

"I think a yearbook should be a senior book," said Miss Perdunn. Most of the pictures will be candid shots of seniors in their last year here. Even though the yearbook will be slanted toward seniors, it will be impartial toward student organizations.

The big appeal in the '69 ON will be a sizable color section, which will relate only to the theme of the book. The theme will have an emotional appeal, centering around traditions at SU.

Miss Perdunn noted a need for freshmen to sell, write, organize, photograph and do clerical work in the ON office. Freshmen may go to the Onondagan office during Orientation week, above the student government office on University Place across from Watson Dormitory.

U U IS YOU

U U stands for University Union, and as soon as you become a part of Syracuse University in the fall you'll begin to see why we say: "U U Is You." But why wait until then? We'd like to tell you a little bit about Union now, and about some of the things you can expect in the fall.

You See most large universities have a Union Building . . . a place where students can go between classes; a place for recreational facilities; a place for university social events of all kinds; in short, a centralized building for the union of students and faculty that makes up the campus community.

But . . . Syracuse University does not as yet have such a building.

So . . . University Union was formed, with two goals in mind. First, of course, is the planning for the eventual construction of a Union Building. Part of this planning involves fund-raising, and some of the activities that Union sponsors contribute directly to the Union Fund. The second goal is to provide as many services as possible to the students of Syracuse University without an actual physical building. The idea is to create a spirit of unity on campus. That's why many of the activities sponsored by U U are free of charge to the students.

U U programming for next year is designed with these two goals in sight. Among the activities scheduled are Movies — including free films during Orientation Week, U U's regular free Friday night flicks, free movies on the Quad during special campus weekends (including U U Weekend, Sept. 22) and other special series during the year.

Dances — beginning with the Orange Peel Mixer Sept. 14 and a dance on the quad during U U Weekend, and continuing throughout the year with the most popular local bands.

Concerts — the first of several Concerts designed to appeal to fans of all types of music will be held during UU weekend. To kick off the weekend, Friday night UU will present a spectacular dance with The Chamber Brothers. Saturday afternoon September 28, Syracuse meets Maryland in the first home game. Climaxing the weekend Sunday afternoon will be Smokey Robinson and the Miracles in Concert.

The Place — Syracuse's unique Coffee House - Play House is open free to the S U campus three nights a week, and features talks and discussion about every topic under the sun . . . plus occasional films, happenings and off-beat events.

Bull Sessions — highly successful last year, these informal meetings between protessors and students will continue next year. A rare chance to meet and talk with instructors outside of the classroom environment.

Student Services — a new UU Student Service is the U Underground. The Underground is the official news outlet of UU. The purpose of this publication is to inform the students of, not only activities of UU, but also of its policies and internal organization. The news letter is also available to other campus organizations for publication of their activities.

Well . . . like what you've seen so far? Want to learn more about U U? Then stop by the H. B. Crouse patio during Orientation Week. Members of U U will be there to answer your questions and tell you more about Union. You should stop by, because U U is you!

Film Forum diversifies

During the 1967-1968 school year Film Forum, sponsored by the United Campus Christian Fellowship, presented films to approximately 27,000 persons. All of the films were presented in Gifford Auditorium with the exception of two, "The War Game" and "Marat/Sade," which were shown at the Regent Theater.

In addition, this year saw a diversification of Film Forum's activity so that the showing of films now is only one aspect of their program. They have purchased newer and better projection equipment so that their equipment now compares favorably with most of the theaters in the city, presented grants to student filmmakers to encourage film production on the campus, purchased 16 mm. films toward the accummulation of a film library, assisted schools and departments of the University in presenting film programs of their own, and sponsored benefit performances to aid worth while causes.

Syracuse is now one of about six campuses in the country that have 35 mm. equipment. To Film Forum's knowledge, none of the others are able to present pictures of the quality it presented this past year.

It gave grants of $250 to each of three student projects. One of these films was presented during this year's Festival of the Arts. The other two were completed by June. It may give further grants this Fall and next Spring. In addition, it plans to bring together the student filmmakers on the campus so that they can present their films before an audience and have discussions that will generate new ideas and greater motivation. It will also show student made films as shorts during regular programs, reimbursing students for showing their films and thus engendering a greater motivation for filmmaking.

Film Forum's library of films includes 25 titles. From this library it presented a series of class C silent films which were shown free to the campus community.

Film Forum brought Henry Fonda to the campus for two days for a retrospective showing of ten of his films and the premier showing of his latest film, "Yours, Mine and Ours." It has plans next year for doing a similar retrospective with one of the outstanding Hollywood directors, Fred Zinnemann.

A benefit performance of "Don't Look Back" enabled it to present $500 to Crossroads Africa. Film Forum also made a grant of $140 to the American Film Academy.

The success of its program is indicative to some of the appeal of film to the student body. It is also being asked to show films that will tie in with course subject matter. It claims steady viewers coming from as far as Auburn, Utica and Colgate University.

Plans for the Fall call for a continued program of films in Gifford Auditorium.

Panhellenic is made up by the 23 National Sororities at Syracuse University. As the coordinating body of the sororities, Panhellenic sponsors many activities such as exchange dinners, coffees, rush, co-sponsors Greek Week with Inter-fraternity Council and supports several charities.

Formal sorority rush at Syracuse will be held the beginning of second semester. However, there will be Open Houses in the fall which will provide Freshmen with the chance to see the houses and to meet the sorority women. Panhel urges all frosh to attend Open Houses whether or not you plan to go through formal rush. Sororities can be an important part of a college career, and Open Houses will give Freshmen the chance to see this part of the campus.

The Freshman Rush Convocation will be October 23 to give you the details of rush. Open Houses will be held Saturday and Sunday, October 26 and 27.

WAER's Sound Spectrum

Offers you a chance to broadcast

By JASON SQUIRE

At midnight on any given evening, the only student organization on campus that is alive with people is WAER. At that time, one hour before sign-off, a qualified engineer is on duty at the board in the Master Control room and responsible for all transmitter readings as required by the FCC; a staff of newsmen are gathering stories for the next newscast from local sources and the wires of United Press International; the producer of the show in progress is reviewing the content and timing of the remainder of the program; and his announcer is waiting for the red light to go on inside the studio to put him on the air.

The day-to-day operation of the station is in the hands of students, rather than faculty. It is true that Syracuse University owns the broadcast license and that students are taught theory and practice in classroom and laboratory sessions. Faculty members are always available for guidance, but students are in full command at WAER.

There is a Senior Staff of thirteen students who head departments such as Production, Operations, Promotion, News, Continuity, Public Affairs, Sports and Announcing. The full staff of people related to WAER totals over one-hundred. Students from all colleges and divisions of the university work at the station.

Most staffers come to WAER with no radio experience at all, and leave in four years with the craft and background to attain a job at any standard radio station in the country.

WAER is the only station in Syracuse that offers programs exclusively devoted to folk music, jazz, original motion picture soundtracks, psychedelic rock and complete Broadway plays. WAER also had the advantage of being able to combine these forms of music into our programming and provide a mixture of music.

"Sound Spectrum," for instance, is on from Monday through Saturday, from 2 to 5:30 p.m. As the title suggests, the show spans the spectrum of music from folk to jazz, including the most popular contemporary sounds in the top 40. Commentary is directed towards community service, along with news and special features.

WAER sports coverage has a tradition of covering all Syracuse University basketball games, home and away. Often, it has exclusive Syracuse broadcasts of an away game.

The staff defines these three goals:

a. to provide an alternative listening service as the only educational radio station serving Onondaga County;

b. to act as a training ground for student broadcasters; and

c. to serve as an effective and responsible extension of the University.

But, it also serves Central New York as the educational radio outlet. In short, we are not a "campus station" exclusively.

Each year, the entire staff of WAER is eager to involve new students.

In September, there will be openings in every department of the station. Producers will need assistants to help plan their shows. Newsmen will need aid in gathering reports. Promotion will need typists. The program director will need a secretary. But a student can't walk into our studios and get right on the air. This comes only after auditions are passed and a vacancy is found. If a student is interested in engineering, he must take a few hours of instruction which are offered free of charge.

The staff presents two Orientation sessions during the first week it's on the air for anyone who wants to get in on the ground floor. They are set for Tuesday, Sept. 17 and Wednesday, Sept. 18, at 7:30 in A-1 auditorium of the Newhouse Communications Center.

This year, WAER continues its 21st year of broadcasting. It began in 1946 with a special experimental transmitter, as the first low-powered educational station in the United States.

IFC faces problem

Complex housing needed?

The Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) is making an effort to eliminate the stigma of immaturity attached to fraternities.

Having jurisdiction over organizational policies, the IFC Court is one of the formal structures within IFC seeking to reform different phases of fraternity.

In cases last year, one fraternity was fined $50 for violation of a rush policy, while another house was prohibited from publishing its rush book because of its contents.

The court overwhelmingly ruled to maintain the 2.1 accumulative average requirement for rush this year. However, fraternity average is on the rise as members are becoming more conscious of academics, states Levine.

Bob Massey, Syracuse University fraternity administrator, does not expect a marked increase in this years' fraternity average over last year's 2.34, compared to a general 2.41 average of men.

Concerning the houses themselves, "my main gripe is the physical conditions and health hazards in the kitchens," states Levine.

To alleviate this, he says, the IFC invited a professor from the Cornell School of Hotel Management to work out solutions to these problems with the house advisor of each fraternity.

However, the administration may soon eliminate this problem as plans for "complex housing" go into effect.

Presently in the planning stages, the Greek complex would consist of nine separate units, each unit housing individual fraternities and sororities, with a common dining hall, says Levine.

Because of the physical condition of many houses combined with the financial burden imposed upon members, the complex idea of fraternity living in large universities, is growing across the country, says Massey.

Although the IFC does not object to the concept of complex living here, some of its members do oppose the idea of united dining facilities.

Besides removing the independence of each house, they claim a food service would lessen the quality of food presently served in individual houses because of the mass it would have to cater to, he continues.

However, the food service in the complex does not necessarily have to be the same University food service supplying the resident halls, Massey says.

There is a misconception on the food issue, according to David Tatham, dean of men. Although it would not be economically feasible for each unit to maintain separate dining facilities, there could be nine separate dining rooms inside one building which could serve separate menus according to the individual fraternity's or sorority's choice.

Another objection is that the dining hall would be located too far from campus.

The complex is still in the planning stages, says Massey, and the administration will not disregard the opinions of IFC.

Presently, one major problem is pledging, he continues. Massey plans to set up a joint IFC-Administration committee to improve this phase of fraternity life.

Pledging, and reducing the physical severity involved in it was a major topic of discussion at the IFC conference last year.

Some Greeks take leave of the modern problems of Greek life that IFC faces to indulge in traditional Greek games.

AWS still exists

Cites recent gains

A separate government for coeds? What for?

Although the Association of Women Students (AWS) at Syracuse has often questioned its own existence, it has developed many programs combining freedom and responsibility for coeds, and for the campus.

For exampie: all sophomore, junior and senior girls who live in self-governing living centers, are not on any type of probation and have parental permission may have "optional hours" which means that each girl sets her own curfew.

In 1967, a year after optional hours went into effect for upperclassmen, freshman women began to work for optional hours. They reasoned, "We live in self-governing living centers, we should have the privilege."

After numerous meetings and discussions last spring, optional hours were extended to freshmen in Shaw Dorm who met the same standards as upperclassmen on the system.

But what are these self-governing dorms?

A self-governing living center is a dorm, medium-sized dorm (apartment), cottage or sorority that has submitted a constitution by which to govern itself. Before self-government is granted, a special AWS committee visits the living center and also interviews representatives of the center.

This committee, formerly known as the Joint Evaluation and Review Board (JERB), has been expanded since most eligible living centers now are self-governing. To replace JERB a more flexible committee, the liason committee, has been established composed of head residents, students, and administrators, this committee has vast potential as a forum for ideas and base for mutual understanding.

Besides serving women students, AWS has sponsored speakers and conferences for the entire university. Its first conference was a "Sex and Morality" forum in the spring of 1967 which featured films, speakers and discussion. The second conference, in April, 1968, focused on "Sex and Sexuality."

AWS is planning two conferences for the coming year. The first, scheduled for September, will deal with the upcoming election: parties, candidates, issues. It will include a session on absentee ballots for new voters who will be away from home when casting their first ballots.

In addition to seferal other isolated speakers, next spring AWS will sponsor a sensitivity conference. Although still in the planning stages, it will be conducted by experts in the field of T-group training and be designed to increase students' awareness of each other.

One of the problems of college, the gap between classroom learning and dormitory living, will be tackled by AWS this year.

Cindy Bailey heads AWS this year with Pam Abraham serving as vice-president. AWS Exec also includes Mary Taylor, secretary; Linda Buettner, treasurer, and Nancy Graves, intercollegiate AWS contact.

Another view from Kelso

'Student body a myth; SG is dying'

By RONI ZLOKOWER

Student Government paused in its scurrying activity to question its own existence last year.

In analyzing the past situation, former Student Government President David Kelso says, "Each year, student government reaches a dead-end point from which it can go no further. It is prevented from doing anything worthwhile due to lack of funds, lack of power and lack of administrative and student support."

In general, Kelso feels that student government is totally "irrelevant" on a campus which has no "student body" but is, instead, group oriented.

Kelso thinks the concept of the "student body" is a myth. If in reality no such "student body" exists, then the present student government which is supposed to lead and to give voice to this body is obsolete.

"At a school as large as Syracuse," Kelso points out, "a student will identify with his college, his class, his major, his living center and his activities before he will identify with the 'student body' of Syracuse University."

Past leaders of student government have recognized its failings. student government, however, has been allowed to survive as an undemocratic system, oriented toward and run by interest groups.

Kelso feels the only way to get rid of these failings is to reassess the system's structure and purpose. Having done this, Kelso has started working on a plan which may serve as a pliable framework for future students and leaders at Syracuse.

Kelso calls his ideas collectively, "a new philosophy of Student Government."

This new philosophy is based on two main ideas: (1) the existing student government can never be good enough to be a respectable and vital organization and (2) the University is approaching a living center-oriented campus where the living center will become the focal point for academic, cultural and social activities.

Working in the opposite direction from the United States government, Syracuse's student government would have to undergo a decentralization process.

"While the United States moved from a confederate form to a constitutional form of government," Kelso said, "We should move from a constitutional form to a confederate form of government."

According to this plan, the living center would be the main source of student government rule as well as the center of academic, cultural and social activities. Students would be able to identify with their living centers and to participate more actively in student government affairs than they do now.

Living centers might be divided into districts of 250 students. Each district would have its own representative. Cottages, dorm floors and fraternities and sororities would be grouped together into districts so that all living centers would be equally represented.

Groups such as Panhel IFC and AWS could elect their own representatives but the same representative could not serve for both a group and a living unit. Elections, if held at mid-year, would maintain a rotating Senate.

The job of the president of student government would be to link together these autonomous units. While the living centers themselves would take care of the administrative planning, the job of the president would be to formulate long term academic policies while being a guide to student opinion.

Presently, Kelso stated, "the president is tied to too much petty administration." Kelso feels the president should have more time himself for involvement in campus and academic affairs. Hopefully, the president would also be the University's link with the outside community.

In summary, the president's duties would be directed toward academic policy, moral leadership and public relations.

The realization of Kelso's ideas will depend on two things. First of all, the present student leaders must be willing to destroy the existing student government system and to redistribute the power.

Dave Kelso

Secondly, living centers will have to change their hotel-like atmospheres. The University could help the students by equipping the dormitories better. As living centers, dormitories will have to serve more than just as places for sleep and study.

Kelso's ideas may seem too idealistic and optimistic for Syracuse University. However, Kelso realistically sees the need to inject new vitality into the campus community.

Rather than bowing to his successors and leaving them with the problems of this campus, Kelso is leaving thm with workable plans and possible solutions.

The actual building of Kelso's planned framework would call for direct involvement from everyone at Syracuse.

The newly elected leaders would be called upon to revamp the existing student government. The administration would have to cooperate in equiping living centers for "living" and in seeing that new dorms (such as the St. Mary's complex) are built to suit student needs.

Workings of SG

Student Government is a complex organization comprised of both elected and appointed officials. It is headed each year by the student government president elected in the spring. This year he is Chuck Hicks, a senior majoring in political science. It is his duty to execute the legislation passed by the Student Senate.

The senate, which is the official student legislative body, acts on proposals brought before it by representatives elected by the individual living centers. After committee endorsement, these proposals are debated and voted on in the senate by the entire body, this year headed by speaker Ed Feldman. After the senate passes a bill it is handed over to the SG president, who working with the administration, puts the bill into operation.

Working with the president are the vice-president, secretary and treasurer, all elected officials. The vice president is in charge of the Pinebrook Conference, held in the fall to familiarize students leaders with the University officials they will be working with for a year. Jeff Portnoy, the vice president, serves as a general assistant to the president.

The Secretary of SG is responsible for keeping records of operations, both past and present. This year's secretary is Robin Robertson.

The treasurer, Ross Sterrick, is in charge of the budget and acts as chairman of the student finance committee.

Class government also operates under SG.

This is approximately what student government is all about. It does, however, encompass a much broader area. It is the government which will represent you and likewise can operate only with your help.

Growing Regent Theatre offers entertainment variety

One of the major attractions for the Syracuse University student is upstate New York's active performing arts center, the University Regent Theatre. Located just a short walk off campus and operated by University College, the adult education branch of Syracuse University, the two-theatre complex offers more than 300 events each year.

The theatre's ten year history includes performances by such artists as Hal Holbrook, Carlos Montoya, William Warfield, Errol Garner, Charles Aznavour, Tom Paxton, Helen Hayes, Marcel Marceau, the Pro Musica, Don Shirley, and the Juilliard Quartet.

The new wing of the complex at 820 E. Genesee St. was completed in 1966. The 200 seat new experimental theatre compliments the 900 seat main stage. The Syracuse University drama department makes full use of the new stage by presenting ten major productions there. Recent departmental productions have included "Tiny Alice," "Macbeth," "Arms and the Man," and "The Boys From Syracuse."

For the past two years the Syracuse Repertory Theatre has presented ten weeks of resident professional theatre at the Regent. A first rate company of professional actors under the direction of Rex Henriot, managing director of both the Regent and the SRT, and G. F. Reidenbaugh, chairman of the University drama department and artistic director of the SRT, presented the productions "Slow Dance on the Killing Ground," "The Hostage," "The Devil's Disciple," "Hamlet," "Tiger at the Gates" and "The Miser."

The Regent hosts almost every local performing arts group during the season. The Syracuse Symphony Orchestra presents two major operas there, and community theatres bring in their productions, as well as many chamber music groups and the Syracuse Ballet Theatre.

One of the most popular regular events at the URT is the series of World Adventure Tours. The eight armchair travel films by renowned film makers and travelers will show visits to Hawaii, Europe, Scandinavia, Polynesia, and France this season.

The strongest student attraction at the complex is its film showings. First run films, art films, silent films and ski films can all be found at the URT. In September "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" and Bergman's new triumph "Hour of the Wolf" will play long runs for the first time in Syracuse.

During the 1967-68 season some 80,000 people, including a majority of SU students, attended the events at the URT. Every event sponsored by the University Regent has a reduced student price. An SU student may attend a concert of the Israel Chamber Orchestra on its first trip to this country for $2.50. Tickets for the famous Electric Circus of New York sell for $2.00.

Future plans for the theatre complex include completion of the renovation project on the older part of the building. When completed, the University Regent Theatre will house what is already one of the most active performing arts programs in the country in a $3 million structure.

An architect's version of the future Regent Theatre complex.

Rex Henriot is a well known figure in the professional resident theatre and is Managing Director of the University Regent theatre and the Syracuse Repertory Theatre.

On Sunday September 8, more than 2,300 Freshmen will enter Syracuse University, each bringing with him his own expectation about what life will be like for the next four years. Some freshman will come to Syracuse with only one goal in mind, possibly a good education, a good time, or maybe achievement in extra-curricular activities, or perhaps a dozen other hopes.

Syracuse provides a challenge of complete community involvement and friendship. In essence the challenge is one of participating in the University community and being an individual. The freshman who brings this attitude to Syracuse will quickly find students, faculty and administrators who are willing to help him. Those who fail to meet the challenge may know financial, social or professional success - but they will miss the best part.

Those who meet the challenge will find enjoyment in living, for it is only complete involvement which gives meaning to life.

SG publishes, utilizes NSA

Syracuse student government, along with 375 other student governments, is a member of the nation's largest student organization, United States National Student Association. N.S.A. provides services and programming assistance to all members of the college community, with special emphasis on aid to student government in their leadership and service capacities. While membership is by student government rather than by the individual, there are benefits available to each Syracuse student. Benefits can be drawn from the International Student Discount Card, Insurance Fund, Student Record Club, and Chartered Flights.

SU's N.S.A. Coordinator this year will be Dave Ifshin. His two assistant coordinators are Eilen Lerman and Gordy Merrill. A tentative program for the 1968-69 academic year is now being formalized. This program will be discussed at an early meeting in the Fall.

Foremost among the plans for SU is an Experimental College. It will enable students to take courses not offered through the regular curriculum. Although credit would not be given for these courses, this plan allows a student to take virtually any course he is interested in. Topics may range from guerilla warfare to sex to the Kennedy assassination.

A Drug Conference is another project in the planning stages. Noted speakers will be invited to give lectures and to lead discussions.

A National Congress is seen as the highlight for the N.S.A. Delegates from member schools, professionals in various fields, observers from non-member schools, and resource personnel gather for about two weeks of seminars, discussions, and staff consultations.

Representing Syracuse University at the Congress will be Chuck Hicks, student government president, and Dave Ifshin, N.S.A. coordinator. The Conference will be held at the University of Kansas, Manhattan, Kansas, from August 17 to August 26.

Commissioners of Publications for the coming year are Beth Houston and Michael Silverman. This branch of Student Government puts out several publications for the students of Syracuse University.

Plans for this year include a Student Survey of Courses, a student literary and artistic publication, a Student Government newsletter, and a guide to University organizations and activities.

The Student Government Survey of Courses is the result of a poll of students enrolled in University courses. The Survey will contain a brief description of each course offered, the merits and poor aspects of each course, in instructor's knowledge of the subject matter and his ability to communicate it.

Included also are plans for a much-needed literary and artistic magazine as an outlet for the creative efforts of the students. It will include poetry, satire, short stories, etchings, sketches, and photographs.

A guide to organizations and activities on campus will be made available to new students. A brief description of each will be included, with the names of the leaders of each.

Among large scale projects, the Commissioners of Publication, along with the Public Relations Commissioners, plan to issue a Student Government newsletter which will include articles on the projects and achievements of the various branches of Student Government.

New Constitution

UU finds a home in Kimmel

University Union, the largest organization at Syracuse, starts a new life on campus this fall.

The message of UU is "UU IS YOU," and the organization's goal is to bring together faculty, students, and administrators for a fuller educational experience. The new life Union consists of three new elements: a project, a new organization, and its determination to involve everyone in the Union.

The first element is The Kimmel Project. Ever since the 1920's students have been asking for a union building. They still don't have one but for the first time in years students will have some place to go besides HBC.

Jerry Tatarian

The Kimmel Center is actually the basement of Kimmel Dining Hall and although it will by no means serve as a Union it may provide a new center for the campus. When the interior is finished it will serve as coffeehouse, "Club," lecture hall or performance hall. "It's going to be the place to meet as well as an activity center on its own," said Ira Kurzban, the student who is heading the project.

UU has also modernized its organization and structure by writing a totally new constitution which, according to UU chairman Jerry Tatatian, will permit more people to work effectively in planning and executing union's programs.

The new structure separates UU's functions into three parts: programming, development, and policy. UU's programs in the past have included: free flicks on Fridays, The Place (a coffeehouse), concerts on UU Weekend, Parents' Weekend, Bull Sessions with professors, outdoor movies BYOB and the Freshman Orange Peel. These will remain, but others will be added.

The Development Board will work on the problem of getting interest, money, support, and ideas for the Union building.

The Policy Board includes the Kimmel Project Director, and the News Directors John Simcox who heads such publications as the Summer "UU nderground" which will introduce UU to all freshmen.

Other board members include: Jerry Tatarian, chairman; Mary Franciosi, vice chairman; Joan Zofnas, secretary; and the directors of the other two boards, Bob Weintraub, development and Barbara Jacobsen, programming. The Policy Board coordinates the activities of Union.

The Orientation Week Program is UU's first major effort of 1968-69, featuring Free Flicks daily, orientation information booth in HBC, the Orange Peel Mixer, outdoor movie and UU weekend, the first "big weekend" at Syracuse. This year Union presents the Chambers Brothers and Smokey Robinson and the Miracles.

The emphasis on entertainment is balanced by Bull Sessions with the Chancellor and professors, the new Kaleidoscope series with foreign students, the film discussion program and the decision-making program at "The Place."

SEMESTER IN

ITALY • FRANCE • COLOMBIA • AMSTERDAM

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY offers the undergraduate student an opportunity to spend one semester, preferably during the junior year, living and studying in a foreign country. A student thus may enrich his education with a foreign experience in depth, yet complete his undergraduate program within the normal four-year period.

Students from all accredited colleges and universities are eligible for the programs. Those accepted undertake a full semester of work during their stay abroad. In order to insure opportunity for full participation in the life and culture of the host country, each student will live in a private home for part or all of the semester.

SEMESTER IN ITALY

The Semester in Italy was inaugurated in the fall of 1959. It is unique in that it enables the American undergraduate who has had no previous study of the Italian language to engage in a full semester of liberal arts work within the life and culture of that country.

Courses, except those in Italian language and literature, are taught in English. The faculty is composed of personnel from Syracuse University and Italians appointed as visiting professors or conversation teachers. All students are required to enroll for fifteen hours of work, including six hours of Italian.

SEMESTER IN FRANCE

The Semester in France is offered in cooperation with the University of Poitiers in Poitiers, France. The student may spend either a fall or a spring semester in Poitiers pursuing liberal arts studies while developing a high level of language competence. The language of instruction is French. Six semester credits earned in the University of Poitiers and nine in regular Syracuse courses taught either by a Syracuse Faculty member or visiting French professors.

SEMESTER IN COLOMBIA

The Semester in Colombia is offered in cooperation with the University of the Andes in Bogota. The student may spend one semester, approximately August 15 to December 10, studying in Bogota. Students take one Syracuse University course, one special course offered by the University of the Andes for Syracuse and three regular courses offered by the University of the Andes. The language of instruction is Spanish.

SEMESTER IN AMSTERDAM

The Semester in Amsterdam was inaugurated in September of 1967 by the College of Home Economics. The program offers courses in home economics, art history and sociology. The language of instruction is English. The program is offered with the cooperation of the Netherlands — America Institute.

ADMISSION TO THE PROGRAM

The curriculum is designed primarily to fit the needs of college juniors. Applicants who would be in their senior year will be considered if they have the support of their home college. (Students are normally expected to take the last thirty hours of work on the home campus.) Applicants who would be in the second semester of the sophomore year may be considered. Ordinarily such applicants are expected to demonstrate that participation during the junior year would not be possible.

The program is open to students from all accredited colleges and universities. An applicant from an institution other than Syracuse must have the support of his home college and must be elegible to take a full program of course work for full credit at his home school.

To be accepted, the student must establish that he has the necessary academic ability and emotional maturity to succeed in the program for which he applies.

Students are advised to begin thinking about a possible semester abroad early in their college career. In many instances, careful planning of the student's total academic program will be necessary. The applicant considering study abroad is urged to discuss the matter with his academic adviser. The student may also obtain advice and assistance by contacting the Foreign Study Programs office at Syracuse University.

It is not necessary to be a major in any particular field or fields of study to be eligible to participate in a foreign study program; past participants have come from all of the undergraduate divisions of the University. However, the applicant whose major field of study is one not included in the curriculum of the program offered abroad must be especially careful in planning well in advance.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

The cost of a foreign study program is moderately higher ($300 - $400) than the cost of a semester on the Syracuse campus. The student pays $1,840 for tuition, fees, insurance, orientation, outboard transportation, board and lodging for the semester. All scholarships valid for use at Syracuse University can be applied to the program. There are a limited number of grants-in-aid for a semester abroad.

APPLICATION

Applications must be submitted on forms obtained from the Foreign Study Programs office, 335 Comstock Avenue in Syracuse (13210). APPLICATIONS FOR A FALL TERM ARE DUE BY APRIL 15 AND BY OCTOBER 15 FOR THE SPRING. It is advisable to submit an application early in order to allow for adequate advance planning.

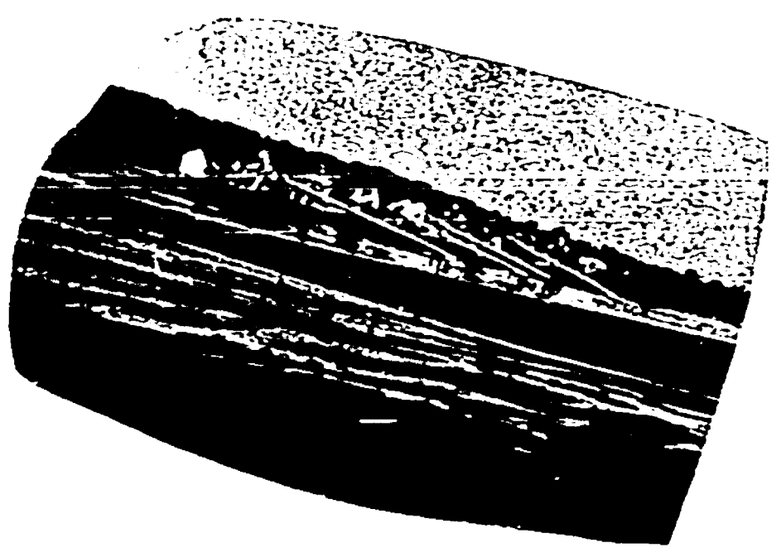
SU SPORTS

August 1, 1962 Section IV

Welcome, sports fans



SU has facilities for all

Syracuse University is blessed with having an attractive campus featuring new dormitory and classroom buildings. For the sports-minded student, Syracuse has excellent athletic and recreational facilities for both the varsity and intramural program.

The outstanding sports structure on campus is Archbold Stadium where each fall the Orangemen entertain the finest football teams in the nation. This season will see Maryland, UCLA, Pittsburgh, William & Mary and Navy match strength with the local forces.

Archbold Stadium was built in 1907 and has a seating capacity of 40,696. In 1951 steel stands were erected that added 13,000 new seats to the concrete bowl. The record attendance was set in 1960 when 42,290 fans sat in on the action when traditional foe Penn State invaded and was defeated.

The newest addition to the Syracuse athletic scene is Manley Field House, a circular domed structure with no pillars to block the spectator's view. The building is home for the basketball team and is used as an indoor practice facility by the football, baseball, track and lacrosse squads.

For students who want to let off steam, Archbold gymnasium has complete facilities for nearly all sports. There are five basketball courts, a swimming pool, handball and squash courts, a weight room, wrestling room, rifle range, gymnastics equipment and lockers.

A part of Archbold that few people ever see is the crew room. Here, Syracuse rowers work out when ice keeps them from practicing on Lake Onondaga. In the crew room are tanks of running water with shells set between them that enable the SU oarsmen to work out year 'round.

Archbold Gym is for use by men only, but girls need not worry because they have their own modern recreation center. Known as the Women's Building, this structure has facilities for basketball, volleyball, swimming, indoor tennis and bowling. Occasionally, the men are allowed to sneak in and use the bowling alleys and volleyball courts.

For those who wish to spend their winter out in the snow, Syracuse has a ski slope and jump just a mile and a half from campus. Within a radius of 50 miles from the University there are many centers that offer excellent skiing.

Come springtime SU students move their activities outside to take advantage of the warm Syracuse weather. Tecumseh golf course is only two miles from the main campus and here the University team entertains squads from other colleges.

If tennis is your fancy, there are 15 courts in the University area on which to play.

Where the action is . . . in Archbold Gymnasium.

Behind Manley Field House is a large athletic complex that serves as practice field for the football team in the fall. These fields are also used by students for intramural football and softball. The lacrosse team also uses the area for practice and home games.

Lew Carr Field is also out there and is the home of the varsity and freshman baseball team.

As a student around Syracuse University, you will not be limited to using just the facilities around the campus area. The region around the University is filled with several recreational spots such as Green Lakes State Park which has a fine beach for swimming; Onondaga Lake Park at Liverpool and Watkins Glen, the famous auto racing course 75 miles southwest of Syracuse.

Whatever your taste in athletic endeavor, Syracuse will have something to please you. All students are encouraged to make use of these facilities. That's what they are there for.

Football forecast Can we win 7?

By NEIL KERR

For 15 years Syracuse's football forces relied on the "big back" offense. First came the famed Jim Brown in 1954-55-56. Then there was Tom Stephens in 1957-58; Ernie Davis in 1959-61; Jim Nance in 1962-64; Floyd Little in 1964-66; and Larry Csonka in 1965-67.

But the era of the "big backs" appears to be over.

Although Syracuse may have a good prospect this fall in sophomore fullback Al Newton, it will be a powerful defense which moves into the spotlight in the 1968 campaign.

A year ago, the Syracuse defense allowed only 127 points. It ranked first in the nation in kickoff defense, was second in rushing defense and fourth in total defense. The SU foes gained only 548 yards rushing, an average of 54.8 per game.

The defense headed by All-America candidate Tony Kyasky, returns nearly intact. And, with powerful linemen such as Lou Gubitosa, Gerry Beach, Bill Coghill and Art Thoms, linebackers like Don Dorr and Bob Bancroft, plys deep backs such as Kyasky, Cliff Ensley and Tom Hermanowski, the Orange don't figure to be scored on often.

On the attack, Syracuse was wiped out by graduation.

Gone is the great Larry Csonka, quarterback Rick Cassata and wingback Tom Coughlin. Gone are the top five scorers: Csonka (62 points), Ed Mantle (37), Cassata (36), Jack Jones (18) and Coughlin (12). Gone are the top four pass receivers: Coughlin (26), Jones (22), Csonka (11), and Gary Fredericks (10).

Thus, it's a new era as far as Syracuse University's offense is concerned.

Players like Paul Paolisso and Rich Panczyszyn at quarterback, Bill During, Ron Trask and Bill Knox at halfback, plus Newton and John Bulicz at fullback are expected to fill the void left by the graduation depletion.

On whether or not these players live up to expectations hinges the fate of the 1968 gridiron season on the Hill.

The Orangemen confront a rugged schedule. Season opener is Michigan State at East Lansing. Then come Archbold invasions by Maryland, revenge-hungry UCLA and Pittsburgh. Traditional rival Penn State hosts the Orange at University Park, Pa. followed by a contest with California in the Golden West. A homecoming game against William & Mary is slated next.

One week later, SU will be out to avenge last season's loss to Navy when the Middies visit the Archbold oval. Season closer is against West Virginia at Morgantown.

Michigan State, UCLA, defending Eastern champion Penn State and California will be hard to beat.

Head coach Ben Schwartzwalder opens his 20th campaign on the Hill and he has produced 18 straight non-losing seasons. Over the past five autumns, Syracuse had compiled consecutive 8-2, 7-3, 7-3, 8-2 and 8-2 records.

Winning seven games this year will be a tough task.

Returning stars

Rich Panczyszyn, who has inherited the legendary "44," is the probable SU quarterback this fall.

Tony Kyasky, all-American candidate, heads up the powerful Syracuse defense, which was not stricken by graduations this spring.

Just Hangin' Around

For You

Some of the finest works of Twentieth Century painting and sculpture, that is, are hanging around the Clark Music Center. Hanging on our walls (we're nearly out of wall-space), standing on our floors (we try not to bump them). Clark Music Center is a veritable gallery of art. You can even walk on some very old oriental rugs, (but please . . . no napping).

Clark Music Center believes that good visual art goes hand in hand with good audibie art. When you're looking at a band instrument you like, you should also like the place where you are looking. When you seat yourself down to try a new set of drums (in one of our compartmentalized, private display rooms), you should feel comfortable enough to stay seated and drum awhile. And while you're listening to a McIntosh, Fisher, or KLH stereo you think you want to buy, you should have something to keep your eyes as busy as your ears .

So you can see, it's not art for art's sake . . . it's art for your sake.

Former SU star

Jim Nance carries the ball into Roxbury ghetto

Jim Nance, former SU football star, has been a one-man battering ram in the American Football League for two years. Now he wants to be a one-man building program in Boston's Roxbury ghetto.

The record-breaking star of the Boston Patriots launched his latest program for helping his fellow Negroes Thursday when he formally opened a scholarship fund drive for members of his race seeking to become lawyers.

The drive, to be kicked off Saturday night when former NCAA wrestling champion Nance referees a pro wrestling bout at Boston Arena, stems from what the former Syracuse university student learned while working as a National Guard recruiter in his adopted city's negro districts.

Nance admits it's a modest beginning. He already has a promise from Boston's Portia Law School that if he can locate one or two qualified Negro college students this year, they will be accepted for legal training whether the funds have been raised or not.

The next steps, Nance said Thursday, would be to get several qualified Negroes into Portia and convince other law schools in the area to join the program.

"What I want to do is help," Nance said. "The only way the Negro is ever going to achieve anything near the level of his fellow man is through education. I hope to help alleviate the problem.

"I learned just how serious the problem is when I went into Roxbury recruiting for the National Guard. The kids don't even know what their military obligations are. You know, there are 16 or 18 different possibilities in the military open to each of these kids. And they don't know a thing about them."

Nance, who said his military uniform has not caused him any difficulty on his recruiting trips, blamed many of the problems of the ghetto on fear and ignorance.

"It's a little rough, overcoming the image of the guards and explaining about the program. The National Guard does so many things but the only thing the kids know about is the riot duty."

Nance, who recently completed three weeks of summer training with the Massachusetts National Guard at Ft. Devens, said Negro lawyers could make a big difference in Roxbury.

"The blacks fear the whites and the whites are afraid of the colored people. They don't know – that's why they're afraid."

Nance and Portia dean Walter Kozuch agreed their biggest problem was to find college undergraduates qualified to begin law studies.

The 238-pound fullback admitted he was worried when he began his one-man recruiting program. But, he said, he has made progress.

"They'll talk to me when they wouldn't talk to you," he said.

"And when they talk to me, I can find out what their problems are. I don't walk down the street with a banner or a band.

"I talk to the kids in the clubs and on the streets and in the parks and at the pools. Some guys gave up acting but I'm not going to give up football. I'm just going to do what I can, ask people to help the cause by coming to see a wrestling match."

SU football: a glorious tradition

Fumble!

Intercollegiate football at Syracuse University has had a long and glorious history.

It started in 1889. It continued through the roaring '20s, through World War II. It climaxed in 1959 when the Orange had their first undefeated season and the national championship.

Football at Syracuse has produced some spectacular games and immortal players: Alexander, Andreas, Hanson, Horr, Ringo, Brown, Davis, Nance, Little, Csonka.

The Orange history began on Oct. 17, 1889, behind the energetic leadership of John Blake Hillyer and Frank Rooney. After more than three years of undergraduate agitation, the University Athletic Association named a manager and director of football. A committee was also appointed to raise funds.

On Nov. 23, 1889, following a successful 28-0 practice game triumph over Syracuse High School, Bill Orange's football team journeyed to Rochester to play its first official game.

Unfortunately, the challenging University of Rochester squad had too much for the Orangemen, prevailing, 36-0. Hillyer served as captain for that opening game.

The following fall, football built a firm foundation on Piety Hill. Eleven contests were played with Bobby Winston as coach and trainer and Syracuse posted a commendable 8-3 record.

One Syracusan reported in 1890, "Interest taken in college football is unprecedented in any other college sport and increases with every game. The future of football in Syracuse seems to be assured."

The 1890 season is distinguished by one other item, the adoption of a new University color — orange.

Syracuse football progressed rapidly in the early years. Colgate and Cornell, Syracuse's Central New York neighbors, appeared on the Orange slate for the first time in 1891, and the Saltine Warriors began a series with Army before the turn of the century.

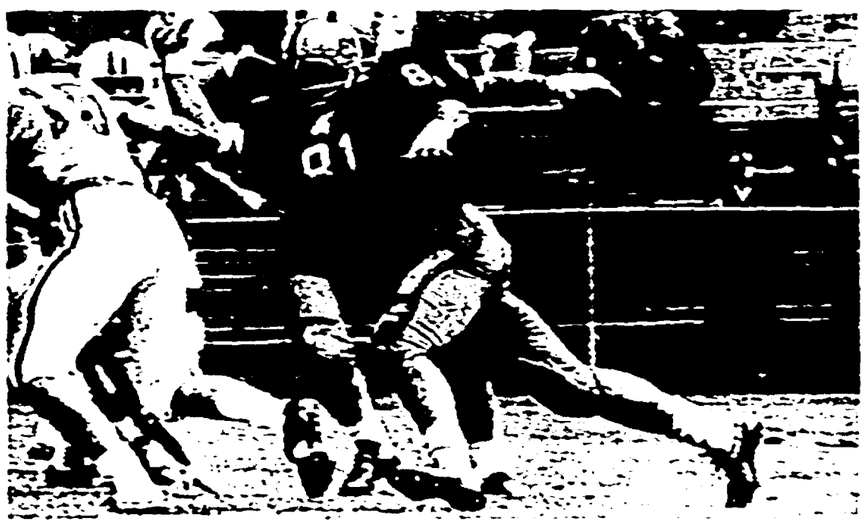
In 1906 an already successful coach named Frank (Buck) O'Neill moved from arch-rival Colgate to Syracuse and went on to become one of the sport's great leaders.

He served three different stints as Orange grid skipper and posted a brilliant 52-19-6 record for eight seasons.

O'Neill's 52 wins and eight seasons as coach were high-water marks until recent years when Ben Schwartzwalder began blanketing the SU record book.

In 1907, Syracuse began playing in a spacious new arena, the present Archbold Stadium. The stadium, of concrete, steel and wood construction, has a seating capacity of 40,696 with new steel seats having been added in 1951.

Archbold is presently New York State's largest collegiate football stadium.



In 1908, Bill Orange could point with pride to its first All-American, 240-pound tackle Frank (Bill) Horr.

Eighteen more bonafide All-Americans were to follow — including two-time selection Joe Alexander, popular Vic Hanson, the fabulous Jimmy Brown, the late, great Ernie Davis, three-time selection Floyd Little and Syracuse's all-time ground-gaining leader, Larry Csonka.

Through the years between the World Wars, Syracuse climbed into the national football spotlight. In addition to O'Neill, such talented coaches as John (Chick) Meehan, former athletic director Lew Andreas, Hanson and Ossie Solem directed the Orange fortunes.

Syracuse embarked on intersectional warfare with considerable success and the traditional Colgate fray became one of the nation's top games on an annual basis.

Among the great teams were O'Neill's 1915 (9-1-2) and 1917 (8-1-1) clubs; Meehan's 1923 (8-1-0) and 1924 (8-2-1) outfits; and Hanson's 1931 (7-1-1) and 1935 (6-1-1) units.

In Pursuit . . .

Ready . . . HIKE!

Following a brief post-World War II slump, Floyd (Ben) Schwartzwalder arrived on the Syracuse scene and engineered a resurgence. SU teams have posted a 124-58-2 record since Ben took over in 1949.

Both the 1952 and 1956 squads won Eastern titles and appeared in the Orange and Cotton Bowls respectively. Syracuse was selected for the Orange Bowl again after the 1958 season.

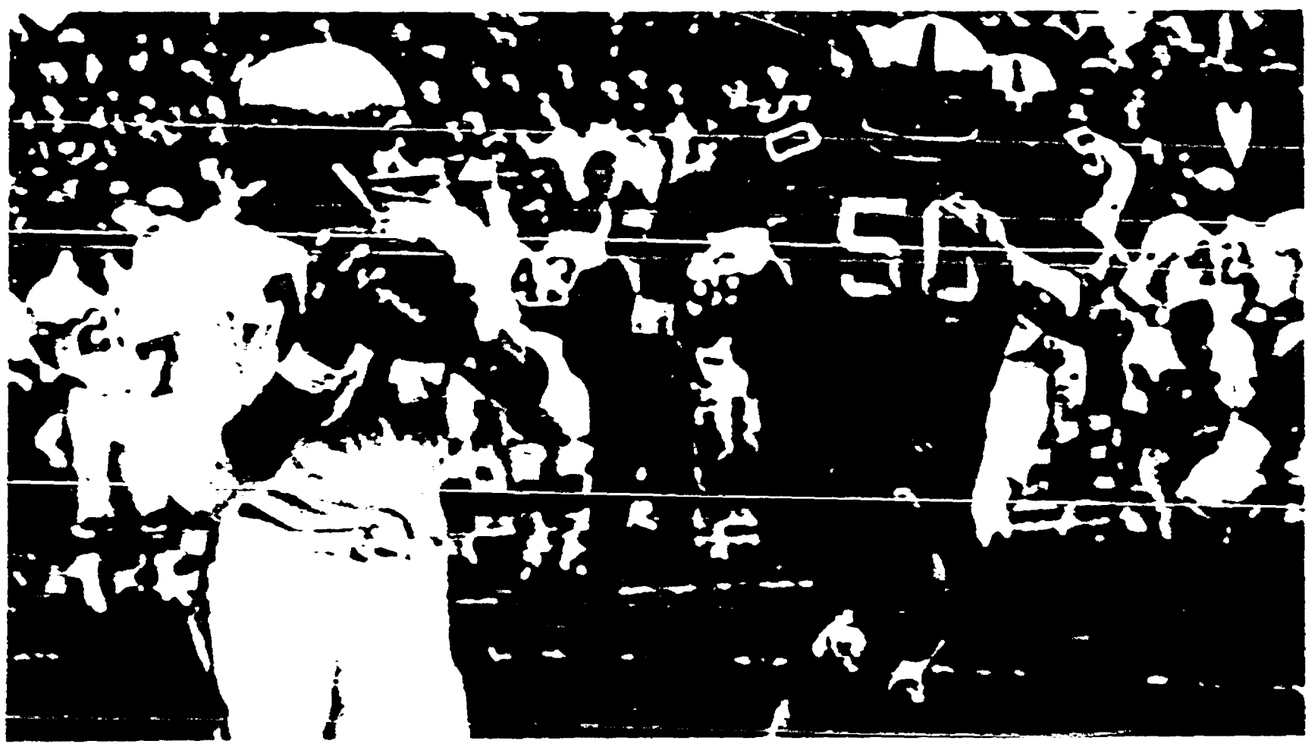
In 1959, SU was unbeateen in 10 games, National and Eastern champion, and a victor in the Cotton Bowl.

The 1961 team, featuring the late Ernie Davis, a two-time All-American and the '61 Heisman Trophy winner, won at the Liberty Bowl.

Syracuse, sparked by Jim Nance and Floyd Little, earned a Sugar Bowl spot in 1964. Then, in 1966, Little led the Hillmen to the Gator Bowl where Tennessee nipped the Orange, 18-12, despite 216 yards rushing by fabulous Floyd.

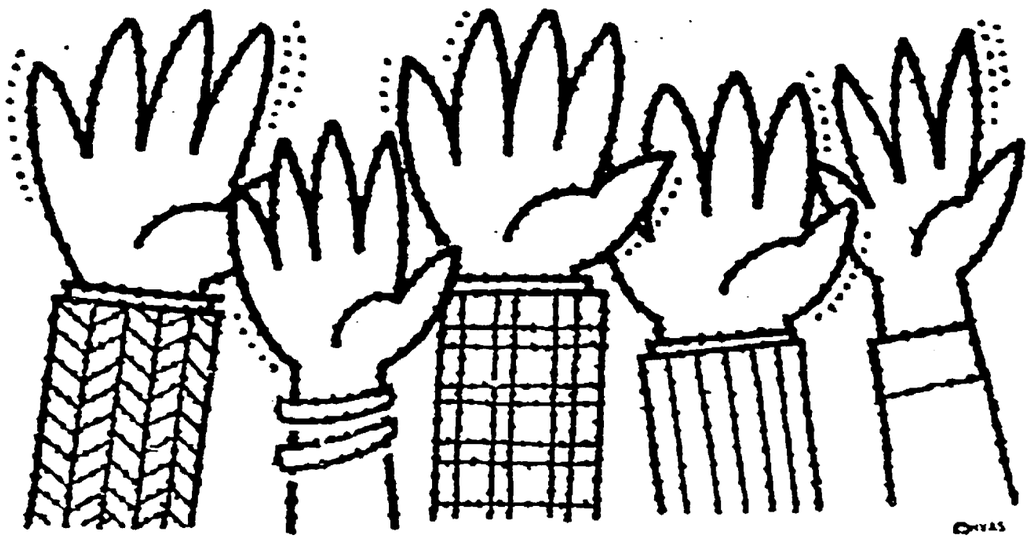
Last autumn, the Orangemen compiled a second straight 8-2 record, thanks mainly to the bull-like ballcarrying ability of fullback Larry Csonka.

The muscular Larry finished his SU career by breaking numerous SU records including most carries, career (597), most rushing yards, career (2934), most games rushed for more than 100 yards (14), most carries, season (261), most rushing yards, season (1127), and most carries, game (43 against Maryland).



Most of these marks were originally set by such outstanding backs as Brown, Davis and Little.

The pass is . . .



Over the past years, Syracuse football clubs have compiled a 430-247-42 record, winning nearly 65 per cent of their games.

Seventy-nine seasons of play have served to surround this great game with a feeling of romance and legend, lore and tradition, at Syracuse University.

Seven All-Americans

Coach Schwartzwalder raised SU football

Coach Ben Schwartzwalder with former team captain and greatest ground gainer in SU history, Larry Csonka.

At the outset of the 1948 football season, Syracuse beat Niagara, 13-9. It was the only game Syracuse won all year.

Not long afterwards Niagara decided to give up football. It's reasoning seemed clear: If you can't beat Syracuse, why bother?

Unhappy with the low opinion of Syracuse football, SU brought in a new football coach. The new man had been a center on a West Virginia team in the midst of its bleakest decade in history.

Floyd Burdette Schwartzwalder was the man.

"They wanted a big name coach," says Schwartzwalder of the hiring in 1948, "and they got a long-name coach."

As Syracuse begins its 80th season of football, they have the big-name coach they desired. It's still Schwartzwalder of course, and a very successful Schwartzwalder.

He lifted Syracuse, wallowing in the doldrums of football mediocrity, to a more than respectable position in national football.

It wasn't an easy task for Ben. It was two years before he had a winning team. Then they came fast and furious. And with them came bowl bids.

The Orange Bowl, the Cotton Bowl, the Orange and the Cotton again, the Liberty Bowl, the Sugar Bowl and the Gator Bowl.

His conversion of Syracuse from least in the East to one of the best was partly helped by a gradual increase in football scholarships, from 16 to 22 and finally to 25. Still, recruiting remains a large headache for the Orange skipper.

"I have never gotten a quarterback that even five other teams were after," he has moaned, "or any other player that Yale really wanted."

And Schwartzwalder has also been handicapped by schools like the Big 10 who have some 35 to 50 scholarships to hand out.

But the 59-year-old 1959 Coach-of-the-Year has made it big at Syracuse after coaching high school ball in Sisterville, Weston and Parkersburg, W. Va. and McKinley High School of Canton, Ohio.

Schwartzwalder was a paratrooper with the 82nd Division during the Second World War, receiving the Silver Star, the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart, four battle stars and a Presidential Unit citation.

For three years after the war, he was head coach at Muhlenburg.

Then Syracuse grabbed him. And Syracuse hasn't worried about Niagara since.

If your Mom and Pop attended S. U., they recall The Bookstall with affection.

New Varsity Coach

Danforth takes over the helm in a slack year

Roy Danforth

Most veteran observers are predicting a long, hard winter for Syracuse University's basketball team, but with rookie coach Roy Danforth at the helm, it's much too early to count the Orangemen out.

You see, Roy Danforth is a winner.

Danforth this season moves up, taking over the varsity coaching job from Fred Lewis who resigned to accept an Athletic Directorship post at Sacramento State College, Calif. after seeing his team compile an 11-14 record last winter.

Danforth, at 32, thus becomes one of the youngest head coaches in America, and he brings impressive credentials to the job.

At Syracuse, Roy has guided the freshman, or Tangerine, teams to a 57-8 won-loss record in the past four seasons that he has been on the local scene. His 1966-67 squad earned a 16-0 log. Last winter, he saw his charges were eked out by scores of 96-92 over Cornell, 89-87 over Cornell, 87-85 over Broome Tech, 98-96 over Canisius, 87-86 over Colgate and 107-103 over Cornell in overtime.

But that season was highlighted by a pair of wins over the Niagara frosh by scores of 103-96 and 106-101, despite a total of 84 points by the amazing Calvin Murphy. Ernie Austin, who tallied 480 points for an even 30-point-per-game average, led that freshman team.

Last winter, 6-11 Bill Smith and 6-7 Bill McDaniel paced the Tangerines to their 15-1 record.

On the varsity level, Danforth will face severe problems in his first year, because he loses three outstanding seniors (George Hicker, Vaughn Harper and Richie Cornwall) in addition to the loss of junior Wayne Ward and sophomore McDaniel, both of whom have been at least temporarily declared ineligible.

But Danforth, possessor of an easy-going disposition and remarkable popularity among the SU students, doesn't plan to throw in the towel yet. He's been winning much too long to break the h[illegible] now.

Danforth started his career at Summitville, Ind. high school. Then he spent three years in the army before attending Mississippi Southern college. At Mississippi, Roy played under coach Fred Lewis, who later went on to take over at Syracuse. Danforth was a backcourt starter for four years and captained the team his senior year. He earned honorable mention All-America status his junior season.

Off the court, Roy was president of his class as a junior and senior, was editor of the yearbook and was named the outstanding senior athlete. He also lettered in baseball and track.

Coming to Syracuse in 1964, Roy's teams produced consecutive records of 13-2, 11-5, 16-0 and 15-1. Among these many victories were some truly memorable wins.

During the spotless 1966-67 campaign, Danforth's teams played a series of cliffhangers, but seemed to be blessed with amazing last-second luck. Wins

Basketball forecast

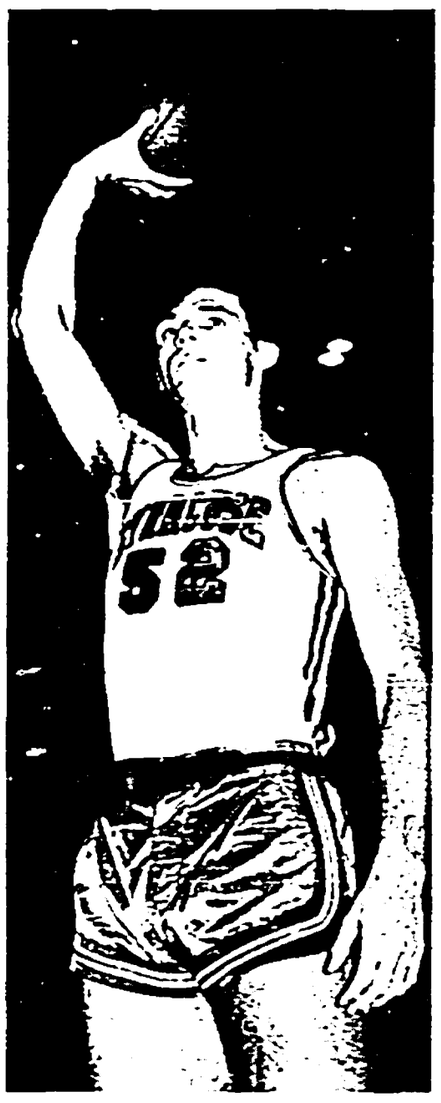
Gray hairs. That's the problem facing youthful Roy Danforth this winter.

Danforth is only 32 years old, but last spring he was elevated to the varsity basketball coaching job at Syracuse University. It's a high honor to gain a varsity coaching post at this early a career stage.

Accompanying this honor will be problems. After consecutive 22-6 and 20-6 seasons, SU's cage fortunes sagged last year, dipping to 11-14. It is hard to foresee any great improvement in Roy's first year at the helm because he has lost the top four scorers and rebounders from last season's club and will be forced to bank heavily on sophomores.

And, 10 of the first 11 games will be played on foreign courts.

This is the combination that may put a few gray hairs on the youthful head of Roy Danforth.



Graduation took Vaughn Harper, George Hicker and Richie Cornwall, the 1-2-4 scorers, while 6-7 Wayne Ward, the No. 2 rebounder and third in point output, has left school. This means that the top returnees are Ernie Austin (8.9) and Frank Hamblen (6.4).

Austin set a freshman scoring record two years ago, bucketing 480 points in 16 games for a 30-point-per-game clip, but the highly-touted 6-0 sharpshooter failed to live up to high expectations as a varsity performer last year.

A quartet of other varsity returnees, 6-7 Dave Aldrich, 6-3 Bob Kouwe, 6-2 John Suder and 6-4 Bill Case will all see extensive action also. However, last season, the foursome combined to average 14.5 points a game.

Top newcomer will be Bill Smith (6-11) of Rochester. Smith is the tallest player ever to wear the Orange of Syracuse. He connected on 68.1 percent of his shots, averaging 21 points a contest for last winter's 15-1 freshmen. Big Bill also grabbed 218 rebounds. However, the leading scorer from that Tangerine club, 6-6 Bob McDaniel, who averaged 24.8 points a game, has been dropped from school for at least the first semester due to a poor academic record.

As a result of these severe personnel losses, Syracuse is left with a very young team, one that faces what is known in sports jargon as "a rebuilding year."

Bill Smih, six-foot eleven-inch sophomore from Rochester is the tallest player ever to come to S U and the hope of SU's basketball prospects this winter.

Departing coach Fred Lewis resigned his position after an 11-14 season to accept the position of Athletic Director at Sacremento State College, Calif.

More than a football school

Peace activists mobilize for Fall of discontent

By ALAN STAMM

In this year of campus protest, several amorphous New Left groups are mobilizing to thrust Syracuse University into the mainstream of student activism and prove it is "more than a football school."

Although energetic organizers have succeeded in somewhat unifying the anti-war movement here and in acquiring essential grass-roots support, much serious base-building is still necessary.

Many local activists feel their work is that of an "in group," which isolates SU's anti-war community from the majority of students and faculty members.

Sparking student protest here are People for Freedom and Peace and the local chapter of Students for a Democratic Society--both sizable and growing.

They coordinated last term's confrontation with Dow Chemical, a massive anti-war march and the Administration Building sit-in. Such actions were not fully understood by most-of-the student body and often led to the further isolation of PFP and SDS.

Even within the organizations themselves, a lack of discipline fermented the advancing of varied goals rather than one coherent objective. At the Administration Building seizure, according to participant Marshall Rosenthal, "there were 100 people and perhaps 105 opinions."

Since many students are obviously upset by the war, sectarianism represents a political blunder--failure to build and broaden an anti-war movement when such expansion was objectively possible.

The remedy is theoretically simple: SDS and PFP, through intelligent and serious organizational work, are trying to present themselves as movements dedicated to the interest of all students. They have to make themselves credible to the majority of students upset by the war but as

PAUL O'DWYER

Senate candidate O'Dwyer speaks at 2 p.m. in Hendricks

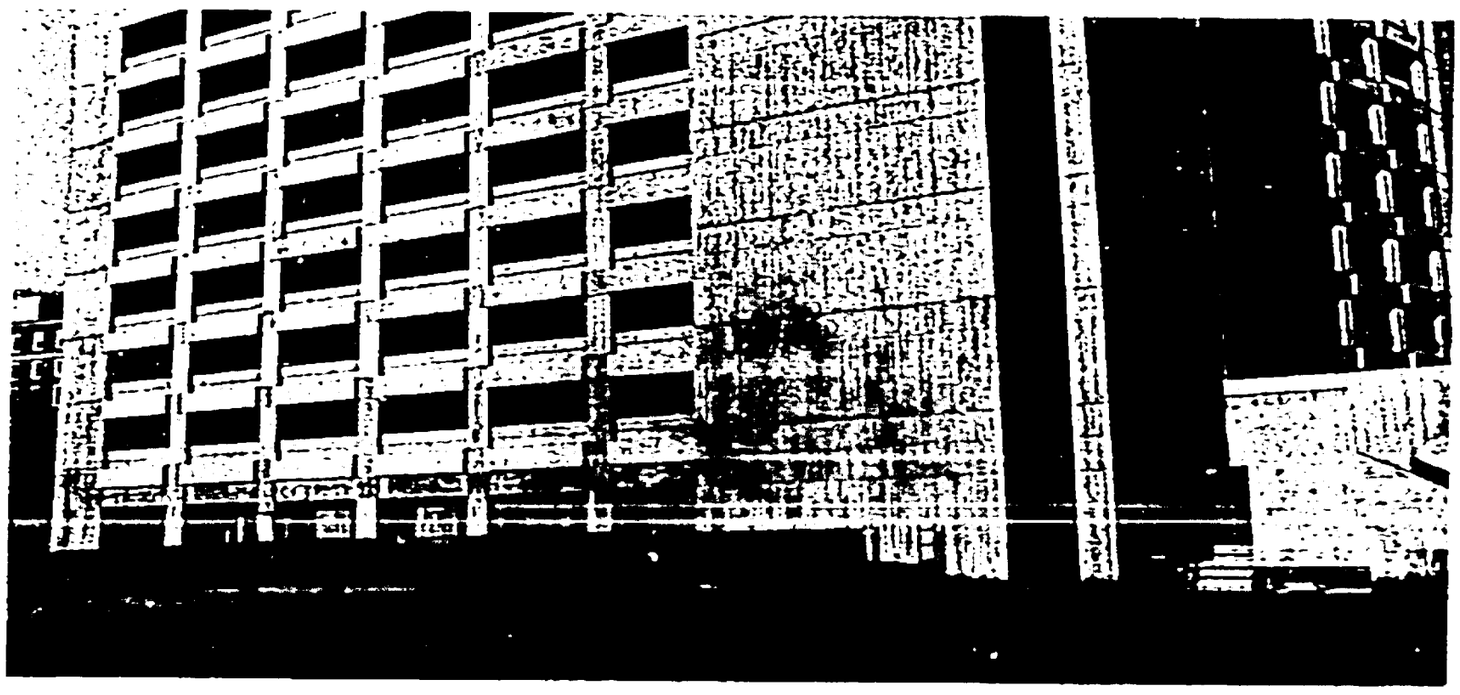
By EVAN RICHERT

Since the Democratic party machinery finished its business in Chicago last month, Paul O'Dwyer remains as one of the few physical evidences that Eugene McCarthy was a candidate for President. O'Dwyer, the dovish Democratic candidate for U.S. Senator from New York, comes to Syracuse University this afternoon.

But O'Dwyer doesn't always act like a 1968 election year candidate--at least not the kind of candidate that has to beat liberal Republican Sen. Jacob Javits. "In the last 20 years," wrote New York Post columnist Jimmy Breslin after O'Dwyer had upset Kennedy-supporter Eugene Nickerson and Humphrey-man Joseph Resnick, in the New York primary, "if there was a way to get on the wrong side of a street politically, O'Dwyer would find it."

A candidate generally seeks his national party's support. But,said O'Dwyer, after his nomination, "I couldn't care less," and he promptly called for Hubert Humphrey to withdraw as a Presidential candidate.

For a politican with ambition, a newsworthy civil rights case can be a unique prize, and a picture shaking hands with a prominent black man a profitable pose. But O'Dwyer's civil rights cases were passed up by even Negro weeklies, and 20 years ago a photo of him gun-running for Israel might have brought a prison term for a Federal felony.



Today's politician lives and dies by TV. Yet O'Dwyer this summer lost prime time on "Meet the Press" because he refused to cross a picket line outside the television station.

For more than a quarter of a century, he has served as trade union member, picket and advisor. He has helped at the shop level, at the bargaining table, in the legislative hall and in the courtroom. He has represented the sandhogs and brewery workers, pocketbook workers, hod-carriers, warehousemen, transport workers, chefs, waiters and mine workers.

In 1947 he represented the first cases involving discrimination in housing. In the summer of 1964 he was an unpaid defender of unemployed miners of Hazard, Ky., and served as volunteer counsel defending civil rights demonstrators in Jackson, Miss.

Last month in Chicago he fought party regulars, and lost. November's battle may prove even more of a test--he seems to insist upon taking on Humphrey as well as Javits.

He speaks at 2 p.m. in front of Hendricks Chapel.

Students to help pick chancellor

By JEAN HAVENS

The Council on Student Life is working on the formation of a student committee to aid in the selection of a successor to Dr. William P. Tolley.

Dr. Tolley, SU chancellor since 1942, announced his decision to retire at a Board of Trustees meeting in May.

The six-member student committee will work with a trustee committee headed by Royal L. O'Day, president of the Marine Midland Trust Company of Central New York, and a faculty committee headed by Frederic J. Kramer, dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

In an attempt to represent the various factions on campus, the council will select four diversified undergraduates for the committee. Two graduate students will be chosen later.

Open to every undergraduate on campus, committee applications must include an interview and the answers to two written questions.

Along with his name, address, extension and class, the applicant will have to evaluate his role on the committee and cite the characteristics he feels the students would like to find in a chancellor.

Deadline for applications is 5 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 17. They should be turned in at either the Women's Building or Dean Carleton's office in the Administration building. Appointments for interviews will be made at this time.

The selected committee members will be announced on Friday, Sept. 20. Anyone with questions may contact Chuck Hicks, 476-0833 or ext. 3073; Chris Mudd, ext. 2629; Ed Feldman, ext. 2451; Cindy Bailey, ext. 2634; Jerry Tatarian, ext. 3225; or Joey Edwardh.

Occupied, but not completed

Problems befall dorm construction

By KAY CHRISTENSEN

Syracuse University's new $8.4 million dormitory complex has failed to meet the September completion date for the 1968 academic year.

Occupancy of St. Mary's dormitory site began, however, with the influx of students earlier this week. The limited access to both the girls' and boys' dorms complicated the transfer of students' possessions from cars to rooms.

"Under the circumstances it ran quite smoothly," said J.V. Latorre, assistant to the vice president for administration and research. "The kids showed ingenuity in getting their gear in."

To enter the dorm complex students must enter from Van Buren Street to avoid construction hazards. Combatting dust, ducking planks and jumping mud puddles, however, are a few remaining obstacles. Heavy drilling, cement grinding, bulldozers, and workmen yelling combine to make a noisy area.

Uncompleted portions of the complex include the dining hall's three floors. The dining room, top floor, is usable but not completed. Residents from several cottages, including Lehman, Merrill and Grover Cleveland, have been assigned to eat there.

Grover Cleveland residents, located on University Avenue, have petitioned to Dean Carleton to reappraise their assignment. They requested to eat in Haven Hall as they did last year. About two-thirds of the residents, 80-90 students, signed the petition. The petition will be presented and reviewed by the University's Housing Committee next week.

Dorm lobbies and their "call" systems are not yet finished. Rooms are completed and they have built-in dresser-wardrobe

SU offers diversity of paradox

Welcome to Syracuse University, an ex-cow pasture converted over a hundred years into America's third largest private institution of higher learning, with assets approaching $170 million.

Syracuse is the university where all men are created equal and most women are segregated on the Mount. One day SU will undoubtedly be forced to bus women across campus to integrate the all-male cafeteria at Sadler Hall.

Syracuse is the home of the fraternity system where Greeks bear but a slight resemblance to their ancient namesakes and where the concept of brotherhood is sometimes limited to the boundaries of the house or the face of a member of another race.

Syracuse is where tradition dictates that freshmen tip it to upperclassmen and where upperclassmen trip over one another trying to win for their organization the talents of freshmen.

Syracuse is a collection of independent schools bound together by a common steam-pipe system and the meeting ground for faculty and students of divergent schools is the parking lot.

You will find at Syracuse the towers of Crouse College, the spacious patio of Newhouse, the monotony of HBC, and one unnamed Physics Building.

You will struggle at Syracuse to preserve your devotion to learning, instilled in you by the American way, in the face of grades that seem based on human emotion as well as rational objectivity.

You will find at Syracuse one Student Government President nominated and elected by a Greek controlled political party, whose opposition party was of the same coloring, neither of which seemed to recognize the 7,000 independents on campus.

You will find also a Daily Orange editor chosen by an updated version of blind man's bluff played by a Board of Publications irrelevant to journalism.

At Syracuse it is also possible to find the rich and the poor, the African, Asian and Latin American, and intellectually challenging professors.

The knowledge of the ages is available at Syracuse University, except the bit that explains why a football bounces into the hands of the wrong man on a crisp Saturday afternoon.

Editorial Services

With each new academic year, it is necessary for the Daily Orange to redefine its role within the University Community, and the respective roles within the paper. In this first issue of the academic year, it is most appropriate that such a definitive statement appear for the edification of incoming students and the clarification of those returning.

The Daily Orange, the "Official newspaper of Syracuse University", now traces its connection with the University back over 60 years. In that time its role and responsibility to the University has changed vastly. Today, while the Daily Orange still derives substantial support from the University it operates largely as an autonomous organization.

Since we operate on a fairly large budget each year, the Office of Student Publications has been delegated a faculty financial advisor. At times this position has become the point of much criticism, but beyond this no faculty or administrators are directly connected with the content of the paper.

Despite numerous allegations to the contrary, no editorial pressure is exerted; no restrictions are imposed and in recent years no repercussions have followed any printed story or editorial.

While the University administrators cannot be held totally blame-free, they have generally restricted themselves to irrelevant trivialities such as restricting the publication of beer ads.

It is the aim of the Daily Orange to provide not only comprehensive news coverage, but also competent criticism and dialogue on controversial issues. The opinion of the Daily Orange will appear each day in an unsigned editorial on this page. In addition, by-lined columns representing the ideas of their authors will also appear on a regular basis. Because we seek to maintain this necessary dialogue, the Editorial Director is looking for new columns representing this wide diversity of views.

In addition, the editorial page of the Daily Orange offers two additional services to its readers. The traditional "Letters to the Editor" will attempt to print as many letters of general interest as space allows. Here the editor reserves the right to edit all letters for length. Although names may be omitted upon request, all letters must be signed.

This year, another service in the form of a 'Newspower' Problems Column will be initiated.

Readers having problems of any sort are invited to submit them to the Daily Orange. Appropriate members of the editorial staff will then attempt to obtain satisfactory answers, which will be printed.

Columns, letters and problems may all be submitted to the Daily Orange Editorial Director, 1101 E. Adams St., Syracuse, N.Y.

An open letter to students from OPT

The era of Holden Caulfield is over. Syracuse University was once an intellectual and spiritual virgin. However, the apocalyptic force of discontent is raping the naive impotence which characterized the fifties. Having once placidly sipped the draught of the waters of Lethe, students all over the world are awakening to the ensnaring realities of today. We have seen the fruition of non-commitment grow into the helpless eunuch of hesitancy. We, the students of Syracuse University, have been castrated and perverted by our own lethargy.

OPT, The Organization for Positive Thought, places its faith in the premise that this is no longer acceptable to the young men and women who are now Syracuse University. We firmly believe that students are trying to find a new direction. However, this new direction cannot be found by each student alone. The selfish content of smug isolation is only intellectual masturbation. The true learning process must ultimately be one of sharing. The give-and-take of true communication is the only possible path to intellectual consumption.

Students must realize, be they reactionary or radical, independent or fraternity, athlete or aesthete, liberal or moderate, that they all share one common ground–they are all students. If we were all auto workers at General Motors we would recognize our individual differences not as an insurmountable factional struggle, but as our greatest strength. It is along these lines of homogeneity that students must begin to organize.

It is the belief of OPT that the transformation of factionalism into cohesion can be accomplished only through meaningful dialogue. It is only when factions see themselves in perspective to the whole of the student body that such a dialogue can begin. Therefore, it is OPT's first goal to open the channels of communication horizontally--between the students. The spectacle of last spring's Dow Chemical Protest was a demonstration of irrationality and misdirected energy. Such a violent polarization of attitude and action is the inevitable result of a lack of exchange in the form of meaningful dialogue.

OPT acknowledges the urgent need for an active forum of thought from which can emerge a united student voice. Our strength as students lies in our number, just as the strength of the United Auto Workers lies in its unity and size. OPT is not seeking to convert or to proselytize any specific viewpoint. We wish only to make our diversity intellectually and positively productive.

OPT is the manifestation of a growing student concern in the world about us. We are now in the process of actively seeking the support and encouragement of every student. What is ultimately sought is the active participation by all students, regardless of their political or academic persuasion. OPT is not merely a new and fresh approach to the entire issue of student involvement. Jean-Paul Sartre said that "There is no reality except in action." The sterile inactivity of non-participation in the growing student dialogue is a futile attempt at escape from a reality which is becoming more and more inescapable.

Students desiring to participate in the initial formulation of OPT's program should call Dave Ifshin at 475-1869 or x2626, x3694.

Explosive issues may rock SU

Hicks urges students to 'give a damn'

By EVAN RICHERT

Syracuse University's black student government president says he represents a minority--the students.

"Chicago last month was a good lesson for middle-class whites," he said in an interview with the DO. "They're becoming America's new niggers. They were there and saw what police brutality is all about. They saw and experienced part of what minority groups have been complaining about. It was a realization."

Chuck Hicks saw in Chicago, where he spent five nights in the streets as demonstrator and medic, an exodus of young people from the nonviolent age. "The time of nonviolence is more and more a thing of the past, not only for civil rights but for students at Columbia and Chicago and all over. They no longer can accept nonviolence."

It is in part because nonviolence hasn't worked, at least not quickly enough. Working from within the system seemed to produce at Chicago little besides a realization that the real system--the party machine--excluded students.

But Hicks said he is not yet joining the exodus. "I've been within and without the system," he said, "and I think they're both needed. Burning a ghetto may be the only way to get jobs and better houses and facilities. The Columbia siege, whether you agree with it or not, advanced the cause of students at least five years. But the NAACP can be effective through the courts, and SU's Council on Student Live can bring benefits that demonstrations can't. Disorder gives the system a push."

Legitimate Channels

So this year Hicks will try to work with SU's system, if not within it. Legitimate channels of change must be tried before he will take the Left outside the system's boundaries.

This, he indicated, follows U.S. National Student Association (NSA) policy, although the National Observer reported that last month's NSA congress--at which Hicks was nominated for both the presidency and vice-presidency of the organization--predicted widespread attacks on educational institutions this fall.

"Speaker after speaker predicted widespread attacks," said the Observer. "The delegations promised them."

The spark at SU--if it exists at all--probably isn't a single issue such as a Morningside gym, but is more likely buried under several potentially explosive issues:

--disturbed Blacks who want to increase their tiny numbers in the University.

--a course on Black history that was created largely at the request of Black students, but which was closed according to Hicks, by 2 p.m. Tuesday, excluding most Blacks. "They should have made it at least 50-50 black and white," said Hicks.

--Peace groups' continuing dissatisfaction with the Vietnam war, and increasing frustration in this election year.

--campus recruiting, one of the issues sparking last spring's Administration building take-over.

--parietal hours and "in loco parentis."

--Rule One, by which the Administration may dismiss a student with no reason given, and the lack of due process. A student court is active, but has not yet been confronted with an issue that might conflict with Administration policy.

S.G.'s Part

For S.G.'s part, according to Hicks, "we've got to communicate with the students." He plans discussions on parietal hours with the Council on Student Life, and on the extension of optional hours to second semester freshmen with AWS. (We're still very concerned with pots and pan issues. They seem little, but they're big because basic rights have been taken away.") Strong dorm councils, improved food service and a provocative speakers program also are hoped for.

"We've just got to do anything we can to finally make the students give a damn. If students don't learn to stand up for themselves, they're going to keep getting walked on, like in Chicago. And nobody else is going to change things."

SG's 'minority' president

Syracuse University's 22-year-old student president was reared, he says, "in a lot of pride--pride in our name and in being black."

Outgoing, cheerful and confident, Chuck Hicks claims in an off-the-record statement that "student government is worth something because I'm president." Off-the-record, but not really arrogant, and maybe valid.

Black, a witness to violence and seeing success as a part of life, his background helped shape such optimism.

Hicks' parents--not yet 40 and putting four sons and daughters through college (a fifth will enter next year)--in recent years have become moving forces in the Black revolution.

"They feel," Hicks explains, "that they have to bring about change. They told us kids several years ago that they were becoming involved in the fight for civil rights, and that if they were killed, well, it was the best cause to die for."

Chuck Hicks

Although the Hicks' advocated change through nonviolence, danger did follow. The Hicks house in Bogalusa, La., became the one in the community to get shot at. For the Klan, it was a favorite target. The family, for one eight-month period, was under constant guard by Black brothers.

"A white lynch party was supposed to be after us," said Hicks, "and the police said they couldn't guarantee protection. So the Blacks did.

The Deacons for Defense and Justice grew from the vigil, and several member organizations have spread through the South. "It was a hard time for the family," said Hicks, "but whenever we were home, it was never depressing. In fact, we laughed a lot."

Hicks' father since has become president of a box manufacturing factory union and helped to found and head a local civil rights union.

"As a Hicks and as Blacks," Chuck said of the kids, "we're expected to do our best--no more. It's assumed we'll succeed."

Campbell succeeds Bailey as Maxwell dean

Urban specialist cites problems of post

Dr. Alan (Scotty) K. Campbell, Newly-appointed dean of the Maxwell School, brings to his post extensive personal friendships with many public figures.

A political science professor and director of the Metropolitan Studies Program, he knew the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy on a first-name basis through his active campaign assistance.

Prof. Campbell, 44, succeeds Stephen K. Bailey, who has been Maxwell dean since 1962. Prof. Bailey will pursue public policy research at the University.

An active participant in state and national politics, Dr. Campbell served as delegate-at-large to the 1967 New York Constitutional Convention, where he was chairman of the committee on local government and home rule.

"Quite Close"

"I was quite close to Senator Kennedy. The personal shock and sense of loss has been very great," he said.

"In the primaries before his death, the combined strength of Kennedy and McCarthy demonstrated a real desire for a change in policy direction. Both at home and abroad that trust for change may be weakened by Bob's death.

"So in that sense, the impact of Kennedy is going to be felt long after his death. Unfortunately, what kennedy and McCarthy have indicated does not seem to have made any impact on Congress."

Staff Aide

Prof. Campbell's association with Senator Kennedy dates back to the time when Kennedy was deciding to run for Senate in New York. He worked with the Senator's staff at the Constitutional Convention last year. He was chairman of a statewide organization of academics for Kennedy and was helping organize a similar group on the national level when the Senator was assassinated.

Commenting on his future job as Maxwell dean, Campbell said, "The Maxwell school is the oldest institution in the country to train people for public service. It is clearly in the national lead in this field."

Prof. Campbell noted he would follow policies similar to those of Prof. Bailey.

"My problems will be essentially the same as his: maintaining a strong faculty and a body of high quality graduate students.

"Great Competition"

"The graduate student world has changed so much in the past decade. The majority now receives some kind of scholarship or fellowship help. There is great competition for graduates in the nation today."

Campbell said the Maxwell school faces two problems in regard to faculty. The first is the same as any other school's: to maintain well-qualified faculty members.

"The second is due to public policy orientation of the Maxwell school. We must have some faculty who are interested in translating social science research into policy alternatives. Institutionally we do this through our programs, including the East Africa program, the South Asia program or the Metropolitan Studies. Each of the various programs draws up on the regular faculty. Consequently, we require a combination of strong scholars and translators," said Campbell.

Money-Making

"The best way to attract resources is to continue to do a good job which brings us back to faculty and graduate students," he said.

Campbell, who has lectured to the undergraduate public affairs courses offered in the Maxwell school, said he considered those courses a "significant part of the general thrust" of the school.

He has written widely on urban government and education. His most recent book, "Metropolitan America," was written with Syracuse University Prof. Seymour Sacks and published by The Free Press. Campbell is currently editor of a Carnegie Corporation-sponsored series on Large City Educational Systems.

Campbell is a member of the Secretary's Advisory Committee on Urban Development of the Federal DDepartment of Housing and Urban Development. He is a member of the Advisory Committee to the Committee for Improvement of Management in Government and of the Advisory Board for the Area Development Committee of the Committee for Economic Development.

A former deputy comptroller of New York State, Campbell taught at Harvard and Columbia Universities and was chairman of the political science department at Hofstra University before he came to Syracuse in 1961.

Campbell received his bachelor's degree at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash., his master's degree in public administration from Wayne State University, and his Ph.D in political economy and government from Harvard.

Campbell is married to the former Jane Owen. They live in Cazenovia and have two children, a daughter, Kimberly, 15, and a son, Duncan, 13.

Anti-war activists mobilize...

yet unprepared to make the transition to committed dissent.

The New Left, here and elsewhere, comprises what Bayard Rustin calls the "disaffected sons and daughters of the middle class." Staunchly nonviolent, campus protestors may be viewed as "gentlemen rebels"--Emerson-cum-Marx rather than Rap Brown-cum-Mao.

Both groups include graduate assistants and discuss plans with a select set of "concerned" professors. They solicited and received support for last April's anti-war parade from Student Government President Chuck Hicks, clergymen, faculty members, veterans and other civic organizations.

Both SDS and PFP include several full-time, non-student "coordinators." Many New Left members feel more can be accomplished by trying to cultivate improvements within the existing system than by dropping out of it.

They are more concerned with the relationship between the university and society than with simple student power. If students invited Dow recruiters to campus, for example, they would still protest.

The distinguished historian Henry Steele Commager recently wrote: "Be it said to the credit of our students that what disturbs them most deeply are public rather than private wrongs; what chiefly alienates them from the university is not its failure as an educational institution, but as a public institution; not its intellectual miscellaneousness, but its moral obtuseness."

Nor is it only the university as an institution that they distrust; they distrust, as well, professors who go whoring after lucrative contracts of power or prestige, who are prepared to serve almost any governmental agency in almost any capacity, prepared even to accept limitations of secrecy in scientific research.

The readiness of universities to lend their facilities to corporations and to government has been dramatized on almost every campus across the nation by the uncritical eagerness with which "recruiters" are welcomed.

Although it should not be necessary, protestors remind administrators that they are not prisoners of precedent, and that there is a difference between a war which the entire citizenry regards as involving the very survival of civilization and one which a major part of the nation--certainly the academic community--regards as hateful and immoral.

SDS is often portrayed--perhaps wrongly--as the most radical campus organization. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover describes it as "a militant youth group which receives support from the Communist Party and which in turn supports Communist objectives and tactics."

In a report earlier this year, the House Committee on Un-American Activities said: "Key leaders of the SDS have given open support to guerrilla warfare in the U.S."

SDS claims 35,000 members in chapters on 300 campuses throughout America.

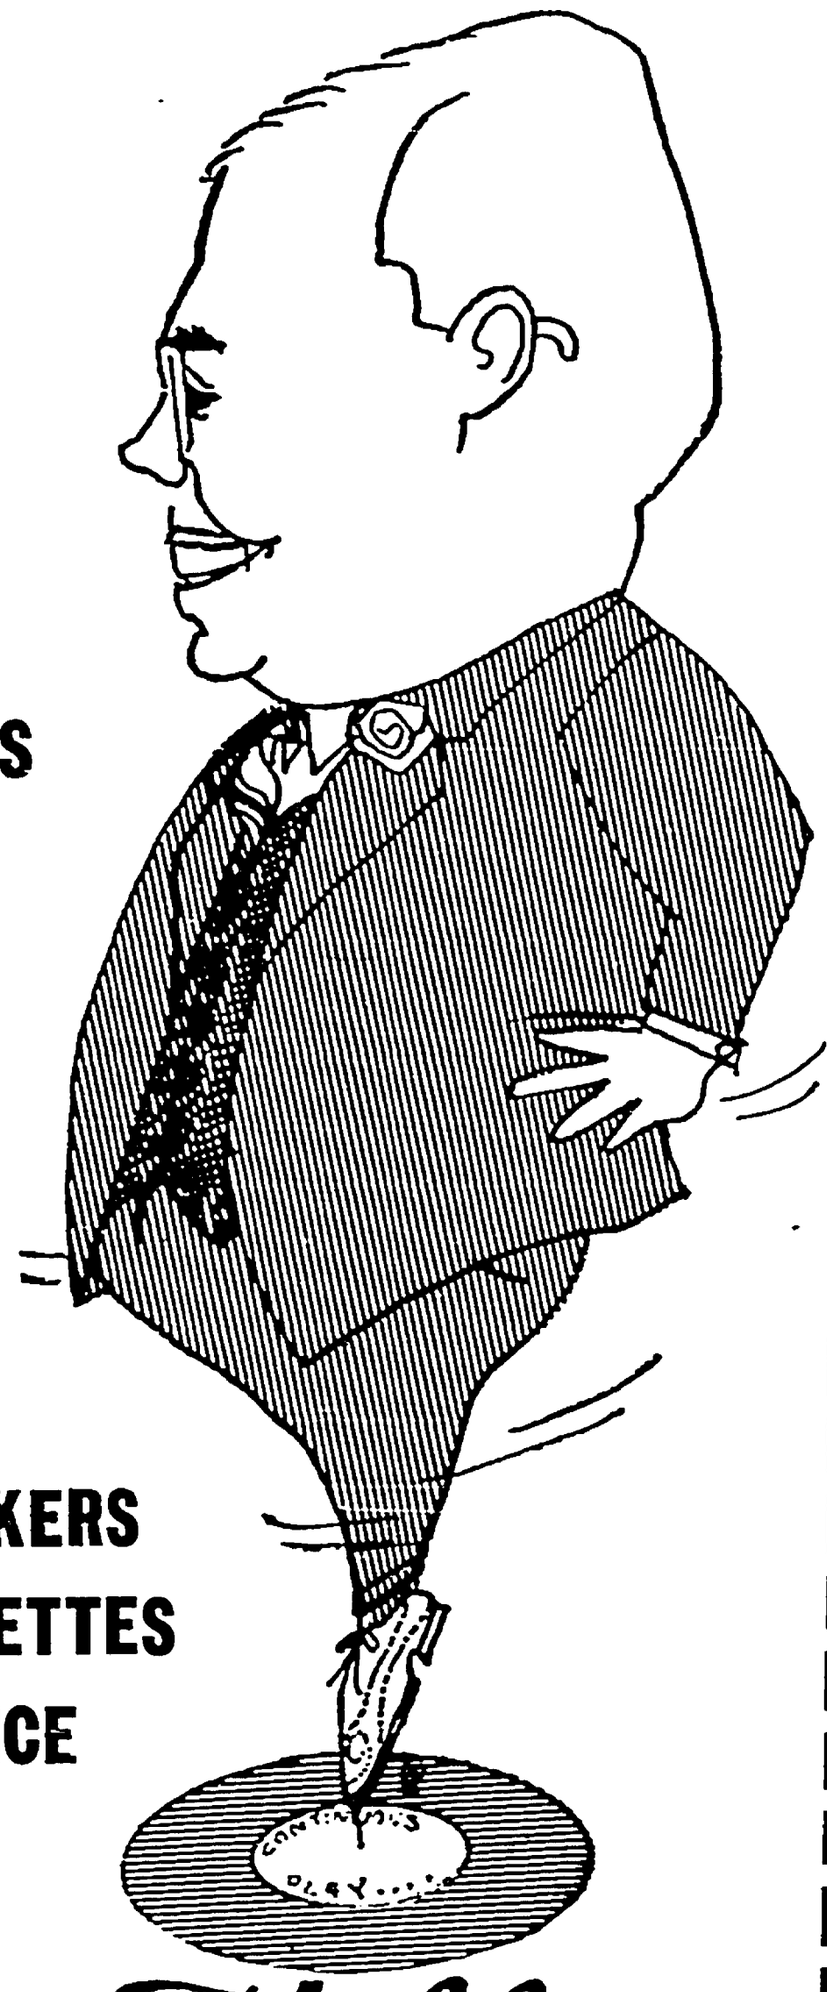
PFP, while not quite so large, is often equally vociferous.

Local headquarters--including a draft counseling service--are located at 170 Marshall Street.

Leader Dave Morton explains, "It's a cop-out if anyone refuses to work with us because some members of the group have long hair and beards. That's completely irrelevant to the issues at stake."

Both groups are currently formulating plans for possible participation in a nationwide week of anti-war demonstrations beginning Oct. 21. The Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam says the dates were chosen to coincide with anti-war protests in Japan and England.

Eloquent support of New Left activities was presented in a post-Columbia essay by Commager:



"The answer to student protest and revolt is not hysteria and it is not suppression. Students have something to say--something important for all of us, and we should not deny ourselves the benefit of their protest or their advice because we do not approve of their manners.

"Nor should we take refuge in that habit of bewilderment and outrage that is the professional mark of the middle-aged. Let us take reassurance, rather, from the reflection that when older and more respectable elements of society were silent, students spoke up."

Famous artists scheduled to perform at SU

Talent ranges from maestros to rock stars

By MARC S. BALKIN

Syracuse will host many cultural events this year, both campus and off. Whatever your interests, there will be something that will appeal to you. Concert-goers may choose from a spectrum of music ranging from rock to classical. If you like movies, the University offers a series of Friday night films, plus those presented by other campus groups.

A drama series will be presented by the Regent Theatre, and four national touring companies with big-name stars will be in Syracuse to present four Broadway shows.

In the past, SU has had many famous popular artists perform on or near campus. These artists usually appear as part of a University weekend, such as Spring Weekend or Winter Weekend. Talents of performers like Peter, Paul, and Mary, the Association, the Lovin' Spoonful, Wilson Pickett, Stan Getz, the Temptations, the Four Tops, and the Young Rascals have graced our stages.

Classical music lovers will be fortunate this season. The Famous Artists Series will feature a group of six regular-season concerts, three non-series events, and four Broadway shows. One of the best concerts will be on April 1, 1969, when pianist Artur Rubinstein will make his farewell appearance in Syracuse. "It may be the first of many farewell visits," said impressario Murray Bernthal, director of F.A.S.

The concert should be an unforgettable event. Also featured on the series are the Bavarian Symphony Orchestra of Munich, violinist Leonid Kogan, performing here for the first time, the American Ballet Theatre, and Metropolitan Opera basso Ezio Flagello. An event rivaling Rubinstein's appearance will be the concert of March 18 by the virtuoso Moscow State Symphony. Coming up Oct. 7, Mantovani and his symphony orchestra will play a concert in Loew's Theatre in Syracuse. A Christmas Concert by the Obernkirchen Children's Choir of Germany, and another by Spanish guitarist Carlos Montoya complete the F.A.S. concert offerings.

On Oct. 8, the Famous Artists Series presents the first of four Broadway shows. "Man of La Mancha" heads the list, and it will feature six of the original leading stars. "You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running" comes to Syracuse Oct. 24. In the lead roles are Imogene Coca, and King Donovan. Next, on Dec. 12, "Cactus Flower", with Jeannie Carson, and Biff McGuire, will delight Broadway fans. "Fiddler on the Roof", given on April 28, completes this series. All feature the national touring companies, and will be at Loew's Theatre in Syracuse.

The Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, led by Maestro Karl Kritz, will offer a series of ten concerts and three operas. The first, on Oct. 4 and 5, features clarinetist Gerald Zampino. On the 18th and 19th, Met soprano Regine Crespin will appear with the S.S.O. Artists appearing in Syracuse this season are Joseph Suk, violinist; James Mathis, pianist; Jan Peerce, Metropolitan opera tenor; and pianist Leon Fleischer. Narrator Vera Zorina will appear in a reading of Honegger's "Joan of Arc" in the last concert.

The three operas to be presented are "Madame Butterfly", on Nov. 29, 30, and Dec. 1, "The Barber of Seville", by Rossini, on Jan. 9-11 and 15-17, and "Cavaleria Rusticana" in late Spring. The Symphony concerts will be in Lincoln Auditorium at Central High in the City, while the operas will be given at the University Regent Theatre. This year, the Orchestra is making available a special student ticket plan, whereby SU students may purchase season tickets for a very low price. Tickets will be sold at the SU bookstores Sept. 16 to 18.

A large and varied number of events are scheduled for the University Regent Theatre. Located on East Genesee Street, the Regent offers drama, movies, and concerts for SU students and the general public. The season will open tomorrow with the film "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush", running from the 19th through the 28th. From September 20-22 and 26-29, the Syracuse Little Theatre is presenting its interpretation of "The Crucible", an explosive drama centered in early New England. On Sept. 29, a unique event comes to the Theatre, as The Electric Circus "turns on" its one-night-only audience.

Tom Paxton appears at the Regent Oct. 4 to start that month's programming. Judith Raskin, soprano, will give a solo recital on the 9th. A movie, "The Bride Wore Black," runs from October 1-8, while the SU drama department should delight audiences with its version of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," offered Oct. 10-12 and 17-19.

Movie fans should enjoy a bonanza at SU, as University Union sponsors the free Friday night Flick in HBC. Syracuse, incidentally, is one of six schools in the country to show 35mm films, enabling the university to order almost any movie available.

This weekend, University Union presents "To Kill a Mockingbird," tonight at 6,8, and 10 p.m. in Kittredge Auditorium, HBC.

In Gifford Auditorium "King of Hearts" will be shown, beginning at 6 p.m. At the Regent Experimental Theatre, "The Fantastics" will be performed, curtain going up at 8 p.m. Tomorrow, there will be the ever-popular and ever-hilarious Goon Show, in Crouse College Auditorium at 7 and 9 p.m. "The Fantastics" will again be at the Regent, starting at the same time.

Finally, Sunday features two events. At 4 p.m., music students will perform in Crouse College's initial Sunday concert. At 8 p.m. Prof. Franklin Morris of the School of Music presents another of his unusual Mixed Media Events in Gifford Auditorium. This is definitely recommended for those who enjoy psychedelic sights.

Book sale

The non-profit student book exchange is being conducted this term from a roving Volkswagen bus. The service, which sells students' used books, is furnished annually by Alpha Phi Omega, the national service fraternity.

Their "bookmobile" will be stationed on the Physics Building patio between 9 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. today. It will then park in front of Kimmel-Marion Dining Hall from 12:30 to 4 p.m.

Tomorrow, books will be exchanged in front of Sims Dining Hall between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Graham diners will be able to avail themselves of the service from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Communication in our [illegible] of sounds

New ro[illegible] ex[illegible]nversation piece

By M.JOHN ABDELMASEH

Due to its newly-found ability to clearly communicate with its listeners, contemporary music has caused audiences not only to listen but to talk to others about what they are hearing. New rock music is digging into our senses and exciting us unlike previous forms of music, allowing many of us to proudly identify with its sources. The coverage of the following four recent albums has for its purpose the desire to cause conversation and stimulate the reader to discuss them and their musical worth with his peers.

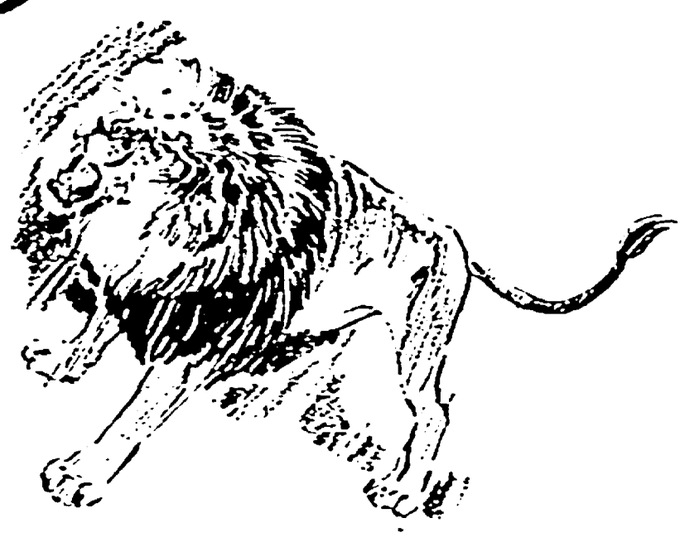
Cream's latest and last album, is a two-album set, one of which was recorded in the studio and the other at a live concert in the Fillmore in San Francisco. If one liked "Tales of Brave Ulysses" in the Disraeli Gears album, he will be all over "While Room" in Wheels of Fire, which shows a marked improvement over a similar chord pattern. "Pressed Rat and Warthog" is the reason for the nomination of Ginger Baker as Freak of the Year. After listening to Jack Bruce singing "Politician," one can say that the chances of his voting in November are slim. Also in this song, Eric Clapton works on the listener where he hurts the most with an eye-opening guitar solo. The lone sub-standard work on either album seems to be "Born Under a Bad Sign." The English trio lacks Albert King's soulful tendencies here. The live album features "Toad," a seventeen minute solo on Ginger Baker's drums, and "Spoonful," the theme song of all Cream chuggers.

Their Blues Thing

Paul Butterfield's new album, In My Own Dream, sees the blues band getting irretrievable deeper into their thing. Paul seems to have arranged his new brass section with the experience of B.B.King and the imagination of, well, Paul McCartney. Something to notice about the album is that Paul's vocal chords do not constitute the featured voice, not to mention the fact that his harmonica is is no longer the pronounced lead instrument it was when Mike Bloomfield was a Butterfield man. Bugsy Maugh, the new bassist who really made it is "Driving Wheel" on the Resurrection album, wails in "Mine to Love" and "Morning Blues."

Brother's Broad

That great, great broad that is introduced at the outset of Cheap Thrills by Big Brother and the Holding Company is Janis Joplin, who has caused much controversy in the past three months. Some name her as the white parallel to Aretha Franklin with just a little more guts. Many Black listeners have gotten caught up in her material, but after a careful look around, gave a nod of nose-in-air disapproval. The feature of the album is "Piece of My Heart," but when Janis sings "I Need a Man to Love," I think she could use about fifteen men instead of one. James Gurley, lead guitarist, offers many fresh and new styles for contemplation.



Dylan's Help

About the most seminal sound heard by many in recent weeks is that of The Band on their first album Music From Big Pink. The Band comes on with a strange combination of blues-gospel hymn-hill- not-billy type of folk music. Bob Dylan wrote three songs on the album. These three works, "Tears of Rage," "This Wheel's on Fire," and "I Shall Be Released," are included on a new tape, owned by a few lucky people, with Dylan's voice being backed by The Band. They simply make good, clean sounds and appear down Dylan's path as far as feeling and vehicle for communication are concerned. Rumor hath it that Dylan's next album will boast The Band as the instrumentalists as well as the sources of vocal harmony.

Focus on Black press

SU offers new course

By BETH SCHUYLER

Registration for "The Specialized Press," a journalism course examining Black publications, has been sufficient enough to warrant continuation, according to Prof. Rowland E. Wolseley.

The course usually covers newspapers and magazines dealing in specialized areas such as business, education and labor. Because of the recent interest in the Black press, the area of concentration this term will be the Afro-American press and its many facets.

Prof. Wolseley plans to invite staff members of various Black publications in the central New York area to speak to the class. Lance Bardely, business manager of International Publications, a section of the R.H. Donnelly Company, in New York, will present his views as a Negro.

Because of an article concerning "The Specialized Press" in "Editor and Publisher," Prof. Wolseley has received letters from interested people across the country. Since Syracuse University is the first to offer a course dealing with the Black press in America, he has been contacted by people doing Ph.D. work for information in this area.

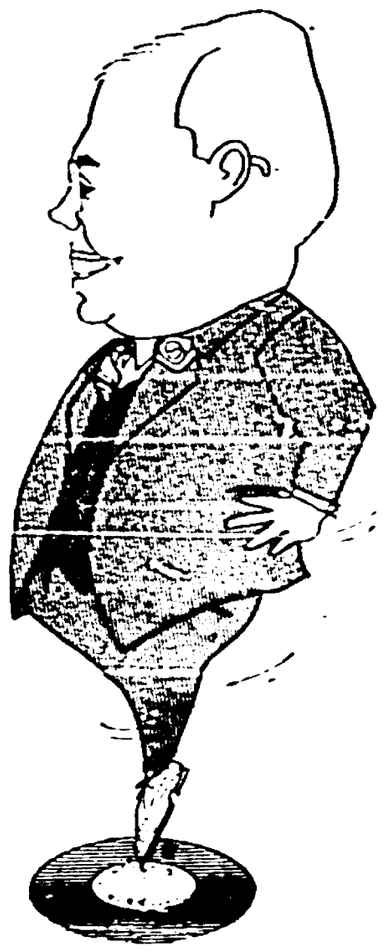
Wolseley who has studied the Afro-American press for years, has dealt with it in some of his books as well as in articles for Negro Digest, Crisis and other publications. He selected the books for the journalism library at Lincoln University when it was formed in 1945 and several of his students have joined the staffs of Ebony, Jet, the Chicago Defender and other newspapers and magazines.

The course, which will have no formal textbook, will concentrate on readings assigned in books put on reserve in the journalism library. "The Specialized Press" carries two hours of graduate and undergraduate credit.

SU receives grant to study pollution

Syracuse University recently received $98,450 from the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration for research on inorganic sulfur oxidation caused by iron-oxidizing bacteria.

Dr. Donald G. Lundgren, professor of microbiology in the department of bacteriology and botany, is directing the three-year study.



Dr. Lundgren and his associates will investigate how iron-oxidizing bacteria act catalytically to produce sulfates and sulfuric acid which pollute water associated with coal mining operations, especially of the strip-mining type. This pollution is one of the major environmental problems affecting populations in areas such as Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and Indiana.

The Syracuse study proposes to control the problem by elimination of the organism itself, whereas other studies for the project will work on such aspects as neutralization of the polluting substances.

Bacteria themselves are not solely harmful agents, but are highly useful in recovering copper from impure grades or ore and in obtaining uranium from otherwise exhausted mines.

units, desks and bookcases. The halls are carpeted.

Peg Johnston, co-ordinator of the steering committee to organize the dorm government, said the students were "extremely tolerant" of the situation. She noted that parents were disappointed at first sight of the complex, but were delighted when they saw the rooms.

"The complex is completed from the standpoint of being operational," said Latorre. The interior is expected to be completed within four weeks, but landscaping, roads and walks should take only two to three weeks. Completion of the entire site work, however, may take until November.

Some unexpected difficulties over the summer prevented the completion of the complex on time. There was a labor shortage and difficulty in coordinating the various trades.

Many rooms still lack proper lighting due to thefts. Roadwork was unable to be completed because of late curbing delivery.

Delays have been common to St. Mary's site since plans were laid for construction. Bids for the project were originally made in December, 1965. An immediate two month delay occurred because the lowest bid was higher than the University had allowed funds. After negotiations the contract was awarded to Vincent J. Smith, general contractors from Binghamton. Construction began Feb. 24, 1966, and the dorms were scheduled for occupancy in September, 1967.

Water problems occurred in drilling caissons and footings, complicated by an acute labor shortage throughout the year. The completion date was reset for May 31, 1968.

The labor shortage persisted and coordination of trades became a problem. Late deliveries from suppliers also slowed up the construction. The date again was reset to this September.

The entire complex includes a 23-story building for the elderly, a nine-story women's dorm, a 13-story men's dorm, a three-story dining hall, a 250-car garage and recreational terrace and fields. The Toomey-Abbott Towers for the elderly was built under the management of the Syracuse Housing Authority. This is the first time the University has built a complex in cooperation with the city of Syracuse.

Located west of the Veteran's Administration Hospital, most students will approach the campus from Van Buren Street. They will have a 60-odd step climb up the hill past White Hall to get to the campus.

Total cost of the complex is $8,452,000 of which approximately $400,000 was spent for furnishings and equipment. Intended to be a relatively low-cost dormitory, it is the highest cost ratio per student on campus. Haven Hall previously was the highest with the cost of construction divided by the number of students about $7000. St. Mary's dorm site ratio is $10,000.

Two departments hit by cheating

By LYNN ECKSTEIN

Cheating was widespread on both the Biology and History finals of the spring semester, according to Alfred H. Cope, dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

Although the situations were almost identical, the results were quite opposite. In both departments students stole the exam and dispersed it.

In the history department the culprits were caught and dealt with by the disciplinary committee of the College of Liberal Arts. This committee, which handed out punishments ranging from light rebukes to expulsion for three years, consists of five faculty members. A quorum of three is necessary for decision-making. There has never been a student on this committee but Dean Cope said that he has asked Chuck Hicks, student government president, to appoint one student to the committee.

In the Biology department students were able to take the final earlier than scheduled because of conflicting exam schedules. Several individuals dispersed the exam to students who were to take it on the regular date. Since the Biology department gave the same exam on both dates, the grades on the latter date were untypically high in some cases.

The disciplinary committee of the School of Liberal Arts recommended that grades be accepted and adjusted so that no individual is injured by the curve. The report of the committee has not yet been filed with the administration of the College of Liberal Arts.

Dean Cope noted that different exams would be used in similar situations in the future.

'We are not doing enough'

Bailey forms committee to set up programs for underprivileged Negroes

By RONA KAVEE

A new group known as the Committee on the American Dilemma has been created by Stephen K. Bailey, dean of the Maxwell School. Its purpose is to design programs dealing with racial problems, especially education of the underprivileged.

The idea for the committee grew out of Dean Bailey's "considerable shock" at the death of Martin Luther King. "I was prompted to ask "Are we doing enough?" Bailey said, "The answer was obviously not."

The committee will try to extend its responsibility by means of a "whole series of quite specific steps and programs," according to Bailey. He strongly emphasized the committee's function as an "action group."

Plans for an increased number of Negro faculty members and students are incorporated in the group's objectives. It will sponsor courses on Negro history and aim for "more insights into racial problems in the country," according to Bailey.

Alfred H. Cope, assistant dean of the College of Liberal Arts is chairman of the committee. He is heading a program known as Operation Shoestring, which will permit Negro high school graduates in the area to attend University classes on an auditing basis.

"The students will not be admitted to the University," Cope said, but they may attend courses "wherever the professor will give them a seat." "Although this is a small gesture it is a complete one. Each student has a shoestring chance to test his capabilities as a college student."

Ultimately, it is hoped that participants in the program will be admitted to college on a credit basis.

Cope stressed the limited existence of Operation Shoestring as a pilot experiment at the present time. We will not over-extend the kindness of University officials," he said.

Money for the project will come from the "utilization of available research funds," said Cope.

Peter Jennings

Peter Jennings, ABC television reporter and newscaster, will discuss the issues and candidates of the 1968 presidential campaign at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Hendricks Chapel.

Co-sponsored by the Association of Women Students and the Panhellenic Council, Jennings' speech will be part of a political conference planned by AWS.

Jennings is familiar to television audiences as the man who broadcast the ABC daily evening news for three years. He is now a national correspondent for ABC.

A native of Canada, Jennings has traveled twice to Vietnam and also reported on the after-effects of the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Dean still silent on curfew trial

By HELENE MacDONALD

Despite the apparent success of last spring's freshman no-curfew program in Shaw Dorm, the dean of women's office has not formally evaluated the experiment and has no plans to do so in the immediate future.

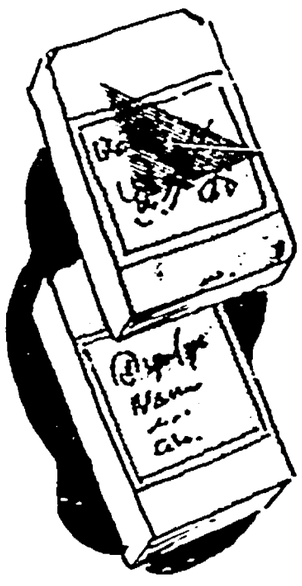
C. Joanne Parrish of the dean of women's staff said that an evaluation would be made if other freshman groups petitioned for optional hours.

There is no count of how many Shaw freshmen received parental permission necessary for girls to have optional hours or, in other words, no curfew.

Peg Johnston, last year's co-ordinator of Shaw, noted that freshmen on optional hours last spring did well on their exams and that there were no mechanical problems in incorporating freshmen optional hours into Shaw's government.

Miss Parrish reported that she received the same impression after discussing the experiment with Shaw head residents and directors.

The campaign for freshman optional hours will continue this year. The Association of Women Students (AWS) will work for it and has repeated that freshmen should be allowed to decide if they want optional hours.



A statement issued recently by AWS President Cindy Bailey affirms that optional hours should not be separated from self-government. It also states that freshmen are mature and that ability to accept responsibility cannot be judged according to age or class.

Tribute to Rev. Noble: 'identified with students'

By RICHARD G. CASE

Richard G. Case, now affiliated with the Chicago Historical Society, is a frequent contributor to the Syracuse Herald-Journal-American, from which the following article is printed. He knew Dean Noble both as a student at Syracuse University and as a reporter who covered the university for the Herald-Journal-American.

Charlie Noble did not believe that God was dead.

Of course not. There it was in Charlie's eyes, the spirit, the supernatural, the force that twists the tail of the universe.

I am not a theologian. Neither was Charlie Noble. Professor Vahanian and the others will have to set us straight about what it is I'm trying to define now that Charlie Noble is gone. Perhaps it won't be as easy to see in another man. It is a man's depth and goodness and strength that you saw in Charlie's eyes. Nobility? A well-named man, Charles Casper Noble. Noble Charlie.

How he charmed us. I'm sitting here without notes or files or letters and I'm trying to remember him. Thousands of other ex-Syracuse students will remember him, too, and a memory as strong as that, splintered into thousands of pieces, will last a long, long time.

Noble Hall ?

It may outlast any solid state. Perhaps there will be a Noble Hall at Syracuse one day but I doubt it. Universities usually name buildings for men who give them money. Charlie Noble gave Syracuse nothing but himself for 22 years.

It was typical of him, I think that he died as soon after he stopped working, as most physical things run down when you stop using them.

I recall that I once asked him about retiring when he was at or near the traditional age of 65 when university people usually put their old class notes into a cardboard box and go to the Maine coast to write that book they had been meaning to get to for 40 years.

"Hell," he asked me, "what would I do? What would I do with myself?"

No Cliché

I suppose it has taken us a long time to shed the image of a minister that belonged to the trembling, pious parson of Sunday School and the meek shall inherit the earth. Charlie wasn't one of those cliches, which is why he probably found his way to a university campus where, in theory at least, an unusual man does not need to worry about clerical conventions.

Perhaps he shocked traditions and students at first because he cussed once in a while and talked frankly, out in the open, about matters such as sex. In late years he probably didn't seem as shocking as he did in 1945, but it seems to me that his dormitory talks on morals were always given to full houses.

Counsellor

I won't presume to pry into Charlie's personal code of morality but I know that he once told me that he counselled students on sex that they shouldn't do anything that they would regret. I may have been wrong but I took that to be in the same vein as Hemingway's what makes you feel good the next morning.

He asked me not to use that quote at the time because it might raise hell with the chancellor and the trustees.

But he knew, and I knew, that he was not giving the students a piece of creaky morality out of a Methodist theology class of 1920 but something that might work for them in the 1960's.

When I was a student — perhaps it is less so now — Noble's Hendricks Chapel was the spiritual as well as the physical center of campus. And I don't mean spiritual in a strickly religious sense. One went there for coffee and good talk. Upstairs, under the big dome, everyone from Ayn Rand to Paul Tillich had their say. Downstairs, in Charlie's surprisingly tiny cubicle, Protestant and Jew sat in one of those low-slung leather chairs and talked about everything under the sun with the dean, who was later known as the dean, just Charlie Noble.

Serves Catholics

In the 1950's when the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Gannon Ryan was still Catholic chaplain, it was not unknown for a Catholic student to be sitting in one of those chairs. Those were the days when Gannon Ryan was throwing thunder bolts from his Crouse College pulpit at Hendricks Chapel.

I suppose that all students knew they had a tender ear in the chapel basement, so they used it to pour out to Charlie their cheating scandals (anyway, they were scandals then), their money problems or their hangups with girls. He didn't wear a collar and like he said, "I've been through it all."

I'm sure he had.

Loyal to SU

I never knew Charlie to wear an orange tie but he always seemed as loyal to Syracuse in the traditional way as the middle-aged men and women who turn up at football games and alumni reunion tents. The last time I had a formal interview with him he had just returned from a trip to the Middle East and he talked enthusiastically about the former Syracusans he had bumped into in the desert.

"Imagine that," he said, like a coed at her first pep rally, "meeting So and So in Turkey."

There were some people on campus — then and now — who had trouble figuring Charlie, I'm sure. He could be stern and eloquent but he probably annoyed the deeper thinkers. I know there was some sport made of him because he took off his shoes and played the accordian at Drumlins Friday night of Winter Weekend and showed up at pep rallies. But that was because he seemed to identify with the students more than with the faculty. He was our advocate, whether we were football players or editors of what used to be called an "off-campus" magazine.

"His ministry was one of the open heart and the open mind."

— Rev. John H. McComb

Some Uneasy

He was not the administration's man and I know some of the men in the red building always felt somewhat uneasy about him. A vice president once told me that he was sure the administration would "catch it" from Charlie Noble because of an unpopular decision that just had been made in the chancellor's office.

Charlie will be missed particularly at commencement time, I think. The baccaulaureate sermon was always his, in my memory, and some of them were so good I remember saving them, to read over, after I had picked out a few rare phrases for a story on commencement. Some of my classmates who were too bored — perhaps rightly by that time — to go to graduation exercises got up on Sunday morning, put on a tie and sat in the heat to hear Charlie talk for the last time (for them). Atheists, agnostics, Catholics, Buddhists, the lot of them.

Rain or Shine

He was one of the durable fixtures of Commencement Day, bouncing around pumping hands and grinning when the chancellor made that tired joke about Dean Noble's prayer for good weather. Rain or shine, the chancellor blamed Charlie for for the weather and Charlie smiled as if it was funny and he knew something that none of the rest of us knew.

I see him this minute helping Marion Anderson put a mink jacket on under her academic gown and adjusting Hubert Humphrey's floppy hat and trying to find a safety pin to hide the vice president's venerable pot. It seems to me he helped right Earl Warren when he slipped in back of the platform and cracked a joke about the British with C. P. Snow. That's him in the alcove window of the gym with a visitor from India, waiting for his end of the commencement procession to enter the stadium. "My God," she said to him, "it looks like Churchill's funeral."

Goodbye, Charlie.

Organization of Progressive Thought

Group hopes to create student dialogue

By NANCY NAGAMATSU

Dave Ifshin, N.S.A. coordinator, presided at the first meeting of the Organization of Progressive Thought, (OPT) conducted Wednesday night at Sigma Nu.

OPT was born to create a student body organization as a channel for dialogue between the factions of fragmented SU. The concept was first tried at the State University at Stonybrook.

Ifshin feels that students attending SU have changed over the past five years in that they have become aware of their off-campus responsibilities. Since SU represents such a diverse section of society there is a necessity for an organization to strive for inter-student dialogue as a part of the learning experience.

Ifshin would like OPT to reflect the consensus of overall student support rather than a specific ideology. The organization will function on the idea of free communication and free dialogue and will attempt to organize ways and means of creating and maintaining this rapport.

OPT would create a power structure for any student grievances, whether radical or reactionary. The organization will function on the basis that all students share the same problems and can work together to solve them. OPT will be available for students' use as a vehicle for expressing discontent. Each faction working under OPT would then support the other units for mass strength.

The organization's second meeting is scheduled for 1 p.m. today in the Student Government office, 406 University Place.

DO drops Monday edition

The Daily Orange begins another publication year today with a revised publication schedule and additional staff members.

We publish four days a week now, dropping the Monday edition and adding a special magazine section on future Fridays. The decision to drop the Monday edition was reached by Jim G. Carleton, dean of Student Services, Francis O'Brien, Daily Orange financial advisor, and Charles Babcock, editor of the Daily Orange.

The reasons for doing so were: 1) Monday is a poor news day. News of football games is outdated by Monday; concerts and weekends are newsworthy primarily because they succeed or fail financially, news that will keep until Tuesday. 2) Monday is a poor advertising day. The Daily Orange receives this year a budget of $65,000 from the University. It is expected to raise $58,000 through sales in advertising. Most local advertisers prefer to advertise on Thursday or Friday. 3) By not publishing on Monday, we will be able to add a section on Friday. The in-depth news and feature material that belongs in a special magazine-style section has rarely found a place in the Daily Orange. The former Ergo section published on Friday consistently suffered from a high ad level that left little space for editorial material. 4) Publishing four days a week will lessen the extra-curricular work of staff members, allowing them more time to study.

We hope by dropping the Monday edition and adding a section Friday we will be better able to serve the University. If the senior editors find we are encountering the same problems of high advertising levels while publishing only four days a week, we will press to return to our former publication schedule.

Other changes in the Daily Orange include the promotion of sophomore Alan Stamm to news editor. He will assist the managing editor in making story assignments and contacting sources as well as continue his reporting.

Editor-in-chief Charles Babcock announced the following reporters have been promoted to Associate Editor: Kay Christensen, Helene MacDonald, Rona Kavee, Andrij Bilyk, Stan Pinkwas, Ron Roni Zlokower, and Jean Havens.

Group for Javits

Volunteers needed

A five-man steering committee of Syracuse University staff and students has been organized to work for the re-election of U.S. Senator Jacob K. Javits of New York.

Plans for the committee were announced by Dr. Michael O. Sawyer, Syracuse University professor of political science.

Sawyer said the groups work will include the polling of student and faculty opinion so the Senator can have additional information on the thinking on the Syracuse campus.

Members of the committee are Dr. Ralph Ketcham, chairman of the American Studies Program; James G. Gies, manager of community press relations; David Warner, a graduate student in political science; Mark Siegle, a second-year law student; and Joseph A. Nicoletti, a senior in liberal arts.

Sawyer said the committee is seeking volunteers to help with writing and taking the opinion poll. Persons interested in working for Javits should contact one of the committee members, he said.

Sawyer said Sen. Javits will visit the Syracuse campus before November and he will be given the committee's findings on election issues. Similar committees are expected to be organized at other colleges and universities in New York State.

Each year one in 13 will die

The unlucky origins of '13' superstitions

Luckily, there are no classes today–but superstitious students will still be wary of tempting any Friday the 13th legends. In valiant attempts to block the path to misfortune, they will not accept any blind dates, taste University food or venture into the Bookstore. Some overly cautious characters would rather register late than receive course assignments on Friday the 13th.

The origin of this superstition may date back to Christ's Last Supper, attended by 12 Apostles and Jesus. As this supper preceded Christ's crucifixion on Friday, it certainly was viewed as an omen of misfortune and death.

Fear of the figure 13 also traces back to pre-Christian years. It stems from a Greek fable of the Valhalla banquet, to which 12 gods were invited. Loki, the spirit of strife and evil, intruded as an uninvited 13th guest. Subsequently, death struck one of the gods, Bader.

Insurance companies present a more rational explanation for the superstitious legends. Their statistical surveys show that in any random group of 13, one person will die within a year.

IDC officers press issue of Lawrinson garage guard

By DAN SCHLOSSBERG

Alleged lack of security in the Lawrinson garage has prompted two officers of Inter-Dormitory Council (IDC) to pledge to use "any measures necessary" to return a uniformed guard to duty there.

Bob Cline of Sadler, secretary-treasurer of IDC, and Fred Boss of Lawrinson, IDC vice-president, plan to meet with Dean of Men David Tatham or Jim G. Carleton, Dean of Student Services to present their case.

The garage was plagued by numerous minor acts of vandalism last year.

Two major incidents also occured when a 1967 sports car was ransaked, causing $1,000 damage and two wheels were stolen resulting in a broken axle of a 1967 GTO convertible, costing the owner more than $300.

Two emergency meetings of the residents with Deans Tatham and Carleton produced promises of improvements and, eventually, a guard.

There were only minor incidents of vandalism in the garage after the guard was stationed there last January. But Cline and Boss predict that there will be recurrences of major trouble unless a guard is reacquired promptly.

"We will present the issue as logically and rationally as possible," said Cline, "but after the administration replies, it'll be up to student leaders and residents to take whatever they might consider responsible action.

"Both Fred and I will use any measures necessary to get the guard back. The basic issue involved is student rights and property rights."

Cline said he and Boss hope to get direct endorsement for their request for a guard from IDC.

Meanwhile, Leo Graszler, assistant director of Security Police, said that Lawrinson would receive more protection from Security itself than in the past. The guard stationed in the garage, although paid for by the Security Police budget, had been from a private security service.

Graszler said an additional dog patrolman would patrol the Lawrinson-Sadler-St. Mary's area with the prime responsibility of guarding girls in St. Mary's.

He added, however, that physical changes in parking garages are scheduled to begin as early as next month, when an overhead door will be added to the St. Mary's garage.

"If it works there," he said, "they'll put them everywhere." He said that a study would determine the feasibility of sealing up the openings in the wall of the Lawrinson garage and fixing the entrance gate, which has been broken for more than a year.

Dean Tatham confirmed Graszler's report, and added that "some kind of security" would be provided for the Lawrinson garage. He also said a boycott, which has been discussed by some unhappy users of the Lawrinson garage would force the University to pay off the mortgage on the garage with money other than the $50 per student parking fee which usually goes for that purpose.

Lawrinson's dorm director, George Musal, requested the garage guard last year, but no action was taken until serious trouble occured. Once again, Musal is willing but waiting.

Cline and Boss, however, won't wait. They want to know why the guard is gone. "It would be past the state of pity if we had vandalism to prove our point again," Cline said. "We thought this thing was solved last year but apparently the University thinks otherwise."

At least three players lost

Danforth loses before basketball season begins

By MIKE GREENSTEIN

Although the basketball season is still over 10 weeks away, personnel problems have already put new Syracuse head coach Roy Danforth into a deep hole.

Two lettermen, Wayne Ward and Ray Balukas, definitely will not be back in school this year. Balukas, a little used guard, had academic troubles. Ward, the 6-7 center who was second on the team last year in rebounds, withdrew because of personal problems.

In addition, Bob McDaniel, the Plainfield, N.J. whiz who led the freshman team in scoring last year, is scholastically ineligible for at least the first semester. Sports Information Director Larry Kimball reported that McDaniel was investigating the possibility of attending University College at night, with the intention of returning to full-time status in February.

The most crushing blow has not come yet, but it might well be on its way. That would come in the form of ineligibility of

Ward . . . Gone

Ernie Austin, the flashy guard who is being counted upon to lead the Orange hardwood attack.

Informed sources have told the Daily Orange that Austin will be academically ineligible for the first semester, which would encompass 16 games of the 25 game schedule. Austin, who attended summer school at Syracuse, is said to be several honor points below the required level.

Danforth, however, is still saying that he will have Austin's services this fall. "He'll be in today (Thursday)," he said. But as of Thursday afternoon, the Washington, D.C. native, had not checked into his room in Lawrinson Hall.

The rookie coach, who inherited the job last spring from Dr. Fred Lewis, refused to speculate on the current situation. "I'll talk basketball in two weeks," he said, "when I know exactly which players I have."

On the other side of the scoreboard, several new faces have been added for the coming campaign.

The new assistant varsity and freshman coach is Bill Vesp, former head coach at both Utica College and the State University at Delhi, a two year school. Vesp holds a bachelors' degree in physical education from Ithaca College and a masters degree from Syracuse. In addition to his coaching duties, he will teach six hours of Basic Physical Education.

"I have had small teams in building situations," Vesp said, "but I have been fortunate in going against good coaches and good schools." In addition to his head coaching, he assisted Lewis and Danforth as an aide and scout during the 1966-67 season.

Last year his team at Delhi was second in its region in defense. "I'm a real bug on defense," he admits. "I like to spend a lot of time on it."

Michigan State first foe

Ben mounting attack for 20th year

By ED AGRANOWITZ

Ben Schwartzwalder heads into his 20th season as head football coach at Syracuse with the 1968 edition of the Orangemen a good bet to bring him his 19th consecutive non-losing season.

Ben, however, faces the unenviable task of replacing three of SU's top offensive threats of all time -- Larry Csonka, Rick Cassata, and Tom Coughlin.

Fullback Csonka, who bruised his way to unanimous All-American honors, last year became the leading ground gainer in Orange history, bettering the marks of Floyd Little, the late Ernie Davis, Jim Brown and Jim Nance. Cassata, Ben's starting quarterback for the past three campaigns, established himself as Syracuse's third leading passer of all time, while Coughlin set the record for most receptions in a single season.

Schwartzwalder will be counting heavily on underclassmen to fill these backfield voids when his charges invade East Lansing on Sept. 21 to open the season against Michigan State in a regional TV contest.

Sophomore Al Newton, a 6 foot, 220 pounder from Cambridge, Mass., will open at fullback and shows every indication of becoming SU's next great running back. Newton had an excellent spring and is considered by the coaching staff to be "more advanced at this stage than Jim Nance or Larry Csonka."

The quarterback job is up for grabs between two juniors, Rich Panczyszyn and Paul Paolisso. Panz, who wears the legendary number 44, was tremendous as a frosh and made a great varsity debut by rushing for 88 yards against Baylor. An injury late in that game limited him to a mere 30 yards for the rest of the year, however. Various hurts exempted him from contact drills last spring, and now Ben has his fingers crossed. "If Rich could stay healthy it would help us a lot," says the coach.

Paul Paolisso came alive last spring after spending his sophomore year on the bench. In the spring game he completed 21 of 30 passes for 258 yards and 3 touchdowns. According to Ben, "Right now Rich and Paul are battling on about even terms. If the picture doesn't change, they'll both see a lot of action."

Junior Dick Bidlack was slated to be the starting tailback against State, but a recent ankle injury will probably bench him for that game. Ron Trask and Billy Knox, both sophs, are tabbed by their coach as likely replacements for Bidlack. Trask has also been working out at quarterback, a move necessitated by Panczyszyn's frequent injuries.

John Bulicz, the lone senior in the backfield, will start at wingback and should see plenty of action as both a receiver and runner. John Godbolt, a soph speed merchant, will spell Bulicz when needed and can also handle the tailback slot. Top fullback reserves are Mike Chlebeck and Bill During.

The offensive line, which is a bit low on experience, has pleased Schwartzwalder to date. Key performers here include guards Dave McCard, Jim Pritzlaff and Jim Engelhaupt, tackles Andy Fusco, Jim Cherundolo, and Ed Nowicki, and centers Dave Johnson and Gerry Vogt. "One thing we can't afford on the offensive line is injuries," says Ben, "We're very weak in depth here."

Perhaps the strongest position on the offense is the ends. Juniors John Massis and Bill Maddox (a North Carolina State transfer) are both strong at tight end. Rookie Tony Gabriel, the split end, climaxed an excellent spring with eight catches for 115 yards and a TD in the spring game, and Schwartzwalder is expecting big things from him.

Also boosting the offensive hopes this year will be soph soccer-style placekicker George Jakowenko. He had two field goals as a Tangerine and connected on 16 of 17 PATs.

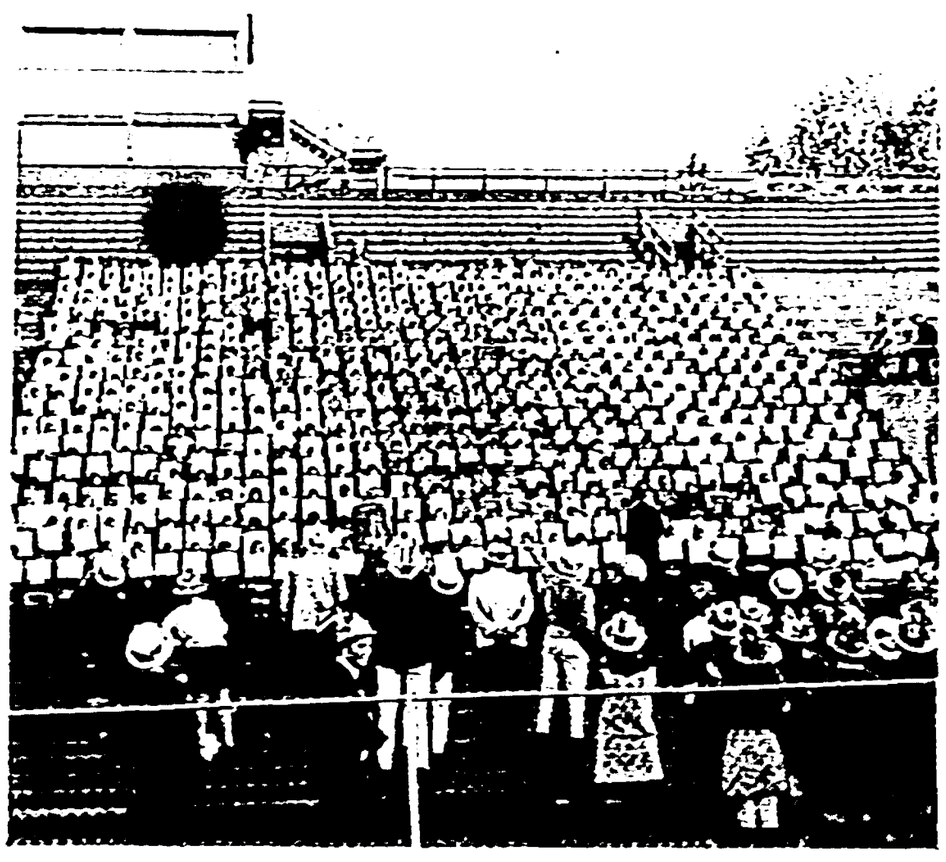
On the defensive side, the Orange are experienced and deep. Nine starters are back from last year's unit which was rated second nationally in rushing defense and fourth in total defense. Tony Kyasky, named to most pre-season All American squads, returns at the left halfback spot. Teaming up with Kyasky and Tom Hermanowski, the returning right halfback, will be veteran safety Cliff Ensley, who led the team in interceptions last year with six.

The linebacking is probably the deepest position on the squad. Coming off of fine sophomore years are cornermen Bobby Bancroft and Don Dorr. Junior Jack Protz, another NC State transfer, has nailed down the middle spot. Ben lists Jerry Ruccio, Bob Rust and Bob Schoonmaker as three boys who could easily slip into a starting berth.

Spearheading the defensive line will be 6 foot 4 inch, 242 lb. Art Thoms, an All American candidate who will be in his third year as a regular tackle. Joining Thoms on "murderer's row" will be veteran ends Lou Gubitosa (junior) and STeve Zegalia (senior), returning middle guard Gerry Beach (senior), and rookie tackle Ray White.

Schwartzwalder calls the spirit of the team excellent. "These guys really want to play football," says Ben. And maybe some momentum is left from last year's season ending 32-14 upset of UCLA.

Sports sidelights



The Syracuse Soccer Club will go against LeMoyne on Sunday in their first game of the year, on the Dolphins' nearby campus. They will then meet Colgate on Wednesday and Cornell on Saturday, both also away games. Interested candidates can get in touch with Stephen Kass at 446-2034 or 478-9730.

The Athletic Department has announced the following schedule of physical exams for fall and winter sports: Track-Sept. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13; Basketball-Sept. 16, 17, 18, 19; Wrestling-Sept. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27; Swimming-Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2, 3, 4; Gymnastics-Oct. 7, 8, 9, 10; Rifle-Oct. 14, 15, 16; Skiing-Oct. 21, 22, 23; Fencing-Oct. 28, 29, 30; Crew-Nov. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12.

Examinations will be done at 3:30 p.m. in the doctor's office in the Field House. This is for Varsity only. It will be possible to examine six men on each day listed. Those failing to be examined will be worked in with the following group, one daily. Applicants will check in with the trainers in the training room at 3:15.

Any freshman interested in trying out for crew as a manager, coxwain or oarsman should contact frosh coach Gary MacLachlan in the crew room of Archbold Gym any time next week.

O'Dwyer blasts national government on war and present political system

By RONI ZLOKOWER

New York's Democratic senatorial peace candidate, Paul O'Dwyer, speaking from the steps of Hendricks Chapel on Friday, said that New York Staters will mark their choice for "peace or war" when they choose between him and his Republican incumbent opponent Jacob Javits this November.

Standing as firmly as ever on the principles he has held since he began his senatorial primary campaign in which he had defeated Eugene Nickerson and Joseph Resnick, O'Dwyer maintained that

'Not a whitewash'

Probers hit SU politics in extensive investigation

By ALAN STAMM
News Editor

A long-awaited investigation will be initiated this term to probe deeply into questionable aspects of campus politics.

Although the inquiry will be carried out by a Student Senate subcommittee, chairman Fred Tuccillo stresses that "it will definitely not be a whitewash."

Tuccillo, a sophomore senator-at-large, originated the Senate Committee On Political Equity (SCOPE). Its study will include open hearings and culminate with a public report, expected to be ready by December.

Tuccillo will appoint four other senators from the Government Structures Committee to aid his investigation. The extensive inquiry will examine alleged inequities in candidate selection, election procedures and party finances. Campus politics have never been subjected to a full-scale, public study.

Tuccillo, elected on the Campus Alliance Party ticket, is not affiliated with any fraternity. He distinguished himself as a freshman senator by introducing the favorably received Open Campus Act, which supported unrestricted recruiting.

"Clear Conscience"

In view of his senate record and wide victory in last term's election, Tuccillo was considered to have a promising future in campus politics. Asked if the probe may jeopardize this position, he replied, "I just don't care. If this system is as corrupt as some people claim, I'm not interested in having any future in it. I'd rather have a clear conscience."

"Evidence" will be gathered through research and weekly hearings. All Student Government and class officers, former candidates and party officials will be asked to "testify." The committee will also solicit pertinent information from any students, administrators or faculty members willing to speak.

Kennedy aide scrutinizes political prospects tonight

By KAY CHRISTENSEN
Associate Editor

Frank Mankiewicz, press secretary and much more to the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy, will analyze 1968 election outlooks at Hendricks Chapel tonight. An address by the late campaigner's close friend will begin at 8 p.m.

Mankiewicz gained unwanted national prominence last June as millions of Americans waited tensely to receive his periodic reports on Kennedy's condition after the Los Angeles shooting. Speaking on nationwide television, Mankiewicz came close to tears as he read the senator's death announcement.

He is currently editing the memorial book, "A Tribute to Robert F. Kennedy," with three other RFK confidants: Pierre Salinger, Edwin Guthman and John Seigenthaler. The volume is scheduled for publication this fall by Doubleday and Co., Inc., and all profits will be donated to a fund established by the Kennedy family.

Following June's tragedy, Mankiewicz covered the Republicans' Miami convention as a National Broadcasting Company correspondent. When Senator George McGovern announced his candidacy, however, Mankiewicz broke his NBC contract to become

Lindsay boosts GOP drive with address here Friday

By BETH HILLSON

New York's liberal Republican mayor, John V. Lindsay, will make his first major address outside the City since the national campaign began, at a Republican county-wide kick-off this Friday in the Syracuse War Memorial Auditorium at 7 p.m.

Most recently involved in the citywide teachers' strike, Lindsay's speech will center on a comparison of existing problems in the City to problems in Syracuse, predicts co-chairman of the event, Charles S. Webb.

Lindsay is also expected to announce his support for the Nixon-Agnew ticket and to endorse county candidates.

Congressional candidate from Onondaga County, David V. O'Brien, will share the platform.

Lindsay, holding the favor of New York Democrats as well as Republicans, is the first mayor since 1933 to bring non-partisan leadership to New York City.

Active in politics since his graduation from law school, Lindsay was a founder of the Youth for Eisenhower movement in 1951 and president of the New York City Young Republican Club in 1952.

Since his election to Congress from Manhattan's 17th district, he has not lost an election.

Among Lindsay's policies are advocation of civil rights legislation, urban renewal laws, medical care for the elderly, improved education, middle and low income housing, and rehabilitation of narcotics addicts.

He has written several articles about Congressional and urban affairs for national publications and is the author of "Journey into Politics."

A founder of the National Urban Coalition, an organization directing more private efforts to the rebuilding of American cities, Lindsay was named vice-chairman to the National Commission of Urban Disorders by President Johnson.

The Commission has researched the causes of past violence in the cities and has presented possible means to preventing them in the future.

Mayor Lindsay most recently, presented one of the seconding speeches for Vice Presidential candidate, Spiro Agnew at last month's National Convention, thus keeping in good faith with his party and leaving himself in an advantageous position for higher office.

MAYOR JOHN V. LINDSAY

Opportunity

The dormitories at the St. Mary's site should become the locus of change at SU. Primarily, their dorm councils should be infected with a sense of newness and innovation from their advanced surroundings. They should be inspired to promote new ideas in dormitory living and implement them with gusto.

Second, major changes at Syracuse have always plodded from dormitory to dormitory rather than sweeping the total institution overnight. When members of the current senior class were freshmen, optional hours for women were limited to Barclay and Haft Co-op. Both were honor dorms with an average requirement. Both were small living centers where optional hours could be experimented with. The experiment worked and other living centers one by one acquired optional hours.

Last year the Council on Student Life institutionalized open houses at Lawrinson and DellPlain, the two dorms that proposed them. A resident could take a girl to his room any Friday or Saturday evening or Sunday afternoon. Two chaperones were no longer required instead a student host signed the guests in and out.

These changes came about at an institution whose basic character is determined by a Board of Trustees. The administration is hesitant to grant too much freedom to students lest they become to enthusiastic about change and threaten the nature of the institution. It is one thing for the administration to allow sweeping change in University regulations without any knowledge of the result. It is another to experiment with individual living centers on specific proposals, intelligently drafted and cautiously implemented.

In the same vein, it is important that experimentation in dormitory life be carried out. Dorms have reflected nearly all Western institutions by growing larger and larger and more complex. Men everywhere face the problem of reducing this complexity to identity. The individual student at SU may be lost in the lecture hall or even his own cafeteria, but he does not have to be lost within his living center. Lawrinson and the St. Mary's site dorms have fewer residents per floor than older dorms like Watson or DellPlain. Each resident should know his dorm council representative if not his dorm council president. Dorm councils, in turn, should be close to the needs of their constituencies.

Consequently, we look to the St. Mary's dorm councils for fresh innovation and vigorous leadership in imporving the lives of Syracuse University dorm residents.

The right to park

The beginning of a new year means, among other things, learning a few basic facts of University life. One, is that man has not been endowed by his creator with an inalienable right to park where he pleases.

To help alleviate the parking problems that beset urban university life, Syracuse makes available several alternatives for campus motorists.

Some campus lots, parking garages and the Field House parking lot have all been opened to students and faculty alike. Prime spaces in the Booth garage are still available at a $50 charge, and Field House parking costs only the five dollar registration fee.

With such alternatives, there remains no reason for some parking poachers to usurp spaces purchased by others or to park illegally in the city streets.

Today Security patrols will begin towing unauthorized vehicles. Those that seek refuge in illicit street spaces should recall that the city will again be using the "hot lists" to stop excessive lawbreakers.

Despite complaints to the contrary, parking at Syracuse is far better than most major urban universities such as UCLA. Student motorists should be thankful adequate spaces are available, even at $50. Many can remember when spaces could not be found at any price, and for a campus that sports the finest in motoring machinery, the charges do not seem unreasonable.

A sleeping giant

The failure of SG

by Carl Bogus

One thing freshmen must be confused about is Student Government. Their conception of it is a foggy melange of what their high school student councils were, an ad in the Summer Orange, and a lopsided building opposite Watson with a paint-cracked sign reading "Student Government Offices." They will be baffled by the upcoming freshmen elections, and then probably forget all about SG until April when they will be stunned by a three-day avalanche of multi-colored campaing posters, buttons, leaflets, and speeches. What's it all about? If like their predecessors, these freshmen will learn to view SG as only an irritant to anesthetize oneself against.

And it will be too bad. For Student Government offers us a chance to help improve Syracuse University. It may not be a great vehicle of improvement, but for most students it is the only one available. The alternative is trotting from class to class, grumbling about over-priced, mediocre education.

Student Government has failed at SU because it has failed to recognize this. It has not enlisted students in the exciting challenge of helping to make Syracuse a better university; instead it has occupied itself with trivia. Make Syracuse wet! Do away with Curfew! Come to Pinebrook! Let's have a class glee club! All too often SG has played the role of a buoyant resort social director.

What could SG do? Let me offer just one suggestion as an example:

Student Government could produce a first-rate student survey of courses. Syracuse has hundreds of professors, associate professors, instructors, and graduate assistants. Some are good; some are bad. But no one can evaluate these men as teachers better than the students who sit in their classes for fifteen weeks.

The preparation of a truly fine student survey is admittedly an enormous task. The instructor must be interviewed and his objectives and course aspirations noted, then every student's views on the success of the course must be solicited on a questionaire and the questionaires evaluated. Finally, personal interviews must be held with as many students in the class as possible. After all the data is in and evaluated, an interesting critique must be written.

Yet, it would be worth it. A good survey would: (1) immeasurably help students choose courses during registration; and (2) offer a public evaluation of each course and instructor, available not only to students but also to departmental chairmen, administrators, and--of course--the instructors themselves. A list could be published of all teachers who do not cooperate. The survey itself should be published in booklet form once a year and sold prior to and during registration. Sales to students (especially freshmen) and faculty members should make it financially self-sufficient.

Harvard has a respected student survey which, it is said, virtually hires and fires instructors. Two years ago David Houle published a small, pilot survey under the Jeffer administration. Since then both the Kelso and Hicks administrations have appointed survey staffs but neither has produced anything of consequence.

Yes, Student Government has given us LTE and Projection '70, and both are worth having. But more than anything else, SG has given us Nothing. It is a largely dormant organization; if it weren't for the annual April slugfest none of us would know it's alive. Yet SG has immense potential. It must, however, ignite student interest and involvement in the most exciting task at hand--helping to improve Syracuse. That is the route to student power.

We have blamed inadequacies on the administration too long. We ourselves can promote progress if we are big enough to be responsible, clever enough to be creative, and concerned enough to become involved.

A vote for responsibility

by Ed Barron

St. Marys dorm complex represents a unique opportunity to further students' rights and responsibilities on this campus. However, most of its potential may soon be destroyed by petty campus politics unless immediate action is taken.

A number of committee members may turn the election for dorm president and vice-president into a political football. These people want to prevent an open, dorm-wide election by impowering the dorm council with the right to select the president and vice president of the dorm.

To prevent this political interference, the students on each floor should try to select councilman who are in favor of general, dorm wide elections. To further prevent political interference a "relatively" non-political organization, such as the Inter-dorm Council, should be selected to supervise the elections.

There are also other very important factors that should be considered when chosing your floor representatives. The Dean of Men's staff advisors have told us that the New Men's Residence will represent a "new concept in campus living," because, "this complex will house facilities unparalled on this and most university campuses."

But, unless the newly elected members of the dorm council take immediate and positive action on certain basic proposals, St. Marys will merely offer the same dull old concept of Syracuse dorm life. It doesn't matter how new the buildings are, as long as we must continue to function under the same archaic policies, imposed upon us by the administration, we will have gained little.

The dorm council should immediately strive for certain rights, which thousands of students, attending other more progressive universities, have enjoyed for years. First on the list of priorities, would be the adoption of a program of extensive parietal hours--as a minimum goal.

The council should also push for more progressive liquor regulations which would, at least, allow for the consumption of beer or wine in our own rooms. Rule 4b which states that, "Under no circumstances may alcohdic beverages be in a student room," is an absurd throwback from prohibition.

As another suggestion, a joint dorm committee might be set up between the New Men's and Women's Residence halls, that could, for example, work for the adoption of more liberal curfew arrangements. Of all the limitations on individual freedoms and responsibilities, the curfew system is probably the worst.

To promote scholarship, this joint dorm committee could easily set up a forum series and invite some of the more colorful members of the University community to participate in discussions and debates. Other programs, such as a tutorial system between both dorms, could be arranged.

If these programs are to become a reality, the residents of St. Mary's must select floor representatives who favor dorm wide elections and who also endorse liberal programs giving students more rights and responsibilities. St. Mary's does have the potential to become "a new concept in campus living," but it is the responsibility of the dormitory residents to develop that great potential.

Cutbacks unexpected

Grad assistants angry over loss of aid

By MARK ASHTON

Students were notified as soon as they returned, said Dean Carleton. He estimated several hundred have been affected by the new ruling.

The most ironic thing, according to Kranz, is how the program now seems to "favor the rich." An undergraduate with affluent parents or the student with a full scholarship is still eligible to receive a scholar incentive award.

Kranz and the others do not begrudge those who are receiving the money under the present system, but they are dissatisfied with their own losses. The percentage of total state funds which used to be allotted for graduate assistants could not be very large, argues Kranz, "it's a small saving to the state and a great hardship for us."

"It's not the principle of thing--it's the money," says Robin Kranz, one of many angry young graduate assistants who find themselves at a loss for what to do about an unexpected withdrawal of state financial aid.

In the past, all New York State residents have been eligible for financial aid under the Scholar Incentive Program. But last Friday, Kranz and all other graduate assistants received a notice to the effect that "the State Education Department has decided to change its policy on the Scholar Incentive Program so that graduate assistants will no longer be eligible to receive scholar incentive payments."

To Kranz and his wife, both second-year graduate assistants, the policy change represents a loss of about $1,000--or a minimum of $200 per semester for each. For a couple living on university assistant teacher salaries of $2,000, the loss is hard to take.

Kranz, with John Belland and Stuart Sandow, fellow graduates in the School of Education is interested in knowing why the announcement came so late. The notice that each student received last week was supposedly received by the university last March.

Complaining of a lack of "true good faith," Kranz argues that "some people in the university have known of the change since March, and if they wanted to help us, the situation could have been appraised before opening day."

The legislation which controls the incentive funds is based on a two-fold requirement. The first idea is to provide assistance to "those with a clear need," basing assessment on taxable income. Working for the "slave wages" of the graduate assistant fulfills the first requirement, says Kranz.

The concept in taking away the money, he adds, is based on the university's plan of tuition remittance. Graduate assistants do not receive all of their teacher's pay in the form of salary. Instead they receive a tuition refund of nine hours. The state calls this "receiving money from another source," with the result that assistants are declared ineligible to receive scholar incentives.

Kranz, Belland, Sandow and others have consulted Dean of Student Services Jim G. Carleton, in search of advice. "The only recourse is through their state legislators," Carleton told the students. But the legislature won't meet agin till spring, points our Kranz, so immediate help is not possible.

Young Republicans meet

Candidate and professor extend political message to SU students

Onondaga County Congressional candidate David V. O'Brien and Maxwell professor Michael O. Sawyer will speak to SU Young Republicans Thursday at 8 p.m. in Kittredge Auditorium.

Former Deputy County Executive and County Research Director O'Brien is considered by some to be a liberal Republican, and has urged a moratorium on foreing aid and a redirection of resources to "solving problems at home."

He also has called for implementation of the Kerner Commission Report on Civil Disorders "to erase factors that cause riots and to control disorders," and for massive overhaul of the present welfare system and creation of work incentives.

In addition, he proposes a system of revenue sharing whereby a percentage of tax money sent to Washington is returned to the local community, and urges "top priority for effecting recommendations of the President's Crime Commission and taking other specific measures to curb crime."

In attacking incumbent Congressman James Hanley, his November opponent, O'Brien has said, "He has supported without question every blunder of his administration in Viet Nam.

"While our cities smolder, he has never even discussed the all-important Kerner Commission Report and its recommendations for riot prevention and control."

Tussing declares need for income maintenance program

Dale Tussing, SU economics professor and liberal party candidate for Congress, has called for a Federal "income maintenance program which establishes a floor income as a matter of right"in testimony delivered last week to the Joint Legislative Committee on Revision of the Social Services Law.

According to Tussing, a guaranteed-income system would actually save money, "probably billions of dollars," because it would "work to solve, not merely alleviate, the problem of poverty.

"It can break the vicious circle of poverty and prevent the tragic inheritance of disadvantages that the poor leave to their children. It is this vicious circle and this pattern of inheritance which constitute the most crucial problem of poverty in America.

"And it could end the dependency-creating, spirit-destroying, and often home-breaking effects of the present welfare system. Self-hate, apathy, and irresponsibility among the poor need no reinforcement, yet their reinforcement seems to be a major purpose of our public assistance system."

Tussing described what he calls "our dual welfare system--hidden and dignified for most, exposed and humiliating for the poor." According to the candidate, "There exists a vast and complex system of income security, protection, and maintenance, partly public, and partly private, partly explicit and largely concealed, which provides largely for the non-poor, and which dwarfs, both in aggregate and on a per-person basis, existing programs for the poor."

As examples of "welfare for the non-poor," Tussing cited unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the right to collective bargaining, parity-price- support programs, and "the manifold welfare-for-the-rich programs which are hidden in our tax laws."

"None of these programs is universal in scope; and the poor are always the most substantial group excluded."

According to Tussing, a guaranteed-income system" would make an even income floor out of our presently uneven one, by automatically filling in the gaps for those persons for whom there are no tailor- made programs."

Probers aim at SU politics...

Cooperation Expected

Questioned about possible obstruction from within "the system," Tuccillo explained that "the Speaker of Student Senate (Ed Feldman) granted my request for this investigation, so he obviously favors it.

"We expect cooperation from the officers and parties. I can't foresee anyone refusing to testify, unless they have something to hide.

"In view of our goals, I can't anticipate any responsible party leaders or senators trying to obstruct our investigation. Not only would any such attempt be a waste of time, but it would also become a part of our report."

Divorce from Parties

Senate may very well be the best student organization to conduct this investigation, since it is largely divorced from campus parties. Only 18 senators are in office as a result of party politics (six senators-at-large from each of the three upperclasses).

The overall question SCOPE seeks to answer is whether SU's two parties really represent the student body.

Tuccillo does not think it is "democratic" to restrict party membership by Greek houses or living centers. Another major question is whether so-called student apathy results from unfair representation among independents on the campus. SCOPE will try to determine which segment of the student body fails to vote and why. Last spring, for instance, only 2,563 students voted for SG presedential candidates.

Regarding finances, SCOPE will examine the charge that houses contributing more money to their parties "earn" the right to run more candidates.

Following his probe, Tuccillo will present the findings at a Student Senate session. All senators and SU's two student newspapers will receive mimeopgraphed copies of the report.

"We expect some legislation to result from this study," Tuccillo ventured.

UU launches Fall semester with big weekend

By HELENE MACDONALD
Associate Editor

University Union will offer a full weekend of activities and entertainment Sept. 27-29 when it sponsors SU's first fall weekend.

It all begins Friday night, Sept. 27, with a dance at the War Memorial. The Chambers Brothers and Page One will perform from 8:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

Saturday afternoon, the 1968 Syracuse football team opens its home season with a 1:30 p.m. game against the University of Maryland. That evening, a movie will be shown on the quad.

Smokey Robinson and the Miracles will appear in concert for the first time at Syracuse 4 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 29, in the War Memorial.

Tickets for the concert will be $3, $3.50 and $4. UU is offering a two-for-one deal-anyone who buys a ticket for the concert automatically gets a free ticket to the dance. Otherwise dance tickets cost $2 each.

Arrangements for block seating can be made by calling Claudia Taubman at ext. 3046 or 3047, or Craig Baumgarten at ext. 2650.

The two freshman floors who do the best advertising for the weekend will receive a free keg of beer for an open house Saturday, Sept. 28.

Tickets go on sale Wednesday in the HBC cloakroom, which will be open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Bridges gap

Dr. Sawyer fosters communication between students and professors

By ANDRIJ BILYK
Associate Editor

Dr. Michael O. Sawyer has returned as faculty adviser to the Academic Communications Corps, the organization born to perpetuate Dr. Sawyer's idea of "a community of scholars."

The ACC believes that such a community can be accomplished only after professors and students know each other, have a better understanding of the different points of view and approaches to learning, and have a greater intellectual respect for one another.

Mrs. Anne Rath coordinates the dialogue between student and professor from room 11 in the Prefab next to Newhouse (Building 24).

A professor is writing a book and needs help with research and typing. Another has just come from Peru and would like a student to help him with his notes...and there was a student last year whose hours devoted to bibliographic research resulted in the elimination of needless duplication of titles between the Main and a branch library at SU.

Work for Profs

Countless opportunities exist for students to meet professors and perform clerical evaluative or research work.

Mrs. Rath said that if last year's 65 volunteers had been paid the minimum wage of $1.50 an hour, it would have cost the University approximately $30,000.

After Mrs. Rath matches professors requests with a student's interests, she leaves the details to the two parties involved. A student does not commit himself unless the arrangements suit him.

Meet over Coffee

The ACC sponsors Thursday afternoon coffees. Students and faculty members are invited to Bldg. 24 for several informal hours of conversation. Dr. Sawyer, as faculty adviser, will be attending these functions, whenever he can, said Mrs. Rath.

ACC Student Director, Arthur Brickman, agreed with fellow member Fred Mapes that the ACC, besides allowing students to meet professors on an individual basis, also gives the student an opportunity to contribute something of himself to the University.

This year's ACC motto is:

"Never deny yourself the privelege of doing something nice for someone everyday."

Mrs. Rath encourages students and professors alike to step into building 24...to communicate.

Prof. lauded

A book on France's civil procedure by Prof. Peter E. Herzog has drawn praise from an internationally-known scholar. Dr. Gerhard Kegel, chairman of the University of Cologne's Institute for Foreign and International Private Law, recently hailed the book as a "monumental work."

"The book is a real treasure trove concerning French law and the French legal profession . . . a model of clarity," declared Dr. Kegel in a letter written to the author last month.

Physics grant

An award of $4,250 was recently presented to Syracuse University by the General Telephone and Electronics Foundation for a fellowship in Electronic Materials. The recipient will be selected by the physics department faculty. No conditions are imposed by the Foundation regarding selection of winners.

Block seats

Block Seating for Smokey concert: Money must be in by Wednesday noon. Call Jerry Tatarian ext. 3225 or Claudia Taubman, ext. 3406, 7, before 10 tonight.

New voters

Is this the first year you will be eligible to vote? Or is this the first time you've been away from home at election time?

If you want to find out how you can vote in the elections this year, come to Maxwell Auditorium at 7 p.m. Wednesday and learn how to get an absentee ballot so you can cast your ballot for the candidate of your choice in November.

WAER attempts at wider appeal with diversified program format

WAER, the only total "sound spectrum" station in Syracuse, signed on yesterday with a new program schedule for listeners of every interest.

The station, completely staffed by Syracuse University students, has been cited for the quality and professionalism of its programming. It features more jazz, folk, Broadway music, and public affairs than any other station in the Syracuse area. In addition, it is the only station devoting shows to rhythm, and blues and Hollywood music. WAER also programs a number of distinguished classical music shows.

A new experience for Syracuse residents will be "Night Call," a nightly call-in show originating from New York City. Well-known personalities such as Roy Wilkins, James Farmer and Bill Cosby are scheduled guests. WAER listeners are invited to question these personalities live and free of charge. Night Call can be heard Monday through Friday from 11:30-12:30 p.m.

WAER has many programs especially for SU students. "Sound Spectrum" is three-and-one half hours of popular music and feature programming every day Monday to Saturday beginning at 2 p.m.

At 8:30 p.m., Monday to Thursday, the sounds of folk music can be heard. At that time on Tuesdays, "The World of Rhythm and Blues" is aired. This is the first show in Syracuse, devoted to "soul" music.

Jazz sounds are programmed at 10 p.m. weekday nights.

Broadway and Hollywood music is a specialty of WAER. You can hear these sounds at 7 weekday nights, with Jason Squire presenting Hollywood Soundstage Thursday nights.

Classical music is programmed on WAER Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays. Eastern Sounds, new to the West but in its second year at WAER, is heard at 9:30 p.m. Sundays.

There is much more at WAER, including news on weekdays at 5:30, 8:20, and 9:50 p.m. Weekend news is heard at noon, 5:30, and 10:50 p.m.

O'Dwyer levels blast at 'system'...

he would not support Humphrey since "it would be inconsistent and inappropriate to support a candidate whose views do not agree with my own."

O'Dwyer accused Javits, Rockefeller and Lindsey of being in the same position on issues as Nixon and Agnew because of their campaign support for the two Republican national candidates.

In answer to whether or not he could win an election without giving his party's national candidates support, O'Dwyer pointed out that he had won the primaries that way. His appeal, he feels, "must continue to go to Democrats, Republicans, Independents and all those concerned about the war."

Earlier at a press conference in Maxwell, O'Dwyer said in reference to the possibility of future support for Humphrey, "Only a fully signed peace treaty could woo me back."

O'Dwyer spoke of Chicago's Mayor Richard Daley's control of the Democratic National Convention as being both "inside and outside the convention hall." The fact that in a national poll, 72% of the people favor Mayor Daley, he attributes to "the state of hysteria in which we are now living." The majority of people," O'Dwyer says, "are against the clubbing of young people."

I sincerely and profoundly pray that we have seen the last of national party conventions, O'Dwyer said, eliciting loud applause from his youthful audience.

"From Chicago, it was made clear," he said, "the day of the Daleys is finished and ours is just coming in."

An advocate of presidential primaries, O'Dwyer promised that the first bill he would introduce in the Senate would seek to replace the national conventions with primaries.

"Primaries in May or June," he said, "would in some way measure the voice of the people as to their choice for president."

The necessity for a convention in order to write up party platforms was more or less dismissed by O'Dwyer when he said, "A platform can only be as good as the man who carries it out. As an example, he said, "We had a great platform four years ago."

If elected, O'Dwyer would enter the Senate as New York's freshman.

Offense a questionmark

Stingy defense key to Orange season

By ED AGRANOWITZ

For more years than anyone cares to count, Syracuse football coach Ben Schwartzwalder has had at his disposal a "bread and butter" running back of All-America caliber to carry the bulk of the offensive load.

Sophomore fullback Al Newton has been touted as the likely successor to Larry Csonka, but if Saturday's inter-squad scrimmage is any indication of things to come, the Orangemen will have to scratch and claw for every yard this season. Newton and his experience-thin offensive cohorts played erratically Saturday against SU's number two defensive unit.

This may be the year when a strong defense is the Orange's best offense. In this department Schwartzwalder's worries are few, as he boasts nine returning starters.

Team captain and All-America candidate Tony Kyasky will lead the defenive platoon that hopes to match the success of last year's unit, which ranked fourth nationally. "Tony has the size, speed, savvy and likes to tangle," says Schwartzwalder. "But what makes him so valuable is that he is as tough against the running game as he is the passing." Last year, Kyasky intercepted four passes from his left halfback spot.

Also impressing in the defensive backfield is safetyman Cliff Ensley, now in his third year as a regular. Last year "the Gipper" paced the team in interceptions with six. Halfback Tom Hermanowski completes the trio that returns intact from last season.

The graduation of defensive captain Jim Cheyunski, the middle linebacker, will not hurt the squad to any great extent because of the fine play of transfer Jack Protz. Corner linebackers Bobby Bancroft and Don Dorr both started as sophs a year ago and should see plenty of action this time around. However, injury-riddled Jerry Ruccio was job hunting Saturday with tenacious play, and just might force his way into the starting lineup.

Many faces are back from last year's superb defensive line, which led the Orange to the runner-up ranking in national rushing defense. Ringleader Art Thoms, an All-America possibility at tackle, has two outstanding campaigns under his belt. At the other tackle spot is versatile soph Ray White. According to Schwartzwalder, "Ray is able to handle any spot on the field except quarterback." Middle guard Gerry Beach started last year until a broken foot finished him at the halfway mark, and is back again in his old spot. Ends Steve Zegalia, a two-year starter and Lou Gubitosa, who tackled opposing quarterbacks for more than 50 yards in losses last year, complete "murderers row."

Saturday the Orange have an important engagement with the Spartans of Michigan State. Schwartzwalder puts his team at an automatic disadvantage against schools of this size. "As far as recruiting is concerned," says Ben, "we're just a one horse outfit in the big time operation." The SU defense intends to show the Spartans what one horse with a lot of spirit can do.

Sports primer

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

It's rah-rah time again, as every Goon knows and every freshman will soon find out. Tradition is getting its yearly airing, and sports plays a large part in the tradition of this university.

For the enlightenment of the Class of '72, the bleacher fan offers this short primer. The information was gathered in long candlelight conversations with a local historian, who offered this advice: caveat spectator.

Nicknames: Syracuse University is not always thus. It may also be known as SU,Piety Hill, the Hill or the 'Cuse. Its athletic teams are officially called the Orangemen, which is often shortened to Orange. Other accepted terms include Saltine Warriors, Hillmen, and during the basketball season, Roy's Boys.

Football: A game played on Saturday afternoons in the fall and, this year, in December. Some people say SU is a "football school." The same people say that the Wright Brothers will never get that thing in the air. Compare, for instance, a rally at Notre Dame with one at Syracuse. That is, if you can find one at Syracuse. The games are interesting, however, and should be attended. Remember, they are free, and not much else is.

Archbold Stadium: The field is the scene of the battles of the Saltine Warriors and their various opponents, but the stands sometime resemble the set of Laugh-In. Keep the booze under your blanket, because the representatives of the Dean of Men are watching, and they are just as cold and thirsty as you are.

Gin and Juice: A Saturday activity for those who don't care about football, but like to go to the stadium. Most don't become proficient at it until their sophomore or junior years, but pretty frosh girls are notable exceptions.

Alma Mater: The part of the football game when even the drunks make an effort to stand up.

Ben: Floyd (Ben) Schwarzwalder, the head football coach, is entering his 20th year on the Hill, and is probably the most revered institution on the campus. The Hall of Languages is more likely to go than he is.

44: The number worn by Jim Brown, Ernie Davis and Floyd Little, three of the greatest backs in college football history. Now the most widely known jersey number in the country, it is worn by quarterback Rich Panczyszyn, who has two more years in which to add to the legend and teach people to spell his name.

39: The number worn by Larry Csonka, who last year broke most of the rushing records set by the 44s. He has gone to the Miami Dolphins, and the number, and his fullback slot, have gone to sophomore Al Newton.

1959: The year nobody will let you forget. SU was the national champion that year, and has unsuccessfully tried to duplicate the feat ever since. The phrase "the best since '59" is the ultimate in praise.

Dartmouth: Don't smile when you say that word. They "robbed" the Lambert Trophy, emblematic of supremacy in Eastern college football, in 1965, and have been marked ever since. The entire Ivy League, for this and other reasons, falls into the same category.

Penn State: These two words have a simple synonym: Hate. The Nittany Lions, with the departure of Colgate from the schedule, have become public enemy number one. If William and Mary is on the field, pretend its Penn State when you cheer against them.

Now that the class of '72 has this basic information under its belt, it can get out and placard cheer with the hope that, as tradition states, the beanies will fly into the air, and the sun will set orange.

State's backs look greener than ever

EAST LANSING, MICH. – Going into a season without two or three established offensive backfield stars is a rarity at Michigan State. Going without any is practically unheard of.

The Spartans find themselves in the latter predicament, but there is no wailing and gnashing of teeth. Offensive backfield Coach Al Dorow is even moderately optimistic.

He admits there is no one pressing for All-America or even All-Big Ten honors, that most of his pupils are on the smallish side and aren't even notably fast. There are no Clinton Joneses or Sherman Lewises, two MSU All-Americas, in the lot.

What Dorow banks his hopes on are these points: Good general blocking ability, quickness if not blazing speed and strong competition at three of the four spots.

For example, he says of the quarterbacking, where still unproven senior Bill Feraco of Irwin, Pa. is the man to beat and sophomores Gordon (Scooter) Longmire of Tracy, Calif. and Bill Triplet of Vicksburg, Miss. are the most likely guys to do the beating:

"Either Longmire and Triplett will make Feraco a great quarterback, or one of them will beat him out. I think that's just about an ideal quarterback situation."

LaMarr Thomas at tailback is the closest thing there is to an ace going into drills starting Friday, August 30. But the rangy Markham, Ill. junior, who started a few games last fall and was the team's second leading rusher, isn't a shoo-in for his position. He had a bad spring, at least partly due to a leg injury, and has junior Don Highsmith of New Brunswick, N.J., the team's fastest running back, and sophomore darter Tommy Love of Sylva, N.C. tramping on his heels. Love, a 6-1, 195-pounder, is a pass-run threat of such potential that as a senior in high school he ran for 30 TDs and passed for 17 others.

Seniors Dick Berlinski of Quinnesec, 190 pounds, and Reggie Cavender of Detroit, 195 pounds, are expected to be scrapping it out for the fullback call. Both won letters in 1967 but neither had an outstanding season, and Berlinski had knee troubles which resulted in post-season surgery. Soph Earl Anderson of Tifton, Ga. and veterans Kermit Smith of Baytown, Texas and Ken Hines of Stroud, Okla, are also listed there. Only Anderson appears to have a good chance of cutting into the action.

At flankerback, only Charley Wedemeyer, the squat and mobile Hawaiian (5-7 and 175) is listed. His main relief is likely to be Waters, who seems to be headed for first string defensive back duty. The eight experienced offensive backs produced a total of only 684 net yards rushing, 32 pass receptions and seven TDs in 1967. The main keys to success would seem to be avoidance of injury, the developmen of Feraco or one of the sophomores into a first class field general, and positive victories, rather than by default, of candidates vying at the other running back posts.

JC transfers arrive

Austin set down

Roy Danforth's worst fears were realized over the weekend as his star guard, Ernie Austin, was declared academically ineligible for the first semester.

Rumors of such a move were first reported last week in the DO.

Austin, who is slightly under the C average that Syracuse requires for eligibility, will be a full time student this fall. He is expected back as the Orange open the final phase of their schedule in late January.

Two junior college transfers will be on the varsity roster this fall, brightening the picture somewhat. Both entered SU through a combination of their own work and interest and the recruiting of the coaching staff.

Dave Harmon, a native of Auburn, N.Y., is a transfer from Auburn Community College. He is a 6-4 forward, and is described as an excellent rebounder and defensive player.

The other, Gerry McFadden, comes from Washingyon, D.C., by way of Dodge City Junior College. Also 6-4, he can play at either guard or forward, and averaged better than 20 points per game last year.

Sports sidelights

The fledgling SU Soccer Club got off to a good start on Sunday by turning back LeMoyne, 5-2. Orange scores were tallied by John Van Steen (2), Gerard Ahombo (2) and John Mylroie.

A mandatory meeting of all intramural mangers will be held tonight at 7 in room 306 of Archbold Gym.

There will be a meeting of the varsity Golf team at 7 tonight at Delta Upsilon, 426 Ostrom Avenue.

ROBERT F. KENNEDY

Press secretary speaks

Mankiewicz predicts poor showing for Democrats

By KAY CHRISTENSEN
Associate Editor

Electoral College votes for the Democratic party will rank third in the November election, predicted Frank Mankiewicz last night in Hendricks Chapel.

The press secretary to the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy said that presently the Democratic party is in a "sad state of affairs," but there are still seven weeks until election.

FRANK MANKIEWICZ

In his speech to a capacity crowd, Mankiewicz frequently inserted quips on political candidates and issues which drew laughter from the audience. His aging since the Kennedy assassination, however, was revealed by his lined face, grayish receding hair, and tired eyes.

Denouncing President Johnson's administrative actions, Mankiewicz said, "The war is the most sensational miscalculation by Democratic leadership. There is only one person who wants the war to go on and as soon as he is no longer President it will end."

Mankiewicz believes the lack of six main elements will prevent a Democratic ticket victory. Money, organized labor support, young voters, strong party organization, solid support from minorities, and support of liberals are the necessary points for victory according to Mankiewicz.

The fact that there is a significant portion of only one element, money, "leads to the present mournful situation that the Democratic party is likely to run third in the national election." Mankiewicz noted that the rank and file of organized labor has not been following its leadership. Because of this, approximately 40-50 percent of the labor vote will not be cast for the Democratic ticket.

Mankiewicz said both young people and liberals have little support for the party. "Also, there is no significant vote among the black voters."

The widespread neglect of party organization for more than the past five years is a significant point according to Mankiewicz. He praised Republican presidential candidate Richard Nixon as "the best old fashioned politician" because he is interested in party organization. "He will reward the hard workers in the party and will nourish the party roots."

Mankiewicz said the administration is keeping a "box score" of legislative victories to show their record, but "they are not really achievements." Democrats are also preoccupied with Washington issues instead of major campaign issues. For example, Mankiewicz believes the controversy over Abe Fortas' appointment to the Supreme Court will not affect the vote.

Praising only Senators Kennedy, McCarthy and McGovern, Mankiewicz cracked lines on almost every politician.

Mankiewicz covered the Republican convention in Miami when Nixon announced his vice presidential running-mate. After Nixon announced Governor Spiro Agnew, Mankiewicz said, "Nixon was getting even with the press who said he had no sense of humor."

In a press conference earlier, Mankiewicz praised the Kennedy trait of honesty. "Kennedy's approach of direct response attracted people." He added, "There is no question that Kennedy would have been nominated and elected."

Wallace is gaining votes because people do not want hypocrisy, said Mankiewicz. His approach is similar to Kennedy's style.

Recently drafted for the mayorality race in Los Angeles, Mankiewicz noncommitally said, "I'm thinking about it."

Project '70 becomes accredited course

By JEAN HAVENS

Projection '70, the tutorial program originated by SU's centennial class, has now become an accredited course in the School of Education, following a summer of evaluation and improvement.

Now known as Education 104, the program carries three hours of credit for the 40-45 students who will be involved as tutors. A floor-to-floor tutor recruitment drive will being Thursday Sept. 19 and continue through Monday Sept. 23.

Bob Mussey, director of the program, explained that "the tutors will be expected to attend all training sessions, all tutoring sessions and, in addition, will meet with the course supervisors a few times per week."

"The coursy must be taken as part of the regular load," Mussey stressed. "This means that in many cases tutors will have to drop a course and add Ed. 104. Some, taking a total of 17 hours including Projection '70, will be allowed to take the course."

Since each tutor will spend at least 10 hours per week on Ed. 104 course work, the program is seeking people who can handle the work load without lowering their average. Also being recruited are course administrators, researchers and office staff.

Those admitted to the course will attend a short organizational meeting on the evening of Wednesday Sept. 25. Major training sessions will be held on Sept. 26, 29, 30, and Oct. 1, 2, and 3.

Included in the training sessions will be lectures by faculty members on the subjects of behavior, observation techniques, problem diagnosis and teaching methods. The five faculty lecturers are also members of the professional advisory board which has been set up to handle problems unable to be dealt with by student co-ordinators.

Board members include: Dr. John Johnson, assistant professor in special education; Dr. Robert Cohen, from the Institute for Community Psychology; Dr. John Wilson, head of the Arithmetic Clinic; Dr. Frank Green, head of the Reading Clinic; and Dr. Peter Knoblick, associate professor in special education.

At smaller group meetings the tutors will be matched with a child and be assigned to a room.

Tutors have a choice of either Mon.-Wed. or Tues.-Thurs. classes. Each night the session lasts from 7-8 p.m. Following the session the tutor will meet with course supervisors to discuss problems that have arisen, fill out response forms and report results, positive or negative.

Because it is uncertain as to whether or not it will receive the funds it has requested from the Community Chest, Projection '70 is also planning a fund drive in the near future.

Director Mussey views the initiation of such a student-run course as a major breakthrough for students on this campus. "This potentially is one of the best courses they will ever have," he explained, "because it is geared toward the people involved in it." Those interested may call ext. 2650 or 3138.

Students secure voice in molding SU policies

By ALAN STAMM

An 11-member panel--including two students--was appointed yesterday to evaluate means of giving students broader responsibility in campus governance.

The special board is a partial result of last March's Administration Building sit-in here.

Student participation in SU rule-making will be the subject of open hearings tentatively scheduled for next month.

These sessions are expected to provide a clearer idea of how to implement the decision by University Senate, a faculty and administration body, to admit students as voting members. The Senate agreed to take this action following last Spring's demonstration, but did not decide how many students should participate or how they should be selected.

All members of the campus community will be able to join what are expected to be wide-ranging discu ions. Special invitations will be extended to certain students, administrators and faculty members to "testify," but the hearings will also be open to any other interested individuals.

The meetings will probably extend for several days. Scheduling them at the end of October would enable attendance by student leaders returning from their Pinebrook conference in the Adirondacks.

The hearings board was appointed yesterday by University Senate's committee on students.

Representing the administration will be Frank P. Piskor, vice president for academic affairs, and Robert G. Cox, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Faculty representatives indude Jesse V. Burkhead, professor of economics, and David H. Owen, professor of english.

Trustees on the panel are Mrs. John Chatman and William Clark.

Students appointed are Chuck Hicks, student government president, and Joan Howard, a graduate student active in campus affairs.

Two other faculty members have yet to be appointed, but it is speculated that consideration is being given to Alan K. Campbell, professor of political science, and Dr. George G. Stern, chairman of University Senate's committee on students.

Imagine, self-governing dorms

In order to reduce the complexity of a dorm to the identity of the individual, it is necessary to make them self-governing.

A self-governing dormitory would elect representatives by floor to the dorm council. The dorm council president would be elected by the popular vote of the entire dormitory.

A self-governing dorm would be able to make its own social regulations as it saw fit. It could forbid or allow drinking in residents' rooms. It could form its own schedule of parietal hours.

A self-governing dormitory would have a dorm court to enforce its regulations. It would be necessary for an extra-dorm court to have jurisdiction in many areas outside the dormitory's bounds, but self-government would be meaningless without a method of enforcement.

A self-governing dorm would control the resources of the dormitory. It could hold social events in the dorm lounge, adapt the dorm library to a listening room for music, or provide office space to selected faculty members to make them more accessible to students.

A self-governing dormitory would deserve a share of the general student fee of its residents to help satisfy their needs. It would have the power to raise money in whatever manner it saw fit, including taxation, if it could win the approval of the residents.

In short, the dormitory would become an integral decision-making unit, capable of determing the physical and social atmosphere of its hallways.

Such imaginings obviously don't reflect reality at Syracuse. But every effort toward self-government provokes dialogue and debate. Which may one day lead to action.

Part one - current complaints

The rights of women NOW

by Gretchen Patey

Editor's Note:

This is the first of a three-part series exploring women's rights in America. This article is an explanation of the complaints that make women's rights an issue.

Manifest destiny, slavery, secession, the silver standard, and independence from England are dead issues in America today. But the question of equal rights for women is still an issue. It did not end in 1920 when women won the right to vote.

Women, who comprise 51% of our population, are America's largest "minority group." Despite their numbers women provide only seven percent of the nation's doctors, three percent of our lawyers, or physicists, and less than one percent of our engineers.

Only 10 percent of our PhD's are women, a number which has decreased steadily since World War II. And only one college or university teacher in five is a woman, just as in 1910.

In contrast, 35% of Indian medical students are women, in France 27%, and in Denmark and the Netherlands 15%.

Marguerite Fisher is the only woman professor in Syracuse University's Maxwell School. She has travelled in Asia and has written of the propaganda value of the full equality of Soviet and Chinese women in public and professional life.

Although she admits that she would not want to live there, she "admires the ease with which talented and ambitious women can rise to the top of whatever field they are in, an opportunity not present in America."

Lest it be thought that these claims are merely "woman talk", here is a male view of the situation:

"Women Constitute the most underprivileged group in the United States", Dr. Howard Osofsky stated recently in a speech at Syracuse University.

The Syracuse gynecologist-obstetrecian pointed out that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission refuses to accept complaints from women.

When a University graduate student was refused service at the bar of a local hotel because she was alone, he continued, the Mayor's Commission on Human Rights refused to hear her case. Membership to the Syracuse Press Club was refused to one of Syracuse's prominent newswomen because of her sex.

But this is not just a local problem. Fewer women are in meaningful higher jobs than 20 years ago. Although there are 28,000,000 women in the job market today, three-fourths of them are on the rock-bottom jobs and 90% of them earn less than $5,000 a year.

In 1963, President Kennedy's Commission on the Status of Women reported that women earned up to 40% less on the same jobs as men.

Much of this has been brought into the public eye by a two year old militant women's group. The National Organization of Women (NOW) is a 1200-member force of professional people (10% of its members are men). It works through the legislature to protest "all those prejudices and laws of the land which keep women at home and in the bottom of the job market and exclude them from jobs that utilize intelligence in any significant way."

NOW currently works for total enforcement of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the passage of a civil rights amendment for women (which has been tossed out of every Congress since 1923), more liberal abortion laws, equality for women on campuses, in the ministry, and in the payment of income taxes.

The group also protests the so-called "protective laws" which limit the hours a woman can work and the weight she can lift, and it supports the airline stewardesses who fight to keep their jobs after they dodder past their 32nd birthday.

Not since 1918 has such an effort occurred for the cause of women's rights.

Tomorrow: Women as a force in history.

A Frosh speaks

New idealism

by Bob Tembeckjian '72

We often observe that adolescent inquisitiveness dissolves into adulthood passivity, that questioning yields to acceptance, and that idealism diminishes with "maturity." College is often a catalyst in the process, either enhancing inquisitiveness and ideals or destroying them.

It might be well to ask, therefore, if people go to universities to learn something or evade the draft, to "find" themselves and choose careers or withdraw from society. Perhaps most important in the entire educational process is not whether the student gets high grades but whether he increases his activism and attempts to make his soaring ideals become recognized realities. College, therefore, cannot but, more important, should not attempt to provide all the answers.

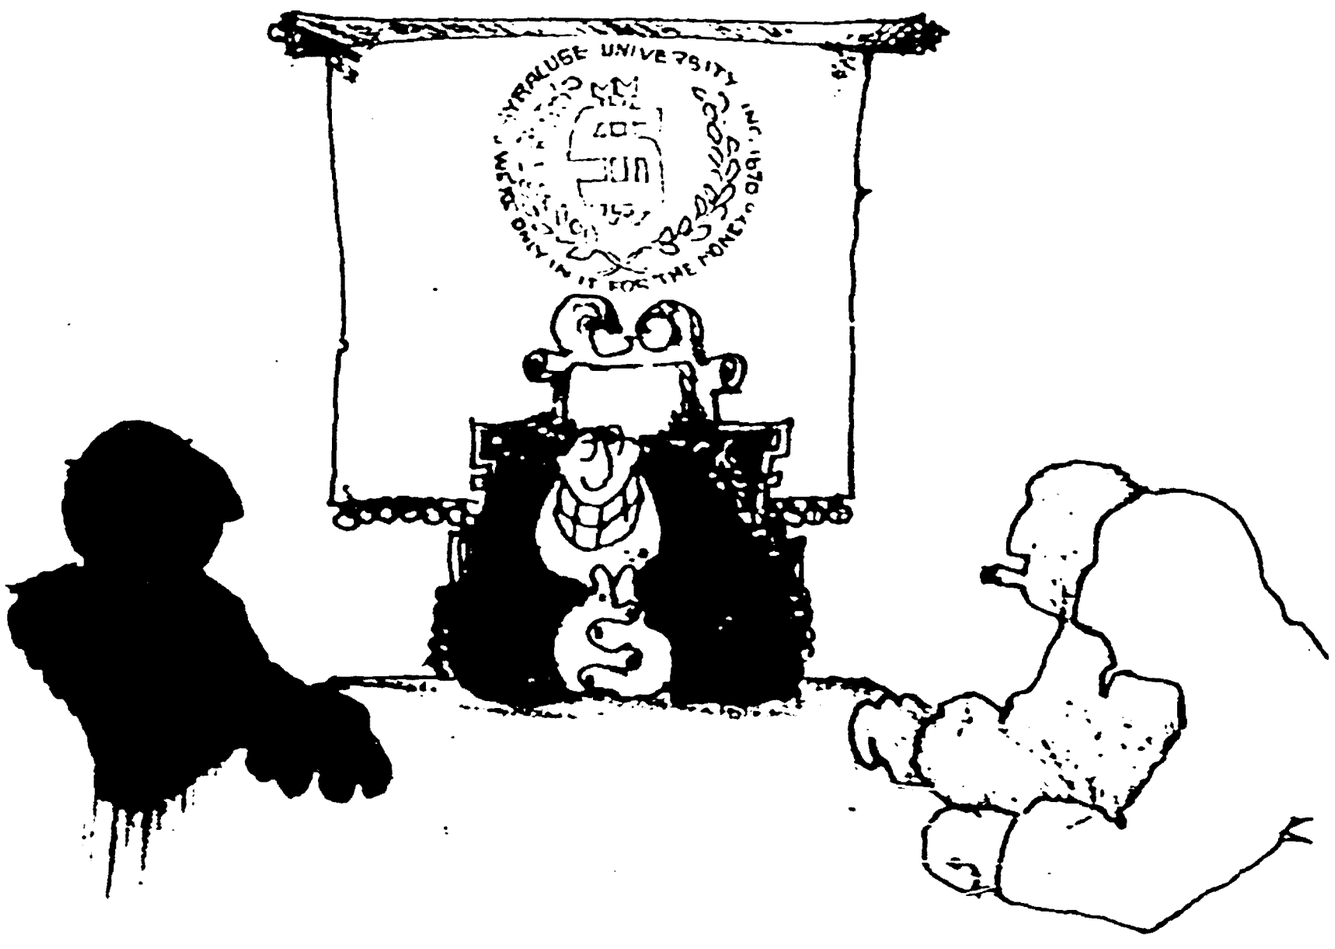
It cannot be regarded merely as a tool for better-paying jobs, for then its entire value is lost. Rather, it must seek to encourage people to think. At first that might seem the childish expression of a naive person, but it is a veritable point.

College must make people think. For the most important possession one has after four years of university living is not his average and not his job opportunity but his desire to question the injustices about him, to seek a better life for himself and his fellow men. This is the most essential quality one can hope to have after his years at Syracuse or any other university.

Without inquisition, life becomes a mere stream of boredom, routine, and even despair. Without idealism, life is worthless. For life itself is basically idealism. We are created to live in brotherhood and love rather than in war and hatred, and is not love a basic ideal of all people?

Freshmen might ask themselves what they expect to find at Syracuse. Certainly not four years of rhetoric. Rather, one would hope to find an institution which strives to instill in men an understanding of the world as it is, not as some would have us believe.

The harsh facts are, that the world is replete with wrongs in need of correction-injustices based in ignorant bigotry and lack of human compassion. One would also hope to learn, as a by- product of activism, to accept responsibilities rather than fear the consequences of taking a stand on an issue.



The courage and character to fight for a principle, to raise and discuss differences with the administration, and to print an article in a newspaper even though you might not agree with its content far exceeds the smallness of preferring neutrality or passivism. For as Dante wrote: "The hottest places in hell are reserved for those who, in time of moral crisis, preserved their neutrality."

Jeanne E. Kearin

Jeanne E. Kearin, a dean's list student at SU, died earlier this month from injuries received in a bicycle accident at Cape Cod.

Miss Kearin, 20, would have started her junior year this week. A resident of Katonah, N.Y., she was a member of SU's Ski Club and tutored underprivileged youngesters as part of Projection '70. She served as president of Marshall Cottage during her freshman year.

Her fall from a bike occured during a summer vacation with her parents. She is also survived by a brother, Christopher.

Here we are gentlemen, at the threshold of a brand new fiscal year.

Liberal Party candidate

Dale Tussing speaks out on campaign issues

By ANDRIJ BILYK
Associate Editor

Liberal Party candidate Dale Tussing, in Maxwell last night to recruit youthful help for his campaign, said in an interview that we shouldn't be in Vietnam, that there ought to exist a guaranteed employment system and that the federal government should offer federal grants to police forces.

The SU economics professor gave three reasons in opposition to U.S. presence in Vietnam.

"Our purpose is wrong," he said, "We are told that America is stopping Communism but Communism is not a monolithic world movement."

"Even if our purpose was right the war remains immoral. We are fighting, in our search and destroy missions, to kill people, not to hold territory. We are also supporting a military dictatorship and using napalm and anti-personnel bombs."

Tussing also called the war illigitimate. "Because of the way we got involved," he said.

Tussing clarified his view on a guaranteed income system:

"We ought to have a system of guaranteed employment first," he said. "It is most important to our economy that people have jobs first."

Tussing said that the federal government should instead of building low income housing which it rents at a loss, encourage poor people to move into available spaces by agreeing to pay part of their rent.

Tussing added that the community of Syracuse currently sports a lack of 10,000 low-income housing units.

"The city fathers would love to build more except that such a move will attract an additional number of poor people," he said.

Crime is a major campaign topic this election year and tussing believes that though people talk about law and order they are not willing to make the necessary sacrifices.

He cited lack of police personnel, insufficient police pay, and the unwillingness of cities to invest in better street lighting as among things which ought to be fought to reduce crime.

"Another major source of crime is the prison system," he added, "but then people think you're getting soft when you advocate prison reforms," he said.

Tussing said, people who talk about "law and order" want to get tough, but they are not solving anything, merely expressing their frustrations and agression, much like what Black people do when they riot.

Tussing, when asked about the recent Russian move in Czechoslovakia, said that he had mentioned the danger to that Eastern European country as he announced his candidacy in May.

"The Soviet Union since Kruschev has returned to a large amount of internal repression, but there are such things as spheres of influence. "I don't believe that this poses a danger to us," he said, adding, "but neither does South Africa though we should be concerned that in both cases a small minority is oppressing the majority.

Tussing is scheduled for a noon press conference today at the Syracuse Press Club, Hotel Syracuse.

Dean of Maxwell School

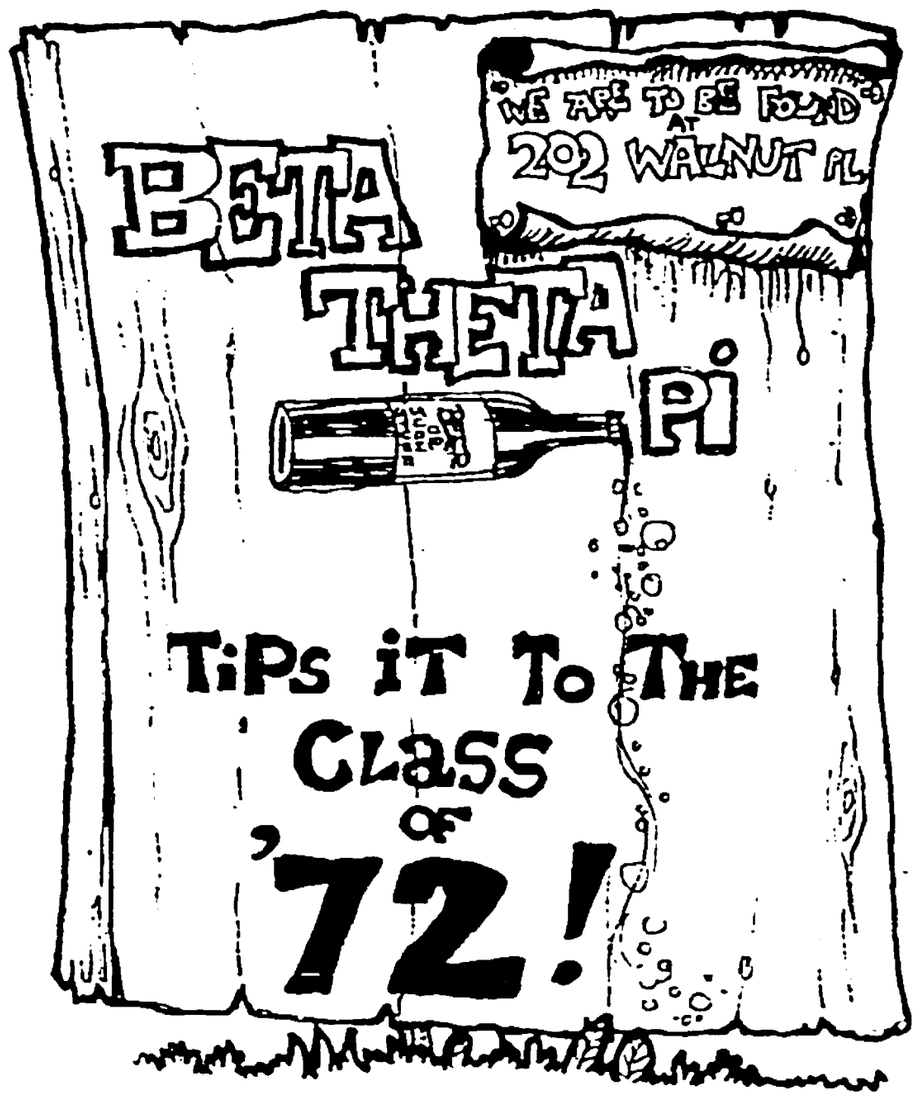
Bailey serves as Vice-Chairman for Humphrey-Muskie slate

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

Stephen K. Bailey, soon to retire as Dean of the Maxwell School has been named Vice Chairman of Citizens for Humphrey-Muskie in New York State at the Vice President's personal request.

Dean Bailey, a friend of Humphrey since 1951, said his busy academic schedule will prevent him from doing much active campaigning for the Vice President, but he has agreed to lend his name to the organization. Bailey added that he might make a few speaking appearances on northeastern college campuses.

This summer, Dean Bailey worked as a leader of Citizens for Humphrey before the Democratic convention and later served as chairman of a task force on government organization, also for the Vice President.



Bailey's task force and several others like it were commissioned by Humphrey to research domestic and foreign problems concerning the federal government and to produce suggestions and information to be used in the Humphrey-Muskie campaign.

Another member of the Bailey task force was Charles Schultze, former Director of the Budget.

Clark D. Ahlberg, SU's vice president for administration and research, is also backing Humphrey's presidential drive.

The 20-page paper produced by the task force outlined improvements in five areas of government organization: the Executive Office, departments and agencies, field services, strengthening state and local government for better administration of grants-in aid, and strengthening personnel.

When asked about a Humphrey appearance in the Syracuse area, Bailey said such an appearance had been rumored for last week but never materialized. He has since been told that Humphrey might be here in late October.

Grace-less days begin

SU parking crackdown - rules to be enforced

The grace period which allowed students, staff and faculty time to become familiar with university parking regulations will end this week, according to a recent announcement by the SU parking committee.

Regulations will be strictly enforced and violators will be subject to fines and removal of their vehicles. Automobiles will be towed away at the owners' expense.

Under the new regulations, motorcycles and motor scooters are barred from the main campus, except in the parking area reserved for them at the northeast corner of Sims Hall.

Among the places where motor scooters may not be parked is in front of the Newhouse Communications Center. Such vehicles, however, may be parked in any of the lots near the Center, provided they do not take up space set aside for cars.

After 6:30 p.m. every day students may use peripheral parking areas A-5, A-6, B-1, and B-4.

Bicycles can be used anywhere on campus provided the riders use common sense in their operation, park them neatly out of the way and do not encroach on automobile parking spaces.

After 12:30 p.m. on football Saturdays, Field House parking is reserved for those attending football games who pay fifty cents for parking and get a free round trip bus ride to the campus.

Any student who must park near the campus on such afternoons because, for instance, he wishes to go to the library, is urged to park on peripheral lots such as A-5, behind the Newhouse Center, or A-6, in the old University Hospital area.

Those wno must work on the main campus on football Saturdays should request a special vehicle pass. The request, in writing, should be made to Security at least five days before the game.

The committee urged students and others who have not registered their cars to do so at the Security Office near Sims Hall. Campus security police said lack of vehicle identification makes it impossible for them to distinguish between cars which properly belong in University-controlled areas and those which do not.

Violators of parking regulations risk a fine of $3 plus a towing charge of at least $10.30, and additional charges for each day the car is left unclaimed at a private garage. The fines go up to $5 and $10 respectively for second and third offenses.

City police have also issued a warning to out-of-state drivers who must pay parking fines or face arrest. More than a dozen university students were arrested during finals week last spring.

Home Economics course becomes psychedelic

The room was dimly lit and the unfamiliar classroom made me more than slightly uneasy. As a freshman, I was startled to be greeted by a woman in a grass skirt and flowers as I entered class. I hurriedly asked if this was my Home Economics room, and she answered yes, grinning broadly. Then, it HAPPENED!

Snatches of psychedelic music filled the room; blinking lights and film clips surrounded me on five sides. Sinking more deeply into my seat, an unsettled feeling I always associate with oncoming panic began to tie my stomach into knots. A sudden backfire of what sounded like, but just couldn't be, a motorcycle came from just outside the door, and a blonde woman in flourescent body paint and black and white Indian dress came riding in. As I gaped in open-mouthed aew, she began handing out bubble-gum.

Ominously, a recorded voice boomed: "Hello, I'm Mrs. Sarah Short, your teacher."

A visitor might jump to the conclusion that he was in a psychedelic night club. Instead, he would have wandered into the opening lectures of Home Economics courses in nutrition and foods.

For the second year Mrs. Short introduced these subjects to her Home Economics and School of Nursing students by means of techniques which are becoming increasingly familiar to the eyes and ears of the student generation.

The lectures will be given at noon and 1 p.m. in electronic classroom A2 at the School of Journalism building. In the darkened hall, different psychedelic films will be shown simultaneously on three different walls; eleven projectors will beam slides to the ceiling and two overhead projectors will flash moire patterns. There will be strobe lights, and ultraviolet light to pick up the fluorescent colors on posters and on the lecturer's four changes of costume. This visual assault will be accompanied by electronic noises and music while the instructor's taped lecture and bits of commercials are broadcast over the loudspeaker.

The general effect will be one of total exposure to Mrs. Short's message. And there will be surprises.

'Make political impact'

Voter registration information is being distributed to residents of Syracuse's low-income and vestibule neighborhoods throughout the month of September. Many people in these areas are newcomers to the city; others have moved and do not know how or where to register or reregister at their local polling places Oct. 2-5.

"There is a tremendous need for volunteers to assist in this door-to-door canvass," states Jane L. Jamman, coordinator of the effort. Anyone interested in helping may call 469-5066 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

"Although many of us are disillusioned by the national political picture, we can make a real impact on local and state politics by registering voters and participating in local committees," continues Miss Hamman, a 10th Ward committee woman

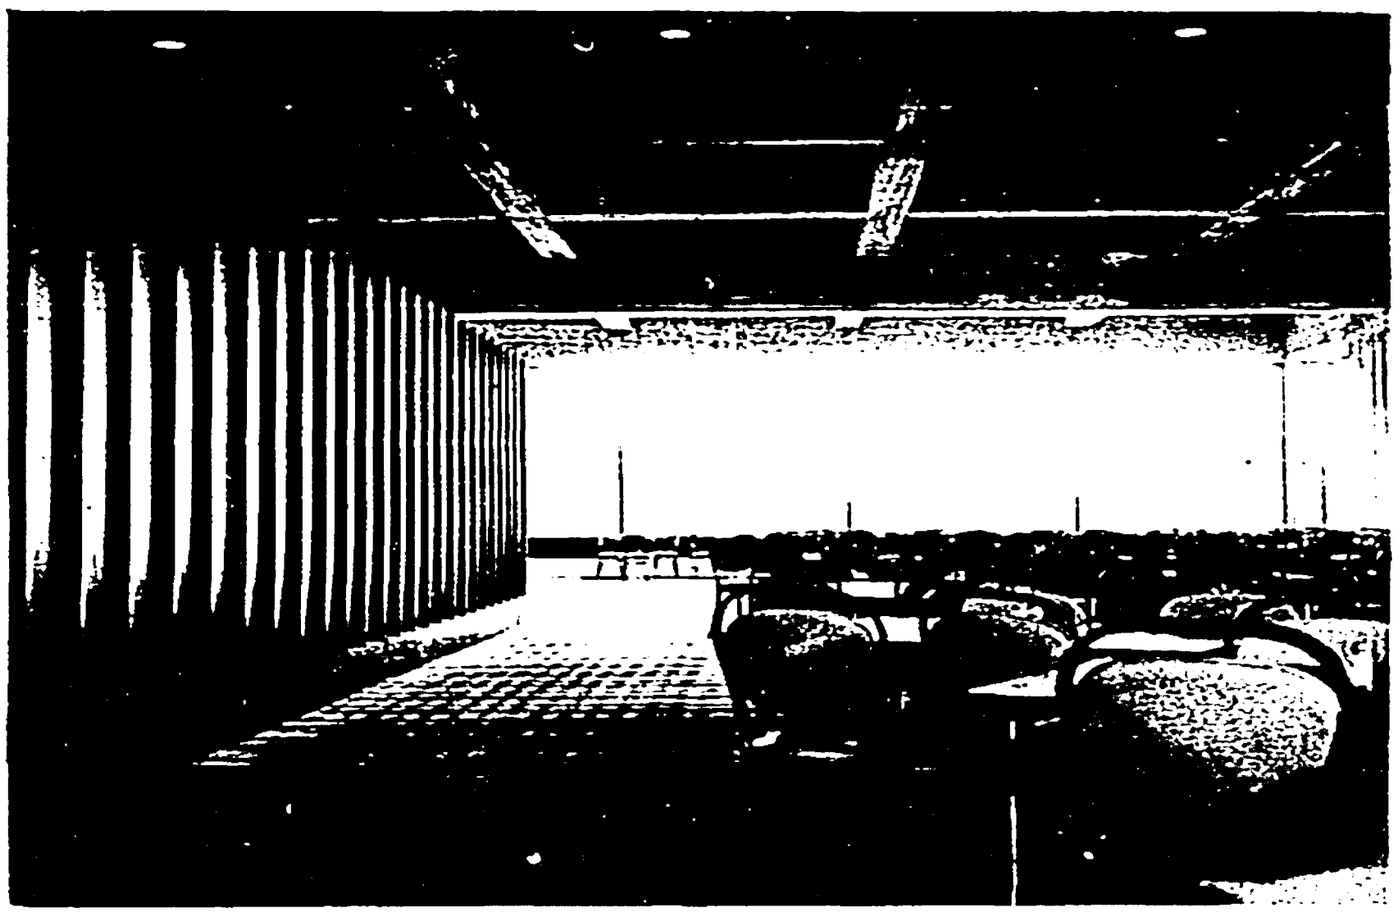
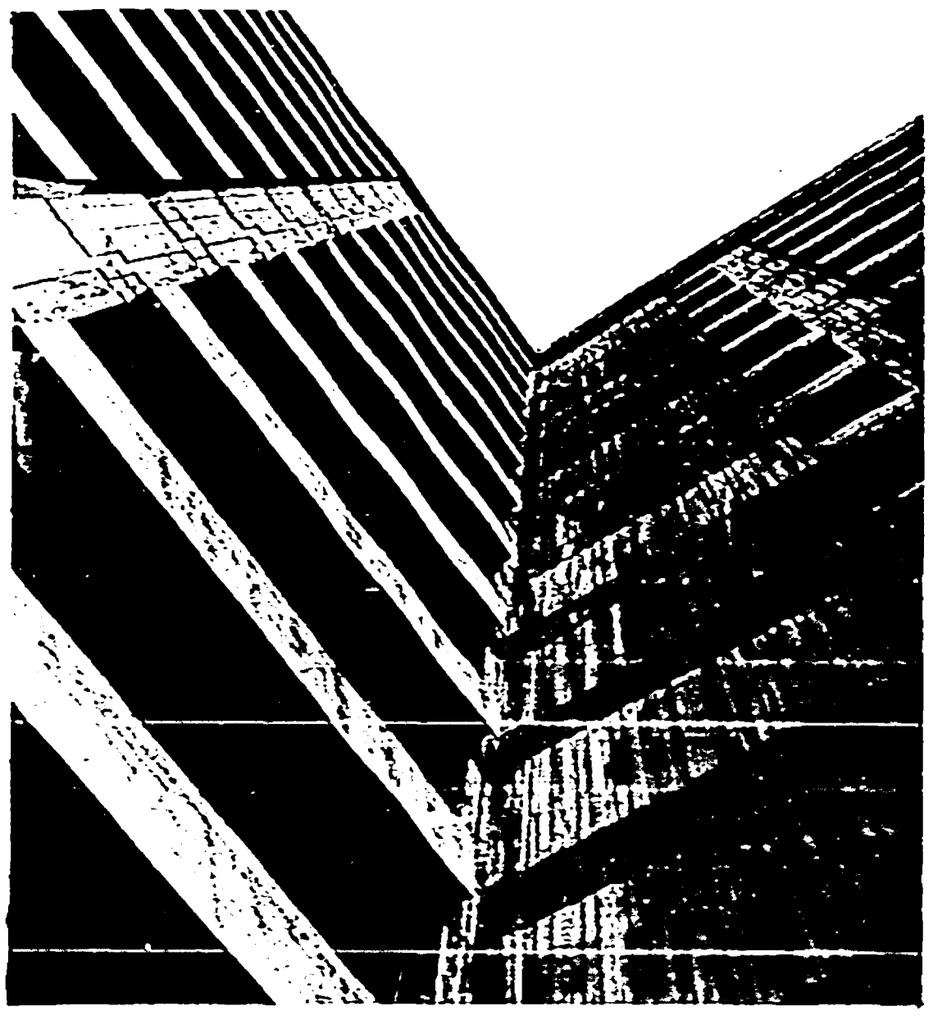
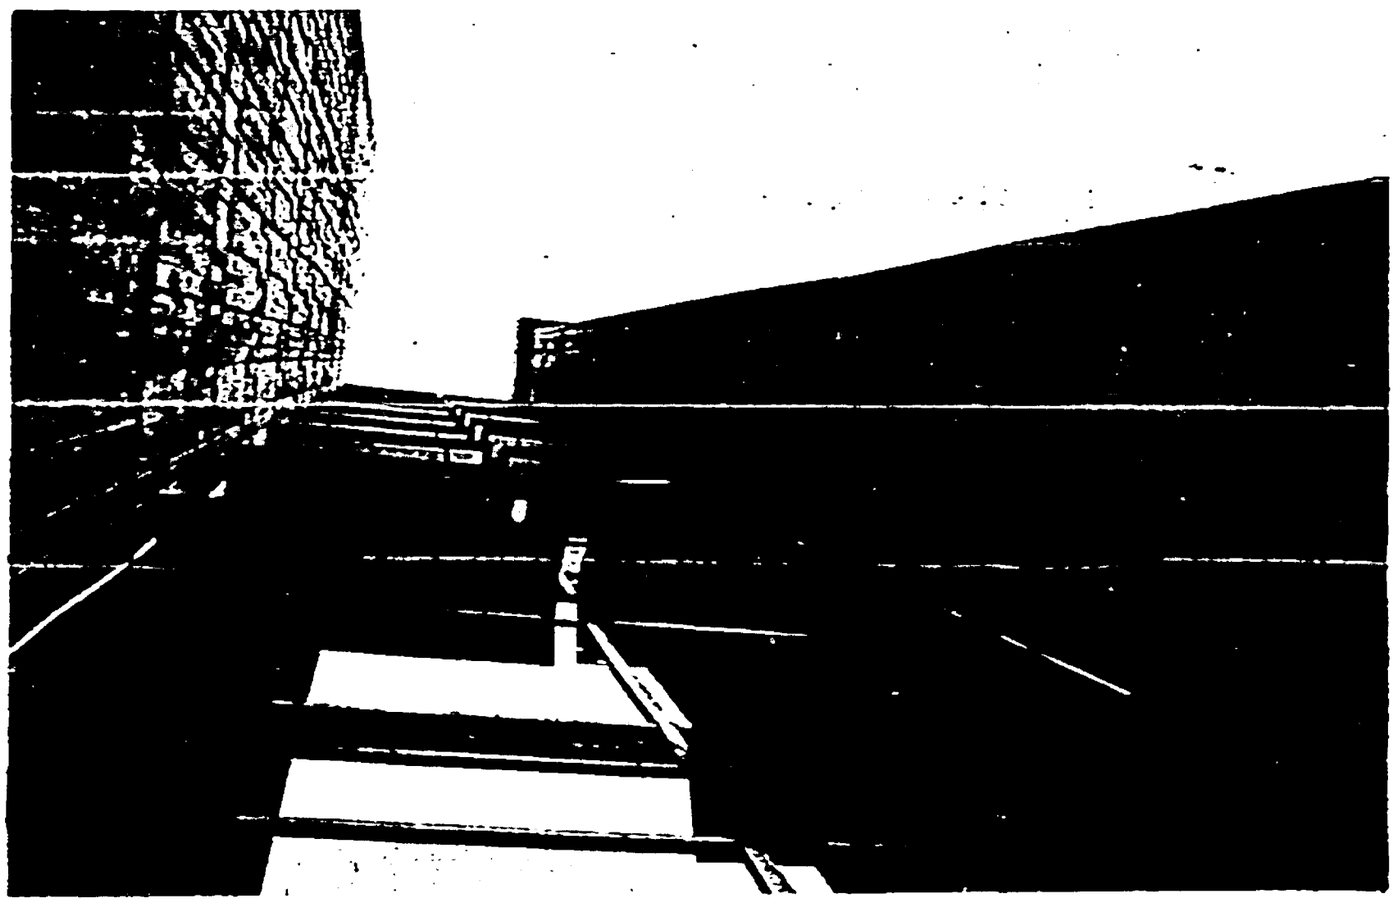
St. Mary's complex: an architect's view





Problems befell construction of the St. Mary's dormitory complex this fall, but, with no little ingenuity, assigned students moved in early last week.



The interior of the complex, which is considered "operational," is expected to be completed within four weeks, but landscaping, roads and walks should take only two to three weeks. Completion of the entire site work, however, may take until November.

Students have reportedly been "extremely tolerant" of the situation. Parents were disappointed at first sight of the complex, but, according to Peg Johnston, co-ordinator of the steering committee to organize the dorm government, were delighted when they saw the rooms.

FRESHMEN! THINKING ABOUT THE SERVICE? BECOME AN OFFICER AND A LEADER WITH AIR FORCE ROTC!

Dear Incoming Freshman

In the months ahead, various opportunities and activities at Syracuse University will be presented to you, requiring important decisions on your part. I would like to bring one of these activities to your attention--Air Force ROTC.

I am a sophomore cadet in this voluntary four year program, which leads to a commission as an Air Force officer. In my case, I have decided that I want to be a Navigator in the Air Force. It took a while for me to make up my mind about flying, actually, because there are many other areas in the Air Force that I was also interested in.

One thing I think you really ought to look into is the financial assistance grants given by the Air Force. I have just received one of these. It covers full tuition, books, lab and student fees; and provides a $50 monthly non-taxable allowance. Almost 5,500 of these grants will soon be available, and you might be eligible to compete for one, to be awarded beginning with your sophomore year. I figure this grant will pay for over $2,500 of my S.U. costs annually between now and graduation.

I have really enjoyed my participation in AFROTC, and have put a lot into it. As you can see in the photo above, I was honored by an award from the Professor of Aerospace Studies for being selected the outstanding sophomore class cadet, academically and militarily.

I believe this program has a lot to offer you as an individual. The curriculum is comprehensive and includes practice in leadership, in addition to academics. The skills learned here are applicable not only to the Air Force, but everyday life as well.

Even if you are undecided, I recommend that you register for Aerospace Studies and find out about Air Force ROTC first hand. This is what I did two years ago and found it to be a stimulating and challenging program with high standards and esprit de corps. I hope that you will have the same experience.

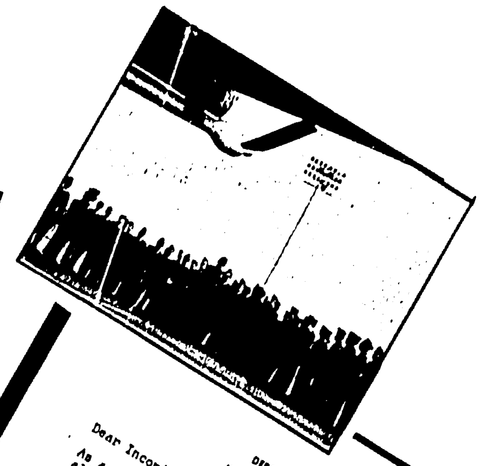
Dear Freshman:

8 June 1968

As you all know, you are about to embark on an entirely new adventure, and that will include the old "what's your major going to be?" question to make to you, but at this early stage of your stay at Syracuse, possibly can out of everything you



With this in mind, and as a graduate representative, I would like to make you aware of opportunities available to you at Syracuse University for men the AFROTC program at Syracuse University was a means to an end of a beginning as I got my private pilot's license in Texas. In four short months I got training here in Texas, and right now I am in pilot will receive my wings and commission as a 2nd Lt. I will officer at supersonic speeds, my T-38 jet trainer, a one half million dollar machine!

I can honestly say to you that if you want a challenge like you have never before experienced, you are satisfied with nothing less than performance, and if you are willing to devote all your energies to the finest, most exacting profession in the world, pursuit for AFROTC graduates, take your commission and join our flying fraternity. Don't get discouraged by little things along the way,...I did and I am very glad now that I stayed with the program.

If there are any questions you would like answered or any answers you are questioning, please don't hesitate to drop me a line at this address: 500 Fillmore Apt. #7 Wichita Falls Texas 76301.

Dear Incoming Freshman

As a member of the class preceding yours, I clearly remember all the thoughts and questions about S.U. which are now running through your minds.

Last summer, when I looked over the Freshman courses, I picked Air Force ROTC. I did this because I thought might like to serve my military obligation after college as an Air Force officer.

I guessed that the program would be a lot of marching, etc., but I didn't know there for an hour a week, but there's a lot more. I didn't know about Last September, the new Freshmen went for ride in an Air Force aircraft, over the city campus, and surrounding Syracuse area.

Well, the drill is there, but there's a lot more to it. Since then, I've also gone on flights to the Air Force Museum at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, Val and I had a bus ride to Command headquarters, at Andrews AFB, Md., where we saw fighters, bombers, transports, and a research and development center, Edwards AFB, Calif., Cape Kennedy, and that I just couldn't go on because of studies. Next year flights considering flights to other great spots.

Needless to say, I got pretty interested in AFROTC. I am on our precision drill team and worked hard in class academics, which are much broader than I had imagined. The year was highlighted for me offensive and defensive forces. The year and studies of U.S. in May, though, when I received a medal for outstanding Freshman achievement.

As to my future with the Air Force, I am undecided whether to be an engineer or pilot. I may even change my major in engineering to something else. At any rate, I've checked, and there are blue suit jobs in engineering. I would be interested in regardless of whether I stay in for four years or decide to make it a career.

I think you should look carefully at AFROTC. There's more here than just a class. Good luck with all your other decisions, and I hope we'll see you in the corps this fall.

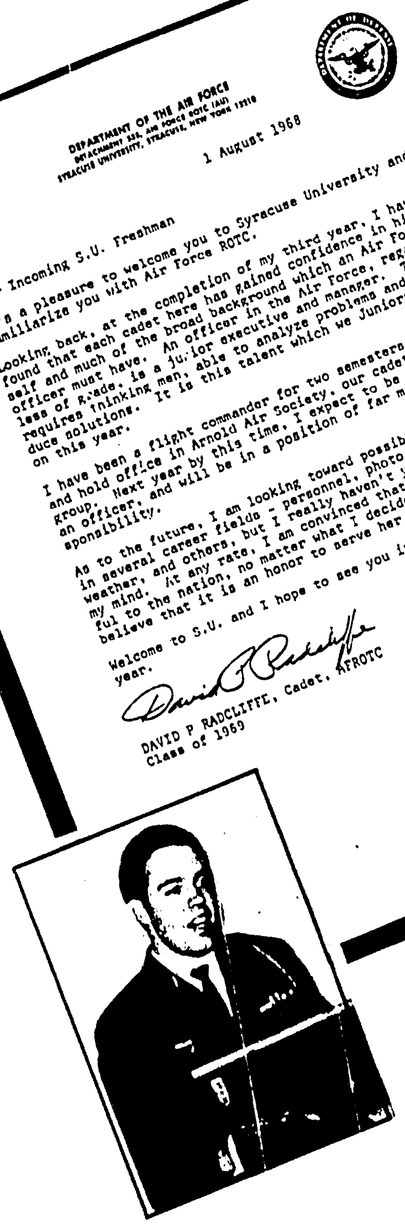
Dear Incoming S.U. Freshman

It's a pleasure to welcome you to Syracuse University and familiarize you with Air Force ROTC.



Looking back, at the completion of my third year, I have found that each cadet here has gained confidence in himself and much of the broad background which an Air Force officer must have. An officer in the Air Force, regardless of grade, is a junior executive and manager. This requires thinking men, able to analyze problems and produce solutions. It is this talent which we Juniors worked on this year.

I have been a flight commander for two semesters at S.U., and hold office in Arnold Air Society, our cadet honorary group. Next year by this time, I expect to be commissioned an officer, and will be in a position of far more responsibility.

As to the future, I am looking toward possible service in several career fields - personnel, photo intelligence, weather, and others, but I really haven't yet made up my mind. At any rate, I am convinced that I will be useful to the nation, no matter what I decide to do, and believe that it is an honor to serve her as an officer.

Welcome to S.U. and I hope to see you in the corps next year.

Hi Frosh!

I'd like to introduce you to another part of Air Force ROTC, a very essential part, we feel - the girls! Those of us who share the dedication that Air Force cadets have for our country have formed an organization we call Angel Flight to help make life a little easier and more fun...for you and for us!

Angel Flight is both a service and a social organization designed to promote interest in the Air Force. We honors at commissioning ceremonies, the annual vice president's and chancellor's reviews, Arnold Air Society rush, and serve coffee and doughnuts to hungry cadets prior to early morning aircraft trips.

We also offer conversation, and this fall you will see us attending your classes to keep an eye on you. We'll be there to watch you drill, and I'm sure we'll be able to get together at any of the socials we have each year with the corps. Activities include picnics, car rallies, TGIF's, the military ball, and car washes (which never have been more fun than when we have the help of several handsome young men!)

You will probably meet us for the first time at registration when you see us in our Angel uniforms at the Air Force ROTC desk. We're looking forward to meeting each of you next month. See you then!

Sincerely

Dear Incoming Freshman

As a senior at Syracuse University I would like to tell you about the advantages of AFROTC and what they have meant to me.

AFROTC is a voluntary program which may be dropped at any time, without obligation, during the first two years. If you perform creditably and have an above average scholastic record, you may be extended the invitation to complete the final two years and receive an Air Force commission.

AFROTC has offered me the opportunity to develop leadership and communicative skills, opportunity to handle responsible corps positions, and association with other college men interested in similar goals. There are many social events throughout the year, including the annual military ball, one of our campus highlights. There is also an honorary military society open to those cadets of above average ability and achievement.

In addition, if you want to be an Air Force pilot as I want to be, you will be interested in basic flying training, which is taken in your senior year, and which I have now completed.

Through the educational delay program, following graduation, it is also possible to work for an advanced degree before entering active duty as an officer.

As you can see, there are a great many opportunities available to an AFROTC cadet, and I think you will be interested in joining our program. Best wishes for a successful year at Syracuse.

This list will include items which appeared in print between July 1, 1967 and June 30, 1968, as well as artistic works which were exhibited or presented during the same period. Any member of the SU faculty or staff who would like to include items in this bibliography and who has not received forms on which to report them should call the Archives, ext. 3335.

UPPERCLASS SORORITY RUSH convocation will take place at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, Sept. 18 in the Alumni Lounge of the Women's Building. Registration for rush will take place after the convocation. Please bring the $3 rush fee. Questions, call Joanne Wilkof, ext. 2630.

ACADEMIC COMMUNICATION Corps members are asked to come by the office, Room 9, Building 24, or call ext. 3676 to make note of their campus address and phone for this semester. Coffee hours will start on Thursday, Sept. 19 at 3:30 p.m. Come and bring a friend.

New voters

Is this the first year you will be eligible to vote? Or is this the first time you've been away from home at election time?

If you want to find out how you can vote in the elections this year, come to Maxwell Auditorium at 7 p.m. Wednesday and learn how to get an absentee ballot so you can cast your ballot for the candidate of your choice in November.

Stops apathy

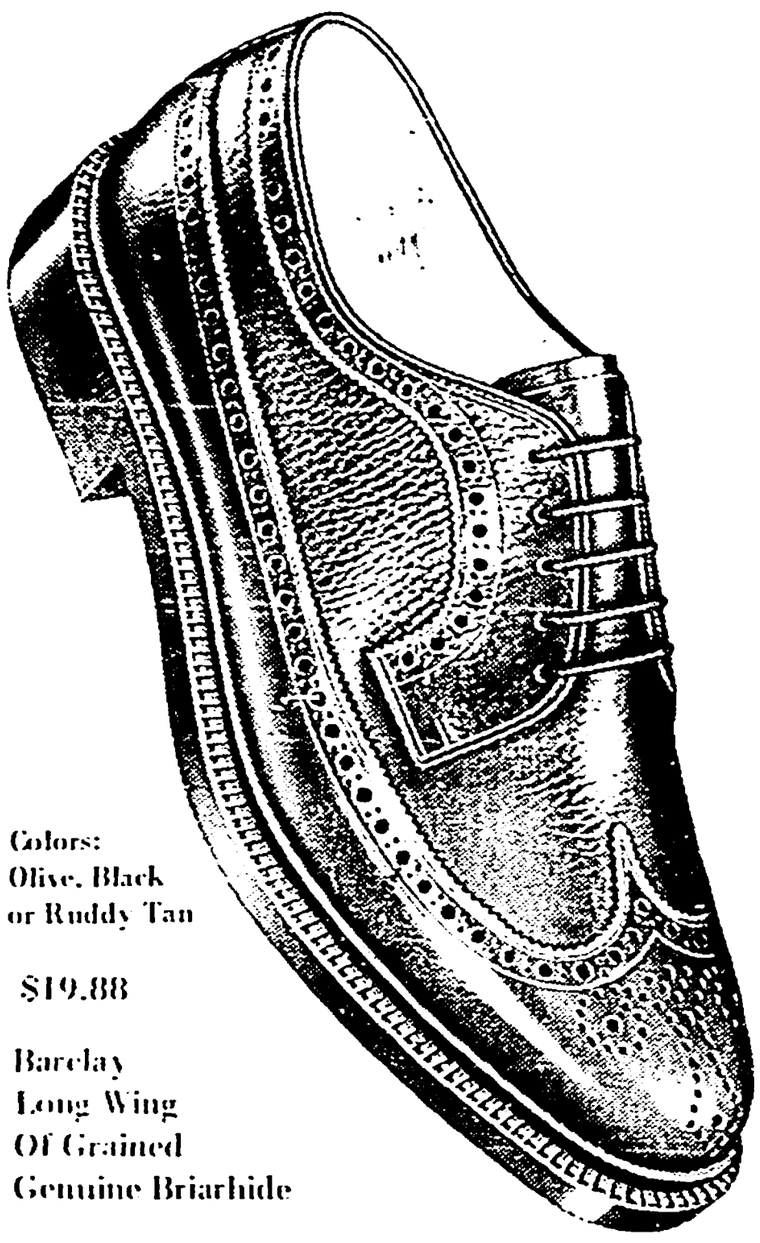
Ifshin explains OPT philosophy: intensive dialogue leads to action

Speaking to Shaw residents Monday night, NSA co-ordinator David Ifshin explained the philosophy behind the Organization for Positive Thought.

"The era of the non-hero, the Holden Caulfield, is dead," remarked Ifshin. "Non-involvement has led us nowhere." OPT uses this theory as a starting point for its program of intensive dialogue.

According to Ifshin, OPT has no particular issues to discuss. Discussion groups will be stimulated in order to bring issues to the fore, not to discuss preconceived issues and conclusions.

Student dialogues, created through discussion groups, will, according to Ifshin, create a student movement and "stop the idea that the student body is apathetic." Ifshin concluded, "Out of dialogue, action is inevitable."



OPT is not an organization, it's an idea. For those interested in "a true learning experience through sharing in student dialogues," OPT is having a meeting at 7 p.m. tonight at Sigma Nu, 801 Walnut Ave.

SU Student an eye-witness to Czechoslovakia take-over

By MIKE GREENSTEIN

At Syracuse University, Nelson "Chip" Leidner is an international relations major in the Maxwell School, but for three days in August he got some on the spot training that few professional diplomats ever receive. Leidner was in the city of Prague when the Russian forces invaded Czechoslovakia.

"On the train from Kiev," Leidner recalls, "we saw tanks massing at the frontier. They were just parked along the country roads, with the drivers sitting on their backs, shooting the bull. We figured they were on maneuvers."

It took Leidner and the 19 other members of his National Student Association sponsored tour until four the next morning to learn the truth. At that time troop transport planes started buzzing over the city, at the rate of "one about every 30 seconds." Then their guide, a 21-year-old Czech girl, told them that she had heard of the invasion over Radio Prague.

The onslaught came as a complete surprise to everyone in the city. "The only suspicion we had," said the sandy-haired junior, "was an Austrian newsman who came up to some girls in our group in the Old Town the night before, knowing we had just arrived from Russia. He wanted to find out if we had seen any Russians."

The Americans were advised by their embassy to sit tight until the situation cleared up somewhat, so Leidner was able to roam the streets during the first two days of the occupation. "The only restriction of movement imposed by the Russians was the encirclement of the Hapsburg Castle, the seat of the Czech government," Leidner, said. "They checked people moving across the bridges, but that's about all."

First the Russians controlled the city with tanks, then with armored cars and infantry. They were passive for the most part, ignoring the belligerent Czech students as long as possible. When the cinder blocks became Molotv cocktails, however, they fired. "I saw several bloody people, but no deaths myself," Leidner reported. "There were other reports of several that we heard about." Leidner, who is a brother of Psi Upsilon, was himself fired upon while among a group of students. The bullets flew far enough over his head to do no damage.

The students tried to cause as much trouble as they could under the circumstances. The Russians had quarranteened gasoline and had disarmed the small Czech army, but the students used insults and Molotov cocktails to ward off their foe.

"The Russian soldiers were naive," Leidner said. "Most of them were young, and they didn't even know they were in Czechoslovakia, let alone Prague. They said they thought that they were on extended maneuvers for the Warsaw Pact, and that they were just following military orders."

Leidner was shocked by some of the sights he saw in the enchanting old city on the Moldau River. "There were 12 anti-aircraft guns in the Old Town Square, which was a complete farce," he pointed out. "The Russians strafed the National Museum with machine guns and burned several other buildings."

The native of Huntingdon Valley, Pa. and the rest of his tour were evacuated by train to Nuremburg on the third day of occupation. "The Russians permitted it, and all the embassies advised it," he said. "Two days later, it was required."

He was greatly impressed with the spirit and ingenuity of the Czech people. He wore a red, white and blue ribbon, which was the students' symbol of defiance. The Czechs knew he was an American, and were glad he was going back to relate their story to the West

"The Russians were trying to scare the Czechs, but they underestimated them. It encouraged unity and patriotism. They idolized Dubcek and Svoboda. the Russians could not have afforded to kill them."

He also left with an admiration of the Czechs. "They are for socialism, but not Soviet dominence," he observed.

Grad students organize; meeting Sept. 30

By MARTY BLOCK

Graduate students have long been alienated from the governing processes of Syracuse University. Separated among themselves, they have never had a representative body.

This past summer, a group of students began to promote such an organization. Their efforts have achieved a drafted constitution, and, for the first time, the graduate students of Syracuse University should have their say in issues vitally important to them. The complete success of the organization, known as the Graduate Student Organization, depends, however, upon the cooperation and interest of all graduate students.

Important issues in which the G.S.O. wants a voice include graduate student housing, married student housing and the selection of a successor to Chancellor Tolley.

The mistreatment of grad students, many of whom have attended Syracuse University for five or six years, is apparent in distribution of football tickets. Grad students may receive their tickets only after the seniors, juniors and sophomores have taken the choice seats. This is a secondary problem, but one of many that point out the need for G.S.O., say its creators.

As one of the founders of the G. S. O., Miss Joan Howard, put it, there are "over eight thousand graduate students in limbo, neither students nor faculty." These 8,000 students need a place in our university governing system. The Graduate Student Organization, with the support of these grad students, can fulfill this need.

The first meeting of the G.S.O. will be held at 8 p.m. on Sept. 30 in Newhouse, Room 1-A. Election of representatives will be held by each degree granting program prior to that time. No more than 10 at large representatives, bearing petitions with fifty or more signatures, will also be chosen. For further information please contact Miss Howard in the Anthropology Dept. (ext. 2200) or Dwight Emerson in the Civil Engineering Dept. (ext. 2311 or 2312).

Chancellor Tolley receives Lemoyne leadership medal

WILLIAM P. TOLLEY

William P. Tolley, chancellor of SU, will be presented a newly created award from LeMoyne College for outstanding achievement.

The Simon LeMoyne Medal, to be received by Tolley at the LeMoyne's third annual Founder's Day dinner Oct. 14, is named for the Jesuit priest and educator who was the first person to visit the area on which Syracuse later grew and who discovered the salt springs which spurred the growth of the city.

The medal, according to a college spokesman, is meant "to pay tribute to outstanding leadership, whether on the local or national level, that has served to the benefit of the community.

Chancellor Tolley, whose tenure at SU is soon to end, has guided the construction of 35 buildings on campus and helped increase the university's physical assets from $16 million to $147 million.

"We know of no person more worthy or our award, the Very Rev. William L. Reilly, S.J. LeMoyne president said.

Why would Bic torment this dazzling beauty?

Only Bic would dare to torment a beauty like this. Not the girl... the pen she's holding. It's the new luxury model Bic Clic...designed for scholarship athletes, lucky card players and other rich campus socialites who can afford the expensive 49-cent price.

But don't let those delicate good looks fool you. Despite horrible punishment by mad scientists, the elegant Bic Clic still wrote first time, every time.

Everything you want in a fine pen, you'll find in the new Bic Clic. It's retractable. Refillable. Comes in 8 barrel colors. And like all Bic pens, writes first time, every time...no matter what devilish abuse sadistic students devise for it.

'Trying out our teeth'

2 Latin Americans view student activism

By RONA KAVEE

If recent student activism has stirred college administrators into near panic, there is at least one group on the Syracuse University campus that seems to regard it as a matter of course. At least two Latin American students find American activism a natural counterpart of youthful unrest they have witnessed at home.

Serge Mihailitchenko, an Argentine student in the college of Engineering, finds activism in his own country more overpowering than it is here.

"Often the restlessness cannot be controlled," he said. "In most movements the entire university will participate--not just small active groups." Both Mihailitchenko and Kika Guedes, a student from Paraguay, agree that minority groups are responsible for most activism on American campuses.

Also, both agree that demonstrations are a valid way for students to express their desires to administrators.

"Student government is not enough," Miss Guedes said. She believes that quiet demonstrations are the most effective. "It is not necessary to do any violence," she said. "We know what we are doing-- we are rational."

Mihailitchenko holds that "every complaint is a kind of guide for an administration. It is a kind of guide for an administration. It is a constant voice and an important one." While he believes professors here have an interest in students' wishes, he also sees a tendency for them to remain aloof from the more extreme opinions students might express.

Student activity in Argentina often manifests itself in anti-government demonstrations since all universities are maintained by the state.

Mihailitchenko sees anti-government activities both here and in his native country as the same symptom. "We are trying out our teeth," he said, "and the nearest thing is government."

Contributions

Alumni and friends of Syracuse University contributed $1,556,835 to the school's Annual Giving Program during the past year, according to J. Robert Tomlinson, national chairman of the giving program and a 1941 graduate of Syracuse.

The amount compares with last year's contribution of $1,425,807. There were 20,636 contributors this year compared with 20,007 last year, Tomlinson said.

Gifts came from alumni, friends, corporations, foundations, parents of students and individual organizations.

Dean selection

Professor Donald E. Kibbey, Chairman of the Liberal Arts College Committee on the selection of a Dean, has announced that the Committee will hold open hearings on Friday, Sept. 27.

The hearings will be held in 204 Physics Bldg. from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m. Those who wish to testify may call Miss Marcia Paige on extension 2375 to arrange for a specific time. It is hoped that individual presentations can be restricted to 10-15 minutes. The Committee would appreciate brief written presentations which can be amplified.

The purpose of the hearings is to provide the occasion for undergraduates, graduate students, and faculty of the College to present their views on the qualifications of the office or to present specific nominations from inside or outside the University.

The Committee was established by the faculty of the College of Liberal Arts last spring. It has the responsibility of proposing candidates for the Deanship. All deans and directors are appointed by the Board of Trustees.

Vibrant organization

UU slates coffee hours to entire interested students

By RICHARD L. KORN

Calling all Frosh and transfer students: Want to get in on a vibrant and spirited organization right away?

Now's your chance to see what University Union is all about. UU, if you don't know already, is an organization devoted entirely to making life at Syracuse University a little more livable for everyone.

Ways in which this is achieved include Friday night flicks (free, even), weekends like the one coming up soon, and regular entertainment and discussion groups such as the Place and Bull Sessions.

One of UU's maxims is, "UU is you." In keeping with that maxim, Union is throwing open its doors to all people who feel they may be interested in joining up in a "series of informal coffees," according to UU Vice-Chairman Mary Franciosi.

"This will be a great chance for newcomers to the University family to see what University Union is all about," said Miss Franciosi recently. The coffees will be held Wednesday and Thursday (September 18 and 19) of this week according to the following schedule:

Sept. 18: 7-9 P.M. Shaw Dorm (Ostrom Lounge)
8-10 P.M. Haven Penthouse
Sept. 19: 7-9 P.M.
Day Hall Lounge
8 - 10 P.M. Lawrinson Penthouse

Jerry Tatarian, Chairman of UU, and several board chairmen will speak at each coffee. After the talks the chairmen will be available for questions by those attending.

"Also, any persons interested should keep in mind that four board positions for the 1968-69 term are open," according to Miss Franciosi. Those positions are Treasurer of the Policy Board, Treasurer of the Development Board; Development Board Director and UU News Bureau Director.

Prof. cited

Arlon T. Adams, associate professor of electrical engineering, has been cited by the Institute of Electrical and Electronics for one of the 12 best papers of the year. Adams' award-winning paper, "Flush Mounted Rectangular Cavity Slot Antennas--Theory and Design," was published in "Transactions," the Institute's journal.

Students ID's

ID PICTURES New Students on campus who did not have their ID pictures taken last week may do so this week by making an appointment with the Registrar's Office, 103 Steele Hall or calling ext. 2430. Pictures will be taken during the hours of 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. in 103 Steele Hall. You will need your tuition receipt and your social security number.

Panhel rush

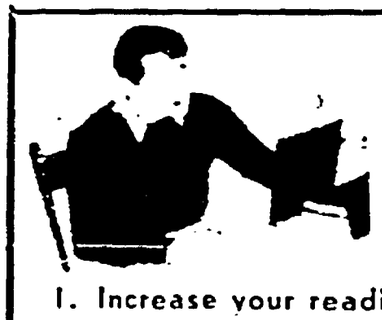
Upperclass and transfer women who wish to rush sororities this fall can find out dates and times tonight at 7 in the Alumni Lounge of the Women's Building.

Members of Panhellenic will explain rushing eligibility, which houses are open for upperclass rush and rush rules at the convocation.

Girls who wish to register for rush may do so after the convocation. The $3 fee covers registration and a copy of the Panhel handbook. Registration will also take place from 1-4 p.m. Thursday and Friday in Room 310 of the Women's Building.

Students, faculty offer psychology

By NANCY SARICH



Institute for Community Psychology (ICP), a new program in the Syracuse area, incorporates the psychological resources of SU students and faculty to benefit the community.

ICP offers an opportunity for SU students to become involved in improving the community. The program can provide experience and fulfillment for social science students with professions in mind.

Headed by Dr. Willard Cohen, ICP offers academic, social and theraputic aid to residents of the Syracuse area. Programs are now aiding children at the grammar school level, but will soon encompass higher grades.

During the summer, Father Woolever, the founder, conducted a program in the Vincent House. Supported by Catholic charity, group activities were provided for neighborhood school children.

The first ICP meeting is scheduled for Friday, Sept. 20, at 3 p.m. at 804 University Ave. in room 204. Anyone interested in serving the community is invited to attend.

Ben, Duff tell woes at press luncheon

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

The way the two coaches are talking, Saturday's opener between Syracuse and Michigan State may be the first time on record that a football game has produced two losers.

SU's Ben Schwartzwalder, speaking in person, and the Spartans' Duffy Daugherty, via telephone hookup from East Lansing, both complained of uncertainty and inexperience to the weekly press gathering at the Hotel Syracuse yesterday.

"The only thing we're sure of is our first play," said Schwartzwalder. He then qualified that statement, pointing out that field position would have a lot to do with the selection.

Daugherty, meanwhile, pointed out that he has only one starter who was a first stringer for the entire '67 season. "I know less about this team than any other I've had in the past 10 years," moaned the Orange alumnus.

Duffy's lone veteran is senior captain Allen Brenner, an All-America candidate at split end. Brenner will double this year as a starting safetyman. "He's a good all around athlete," said his coach, "and a fine defensive back." Brenner should have the smarts necessary to learn two positions, if his 3.89 accum is any indication.

Daugherty also praised Tom Love, who has moved past Earl Anderson and the injured LaMarr Thomas into the starting halfback slot. "He's an excellent prospect," said Duffy. "He's a strong runner, but with only average speed."

Other than these two, however, Daugherty claimed to be in trouble. "We are starting the season with fewer established players than ever before," he said. "Our success depends on how our new players adjust to college football."

Schwartzwalder revealed that the chances were "about 60-40" that Paul Paolisso, the unproven junior, will start the game at quarterback over the slightly more experienced Rich Panczyszyn. He indicated that both would see plenty of action, noting that he hoped that Daugherty would leave a few men off the line of scrimmage when Panz was in the lineup.

Ben's vaunted defense may be shallow in linebacking aginst the Staters. Jerry Ruccio, who had pushed his way into a starting position, is now listed as a doubtful performer on Saturday because of injuries suffered over the weekend. The coach hopes that Jack Protz, who has missed contact drills for two weeks because of an ankle twist, will be ready for the game. If not, junior Bob Rust will move in to the "Mike" or middle linebacking position. Since soph linebacker Bob Schoonover is also temporarily grounded, Ben quipped that "If Jackowenko grows any more in stature, he can be one of our linebackers." Jackowenko, the frail placekicker, is unlikely to be pressed into service.

Schwartzwalder mentioned the possibility of using defensive back Tony Kyasky as a tailback in a doublewing setup on "third and 15 situations, which we should see a lot of." Kyasky worked briefly with the offense in last Saturday's scrimmage.

When Athletic Director Jim Decker first put the call through to Daugherty, the Spartan coach was not in his office. "I hope he stays consistent," said Ben, "and doesn't come Saturday, either."

Cautious optimism

Orange face tough slate of foes

By LARRY CENTER

The 1968 Syracuse football campaign, highlighted by games with Michigan State, U.C.L.A. and Penn State, will get under way Saturday when the Orangemen invade East Lansing to play the Spartans in a regionally televised game.

The home season will open against Maryland Sept. 28. The Terps were 0-9 last year, but only lost to Syracuse by 7-3. The return of quarterback Alan Pastrana, who missed all of 1967, will greatly bolster the attack. Back with Pastrana are four veteran runners and an experienced defense.

U.C.L.A. starts the year having lost 13 to 22 starters, including Heisman Trophy winner Gary Beban. Bill Bolden, who hit on a 96-yard touchdown pass while Syracuse was upsetting the Uclans last year, succeeds Beban at the helm. He can hand off to halfback Greg Jones (667 yards at 6 yds. a carry) or fullback Rick Purdy (620 at 5.28). He can also fire the bomb to speedsters Ron Copeland, Hal Busby (9.4) or George Farmer (9.8). The defense is still great and there is always Zenon Andrusyshyn for field goals.

Pittsburg comes in for the homecoming game Oct. 12 and the Panthers, says Playboy, "will be one of the most dramatically improved teams in the country." Coach Dave Hart has 24 lettermen returning, plus perhaps the best group of sophomores in Pitt history. Hart himself says, "We had our best spring in three years. We simply have more football players, more size, better speed and more depth." Dennis Ferris, a blue-chip runner out last year, returns to add offensive strength.

Syracuse managed to beat California last year on a score by Larry Csonka in the final minutes, and can look forward to another tough game this season. Cal has 17 starters among 34 returning lettermen. Offensive hopes ride mainly with junior quarterback Randy Humphries and speedy tailback Paul Williams, who had a good day here last year.

Holy Cross was 5-5 last season, and Coach Tom Boisture says, "We have lettermen back at most every position, but we must get immediate help from last year's frosh team." The backfield returns intact, led by quarterback Phil O'Neil, who threw for 1,378 yards and 10 touchdowns.

William and Mary is here Parents Weekend, Nov. 9. The Tribe faces a tough year after graduation claimed seven three-year starters. The offensive and defensive lines are still strong. End Jim Cavanaugh caught 47 last year.

With 24 returning lettermen, including 12 starters, Navy coach Bill Elias will come in with a wide- open attack, but he must find suitable replacements for quarterback John Cartwright and end Rob Taylor. A strong running game featuring Jeri Balsey and Tom Daley, and a veteran line will help the attack. Tackle Emerson Carr and middle guard Bob Moosally will spearhead the defense.

West Virginia will rely heavily on sophomores, but the combination of their ability and that of 23 returning lettermen could mean a hard game at Morgantown. Quarterbacks Tom Digon and Garland Hudson now have a more experienced offensive line. With Garrett Ford gone, top runners are Gary Thall and Bob Gresham, who averaged 6.8 yards for the frosh. Linebacker and All-America candidate Baker Brown leads a defensive unit that ranked ninth in the country last year.

Arch-rival Penn State faces Syracuse on national television Dec. 7, in a game that could decide the Lambert Trophy and a bowl berth. The Nittany Lions won a close one here last season, 29-20. They have offensive stars like tight end Ted Kwalick, considered a sure All-American, and Bob Campbell and Charlie Pittman, whom Coach Joe Paterno feels are "the best pair of running backs in the country." The defense, although small, is solid and quick.Frank Spaziani, Dennis Onkotz and Jim Kates are all being touted for All-East.

'Experts' unsure about SU offense, but agree on strength of defense

By IRA SILVERMAN

"Great defense. Questionable offense." That seems to be the consensus of opinion throughout the country concerning the 1968 Orange football squad. From LOOK magazine to PLAYBOY to SPORTS ILLUSTRATED. From Holy Cross to Navy to UCLA. All are impressed with the might of the defense, but few regard our offense as more than eleven casual strangers.

LOOK magazine ranks the Orangemen 18th in the country, losing only to Michigan State, UCLA, and Penn State. Keeping up with the times, the magazine that is "bigger than life" states that "Syracuse won't sock it over many goal lines."

SPORTS ILLUSTRATED, considered to be the "bible" for most sports fans, concedes that the "Orange should squeeze out more than enough victories to extend Schwartzwalder's streak of 18 years without a losing season." They do not, however, pick SU in their Top 20, partly because SU is "without a famous runner for the first time in almost a generation." SI singles out soph fullback Al Newton as a possible offensive star, and even figures the Orange may have a passing threat in Paul Paolisso. The defense, they say, should be good, headed by Tony Kyasky and Art Thoms.

PLAYBOY, a magazine only lately considered to have any merit in football prognosticating, figures the Orange to finish with a 6-4 slate. Except for Newton, PLAYBOY feels the offensive replacements are at best questionable. Because of ends Tony Gabriel and John Massis, however, whom PLAYBOY considers to be possibly the best in SU history, Ben may "instruct his quarterbacks to heave passes beyond the line of scrimmage." Tony Kyasky, a PLAYBOY All-America at defensive halfback, and Art Thoms should lead a defense that figures to be even more impregnable than last year.

The UCLA football guide book goes along with the "Great defense-Questionable offense" consensus. SU, the Uclans figure, will be counting greatly on "super-soph Al Newton to do a good job of replacing Larry Csonka." The Bruins conclude that they have "great respect for Syracuse, always one of the biggest, best and most bruising football teams in the country."

Pittsburgh is one team really out to beat SU, if for no other reason than to maintain their series lead over the Orange. The Panthers, who have won 11 of 21 previous meetings, along with Michigan State, are the only teams on Syracuse's 1968 schedule holding series leads.

SU will be Holy Cross's toughest opponent this year, according to the Crusaders preseason book. HC, although high in its praise of All-America hopeful Tony Kyasky, also designates end Lou Gubitosa, tackle Art Thoms and middle guard Gerry Beach as key defensive operators. But when the Orange has the ball, Holy Cross figures that "Junior quarterback Rich Panczyszyn is the man likely to be called upon to hold the offensive backfield together."

The men from Annapolis are also fearful of the SU defense led by Kyasky and Thoms. But, on the other hand, they figure that Schwartzwalder has a "wholesale rebuilding job with his offensive unit." Navy feels that senior John Bulicz is the best of the running backs.

West Virginia and Penn State also agree upon the great overall strength of the SU defense and the confusion surrounding the offense. According to the Mountaineers preview book, the Orange will not be as good as usual, "but not bad enough to prevent Bantam Ben from producing another winning season." Penn State agrees that SU's greatest strength is its defense, and singles out the offensive backfield as the weakspot.

Sidelights

Fresh from their first triumph, the SU Soccer Club will travel to Colgate today for an engagement with the Red Raiders. They will meet Cornell on Saturday in Ithaca in their third game.

The Club holds practice Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at 5 on the Hendricks Field behind Sadler dormitory.

The varsity baseball team will practice Monday at 3:00 p.m. at Lew Carr Field.

Research too often limited

Basis for obtaining grants questioned

By DAVE GRUEN

Increased activity in research work, especially in universities, has become rather commonplace. But for many people, the allocation and operation of research grants remain mysteries.

Dr. John Honey, professor of political science and chairman of the Maxwell Latin America Studies School at Syracuse, also travels to Washington each week to act as advisor for the Health, Education and Welfare Department. His Washington position came as the result of a research project he once conducted for the government.

Honey is well qualified to speak about research grants since, as he puts it, "I've worked for the government as a granter and also received grants from them as a recipient—I've been on both sides of the fence."

Honey, detailing the procedure for obtaining both federal and private grants, went on to say:

"There is no university-wide responsibility for obtaining grants. Grants are usually obtained by individuals or groups of faculty members.

"It is first important to place your ideas in coherent form and then find an institution that will be interested in them.

"In selecting the agency to work for there are two alternatives, governmental or private institutions. In the case of private foundations, roughly 60-75 percent of the initiative comes from the researcher.

"That is, he almost always presents his ideas to the foundations. With federal agencies, it is usually vice-versa. They come to you."

The government makes contracts with universities to undertake certain tasks. They buy these services by contract. Government contracting comes on all levels—federal, state and local.

If the agency has something specific it is looking for, the researcher submits a proposal as to what he would prefer investigated. After reviewing this report the agency will make suggestions and there is much back-and-forth bargaining.

"The worst thing a researcher can do," Honey added, "is to fit himself and his ideas to the institution, instead of going his own way. Conversely, the worse thing a government agency can do is to divert university people from meeting their own goals by not going their own direction."

"It is easier to divert people from their original direction in the social sciences, than it is inthe national sciences, where the limits of activity are more strictly defined."

An ideal situation would give a student limited funds, with no strings attached, to pursue what he wishes. This is rarely the case, however. There is usually a specified project with a timetable to follow.

Universities generally prefer to work on projects subsidized by private foundations. There are several reasons for this:

1. When foundations give grants, they usually extend a free hand to the researcher.

2. There is a limited amount of contract between the foundation and recipient while the project is in progress.

3. The foundation usually grants free rights to publish findings and data.

"Government agencies are usually harder to work for," Honey noted. "They always have a specified money and time limit that must be met but often is not. This always causes problems. Data and people integral to the project are often unavailable to Maxwell Republicans?

Nixon supporters do exist in SU's School of Citizenship

By ETTA FIELEK

"Am I for Nixon? No," said Fred Morgan, an American History instructor, "but he is conducting his campaign very well. His appearance on the Rowan and Martin "Laugh-In" the other night was marvelous."

But Nixon supporters do exist here, as well as Humphrey fans.

Morgan himself supports the coalition candidate of the Black Panthers and white radicals, Eldridge Cleaver, because he believes that "black control of black communities, whether successful or not, is prerequisite to easing racial tensions."

Morgan is unimpressed by Nixon's views and claims Nixon's attitude towards civil liberties "has changed little since the early 1950's and his record on civil rights is not enviable."

Dr. Michael O. Sawyer, professor of citizenship and political science, and often considered a "lone Republican" in Maxwell, thinks Nixon is likely to win but is concentrating his campaign efforts on Jacob Javits' bid for a Senate seat. Prof. Frank Munger of Maxwell offers more fervent support for Nixon.

Prof. Munger's support of Nixon stems from a convergence of several feelings. Aside from Nixon's ability and competence to be president, he is "convinced of the argument that Nixon would be able to end and settle the war in Vietnam more quickly than Humphrey."

Prof. Munger also foresees Nixon's victory as a chance to give the Democratic Party a chance to rebuild and revitalize itself. "The democrats need a defeat now," Prof. Munger said. He does not feel, however, that Johnson's unpopularity will weigh heavily in the eventual outcome.

Charles Umbanhowar, a Maxwell faculty member teaching public affairs and political science, describes his position as "positive but doubtful" for Nixon. "We're all rather unhappy about the choices," he said. The one thing he is sure of is that he could never support Humphrey. Concerning Johnson's place in the election, Umbanhowar feels Johnson's image could project itself into the campaign but not, if Humphrey is elected, into his presidency.

Perhaps the two strongest Humphrey supporters are Dean of the Maxwell School, Stephen Bailey, and Associate Dean Joel Swerdlow. Dean Bailey is a long-time personal friend of the vice-president and, aside from the fact that he's been a democrat all his life, "has great respect for Humphrey's record and ability," Calling Humphrey "the most creative legislator in Congress since 1948" Dean Bailey cited his leadership in Congress for the last 20 years.

Dean Swerdlow said Nixon is an "intelligent, good-intentioned man" but considers him "very, very conservative." Nixon, Dean Swerdlow claims, is fundamentally opposed to what would get America going again.

Dr. David Bennett, an associate professor in public affairs and citizenship, is a Humphrey supporter who believes "Nixon is not addressing the issues America should deal with in the 1960's and 1970's Humphrey, however, as Johnson's heir-apparent, must work to overcome the image of the old administration and build a positive one of his own.

Remnants of the war

'Famous' prefab era comes to end

By JEAN HAVENS
Associate Editor

With shuddering walls and shaking floors, SU's infamous prefabs have nervously survived the years since World War II. After 22 years of service, however, their walls are slowly, surely, and officially tumbling down.

Their story goes back to 1945 and 1946 when the University more than doubled its enrollment with veteran students, and there was an acute need for living quarters.

Once acquired, the temporary housing units, according to a report made by Chancellor William P. Tolley to the board of trustees in 1946, would house 1,039 married veterans and 2,400 single veterans. They would also increase the campus housing facilities to a total of more than 6,000 — exclusive of fraternities, sororities and faculty housing.

According to an 1946 Syracuse "Post Standard" article, the University then "scoured the continent to find living quarters for the boys out of service."

The search led to a government surplus depot in Lathrop, Calif., 22 miles north of San Francisco, where unused aluminum and steel buildings originally intended for the housing of troops in the south Pacific were being sold inexpensively to worthy institutions.

James V. LaTorre, present assistant to SU's vice-president of administration and research, Clark D. Ahlberg, recalled, "All we may have had to pay was the freight, or they may have been bought on a 95 percent discount basis."

The 300 crated buildings arrived on campus in May, 1946, and were temporarily piled in Hendricks field, present site of Lawrinson dormitory. A 20-by 48-foot "basic unit" came in 32 crates and consisted of four rooms, 16- by 12-feet, with a long corridor running the length of the building.

As reported in the "Post Standard," 200 of the buildings were to be set up for student apartments on former farm property in the E. Colvin Street area and the other 100 would "grace the campus area as supplemental parts of various colleges." They would serve not only as dwelling units but also as offices, laboratories, classrooms and storerooms.

The original universities in Paris and Bologna during the early Middle Ages attempted to teach their students all the knowledge that was known to man. This was astrology, geometry, logic, arithmetic, rhetoric, grammar and music. These "liberal arts" were later expanded to include Latin classics and philosophy.

Although the knowledge was rudimentary, there was a conscious attempt to impart a broad background and an open, enquiring mind.

American universities, reflecting American pragmatism, quickly evolved into homes of the vocational schools as well as hosts to the liberal arts.

Syracuse University contains schools of business, nursing, forestry, journalism, engineering, law, library science, public administration, education, etc., and mid-wifed the first school of radio and television.

Such schools need not be disparaged. Knowledge is so prolific today that no one can master more than a small area which becomes his specialty. Students demand that their education be relevant and what could be more relevant than schools which mold students to fit corporation slots upon graduation?

On the other hand, the primary goal of vocational schools is not the pursuit of truth or the acquisition of knowledge; rather, it is the preparation of students for their careers. Such preparation scarcely imparts a broad view of life or grapples with the great dilemmas of man.

It does not tell us how we are to pursue excellence and equality too. How do we cope with hatred between races or the irrationality of war? And how, in heaven's name, are we ever to reach a truce in the conflict between the sexes?

Vocational students either by requirement or by election should invade the territory of the Liberal Arts school and take up American literature with Professor Owen, Constitutional Law with Professor Sawyer, religious thought with Professor Vahanian or any course that will broaden the straight and narrow education.

Orangepower

A new feature of the Daily Orange, Orangepower will seek out honest answers to problems of general interest. Questions may be addressed to the Editorial Director, 1101 E. Adams St. All questions must be signed, although names may be omitted upon request.

How many seats in Archbold Stadium have actually been allocated as student seats for this season? M. Bernstein

As of this date, the minimum allocation of student seats is 9,370, with more available should the demand arise. Also to date, approximately 12,900 exchange coupon books have been issued, each of which can redeem one seat.

However, if one examines more closely the proceedure by which the tickets are redeemed, it would seem fairly impossible to redeem all coupons in the time alloted, with the staff as it presently stands. Other than block seating, there has been only one window available for the week to redeem the bulk of the exchange coupons. Ed. Dir.

Why has University Food service initiated the grossly inefficient process of looking up pictures each time a student comes for a meal? Isn't this face-checking a little absurd? J. Nathanson.

Some observers say the 1968 has been a year of change, and Food service wishes to be no exception. Sidestepping several of the changes promised last year, like extending breakfast to an hour when people on the campus really get up, they have initiated their new little toy, the mug-shot-system. Another Food service change briefly noted is the reduction in the amount of meat in the hamburgers, a-la Red Barn. Ed. Dir.

According to SU rules and regulations, gambling is strictly prohibited. Why then are cards and poker chips sold in the Official University Bookstore? Name Withheld.

For the same reason they handle beer mugs--a profit. Ed. Dir.

Madonna and Child

He sleeps silently now, tucked firmly
Against his mother's sighing bosom
Dreaming perhaps of his promise
For the future in our Land of Opportunity
As the young mother nods her head as well
And the two of them rest securely in their dreams.

Baby stirs noiselessly and fights the sky
With his two pudgy fists beating the air
Maybe he will be a famous conductor.
Mama reawakens fitfully, clutching her son fearfully
Then rests again, realizing a nightmare
That was perhaps all too true.

She looks on with sad, tear-glistened eyes
Watching her new son wrinkle his tiny face
And cry an empty, hollow echo of a cry.
He is hungry, but his mommy is dry.
Such a handsome face for a little one
She thinks as she holds him tightly in her arms.

Maybe he could be President.
He looks bright and good-looking.
Or a big executive or an engineer
Because he sure does look smart for a little guy.
He plays with his mother's little finger
And grows tired of that and looks around the room.

Old men return his ever-smiling stare
With dentured grins and silent mutterings
And pleasant memories of good times gone.
One walks up and grabs his hand
"I used to have a cute little tyke like you."
Mother pushes back into the dark corner of the room.

They open the door and smile at the young mother.
"We are ready for you now." Slowly rising
Painfully walking to the other end of the room
Where the open door is and she hugs the child
Tighter against her cool, thin body and cries.
They close the door behind her and ask her to sit.

He sleeps silently again at his mother's side
His head tucked inward, protected from the world.
She wimpers reluctant answers to them and
Holds the baby tighter still and he sighs.
The mother cries quietly, trying not to. She knows
He'll never be President. He's black.

Part two—Historical perspective

The rights of women NOW

By Gretchen Patey

Editors note: This is the second of three articles in a series exploring women's rights in America. Today historical perspective is given to discrimination through history and the contributions of women to our history.

Although few people would agree with Giradoix's Madwoman that "Nothing is ever so wrong in the world that a sensible woman can't set it right in the course of an afternoon," few women, despite discrimination, have been a strong force in the shaping of our nation.

The French historian deTocqueville observed "If I were asked to what the singular prosperity and growing strength of the American people ought mainly to be attributed, I should reply--to the superiority of their women".

Women fought side by side with the pioneers in the early colonies. They molded bullets, loaded muskets, and fought Indians to defend their lives and homes.

Women such as Harriet Beecher Stowe and the Grimke sisters were a strong force in the abolitionist movement. Perhaps, as Betty Friedan has suggested, American women identified their cause emotionally with the battle to free the slaves. I'm sure they did.

The Sanitary Commission, a women's volunteer group, was sometimes the only source of help for wounded soldiers on the Civil War battlefields. Many of the women were present at more battles than the soldiers they aided.

In the early 20th century it was women who agitated for slum and prison reform, the saving of national landmarks, civil service reform, and legislation to cover woman and child labor. It was mainly through pressure from women's clubs that the Pure Food Law of 1906 was passed.

Yet, despite these contributions to the nation, women are and have been (for centuries, in fact) discriminated against and relegated to an inferior position.

The Biblical Eve was credited with the world's first sin, and women for centuries were made guilty by accident of their birth.

Women in the Middle Ages were judged to be proud, wanton, false, venomous, deceitful, shrewish, sinful, and prone to witchcraft.

And in the 18th century; Sir William Blackstone, whose writings were used as textbooks by American and British lawyers for over a hundred years, extinguished the married woman's personality by equating marriage with civil death.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, one of the early suffragettes, wittily observed that the Blackstone doctrine meant that "both husband and wife are one, and that one is the husband". This is a major complaint of present-day feminists.

'SEE DER CREDTIALS UND PAPERS PLESE?

Research controversy . . .

researchers, hampering their progress.

"Another disadvantage is that many findings from government projects cannot be published because they are secret. Often many sections of a researcher's books and reports have to be suppressed as a security measure. This is bad because researchers like to have as much latitude as possible."

The benefits a government agency or private foundation derives from these projects are obvious—they get the questions answered.

The benefits obtained by a university are less obvious, and to some students, increasingly questionable. Some benefits are genuine. The university hopes that through these projects its professors may become better authorities in their fields, and perhaps open new areas of study.

A typical example comes from Honey himself. One of his recent projects culminated in reports of a six-month study of public administration training.

But research grants and contracts have undoubtedly added to the university's image of a multiversity more concerned with a military-industrial complex and with turning out students like products from a factory, than with the ideal of a university's isolation from society in order for student and teacher to examine it more objectively. Government defense contracts particularly have been cited as a cuase for student unrest.

Yet it seems that the university and society, instead of separating are becoming increasingly dependent upon each other for innovation and survival.

Grid tickets

Football tickets for SU's first home game will be distributed next week, starting Monday.

Tickets may be picked up at Archibold Gymnasium between 11 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Students wishing to sit together must pick up their tickets at the same time.

Seniors can receive tickets Monday, juniors on Tuesday, sophomores on Wednesday and freshmen on Thursday. I.D. card and coupon book with matching numbers are required.

'University within'

Black students are pushing for involvement, unification

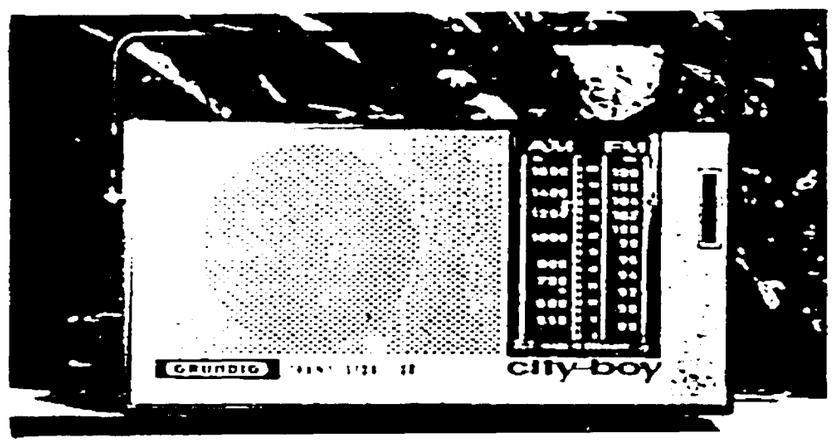
By DIANE WEATHERS

The Student Afro-American Society, the only organization of its kind on campus dedicated to helping Black people, this week held its first meeting for the new semester. Under the leadership of President Charles Paine and Vice President George Weldon, both SU students, tentative plans for t e coming year were made.

Each stressed the fact that in order to bring more student involvement not only with campus affairs but those in the community as well, a Black "university within the university", must thrive.

S.A.S. has been active on campus in past years as well as during the past summer. This year an emphasis has been placed on strengthening the relationship between Black people from the Syracuse area and those attending the University.

The Education Coalition, an organization made up of various Black and White groups who are seeking to bring about improvements in the program of the Public School System of Syracuse, has invited S.A.S. to aid in helping to draw up a model curriculum which would better benefit more Black children.



As part of its tutorial program, last year members of S.A.S. worked actively with Croton-On-Campus, an experimental school made up predominantly of Black Students. This year the program will expand to include participation in Operation Shoestrings, which will offer selected non-white high school graduates from the area an opportunity to audit courses here at SU.

As a part of S.A.S.'s movement to bring about more Black consciousness among Black students, S.A.S plans to have a Black Awareness weekend during the last week in October. Representatives from other Black organizations on neighboring campuses such as Colgate and Cornell, will be invited to attend. The weekend will consist primarily of discussions and other programs relating to Afro-American culture.

Although still small and hindered somewhat by the lack of proper meeting facilities and funds, S.A.S. represents the only coalition of Black groups on campus as well as Black independents. Those heading the organization express satisfaction with the great enthusiasm from the majority of Black freshmen as well as many upperclassmen.

Hopes are high that the S.A.S. at Syracuse, like many of its counterparts in the major white universities, and colleges throughout the country, will not only succeed in instilling race pride among Afro-American students, but an eagerness to assist in meeting the growing needs of the Black community.

Danforth Fellow inquiries invited

Inquiries about the Danforth Graduate Fellowships, to be awarded in March, 1969, are invited, according to Financial Aids Office, 205 University Place.

The Fellowships, offered by the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Missouri, are open to men and women who are seniors or recent graduates of accredited colleges in the United States, who have serious interest in college teaching as a career, and who plan to study for a Ph.D. in a field common to the undergraduate college. Applicants may be single or married, must be less than thirty years of age at the time of application, and may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study beyond the baccalaureate.

Approximately 120 Fellowships will be awarded in March, 1969. Candidates must be nominated by Liaison Officers of their undergraduate institutions by November 1, 1968. The Foundation does not accept direct applications for the Fellowhips.

Danforth Graduate Fellows are eligible for four years of financial assistance, with a maximum annual living stipend of $2400 for single Fellows and $2950 for married Fellows, plus tuition and fees. Dependency allowances are available. Financial need is not a condition for consideration.

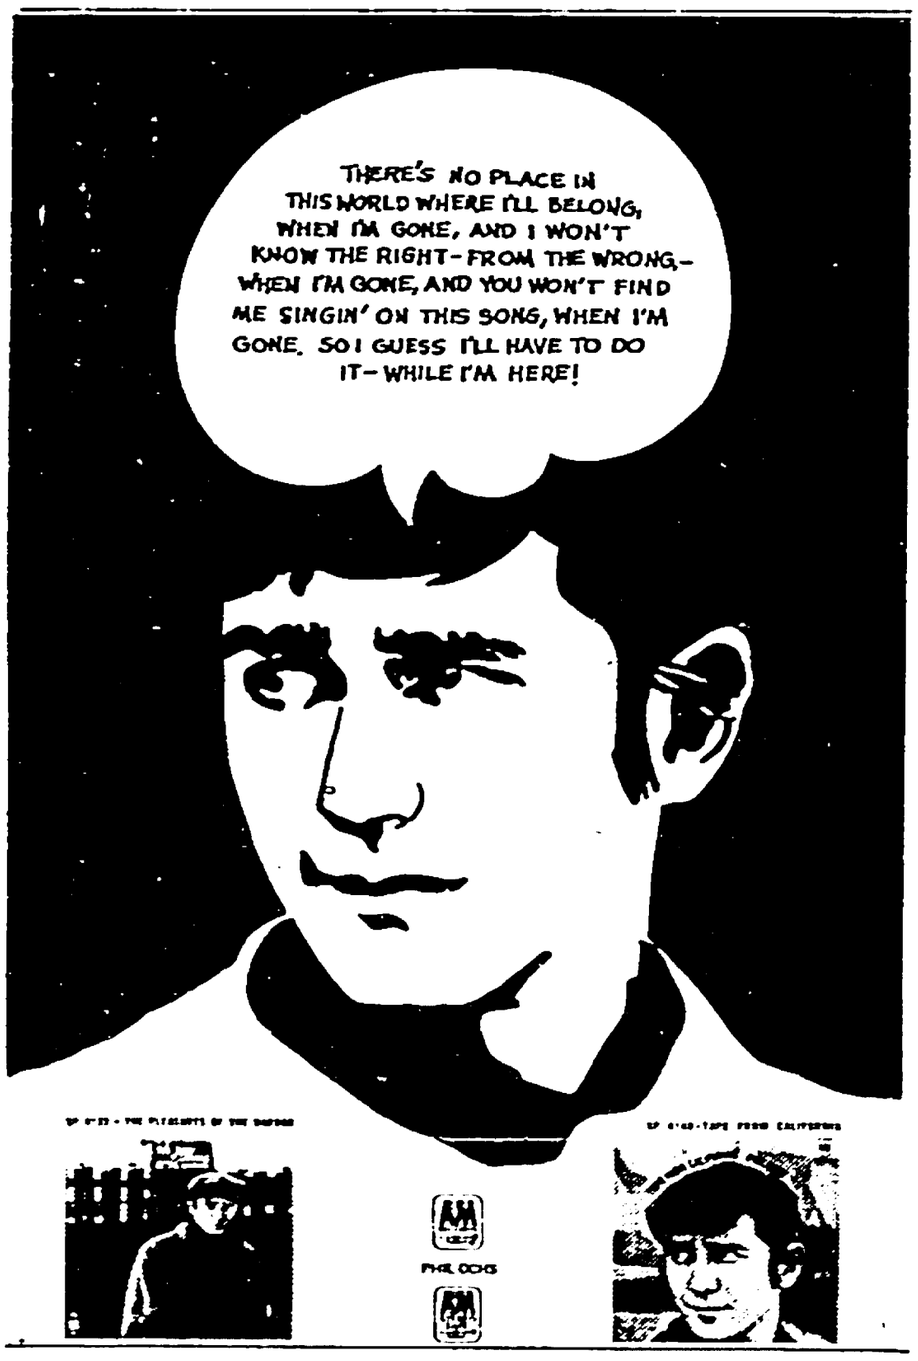
Booth Hall dorm council tests new constitution limits

By THOMAS BRYAN

BoothHall's dorm council is testing the limits of its newly-adopted constitution.

Council President Stephen L. Tober is enthusiastic about the new set-up, acquired near the end of last term.



"It provides for a rather unique council, as members are not elected, but rather appointed," he explained. "The benefit of such a set-up is many-fold. Unlike other councils, which begin anew every year and never seem to build on previous actions, the Booth dorm council returns at the point from which they left, and can continue from there."

During this week's session, Tober called for an amendment granting visiting hours for women, as experimented with in Dellplain and Lawrinson last year.

The council tabled a suggestion to form a Food Service Committee to represent Booth on Food Service's Menu Selection Board. Previously, student representation on the board has proven to be quite futile.

Tober also announced the acquisition of a stereo system for the dorm library.

The council presented a partial schedule of upcoming social events, including a screening of "Tom Jones" on September 28-29 and a Flint-Booth mixer with beer and band on October 4.

Era of 'famous' prefabs comes to an end

Along with these metal "packaged housing" units, converted barracks obtained from the Madison barracks site at Sackets Harbor and the Civilian Conservation Corps camp at Green Lake, near Fayetteville, arrived at the University farm site.

The Quonseteria, a quonset hut dining hall, was built on Comstock Avenue for veterans living in prefabs in the Collendale and Comstock areas. The barracks units varied in size, some only one story, others of two-story construction. They would hold anywhere from three to nine families per structure, bringing the living total to 214 apartments.

The vets seemed content with their housing situation except around rent-paying time. The $35 monthly fee grew to a $60-65 total with the cost of utilities. Since this left only about $25 of their $90 government checks, the vets opened their prefabricated homes to the general public, explaining their high cost of living problems and asking, "What rent would you pay for a home like this?" Their main complaint was that other universities were charging only $15 per month for their vets' housing.

The University seemed to be getting protests from all sides that year (1946) as property owners in the vicinity of Lancaster Avenue and E. Colvin Street sought to prevent SU from expanding its temporary housing on the $10,300 Collendale site.

A 300-signature petition was drawn up in which signers expressed the fear that "the housing, supposed to be razed after termination of the emergency, will be declared still useful and maintained after expiration of that period, and further that the temporary structures will depreciate the value of all the surrounding property."

"The emergency" apparently existed for many years following the citizens' protest, for the temporary structures still remain.

The Quonseteria, for example, served as headquarters for a Russian language school and in 1950 became the Collendale recreation hall. In 1956 the food service bake shop was moved there from Slocum Hall, and two years later it became the Microbiological and Biochemical Center. It was heavily damaged in a $500,000 fire in October of 1964.

Back on the main campus, the seven one-story prefab units on Irving Avenue were being used for student housing. The housing description issued by the dean of men's office in 1954 painted a rather bleak picture of these structures when compared with the lavish conditions to be found in Marion Dormitory, scheduled to open that fall. The description stated that the largest of the Irving Avenue units could house 12 men in 6 double rooms and the smallest could accomodate 6 men in 3 double rooms.

There were no lounges, only three telephones among the seven units, and rent for the 32-week academic year would be $176. The closing statement stressed that "They are not luxurious in any sense, but they are designed for the student who desires a comfortable room at a low price."

Announcement of a $15,000 repair budget for Irving Avenue prefabs in 1954 was greeted with a scathing editorial in the Daily Orange. Recalling the tragic prefab fire at Skytop five years earlier, in which seven persons died and 13 were injured, the campus paper called for complete removal of the structures. However, the persistent prefabs, known imaginatively as D-1 through D-7, remained until last fall.

The prefabs were finally on their way out. It was announced in 1963 that a $3 million housing project in Collendale would be the first step in the replacement of the post-World War II temporary dwellings. Several on-campus prefabs have been completely or partially torn down, with the Security Police office next in line for removal.

"They were critical to the survival of the University," LaTorre said. "They've served their purpose very well. It's too bad that we've had to keep them longer than they were usable."

The chief structural problem is that of deterioration. LaTorre explained that floor-supporting painted-steel angles set in concrete footings often corroded and moisture affected many of the prefabs' plywood floors.

"The most serious problem," LaTorre said, "is that when they start to deteriorate, people will help them along – by making holes bigger, for example."

Despite their condition, buyers have paid as much as $2,000 for old prefabs. Many structures see more years of use as cottages and garages.

From military housing to classrooms to garages, prefabs have made up for their drab gray exteriors with great versatility and service.

Tickets for UU Weekend (Sept. 27-29) will go on sale today at the HBC cloakroom, open daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The Chambers Brothers will perform from 8:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. on Sept. 27. Smokey Robinson and the Miracles will appear at the War Memorial on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 29. Tickets for that concert are offered for $4.00, $3.50 or $3.00. Chambers Brothers tickets are $2.00, or free with tickets for Smokey.

Food Service debate continues

The General and the 'opposition' battle on

By BRUCE HIBEL

It is an office with just a number. There is no indication that it is central headquarters for what has always been called "the opposition" by most students. The office appears quiet to a passerby, but it is in the midst of a continuing battle.

Major strategies are being plotted. Within the office pulsate machines and human hearts. A woman is in charge. It is a woman's battleground.

Mrs. Ursula P. Pettengill is the general. She has been in the fighting at Syracuse University for 18 years. Her official title is Director of Food Service. The battlefield is any Syracuse University cafeteria. Her "opposition" (she does not consider them the "enemy") are students.

Mrs. Pettengill moved up through the ranks from high school battlegrounds to university fields of battle at Drake and then to Syracuse.

"I like live and vocal people," she claimed in her headquarters. "We must learn to take the criticism in stride. It started long ago, this conflict, when the high school student left his mother's cooking for the first time in order to come to college."

The battle rages on every college campus. "I've been to campuses just two weeks after college began and the anti-cafeteria movement was in full swing," said the general.

The General

For Mrs. Pettengill, the battle can begin early in the morning at 6 and end as late as 11 that evening.

General Pettengill thinks of her job as a challenge. "It is a big job to serve the people and an even bigger one to keep them happy," she pointed out.

Food Service apparently won a battle last year, defeating a student view that students never knew what was to be served. "We simply began posting menus for the week wherever we could," she said.

A victory of sorts for both sides was recorded five years ago when the Student Food Council was established. Student representatives meet with the cafeteria staff every two weeks and air requests for various foods to be added or taken off future menus.

"We've attempted to bridge the communications gap by having students fill out questionnaires concerning their likes and dislikes. We did that three years ago and I'd like to see it done again," said the general.

General Pettengill experiments each fall in the unending battle by incorporating innovations into the cafeteria system. "This fall, we plan to have almost all of cooking area visible to the students. They have complained about poor cooking methods and we hope this will do away with some of the complaints," related the general in revealing future battle techniques.

So the battle rages on with each side attempting to damage the other's position. Yet, the field of honor may soon disappear. It may be a victory for the student side and the general is first to acknowledge it. "There is a trend toward allowing the student to choose whether he wishes to eat in the school cafeteria or on the 'outside.' The end may be in sight. The optional plan is coming."

Yes, the end might be on the horizon, but it has been a good fight. Both sides have gained. Students first learning to fight and the general and her staff staying sharp with the ever present conflict. As the old soldiers, so too will this old battle fade. Not loudly, but quietly fade, fade, fade.....

The Daily Orange Business Staff extends its humble apologies to Miss Louise Bond for omitting her name from yesterday's Goon Show ad. Goon Show Goons, she thanks you too.

Hardin named director of Honors Program

Dr. Clyde L. Hardin, associate professor of philosophy, has been named director of the College of Liberal Arts' Honors Program. He succeeds Dr. Mary H. Marshall, professor of English, who became the program's first director in 1965.

Dr. Federic J. Kramer, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, announced the appointment, saying, "I am very pleased that Dr. Hardin is assuming this important position, for which he is eminently qualified. I am looking forward to further growth of our Honors Program under his guidance."

The Honors Program provides special educational opportunities for promising undergraduates. Special honors courses or course sections and opportunities for foreign study are offered to participants.

Tentative enrollment figures for the program this year are: 40 seniors, 82 juniors, 85 sophomores and 125 freshmen.

Hardin was appointed to the University faculty in 1939. He received his bachelor's degree from Johns Hopkins University in 1953, his master's from the University of Illinois in 1954 and his Ph.D. from Princeton University.

SU grad Duffy wants Spartan win Saturday

By BOB KELTON

High Duffy Daugherty, ex-coal miner and Syracuse grad, begins his 15th season as head coach of the Michigan State Spartans Saturday when they face the Orangemen at East Lansing.

Duffy, 53, has the longest tenure of any State head football coach. Despite a 3-7 mark last year, he has had winning seasons in ten of the previous 13 years.

Daugherty was a 5-10, 183-pound guard for SU in the late 30's. After suffering a broken neck as a junior, he bounced back in his senior year and was named co-captain.

According to an old friend of his, SU lacrosse coach Roy Simmons, Duffy was always known as "Stubby" Daugherty in his Syracuse days.

"He was a small guy, but a fiery competitor and a tremendous leader," says Simmons. "He was an all-out player. Stubby gave 100% every second. He inspired the whole team by his attitude."

Daugherty's first coaching job was at Trinity Prep in New York City. He worked under Biggie Munn as SU line coach in 1946 and in 1947 went to State as Munn's assistant. He remained at that post for eight years.

His ability to run a football team has never been questioned. "He's a fine coach," said Simmons. "He had tremendous affection from his kids, and he got 100% plus from them. We never had a more inspiring guy."

Duffy's career record with the Spartans is 85-42-4, with two Big Ten titles and four second place finishes to show for it. He has also finished in the nation's Top 10 seven times.

DUFFY DAUGHERTY

The 1965 and 1966 teams were his two best: both of them were undefeated Big Ten champs. They were national champions in '65 and co-champs with Notre Dame in '66.

Honors were abundant for the Spartan coach and his team after these two big years. Duffy was named "Coach of the Year" in four polls in 1965. The '66 season produced six All-Americans and one Lineman of the Year, Bubba Smith.

Daugherty's first big year as head coach was 1955. After a disastrous first season in 1954, he came back to win the Big Ten Crown, the Rose Bowl and "Coach of the Year" honors.

A great athletic personality, Duff is known for his wit, optimism, modesty, honesty, and determination--traits that got him to where he is today.

Simmons describes him as a "beloved, terrific guy. Duffy had that dry sense of humor, and he could keep that team loose in the locker room. He was a hell of an asset."

The Spartan coach is looking forward to Saturday's game. "It's a great honor to play one's alma mater," he said in an interview recently, "It gives me a feeling of nostalgia for all the wonderful days I had at Syracuse.

Duff, one of the top choices for banquet speeches and clinics in the country, had praise for Orange coach Ben Schwartzwalder.

"Ben has had some great stars: Brown, Little, Csonka, Davis and Duffy Daugherty," he joked. Ben and Duffy were not at SU at the same time. "He gets the most out of his players."

In addition to his other achievements, Daugherty has coached many post-season bowl games and has written two books.

Duffy's books are "First and Ten" and "Defense: Spartan Style."

TABBED EARLY as All-Americans for the coming season are Art Thoms, left, and Tony Kyasky. Becoming an All-American is a long process, not all of which takes place on the football field. (See story at right.)

Preseason billing

Kyasky, Thoms are All-American

By BOB GALLAGHER

Even though cynics believe there is nothing lower than number one, athletes are willing to spend hours of hard work in order to be paid the accolade that they are indeed number one. In college football, being selected number one means being chosen to an All-American team.

Two members of this year's Orangemen have been selected as pre season All-Americans. Tony Kyasky, the team captain, was named to the first team as a defensive halfback, while Art Thoms has been mentioned as a possible choice at defensive tackle.

The search for candidates for pre-season honors begins in March or April, according to Larry Kimball, SU's Sports Information Director. After consultation with the coaching staff, Kimball fills out a questionaire listing the Orangemen, as well as the oppositions players, who are deemed deserving of pre-season recognition.

They base their decision on many factors, including the amount and quality of the individuals previous experience, the team's accomplishments, the caliber of competition and the football reputation which the school possesses.

The pro scouts are also asked for their evaluations of the current college crop. The players who receive the most mention on the questionaires are then named to the first team.

A major function of these pre-season teams, according to Kimball, is that they make the football writers and coaches aware of who the top prospects are. When covering the different games they will already know the better players. This is important, he points out, because the most prestigious post season All-American teams are selected by the reporters and the coaches.

Kimball also feels that after being chosen as All-Americans in the beginning of the year, the players would certainly strive to make the team at the end of the year.

Kyasky, the leader of the defensive platoon, was picked, according to Kimball, because he has been a starter since his sophomore year and has played all over the country and on television. Kyasky thinks the pre-season recognition he has received puts him more in the spotlight.

He believes it could be a hindrance, however, because he will be expected to play well all of the time and if he doesn't it will hurt him more than it would a lesser player.

Although he admits to rattling the man he is covering, Kyasky does not anticipate being shaken by the jeers of his peers.

Thoms, a starter for three seasons, is the main brick in the defensive wall which hopes to be as outstanding as last year's, which finished second in the nation in rushing defense. He feels the main benefit acquired from his early season honors is that his prominence has been greatly increased. This greater popularity, he expects, will make him more desireable to the pros. Thoms believes playing for a good team is also important because, he states, "a good team should have good players."

The Orange, with backs like Brown, Davis, Nance, Little and Csonka, have acquired a reputation as a school which produces great runners. This fact has been used as an inducement in the recruiting of high school backs who want to join that immortal list. Kyasky and Thoms hope that at the end of this season there names will be used to recruit high school athletes who want to be great defensive backs or tackles.

Tangerine coach Shreve molds Orange of future

By ADAM DAWSON

Freshman football coach Jim Shreve is once again faced with his seemingly endless task. It is his job to indoctrinate the 36 boys, including 30 scholarship winners, who make up the Tangerines into the Syracuse football system.

These boys come from different shcools with different styles of play, and it takes at least one year before they can learn the SU system of football.

"The purpose of the squad is to bridge the gap between high school and college football. This gap consists of the differences in technique, skill, hitting, competition under pressure, and power," said Shreve.

During the season it is hoped that the gap will be closed if not eliminated.

Shreve, who is entering his 10th year at SU, is assisted by John Seketa, in his second year as line coach, and by graduate students Ed Mantie and Tom Coughlin.

The Tangerines open up the season October 4 at home against Manlius. On October 12 the team takes to the road for a clash with the Naval Academy Frosh. That contest will be followed by an October 25th clash with the Plebes of West Point. West Point was the only team to defeat last year's frosh, winning 13-10.

The last away game of the season is on November 2 against the University of Buffalo Frosh. This season's finale comes with a November 8 match against the Colgate Frosh.

Both of the team's home games are played on Fridays at 2 p.m. at Manley Field. Radio station WAER has said they will broadcast some of the games.

Shreve, asked for some general comments about the team, replied, "We're kind of thin depth-wise, very green in the fundamentals (which iis typical of freshmen) and have fair speed. They're hard workers, and they have a great attitude."

He added, "We had hoped to go with two platoons, but injuries may force me to play some boys both ways."

On the offensive line he listed Ray Jarosz, Doug Auld, John Lobon (who'll probably go both ways), Joe Ehrmann, Ross Sposato, Stan Walters and Dave Boyer as possible starters. In the backfield Marty Januzkiewicz, Greg Allen and Steve Sanson figure to start with Greg Wysocki right behind Allen, and Larry Kitalsky and Frank Ruggiero fighting it out for the quarterbacking spot.

On defense Greg Bodine, Len Campolietto, Ted Lachowitz, and Howie Goodman form the front wall. Backing them up as linebackers will be Ed Berry, John Loban, and Clark Yingst. Fighting it out for the defensive halfback positions will be Ken Bohannon, Steve Senson (going both ways), Dennis Finnegan, and Rob Griffin. The safety spot is between Greg Allen and Rich Phillips.

All petitions for block seating at home football games must be submitted to Jim Striker, athletic commissioner, by 6 p.m. Friday, September 20, at Lubin Hall on College Place.

Petitions will be honored for the entire season. Rosters must be alphabetized, typewritten and include at least 15 names. The block must claim 75 per cent of its allotted tickets or face disqualification from further block consideration.

'A Nation Divided'

New program attacks white racism in America

By CELESTE LACY

In an effort to analyze white racism and how it affects both whites and blacks in Syracuse, University College is sponsoring a series of seven seminars entitled "A Nation Divided: Black Cities and White Suburbs?"

Thomas F. Cummings Jr., the program executive director, says the program is being initiated as a result of the recent Kerner Commission report on civil disorders which stated that America is developing two societies, black and white, separate and unequal.

"No other university to my knowledge has dealt with white racism," Cummings said. "University College has been interested in the solution to urban problems because we are an urban university."

The Seminars, beginning Sept. 30, will be held at seven high schools in the white suburbs. The interracial panel of fourteen men including several SU teachers, community leaders, ministers and newspaper men will be conducting the program.

Cummings explained that the program is being taken to the white suburbs and will be geared to the middle-class individual because that is where racism is most abundant.

Rev. Willis Clark, a panel member, said, "The program hopes to get the student to look inside himself, his attitudes, to examine his place in society, and to find out what he owes himself, the community and the black person."

The program participants are just as concerned about their own racism and prejudices as those they are trying to reach.

Prof. Samuel Fetters of the Law School said he hopes to get a personal education from the experience as a panel participant.

"The white man does not know the black man, has never known him and continues not to know him," Fetters said.

One of the unique aspects about this particular seminar is that it is not a united front. Many of the people who are on the panel have conflicting views about how to deal with racism and just what racism actually is. Therefore, there will be seven different approaches at each high school.

Members of the panel also feel that the program is a good one because it will be reaching the white racist with a black man present to give his own views. Such techniques as discussion, role playing, and question and answer periods will be used.

Harden J. Southall of The Liberated Voice, a black weekly newspaper, said, "I will attempt to give a new identification of myself as a black man and plan to tell people about white racism as I see it."

The program will most likely not reach the poor white whose racism is more blatant than the middle - class businessman

Cummings explained that since the self-claimed liberal is harder to reach in terms of making him realize his racism, the program will start there and possibly move into the poor white areas.

One reporter asked Prof. Arthur Legacy, an expert on urban history, if racism exists in Syracuse. "Of course it does," Legacy said, "Just look around at all those statues of little black jockeys all over Syracuse that sit on lawns. That's racism and you'll find it in every white neighborhood."

O'Brien calls for bombing halt, urges SUYR support

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

David V. O'Brien, Republican candidate for Congress from Onondaga County, last night called for a 30-day bombing halt in Vietnam and strong attempts to end the war by negotiation in an address to SU Young Republicans.

Nearly 150 SUYR's and interested students filled Kittredge Auditorium to hear O'Brien and campaign representatives of Richard Nixon and Sen. Jacob Javits outline a role for young people in their campaigns.

In calling for a bombing halt, O'Brien urged support for the four-stage withdrawal plan proposed by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller during his campaign for the presidential nomination. The plan involves withdrawal to fortified enclaves, free elections observed by an international force, and direct negotiations.

Prof. Michael O. Sawyer spoke briefly at the beginning of the meeting to introduce Amil Frankel, legislative assistant for Sen. Javits now on leave to direct the youth division of Javits' campaign. Frankel said the the nucleus of the senator's campaign group on campus had been formed and it would work with the SUYR's to "reach out for new people" to join the campaign.

SUYR's will be staffing Javits' booth in Maxwell and HBC on Mon., Sept. 23 polling student opinion to be used in the next seven weeks of the Javits effort. Sen. Javits, opposed in the election by McCarthyite Paul O'Dwyer, will give an address to public affairs classes at SU on Monday, Sept. 30.

Taking the floor to introduce candidate O'Brien, SUYR president Andy Rosenblatt welcomed those present to a club now "larger and wiser this year," a reference to the YR's internal dissension of a year ago. Rosenblatt outlined the club's role in the O'Brien campaign which will include sole responsibility for canvassing three of the city wards in the University area.

President Rosenblatt announced a financial boost to the club via a $100 donation from the Onondaga County Republican Committee. Future club activities will include a private session with

Barbara Lundquist

Ex-ON editor returns from Africa as grad

By ELLEN BILOFSKY

This was a working summer for Barbara ("Omar") Lundquist—she spent it analyzing the Health and Education Department of Lagos City, Nigera. Miss Lundquist, who is a former radio—TV major and presently a first-year graduate student at SU, was there under the auspices of the "Operation Crossroads Africa" program.

"Crossroads" is a private, non-government program whose aim is to aid the Africans by working with them on projects, while enabling the Africans and North Americans to learn more about each other. In contrast to the usual work-camp projects, building schools and roads, Miss Lundquist worked on a professional project to discover whether media was used correctly to reach the people.

The big problem with commercial advertising, she felt, was the tendency of the uneducated common people to take it literally. She visited different health centers to observe reactions to pamphlets, posters and rakio programs about health. In addition, Miss Lundquist taught a weekly class on how to write copy for radio and press. She wrote a pamphlet on this subject for the Nigerians.

"The first question they asked us as Americans," she stated, "was, 'Do all Americans carry guns?' " This, Miss Lundquist felt, was due to the television shows and movies they see, as well as the recent assassinations. Of all Americans, she found the people of Lagos had the most respect for John and Robert Kennedy, because they had done a lot for African affairs. They took the assassinations very hard.

"They were the most warm, hospitable people I have ever known," Miss Lundquist ssaid. "There was no hostility towards whites - they accepted you for being a person. It was quite an

Nixon and Humphrey, unity and order

In reflecting upon the Democratic and Republican conventions, it seems evident that the end products excreted by those two egregious organisms are both men left behind by events.

Both Richard Nixon and Hubert Humphrey reached the next to the last step in politics by preserving at all costs their fidelity to the organization. They are so accustomed to compromising their own values with those of the party that, once they are in a position to assert themselves, they seem incapable of doing so.

Nixon, no matter what the subject, seems to be talking about tactics and public opinion and how to offend only the smallest minorities. It must be conceded he is a master tactician, which is not undesirable in a president, but what of conviction and belief in what is right that lends a necessary moral force to those who would govern?

Humphrey is so accustomed to aye, aye-ing the President, he cannot, even at this late date, show the former character that won him Minneapolis and the antipathy of the Dixiecrats. Like the corporation man who becomes blander and blander as he rises higher, and higher Humphrey is now on record for embracing Gov. Maddox and saying there is room for his kind in the Democratic party.

Neither the rhetoric of Humphrey nor Nixon seems to grasp the central issues of race relations, alienation of the youth, decay of the cities, or the war in Vietnam, although Humphrey's record on all but Vietnam outshines his rival's.

This is a reflection of the nation which is also confused and divided about these issues. Indeed, as a country we seem to insist that if we can't solve the pressing issues, we shall at least have unity and order. The political parties, likewise unable to decide on solutions, turned instead to unity and order, Nixon and Humphrey.

Letter: Cottage closing

To the Editor:

In a world where emotions are frozen over by academic alienation achieved through administrative assistance, regard for the dignity of the person is nonexistent. While course contents stress the power force of involved individuals, the reality of contemporary college living mocks this movement for person-power.

Syracuse University can boast of its idealistic haven for individuals. The place is Beebe Cottage. It's easily indiscernable at 119 Euclid Avenue, quietly crouching between the crests of Phi Sigma Sigma and Alpha Xi

Progress? Yes, that's what's happening. Beebe will be evacuated in a couple of weeks, while Phi Sigma Sigma will remain standing until June 1969. Perhaps this is a proof of the superiority of the Greek way of life. Perhaps.

Part three - inequality today

The right of women NOW

By Gretchen Patey

Editor's Note: This is the final article in a series exploring women's rights in America.

The status of women in America has declined steadily since World War II. Despite the vote and the Civil Rights Act of 1964, women are still viewed as second-class citizens and discriminated against in education, industry, professions, labor unions, and churches.

Much of this is merely archaic tradition, but many authorities trace the cause to the theories of a late Victorian, middle-class Viennese psychologist named Sigmund Freud.

Women in Freud's view were inferior, made only to serve man and to love him as wives and mothers.

He attributed almost all behavior to the sex drive. His theories were "swallowed whole" by psychologists, sociologists, educators, ad-agency manipulators, magazine writers, child experts, marriage counselors, and cocktail-party authorities.

Thus, fearing that too much education would detract from their femininity as wives and mothers, women dropped out of college and refused to pursue a career. Instead they accepted the role of the suburban housewife as their fulfillment.

Having babies, cleaning a house, and cooking meals were regarded as the only acceptable feminine activities. "Career woman" became a term which denoted selfishness, masculinity, and agressiveness. Women were encouraged instead of working to stay home and supervise their home and children.

Then the serenity of a postwar generation raised on "Kirche, Kuche, und Kinder" was shattered by a Frenchwoman. Simone de Beauvoir repudiated the inferiority of women, the myth that home and family are the only goals of a woman's life, and the belief that eduacation is a "men-only" proposition.

She struck out against current opinions, claiming that "some men may be limited by marriage, but few women fail to be annihilated by it," reminiscent of the words of Elizabeth Stanton.

Mlle. de Beauvoir opened a new view of life to many women.

Betty Friedan followed with The Feminine Mystique. She argued that the Freudian valuing of women for their sexuality as wives and mothers reduced the woman's role from that of a glorified houseboy to that of "a sort of socially accepted whoredom."

Her cogent plea was levelled at the middle-aged housewives who had left school and married early, eager to fulfill the Freudian myth. These are the women she contends who can no longer establish their identities by having babies; who wonder, after 20 to 30 years of cleaning, cooking, and nursing "is this all?"; who suddenly fill the psychoanalysts' offices and couches because their lives seem empty and meaningless.

These women, disillusioned with the "feminine mystique" fail to find their meaning in life by waxing or dusting a table.

The solution put forth by both women, and by many other authorities is simple–education. Education in order that women may be better equipped to achieve their human potential, and equality that they may be able to do so.

This is not a new idea. Even in 1853, a Boston minister held forth that "to make half the human race consume its energies in the functions of housekeeper, wife, and mother is a monstrous waste of the most precious material God ever made."

Education and equality, claim this second wave of feminists, are the key to the trap of the "feminine mystique" of inferiority and inequality.

Food service '68

The center of better eating

By Paul Finkleman

According to Puritan theology, man is totally depraved and sinful. Judging from conditions at Watson Dining Hall this year, food service is being run by a blue-blood, who remembering her Puritan ancestors, believes that SU students should be treated and fed as depraved and damned souls.

It is impossible to measure the taste of food with any numerical or scientific scale. Let it suffice to say that Watson food is palatable–sometimes. Some students say it may be better, or at least healthier than last year, because there have been no cases of ptomaine, yet. It is also impossible to measure the effect on students of having to eat their drab unpleasant food in the equally drab and unpleasant atmosphere at Watson.

It is possible, however, to measure such things as the 500 person breakfast line at 7:30 Monday morning for the breakfast they had to pay for. It is possible to count the miniscule number of workers running the single line for the 500 students. One can also count the six trays of "clean" glasses with water, milk and juice stains still on them. At that meal you couldn't count the paper cups available if you wanted a sanitary drink, because there weren't any.

Most of the people who work at Watson are friendly and sympathetic. They understand that we get mad because there aren't clean glasses, because they run out of silverware and trays at nearly every meal, because there is no cold drinking water, because breakfast lines extend into the street, because there is no ice for the ice tea, and no milk in the milk machine.

They understand because they know they are understaffed because they see the conveyer belt break down, because they see the dishwasher doesn't clean the dishes, and because they see that since Sims has been closed down Watson is not only understaffed, but very overcrowded.

The administrator at Watson however, seems to have taken and aced "How To Be Mean," a discrediting course offered by Food Service. One course graduate nearly assaulted me for having the audacity to take two ice creams at once. They seemed to think that I was taking food to someone who had snuck into Watson, as if anyone in their right mind could do that. In any event, the administrators should realize that their salaries are paid by the students and therefore we should be treated more like patrons, and less like peons. If we want two ice creams (or anything else), we should be allowed to take it. We've already paid enough for it.

The answer to most of Watson's problems is money. More help, a new dishwasher, better quality food, a paint job to end drabness, and better cooks to convert Watson from a mess hall to a dining hall. If the university cannot afford these improvements, let it prove it to the students by opening up its account books for public inspection. If it is then proven that food service is unprofitable, let the University allow students to go off of board. Until this is done SU will rival LBJ for a credability gap! Food Service won't get any better, and the unfortunate damned souls at Watson will pray that for the sake of SU's reputation there is no ptomaine this year.

WHO KNOWS WHAT EVIL LURKS IN THE HEARTS OF MEN ??

Seeks support

Javits poll soon to be distributed on Syracuse campus

Somebody named O'Dwyer took advantage of New York's first state primary this summer and upset two publicized Democratic senatorial candidates. And now Jacob Javits, the 12-year senator from New York, is running one of the hardest campaigns of his political life. He, too, must fight the McCarthy-O'Dwyer phenomenon.

"That's one of the toughest things we've got to beat," said Emil Frankel, a young Javits staffer, here yesterday from Washington to help draw up an SU poll for the senator. "We've got to make people realize that the Javits-O'Dwyer race isn't an election for the presidency or a vote for or against Chicago and Miamo Beach.

"It's a question of who will serve best as New York's senator."

And when it comes to that question, Javits and Paul

Senator Javits

O'Dwyer have something in common: both are mavericks. "O'Dwyer was admirably courageous in his support for McCarthy," said Frankel, "but he's not the only one in this race who's stuck his neck out."

Javits, known for his liberal views in the Senate and his support for Gov. Rockefeller, has been "bucking the bosses" since he entered public life, according to Frankel. He was nearly drummed out of office in the early fifties by the McCarthyites and in 1964 refused to support his party's presidential nominee, Barry Goldwater.

"Sometimes parties ask too much," and 1964 was one of those years. This year, however, Javits has said that there must be change, and, after some hesitation, endorsed the Nixon-Agnew ticket.

"He's not happy," said Frankel of Javits, who is running an independent campaign, "but he's said that this year it isn't a matter of conscience."

Javits, a critic of the administration's Vietnam policies, also is concerned, the Javits poll indicated, with campus unrest. "What's happening on campus," said Frankel, "is a caricature of what's happening in society at large." So Javits, who Frankel conceded isn't "totally familiar" with student problems, "wants to get a feel of the emotions on campus."

Last spring, when Columbia was at its hottest, Javits indicated a dissatisfaction with university structure. Boards of trustees, he said, were self-perpetuating and unrepresentative. "All these kids want," he told a group of not-so-appreciative Republican women, "is a piece of the action."

Still, Frankel said, it is questionable how much a U.S. Senator can do to solve campus unrest. beyond "understanding it."

The SU Javits poll, initiated by the SU Javits Committee and backed by Javits as a "pilot project with potential," is an attempt to maintain contact with students.

The senator, according to Frankel, "wants to confront the students and be confronted by them. If this poll works, it probably will expand to other campuses."

The poll, which will be distributed "very, very soon," according to a Javits committee spokesman, is composed of six questions:

Are you eligible to vote in New York State?

Are you registered as yet to vote in this fall's election?

Is there any issue in this campaign that matters other than the war?

What should New York State Senators "do" about the current state of campus unrest?

What would turn you on or off about the Senatorial candidate?

Who is your current choice in the New York State Senatorial race?

PFP platform claims new political identity

"Future" seems to be the key word in the Peace and Freedom Party platform, at least as set forth Wednesday evening by local party organizer Larry Alexander.

Addressing an audience of 60 SU students, Alexander maintained that "the party realizes its strength lies in the future, and is working toward that time."

Meanwhile, the party calls for an end to occupation of ghettos by police forces, self-determination for all minority peoples, U.S. fulfillment of treaty obligations, immediate withdrawal from Vietnam and freeing of all black and Spanish-speaking political prisoners.

Although PFP claims to be "permanently separate and distinct from any other party," it strongly supports the ten-point program set forth by the Black Panther Party and their presidential candidate, Eldridge Cleaver. "Cleaver," Alexander pointed out, "is only 32 years old, so even if he were elected he would be too young to serve. This represents our opinion of the U.S. legal system."

Several times during the evening, PFP's platform was called weak and full of "vague generalities." Alexander tried to defend the party by saying, "We don't have the power to get what we want anyway, so we don't want to tie ourselves down." When it was mentioned that power can not come without internal structure, he seemed to have nothing to say.

By Alexander's own admission, the platform does need some change. He also pointed out that many different factions, such as pacifists and Maoists, exist in the party, but he feels the goals of PFP are the kind for which all people will work. Alexander, a non-student, works full-time for the party as an organizer in the Syracuse area.

The next PFP meeting will be at 8 p.m., September 25th, in the Hall of Languages. At this time Dale Tussing, Liberal nominee for Congress from this district, will be asked to speak. Tussing is being firmly supported by PFP and all interested students are urged to attend. For questions, call 478-6278, or visit the PFP office at 116 Standard St.

New York Mayor John Lindsay tonight after his 8:00 p.m. address at the War Memorial. Interested students are meeting at the Montgomery Street entrance to the War Memorial at 7:30 p.m.

O'Brien, at age 36, the youngest Congressional candidate to run in Onondaga County, criticized the Johnson administration for inactivity and failure to effectively deal with crime and civil disorder. He warned of a "growing negative attitude" across the country. He said his Democratic opponent, two-term Congressman James Hanley, lacked "a sense of urgency" in the need to implement the findings of the Kerner Commission Report on Civil Disorders, and had failed to comment on it.

In addition to a bombing halt, other positive suggestions put forward by O'Brien included a reform in the draft laws to include a lottery selection method. He also called for a lowering of the voting age to 18.

O'Brien suggested immediate implementation of the major recommendations of the Kerner report, the Katzenbach report on crime, and a "massive overhaul" of today's welfare system with special attention to a negative income tax. He closed with a strong plea for students to "knock on doors" in his behalf. After a brief question and answer session, O'Brien was followed by SU law student, Paul Smith, who is coordinating the central New York's college effort for Richard Nixon.

In their national broadcast, WABC used a portion of the tape containing Mankiewicz' assertion that George C. Wallace would triumph over Hubert H. Humphrey.

'The Crucible' opens tonight

Syracuse Little Theatre's production of The Crucible, for many tastes Arthur Miller's best drama, will open tonight for seven performances at the Regent Theatre.

The Crucible will be staged from Sept. 20-22 and 26-29.

Football posters

Frosh, show your psych and get points for the Bill Orange Trophy by bringing a sign to football games. This year, signs will be permitted in the Placard Cheering section and one or two will also be put up at the ends of the Stadium.

Placard Cheering signs must be either paper or cloth and not more than five feet high. They can be displayed before the game, at half-time and at time-outs. Signs to be hung at the ends of the Stadium must be cloth and must fit the area. Only signs displaying pep and identifying the sponsors will be considered. Each entry must be accompanied by a 3x5 inches index card which is a replica of the sign. Only approved signs can be brought into the Stadium.

All signs for the Maryland game must be turned in by midnight, Wednesday, September 25 at 113 College Place. Approved signs can be picked up Saturday, September 28 between 9 and 10 a.m. Winners of Placard Cheering signs will be announced at the game, and winners of signs to be hung will be on display during the game.

For further information, call Larry Holton x2629, Roy Sykes x2681, or Helen Dworetzky x2663.

Action and thought

In this, the introductory issue of Close-up and Perspective, we present a potpourri of the many organizations and activities on campus. All the organizations listed are seeking volunteers and few have any a priori requirements other than interest. The Daily Orange hopes this section will serve especially the Freshmen Class which usually possesses a near monoply upon enthusiasm but lacks information to channel it.

The executive branch of Student Government will sponsor a convocation for leaders of organizations and freshmen 8 p.m. Wednesday in Hendricks.

In addition, we present a variety of columns and reviews in this edition of Perspective and Close-up. In the future we would like to devote an issue solely to book reviews, fiction and non-ficiton, and encourage any faculty, graduate students, or undergraduates who may wish to contribute to call Charles Babcock, x 3474, or Abe Wagner, 3755.

This edition of Close-up and Perspective was assembled by staff members Alan Stamm and Karen Wiediger.

Review: 'Hour of the Wolf'

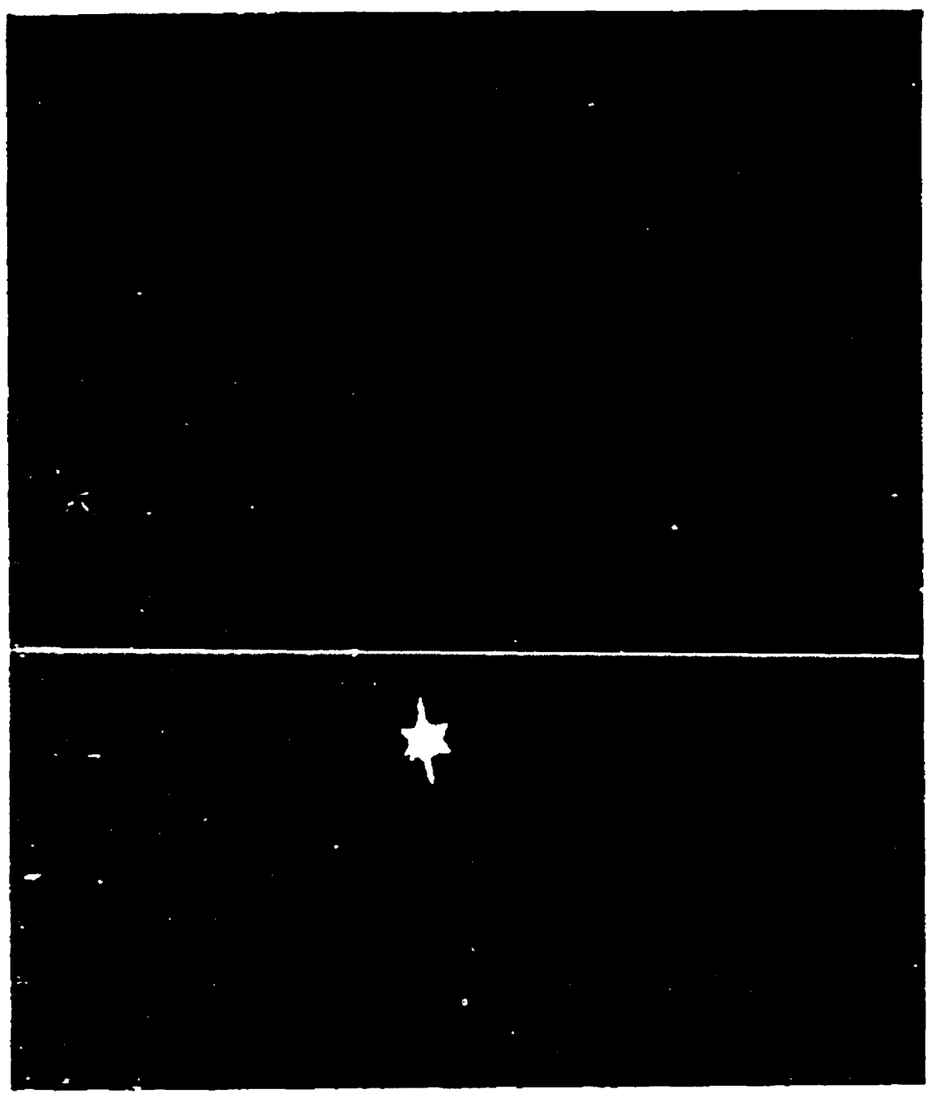
Bergman creates a horror journey

By JAMES KING

Ingmar Bergman's recent "Hour of the Wolf" has been snatched up by certain benevolent forces at FILM FORUM (Syracuse's "travelling art-house") and put on display at the University Regent, where it will show until the 28th of this month.

As with many of the Swedish director's films, it will undoubtedly excite some controversy among the moviegoers who like to play along with Bergman and, in this case, try to make some kind of sense, perhaps even derive a theme, from the series of bizarre incidents which occur. And the film has an abundance of bizarre incidents indeed, including one where an old woman removes her hat and reveals her grotesque baldness, then removes a mask which covers her face, and tops this when she removes her eyeball and plunks it into a cocktail glass. (Too many incidents like this might have even the hardiest Bergman afficionados squirming in their seats!)

But Bergman is concerned here not only with the problem of reality and illusion, -- a broad theme which may be read into anything--but with a man who makes the terrifying and inevitable descent into madness, haunted and tormented by phantasmogoric figures of his imagination. His confused lover tells us she cannot determine whether or not she has perceived these phantoms herself, and wonders if the seven years they have spent together has made them both feel subject to the same experiences.



What Bergman has done, I think, is to create a horror movie within the framework of his hero's dark and introspective journey. After all, a prominent producer of horror movies once declared that if one of his films were in a film festival, the judges would proclaim it "an allegory of the human condition." I found myself associating incidents in Bergman's film with the folklore of vampires and werewolves. One character, who happens to live in a castle, bears a striking resemblance to Bela Lugosi's Dracula at times. And, in a flashback-within-a-flashback (all too typical of Bergman and his followers!) the protagonist relates how he was attacked by a beautiful, white-skinned boy who appeared on the rocks along the seacoast one day--so savagely attacked and bitten, in fact, that he killed the child trying to defend himself. And I remembered Lon Chaney Jr,'s innocence as tortured Larry Talbott, "The Wolf Man."

Fragments such as these recall a superficial kind of monster--the one we used to cringe at, or chuckle at, in those old Universal classics. And this superficial monster parallels the monsters within Bergman's hero, the demons who force him to keep awake through the "Hour of the Wolf," the hour between darkness and dawn when ghosts are supposedly most powerful.

Bergman made "Hour of the Wolf" in black-and-white, and the film has a grainy texture about it--this encouraged one disinterested observer to remark, "Don't you enjoy these 1930's movies?" But it does achieve its effect--a somber, haunting, even depressing quality that is infinitely intense. Bergman gets fine performances out of Max Von Sydow as his introspective protagonist and Liv Ullmann as the lover. But he himself remains the star of his films, a kind of mystery which his fans and followers have continually attempted to solve, even as the mystery grows darker from film to film.

The film has subtitles in English.

Activities and o

Goons

Potential members of Goon Squad are taken from the freshman class during the Spring Semester. During Orientation Week, the Goons help the freshmen to move into their living centers and answer questions about SU.

The requirements for becoming a member of Goon Squad are (1) write an application evaluating your experiences during Orientation Week: (2) at least a 2.0 average (3) a three to five minute interview, which is conducted by the members of Traditions Commission.

If you have any questions concerning Goon Squad, contact Michael Sussman, president of Traditions Commission, ext. 2181 or Marty Gordon, Goon Squad chairman, ext. 2712.

Academic Communications Corps

A program known as the Academic Communications Corps has been formed to help bridge the gap between students and professors.

In the ACC, a student is assigned to work with a professor and help him with his academic research. Through this program, the students are able to widen their understanding of the faculty and in turn, the professors hear directly about the ideas of the students.

Students who are interested in working in this program should contact Mrs. Ann Rath, program coordinator, in Prefab 24.

Experienced leaders

Outing Club plans trips

The Syracuse University Outing Club which held its first meeting of the semester on Tuesday, has already scheduled activities for the coming weekend.

Under the leadership of President Bob Haxo, a novice mountaineering expedition will begin a trek through the Adirondack Mountains Friday and will return to SU late Sunday. Also planned for this weekend is a Sunday afternoon canoe trip through Cross Lake and the Erie Canal.

Experienced leaders such as Bob Haxo, Vice President Skip Shoutis, Secretary Woody Lane, Treasurer John Glensman, and members at large Barb Schuerel and Sue Haxo take beginners and those with more experience on hiking, bicycling, rock climbing, spelunking (commonly known as caving), snowshoeing, winter mountaineering, cross country skiing, or canoeing trips almost every weekend. This year trips are planned to the White Mountains, the Adirondacks, Lake George, and the Catskills in addition to day trips in the Onondaga area.

Membership in the club, purchased for a year for three dollars, entitles one to use of the organization's equipment on club trips. One penny per mile, which Bob Haxo pointed out is "cheaper than Hertz", is charged on trips requiring auto transportation, and members must always supply their own food.

The club meets every Tuesday evening at 7:15 in room 207, Hall of Languages.

Campus Chest is non-profit

Campus Chest is the only organization on campus working on a non-profit basis. To raise money to carry on their philanthropic endeavors, Campus Chest depends on student support for Campus Chest or Bust Weekend, October 4-5.

This support includes buying buttons, supporting a queen contestant and generally participating in the weekend.

Campus Chest primarily supports such student oriented educational activities as Leadership through Education and Operation Crossroads Africa. Campus Chest is a year-round organization which is always looking for new and different ways to raise money.

People interested in working with Campus Chest should watch the DO for an announcement of a general meeting. If there are any questions, contact Joey Edwards, ext. 3406 or 3407 or Alan Ramie.

Universitas

The student-run Universitas Touring and Rally Association is seeking new members to kick off its second season. Anyone who enjoys driving and competing against the clock will find UTARA's sports car rallies to his liking.

Rallies here met with an enthusiastic following last Fall, but typical Syracuse weather stymied winter races. Cars departed from Manley Field House and finished at Drumlins Country Club. The course consisted of a three-hour average speed test. A navigator in each car had to interpret tricky directions and account for the times when an average speed could not be maintained.

Students interested in joining this Fall's fallies should contact Gary Basile at 479-5495, or Pete Kapcio at ext. 3140.

Currently, however, the Syracuse Mustang Club has scheduled a rally this Sunday for any cars, including custom models. Further information may be obtained by calling Lee James at 446-9000.

Has 35mm equipment

By NANCY SARICH

Film Forum prides itself in presenting many leading movies at the Regent Theater and Gifford Auditorium this Fall. Movies scheduled for September and October include Hour of the Wolf, The Bride Wore Black, In the Heat of the Night, Blow Up, Cool Hand Luke, Man for All Seasons, and Father.

Unlike other film organizations on campus, Film Forum has equipment to show 35mm films, and is able to obtain them before other colleges. Started less than two years ago by United Campus Christian Fellowship, the program now has more offers for films than it can accommodate.

Last year, the program's success enabled them to offer three $250 grants to encourage student film makers at Syracuse. This Fall, at least three more will be offered. Other plans include obtaining art films and presenting movies to high schools in the area.

Film Forum obtains movies from New York and Buffalo distributors that deal with movie theaters. Films shown at the Regent Theater must be guaranteed to run for a full week. Films presented in Gifford run Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

The price of obtaining films is determined by the size of the theater, overhead and the potential number of customers. Any profits made are put back into the film program. Continued financial success has enabled them to consider presenting such recent hits as Bonnie and Clyde, Elvira Madigan and The Graduate for their Spring program.

AWS works for SU coeds

The Association of Women Students is an organization which attempts to serve the interests of all its members--every undergraduate woman.

Each coed is eligible to vote in the AWS elections which take place in the spring. They may also take an active part in the assembly or on one of the commissions of AWS.

Cindy Bailey

AWS has played an important part in securing rights for the women at SU. Much of AWS's time has been spent in organizing a self-governing dormitory system in order to put optional hours for women into effect. Optional hours are now available to all coeds except freshmen.

Led by President Cindy Bailey, such goals as parietal hours, housing choice and social freedom will be the main goals of AWS this year.

SDS seeks social cure

Students for a Democratic Society has several aims and purposes, according to Bob Tumposky, office coordinator of the peace office.

"The purpose of SDS is study and action aimed at transforming American society from a sick, racist, war-ridden authoritation society to one that is devoted towards instituting peace and freedom for people within the society and in other countries," stated Tumposky.

SDS hopes to examine some of the positions of the University this year. Included in that list is the position of the University concerning the war; defense department research that is done on campus; and the work of the Placement Center and ROTC in recruiting members for the armed forces.

The group also gives draft counselling and discusses the problems of racism in the white American community.

Those students who are interested in the work of SDS or who have questions concerning the organization should contact Tumposky at the SDS office, 171 Marshall Street, (above 7-Hour Cleaners) or call 476-4358.

Program focuses on social problems

WAER begins controversial 'Night Call'

This week WAER—FM began the only broadcast in central New York of the new national call-in radio program "Night Call." Guests on the show have included such controversial figures as Stokely Carmichael, Dr. Ralph Abernathy, New York City Mayor John V. Lindsay and H. Rap Brown.

Produced by TRAFCO, the Television, Radio and Film Commission of the United Methodist Church, "Night Call" will be heard Monday through Friday evenings from 11:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. Each night, host Del Shields discusses a selected issue with a nationally or internationally qualified guest, usually on long distance telephone. The audience is invited to participate by calling long distance collect.

The purpose of "Night Call" is to give persons of widely different views and backgrounds a chance to speak, to ask questions and to listen to other views. WAER program director Jason E. Squire sees the program as bringing to the surface a dialogue of social problems with guests who are responsible for trying to correct whatever unrest may exist.

"Night Call," the first nation-wide call-in radio program, began its nightly broadcasts from New York City on June 3, 1968. It is heard all over the country in such cities as San Diego, Boston, Memphis, Minneapolis and Seattle. Special equipment is used to enable the caller, the host and the guest to talk together in a normal way.

Squire termed "Night Call" one of the most daring programs on the air, both because it is broadcast live, without tape delay, and because it focuses intentionally on modern social problems.

Bringing discussion to the surface, he feels, is the first step in implementing change. Therefore, the polarization and definition of the listeners' views will be the most important contribution of the show.

Following is the "Night Call" schedule for the rest of this week:

Thursday, Sept. 19–Elizabeth Koontz, President of the National Education Association, talks on the subject, "Paternalism is Dead."

Friday, Sept. 20–Dr. J. Ed Carruthers, Association General Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church, discusses "Faith, Hope and Justice."

Projection '70

Projection '70 aids children

Projection '70 is a tutoring program which has been formed to help disadvantaged children in the Syracuse area. Established last year by the Class of 1970, its goals are to help the underpriviledged child, while giving University students a chance to become involved with the community.

The program serves more than 200 youngsters in several surrounding elementary schools. The ratio is one tutor to one tutee.

Because of its success during last year, Projection '70 has received a federal grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity. It has also gotten widespread local support and acceptance within the ghetto area.

Those students interested in working for Projection '70 should contact Bob Mussey at ext. 2046.

SU Debate Union invites speakers

By DONA BERNOLAK

Since its reorganization two years ago the SU Debate Union has set out to improve communication between students and "the establishment" by offering each side an opportunity to debate the issues. On this year's agenda three major debates, with well-known public figures as guest speakers, are planned. Chicago's Mayor Daley has been invited to discuss his city's recent disorders. Among others receiving invitations will be Ralph D. Abernathy and Arthur Goldberg.

In addition to establishing a dialogue between students and public officials, the Debate Union, coached by Director of Debate Tom Owen, will be sending its intercollegiate team to debate the topic, "Resolved: That executive control of U.S. foreign policy should be significantly curtailed." The team has been invited to M.I.T. on October 11, 12, and 13, Wesleyan University on October 18 and 19, and New York University on November 8 and 9. Invitations to the Canadian Parliamentary Program at the University of Waterloo on November 8 and 9, and Northeastern University on October 25 and 26 have also been received.

Serving as president this year is Bob Putnam with Chuck Biolock as vice-president and Paul Stavis as speaker of the union.

Where the action is in an election year

Students for Javits

A steering committee has been formed on campus to organize a student organization for Senator Jacob Javits' reelection. The committee, which is composed of Dr. Michael O. Sawyer, James Gies, Ralph Ketcham, Dave Warner, Joe Nicoletti and Andy Rosenblatt, has finished making a questionnaire. It will be distributed to students in some of the buildings and dorms and also in the Married Student Housing area.

Dave Warner commented on the purpose of the questionnaire: "The Senator wants to know what students think. He has been in the Senate for 12 years but he is not in real touch with the students. He wants to hear their ideas and know what they think about him."

One of the things that Students for Javits will do is to organize a voter-registration drive. Warner said that this is important because of the large number of students and young people who are not living in their voting areas and who will not vote this year, even though they are eligible.

In speaking about his reasons for working for Javits, Warner said, "I am committed against the war. I think that Javits will give everything that O'Dwyer would, but Javits has had the experience and will give good, responsive legislation."

Students who are interested in working for Javits or who have questions should call either Joe Nicoletti, HA2-8050 or Dave Warner, ext. 3631 or 445-0747.

Young citizens for O'Dwyer

Senator Mc Carthy might come

The "Young Citizens for O'Dwyer" is a campus group which will campaign for Democrat Paul O'Dwyer's bid for election to the United States Senate.

The group is affiliated with "Citizens for O'Dwyer," a statewide organization. Jay Abrams is the student co-ordinator of the Syracuse campus group.

Abrams, describing his organization's activities, said, "The group will canvass, distribute literature and raise money, possibly by holding a mixer. One of our main aims is to help Paul O'Dwyer out-poll Hubert Humphrey in both state and county returns.

"We want to show he can be a focal point for dissent against the course this country is following in the cities, in Vietnam, and the major political parties," continued Abrams.

Abrams, who was appointed student co-ordinator by the state chairman of the group said the Senatorial candidate will appear on the SU campus in about two weeks. He also disclosed that there is a slight possiblity Senator Eugene McCarthy might appear on the campus in support of O'Dwyer.

Any student interested in working for O'Dwyer or who have questions should contact Abrams in Lawrinson Hall.

Independents for O'Brien

A group of students on campus who care are organizaing an independent organization to support the candidacy of David O'Brien for congressman from the 34th Congressional district.

O'Brien is a new face on the local political scene today. An alumni of Syracuse University Law School, he was a former deputy county executive and former county research director. He is the youngest candidate ever to run on the Republican ticket for Congress in Onondaga County.

Scott Weiner, one of the leaders for Independent Students for O'Brien explained his support: "David O'Brien is a man who is informed and who is not afraid to seek new and better solutions to meet the problems of our nation."

Another student, Craig Baumgarten, said, "O'Brien is a man who sees the problems of today in terms of the national prospective. I'm from Chicago, but the vote of the congressman from this district affects the national policy with the same force as my own congressman.

"If we are going to institute significant policy changes on a national level, we must start in Congress. I believe that O'Brien is the best qualified to meet these problems and to look for constructive solutions," continued Baumgarten.

Any students who are interested in becoming involved in the Independent Students for O'Brien, or those who desire more information should contact Joe Niccoletti or Peter Ives at ext. 3140, Joe Treple, ext. 2792, Craig Baumgatetn, ext. 2014 or Amy Trump, ext. 2637.

Young Republicans

No internal disagreements

Syracuse University Young Republicans is an organization of individuals. The purpose of SUYR is to help get the Republican ticket elected to office, from presidential candidate Richard Nixon to the local candidate for assemblyman. However, the individual student can support any candidate of his choice.

SUYR gives students a chance to participate in the political process by voicing opinions and bringing people to campus to make the University serve as a forum.

Andy Rosenblatt, president of the Young Republicans, discussed some of the aims of the group. "We hope to do something more than just ring doorbells. It is our continuing aim to make sure that the Republicans continually orient themselves to the young people on this campus. There are 17,000 people here and they should not be over-looked."

The group has been changed slightly from last year, continued Rosenblatt. Floor captains will be chosen to represent the different living centers, and there has been no internal disagreement such as that which took place last semester.

If you are interested in joining SUYR, or if you have questions concerning the group, contact Rosenblatt at ext. 2703.

'The Case Against Congress'

Dodd and Powell not alone

By ABE WAGNER

THE CASE AGAINST CONGRESS, Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson, Simon and Schuster: $5.95

Muckrakers are seldom popular in their own times. Indeed, one has to go a long ways to find a team less popular than Drew Pearson and his protege Jack Anderson. Such popularity, at least in this case, rests with those distinguished authors who compose 'The Case Against Congress.'

Much of the notoriety that centers around Pearson & Co. stems from his expose of the Senator from Connecticut, one Thomas Dodd. Originally printed in a series of columns, the Dodd story eventually led to a Senate investigation and subsequent Senate censure of Dodd.

For the first time, Pearson and Anderson have repainted the Dodd picture in its entirety. Seen in such detailed and thorough form, the Dodd introduction suffices to set the keynote for the entire work —revulsion.

Dodd, it appears, made an honorable enough beginning, as did many of those who have achieved Congressional status, but the eventual spoils of office caught Dodd as if an infection had struck. The patron not only of the many Connecticut based insurance companies, but also of the demon rum, the good senator developed numerous proclivities which drove him to his downfall, the greatest of these being a compelling urge to live far beyond his means.

While others managed to reside with the middle class, poor Dodd felt a pressing urge to join the millionaire Harrimans and Kennedys in the finer part of Georgetown.

While others were content to fly with commercial carriers, Dodd preferred to commandeer private planes from more than willing industries. One minor episode recalls Dodd dispatching a plane to Connecticut to retrieve a briefcase his son had forgotten. This fatherly concern for his son once led Dodd to have the FBI investigate a professor who had given him a failing grade The only thing turned up by this investigation was that Tom Jr. had neglected to do his work.

This first case against Dodd is carried out almost ad absurdum. Once the fact sinks in that Dodd put friends on his Senate payroll for non-existant work to pay off personal debts, the point has been made, not only for Dodd but for his numerous colleagues who have not yet had the misfortune to be censured.

If there is any point at all to be made here, it is just this: Senator Dodd and Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, who gets his fair raking later, do not stand alone as having sold their souls. Corruption in Congress does not merely exist? it has become institutionalized. The men who we return to Washington term after term find they must become the champions of certain interest groups if they are to survive, and discover that they can do this much to their own advantage.

The introduction of the book is just that: it introduces the reader to the run of the mill 'privilages' that come with public office. The rule of thumb Pearson and Anderson have found is "anything a Congressman must make a token payment for, a Senator gets for free." Hardly a schoolboy alive doesn't know about them: Phone calls, stationary, food, cars, prime spots to park them in, postage, printing services, plane rides, and all the other goodies we sheepishly support.

Warmed up to the little "freebies," Pearson springs the big guns: Dodd, Powell, Ellander, Rivers and a host of others.

Congressman Mendell Rivers is a case worthy of special mention. As chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Rivers holds one of the most powerfull positions in America today. As a chronic drunk, he becomes what Pearson and Anderson call "America's biggest security risk." Several meetings of the Committee had to be called off because the "honorable chairman" was in the hospital following a bender.

Any case against congressional behavior would not be complete without ample coverage of foreign junkets and lobbyists. In both of these areas Pearson and Anderson deserve an A. As with the rest of the book, their work is thorough and painstaking.

The "Case Against Congress" is exactly that. The book is far too long to become an immediate bestseller, but is so complete and thorough it will probably become the definitive work on Congressional behavior for some time to come.

On the shelf over Bobby Vee

By M. JOHN ABDELMASEH

In "Crown of Creation," we see the Jefferson Airplane getting back into the surrealistic groove which propelled them to loftier levels of thought. "The House at Pooneil Corners" allows Marty Balin to illustrate his ever-maturing song writing prowess by switching and substituting words throughout the verses, the message being that more women should crawl out of their plastic cages, which were constructed by youth and strengthened by hesitancy and hypocrisy. Gracie Slick does some fine things with her voice in "Lather" and "Triad," a song composed by former Byrd brother, David Crosby. He seems to have built up his wings a bit so that he can glide alongside the Airplane. The result is a song both original in instrumentation and controversial in lyricism. "Star Track" gives Jorma Kaukonen a timely escape in which his guitar solo shows what he has done since drying himself off at Baxter's.

John Mayall's Blues Breakers have finally authorized an album which contains blues in more than one form. The originality of "Bare Wires" lies in the fact that Mayall is now relaying piercing messages to his listeners while giving them the fine blues insturmentation that has been acknowledged in the major part of his previous work. As a totality, the album reflects John Mayall in a mood of desperation, loneliness, and throbbing emotional pain. He could sing the songs in a foreign language and the listener would still realize that the man has been down, up again, and then down even further. Mayall has at last gotten down to the bare wires of life, wondered why and where they have gone wrong, looked for something or someone to untangle the wires, and, upon the realization that the solution may never appear, given us his most involved blues masterpiece. Life is a forest. Nobody knows the way.

About five years ago, when I was deeply involved with Bobby Rydell (or is it Vinton, or is it Vee) a friend asked me if I would help him sell tickets for a Chambers Brothers concert at my junior high school. I had never heard of them because I was not allowed to purchase records made by Black musicians. The American Way was really putting me on the shelf. In the past year or so, however, people everywhere have been all strung out over these amazing Chambers Brothers and their album, The Time Has Come. Their hit song, "All Strung Out," let people know that the Righteous Brothers could have been good had there been an arranger for their material. "People Get Ready" demonstrates the diversity of the Black (with white drummer) musical force with a top-heavy gospel sound. The meanest song is called "Uptown," a sound that makes the listener think Black, sleep Black, and want to be Black.

When you go to the Chambers Brothers dance on September 27, stop dancing and simply watch and listen to the song, "The Time Has Come Today." Just let it happen to you. It's incredible.

Music Events

What meaning, Mixed Media?

By MARC S. BALKIN

Students who attended Dr. Franklin Morris' Mixed Media Event last Sunday in Gifford got an idea of what to expect in future shows.

Indeed, it was a recap. There was the extensive playing of electronic music, many color and light effects, films, slides, and an improvisatory performing group. The Event also featured weirdly costumed people, either performing mystic actions on the stage, or a figure with electric-light eyes roaming through the audience, perhaps in search of his (or Her) switch. Unusual sounds prevailed, and a mummy on stage had a red light inside him which blinked on and off. One very interesting effect was the use of an overhead projector, casting images of moving, colored dyes onto the screen.

However, Dr. Morris had a comparatively small amount of time to prepare the show, and he is to be commended on the accomplishment with this limitation. It seems to me, though, that some new ideas should be tried. Perhaps a total experience involving the audience as part of an improvisatory group or an outdoor Event could be staged. Finally, one question is apparent after viewing Morris' program. Is the Event supposed to convey a total meaning to the audience? Are parts of it supposed to mean something and others nothing? Or are we to consider this simply as entertainment for entertainment's sake, without deep meaning or social comment?

To continue the preview of events begun last week, I would like to add information about two more concert series. First, there are the eight concerts being sponsored by the Syracuse Friends of Chamber Music. On September 30 the Krasner Ensemble, led by Prof. Louis Krasner, will perform works by Schoenberg and Brahms, and a vocal piece featuring soprano Helen Boatwright. Future performances include the New York Pro Musica, the Borodin Quartet from Moscow in works by Beethoven, Borodin, and Shostakovich, the Beaumont Chamber Players, the Juilliard String Quartet, and composer Aaron Copland.

The School of Music is presenting the other series, a group of Sunday Crouse Concerts. Among the artists appearing this semester are flutist John Oberbrunner, duo pianists John and Richard Contigulia, the Syracuse Woodwind Quintet, and the Elizabethan Consort from London. Concluding the concerts will be a performance on November 24 by the Syracuse University Orchestra. No Sunday Crouse Concerts will be given until October 6.

There are several events this weekend. The film "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" is continuing its run at the Regent Theatre. Opening today at the Regent Experimental Theatre is "The Crucible", a play about New England witchcraft.

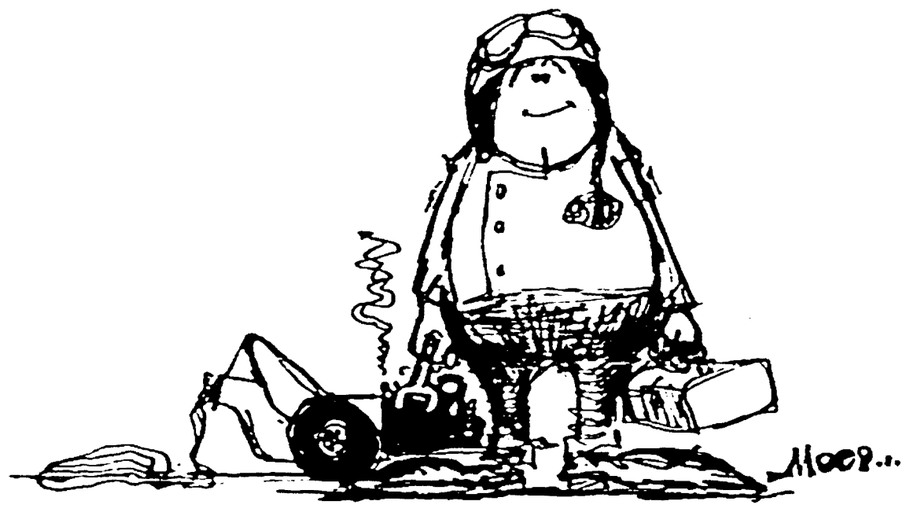
Competition is close at Watkins Glen; Detroit's '69 models are disappointing

By PETE KAPCIO

Watkins Glen, N.Y. is a small, quiet town on the tip of Lake Seneca in upstate New York. If the name sounds familar it's because several thousand Syracuse students will be in Watkins Glen October 4-6 to witness the Grand Prix of the United States. It's easily the most important auto race held in this country.

From 80 to 90 thousand people will gather at the track for Sunday's race. If you go down Friday or Saturday, take camping equipment and plenty of brew. The Glen's weekend is infamous.

For the drivers, the winner's purse is the largest on the entire Formula I circuit, $15,000—$20,000 to the winner! This guarantees that the best in the world will be there—Graham Hill, John Surtees, Denny Hulme, Bruce McLaren, and the rest. (Last year's winner Jimmy Clark was killed in Germany earlier this season.) This year's points standings for the World Driving Championship are extremely close, with Hill, Jackie Stewart, and Hulme all within six points of each other.



The exotic machinery includes the Lotus Fords improved over last year's winner, new factory Ferraris, Coopers, Brabhams, and the famous Honda car. My favorite is still Hill and his Lotus.

The '69 models are due to be released soon, and all America is holding it's breath. Too bad. Detroit's latest offerings will only be bigger, uglier, and more expensive. Chrysler has already announced increases averaging $84 a car, and Ford and GM are expected to follow. Ford is leaving the Mustang as is, but is adding a high-performance version to be called "Mach I." Standard engine is an all new 351 cubic inch V8. It is offered in several versions.

The Mercury Cougar is completely redone, and finally adds a convertible. Top-of-the-line engine for these two cars is the 428 Cobra Jet, a huge beast rated at 335 h.p.

Big news at GM is Pontiac again. The Firebird has been completely redone, but unfortunately does not include the robber bumper that was so popular on the GTO last year. Engines are basically the same, however, with only slight changes. Pontiac's Grand Prix is expected to set a new trend in styling. The wheelbase has been shortened considerably to 118 inches, and the GP has the longest hood around. In the passenger compartment, the controls wrap around the driver, giving the feeling that it's really an airplane. Handling of this new model is said to be incredible for such a large automobile.

Foreign car owners who want a new one may find that some of the favorite models have become increasingly scarce. The reason for this is that several of the quicker European makes are having trouble passing smog control laws. Ferrari has been forced to discontinue three of his models over here and others, such as Lotus, Lamborghini, and even Triumph have been hurt. U.S. Customs won't let these cars in the country unless they have been certified. Another marque that has been stopped is Ford of England's new "Escort" models. These "Super Minis" were intended to compete with V.W., Austin, MG and Opel sedans, but now won't be in the U.S. until February or so.

Black organization sees success

KAP makes plans for educational programs

A program planning committee for the King Alliance for Progress met this week and formulated its objectives for the coming year. This organization, established last spring after the assassination of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., was formed with the hopes of not only being a tribute to the slain civil rights leader, but also to make a positive contribution to his ideals.

The group, organized and run entirely by students, won the support and enthusiasm of Black students and gained the interest of numerous other individuals and organizations, both on and off campus.

One of the major goals of K.A.P. has been, and still is, to raise money in order to set up a scholarship fund for Black students. With the help of other campus groups and the work of student supporters, a considerable amount has already been raised.

Under the leadership of senior Eddie Brown, the money has been placed in a University account. Hopes are that with enough interest from students and other civic-minded organizations a large enough sum can be raised to cover at least one full four-year scholarship.

Members of the planning committee feel that with enough work, necessary funds will be acquired by this Spring for a student in the Fall semester, and they are looking into the possibilities of setting up a Black library on campus. For the time being, however, the group will put most of its efforts into gaining support and donations for a scholarship and actively seeks the help of all students who are interested and willing to work.

Jewish holidays begin this Sunday

The advent of Fall and football brings a more important significance to Jewish students at Syracuse and to Jews throughout the world. Fall marks the beginning of the Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur Holy Days.

Observance of these high Holy Days begins this Sunday, Sept. 22, with services in Hendricks Chapel at 7 p.m. Rabbi Milton H. Elefant will also conduct services at 9 a.m. and 7 p.m. on Monday, Sept. 23, and at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 24.

Rosh Hashanah is the beginning of the Jewish New Year 5729.

The Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur, is a day of fasting and abstaining from food and drink. This most sacred of Jewish Holy Days occurs Wednesday, October 2. As all Jewish holidays are measured from sundown to sundown, the most moving of Jewish services – Kol Nidre – will begin Tuesday evening at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 2, Yom Kippur observance begins at 9 a.m. and will last until sundown.

'Not in much better condition'

Student Government moves to new quarters

Student Government, recently under attack for rather dormant organization, is moving its base of "operations" to fresh quarters. John Diamond, speaker pro tempore of Student Senate, said the change in location would probably not bolster the organization's activity.

SG's original home at 406 University Place must be vacated to make room for the Fine Arts Department. Its new quarters at 125 Stadium Place is the only location currently available.

The new building is not in much better condition than the previous shack. However, rooms are larger and there is ample space for legal parking.

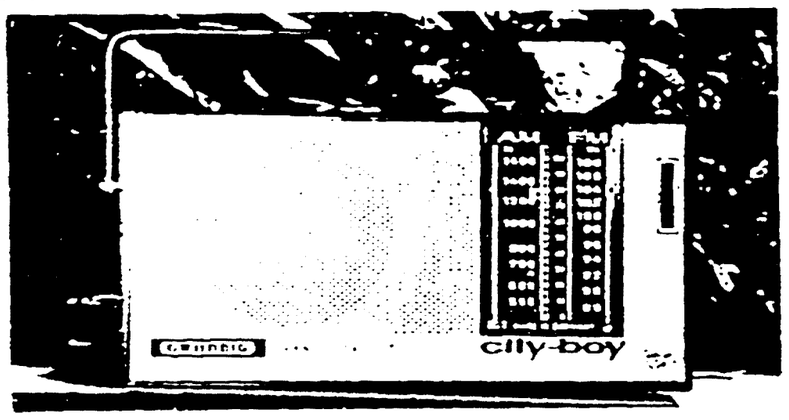
Not enough involvement

Support needed for Bill Orange award

By BOB STRUGATZ

At this time, when alienation, non-involvement, and disenchantment pose the greatest threats to new students at Syracuse University, it is necessary for these same students to instill definite goals for which to work and maintain some sort of perspective.

Long range goals such as eventual degree or career are necessary; indeed, the University student should be thusly farsighted. However, the desire to belong, to take part, if not to succumb to the trap of alienation, demands immediacy. In this respect, the Bill Orange Award is a very suitable answer.



Working for Bill Orange provides more of an answer than established organizations and clubs on campus. Already swept up in the atmosphere of a monolithic university, the new student will not find as much relief in organizations which are attracting students from all parts of the school. These will be fine at a later time, but not at the beginning. Bill Orange allows students to work for a definite goal, work in a small, exclusive group where he can establish his identity, participate with the very people with whom he probably first became friends, and build up personal spirit for the school.

As a freshman observer, I can only name a handful of dormitory floors which have shown any enthusiasm. Floors from Watson, DellPlain, and Sadler seem to be most prominent for men. For women, only Day has made any noticeable attempt. It is true that few floors house all freshmen; it is also true that older students may be exempt from the awesome feeling of alienation. But it is here I submit that older students, who have come to know what the University is all about, should try to add to the enthusiasm of the freshmen, not be apathetic toward it.

Bill Orange has also been attacked as a "goody-goody" affair. Legitimate activities such as guest speakers, Projection '70, inter-dorm ball games, and socials sponsored by individual floors are some of the best examples of possible Bill Orange projects, and are certainly well out of the "goody-goody" class.

No one is asking Bill Orange candidates to walk around with halos on their heads, nor is it conceivable to hope that every floor will want to participate. But just for the sake of becoming familiar with the fundamentals of organization, establishing a good, healthy interest in Syracuse University, and, above all, fighting a winning battle against alienation, Bill Orange is the best that can be offered.

A long time since 1870

When the first edition of the University Herald, forerunner of today's Daily Orange, the Syracuse University student newspaper, appeared on June 22,. 1872, a news story said "From letters and reports received from various sources, it seems quite probable that the incoming freshman class will be quite large."

The Herald reported the following September that of 80 freshmen who had been tested, 65 were admitted, which more than doubled Syracuse University's enrollment.

The total enrollment during the 1871-72 academic year, Syracuse's first, was 63, including five women. The freshman class was the largest with 32 members, the total sophomore enrollemnt was five, the junior class was nine strong and graduating seniors, all men, numbered 17, according to the Herald. This year's freshman class alone, which will graduate in 1970, Syracuse's centennial anniversary, numbers 2438.

The University employed eight professors in 1871, tuition was $20 per semester with "liberal loan funds available," room and board cost $3.50 to 4.50 a week, there were no dormitories and the Hall of Languages, the first of SU's academic buildings, was still under construction.

Four courses of study were offered: classical, Latin-scientific, scientific and select. The select course plan did not offer a degree. The University now offers literally hundreds of study plans.

The Herald also reported that pea green and rose pink had been adopted by the students as the official university colors.

The paper, along with a "sizable minority," expressed dissatisfaction with the selection. The opposition favored sky blue over pea green.

The color orange was never adopted officially, but sometime between 1890 and 1893 it came into use. Why and when remains a mystery to this day.

A hot issue of the day was whether the university should build and operate dormitories. Administrators took the negative but conceded, "Well, perhaps we will have to come to the dormitory system after a time," according to the Herald.

Today the University operates 11 major dormitories, built at a cost of about $27 million, which house more than 4,200 students.

The faculty now numbers about 1,300.

One Herald editorial offered this tongue-in-cheek advice to the first incoming freshman class:

"Don't smoke, chew, drink, swear or sit up with the ladies...Don't inflate yourselves with the idea that you can teach the Profs anything new. Beware of the silken tie...and touch your hats to Profs, seniors and ladies."

Another editorial read in part: "The faculty has issued a new set of rules for the government of students. In our opinion the least of this kind of castiron sway the better."

The paper reported an incident describing how certain students had applied "pigmentum nigrum" to several University signs during the night. The account of the offenders' discovery, written in mock-Elizabethan style, read:

"Morning came and a whisper ran through the camp — 'The King is greatly enraged, and all his officers.' Consternation spread over every countenance and the hosts took violently to weeping, for the order had been issued, 'Bring all the Army into the presence of the King.' They came — they went — the offenders were found out, and were inflicted with a tax. The people moreover sympathized wholly with the King."

Essay contest

There is still time to win a job on Vogue magazine in New York. The opportunity comes via Vogue's Prix de Paris, which is now under way.

This year's Prix de Paris, an annual career competition, is open to members of the Class of '69 who will graduate prior to September of 1969, receiving a bachelor of arts degree, or its equivalent, from a college or university within the United States. Rules and requirements for enrollees in the essay competition appear in the currnet issue of the magazine.

First-place winner in the Prix de Paris competition receives a year's employment with Vogue as a junior editor, and during that year will go to Paris with Vogue editors covering one of the couture collections.

experience to walk kown the street and be the only white person there. You feel really colorless."

There is much poverty in Lagos, as in any city which springs up too fast. However, even the poorest people are smiling and happy. The Vorubas, the predominate tribe in lagos, are known for their celebrations, held on every occasion.

Miss Lundquist described the food in Lagos as "spicy." Staple foods consist of rice, yams, beef cooked in palm oil, fried plantains and fruit. The people drink primarily palm wine and undistilled gin called "Push me, I push you."

In Miss Lundquist's opinion, the main problem in Nigeria was the need for revaluating the education system, which is left over from Nigeria's days as a British colony. However, the university system is very advanced, including some of the best schools in Africa. In addition to beautiful, new buildings, the courses of study are geared to the needs of the people. Courses are given in such vital areas as agriculture, economics and business. Miss Lundquist commented that many people educated abroad cannot fit into the society, sincethey are not British, but no longer Africans.

Miss Lundquist found herself in a country which was torn by civil war, as the federal Nigerians fought to bring Biafra back into the country. "It was very frightening," she said, "to see the soldiers and to be continually questioned and asked to show our passports.

We were continually reminded of the war by posters asking for support, one minute spots on TV and, of course, the soldiers and guns." There were no streetlights in Lagos for fear of bombings by Ojukwa, the leader of Biafra.

Nelon is new head of ROTC

Col. Claude R. Nelon, who in 1951 helped establish Syracuse University's Russian Language program for military personnel, has returned as head of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC). Nelon succeeds Lt. Col. Richard E. Hansen as professor of aerospace studios.

Hansen, at Syracuse since 1966, has been assigned to pilot duty in Vietnam.

Nelon received his bachelor's degree from Syracuse in 1951 at the conclusion of a two-year tour of duty at the University. Earlier this month he was graduated from the Academic Instructors Course at Air University, Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama. At the graduation exercises he was awarded a second Oak Leaf Cluster to the Commendation Medal for meritorious service as Deputy Chief of Staff for Operation at Headquarters Strategic Air Command.

A 26-year veteran of military service, he was a B-17 pilot stationed in England during World War II, and was a bomber pilot in the Korean Conflict. He has been a squadron commander and a maintenance officer, and has attended Command and Staff College and United States Air Force Flying Safety School. He was commissioned as an officer after graduation from the Aviation Cadet program in 1944.

He is married to the former Helen Ganey of Rockport, Mass. They have seven children.

Intramurals

Entries for fall intramurals must be in the Intramural Office by noon Monday.

ROTC roster

Enrollment of Syracuse University Air Force ROTC cadets was listed yesterday as 285 for the Fall term. According to Col. Claude R. Nelson, professor of Aerospace Studies, ROTC ranks include 123 freshmen, 89 sophomores, 37 juniors and 36 seniors.

SU's Air Force ROTC program is a four-year course. Membership for the first two years is completely voluntary, giving cadets an opportunity to evaluate the program and Air Force routines. During the final two years, selected members are permitted to enlist in the Air Force Reserve and are entitled to pay and other benefits, pending their graduation and commissioning.

Cadets take one hour of drill each week and one to three hours of academic subjects.

Harriers face Buffalo

Grieve hoping for new win streak

By DOUG GARR

Coach Bob Grieve's harriers kick off the cross-country season this Saturday in a dual meet against Buffalo at the Drumlins Country Club Course. The freshman meet is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. with the varsity meet to follow immediately.

Grieve plans to start only three returning lettermen on his eight man squad. Only Larry Zuller, Dave Crans and Bill Swift offer the Orange experience, while the other five members are untested sophomores. They include Phil Riposo, Dale Parfitt, Steve Billman, Don Kunz and Ken Frankel.

Grieve suffered his first losing season last year when the harriers posted a disappointing 3-4 record. This year they have the same schedule, including duals with Alfred, Penn State, Cornell and Army. Grieve says, "Army figures to be the toughest, as they're always in shape and the meet is on their home course." He declined to predict results of any of the upcoming meets because he has a "lot of quantity and no idea of the quality."

The freshman cross-country squad numbers at least sixteen with top prospects Andy Hurry, Bob Quinlan, Mark Sanberg, Bob Ortwine, Jim Vermeulen and Tom Stoyan. Although there is a new NCAA rule in effect that allows freshmen to compete in varsity competition in minor sports there will be two separate schedules for varsity and freshmen. Freshman meets are three miles and the varsity runs the official five miles.

"What makes Tony so valuable," comments Ben, "is that he is as tough against the running game as he is the passing."

Joining Kyasky in the defensive backfield will be Cliff Ensley and Tom Hermanowski. Ensley led the Hillmen with 6 interceptions last year, while Hermonowski stole a big one in the UCLA game.

The defensive line is big and experienced. Gerry Beach will anchor the line at middle guard. The tackles are Art Thoms, another potential All-American, and soph Ray White. Steve Zegalia and Lou Gubitosa will be at the ends.

Ben may very well do a lot of shuffling at linebacker throughout the game. Don Dorr and Bob Bancroft seem healthy and set at starting berths. The third starter may be Jack Protz or Jerry Ruccio, both sidelined with injuries this week. If neither can make the openning kickoff, Bob Rust will be called into action. Bob Schoonmaker, a soph, may also be used.

It will take more than one game to determine the strength of this year's Orange squad, but a lot of questions should be answered in East Lansing tomorrow afternoon.

All freshmen baseball candidates should report dressed for practice Monday at 4 p.m. in the Field House locker room.

Book on science teaching

William D. Romey, associate professor of geology and science education at Syracuse University, has written a new book, "Inquiry Techniques for Teaching Science," published by Prentice-Hall.

According to the publishers, the book "encourages science educators to experiment, actively and constantly, with techniques and curriculum material. It stimulates the reader to be a creative teacher – one who insists on trying new approaches which find students responding as active participants in the classroom, rather than passive receivers of conclusions provided by the teacher."

Romey said the book is an outgrowth of his own science methods course at Syracuse. "At first my colleagues and I taught it as a lecture course," he said. "In a short while we were convinced that our goal of encouraging the use of discovery techniques of teaching and learning could hardly be reached by practicing the opposite of what we preached. Consequently, I have been trying to use a discovery approach in teaching the methods course itself. The object of the course is to force each student to develop his own curriculum materials

Romey, who holds a Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley, has been a consultant in charge of the Earth Science Curriculum Project Testing Center at Syracuse. He has helped to develop advanced methods of teaching earth science in the junior high school and has been involved in many in-service science workshops.

Orange, Spartans set to open

60,000 due in Michigan

By LARRY CENTER

Michigan State hopes to return to its traditional winning ways after a disastrous 3-7 season when it opens the 1968 football campaign against the Orangemen tomorrow. That 3-7 record is deceptive, though, as MSU lost to bowl teams USC and Indiana by only four points.

Although school is not yet in session at East Lansing, a crowd of over 60,000 is expected in Spartan Stadium. A big gate will result, however, from selling tickets that would otherwise have gone to students.

The Spartans will be facing Syracuse for the first time in 17 years. Back in 1952, they routed SU, 48-7. Michigan State has been installed as an eight-point favorite by the Associated Press.

Syracuse has a minimum amount of knowledge about the Michigan State strategy. State usually plays a multiple offense with emphasis on variations of the "I." Coach Ben Schwartzwalder has said, however, that "they had a closed spring practice," and that "we can expect any number of offensive formations."

Coach Ted Dailey elaborated: "They could have 14 different sets. Last year they ran from a straight—T, regular flanker, slot back, pro set, split backfield and also used an eight-man line with three backs."

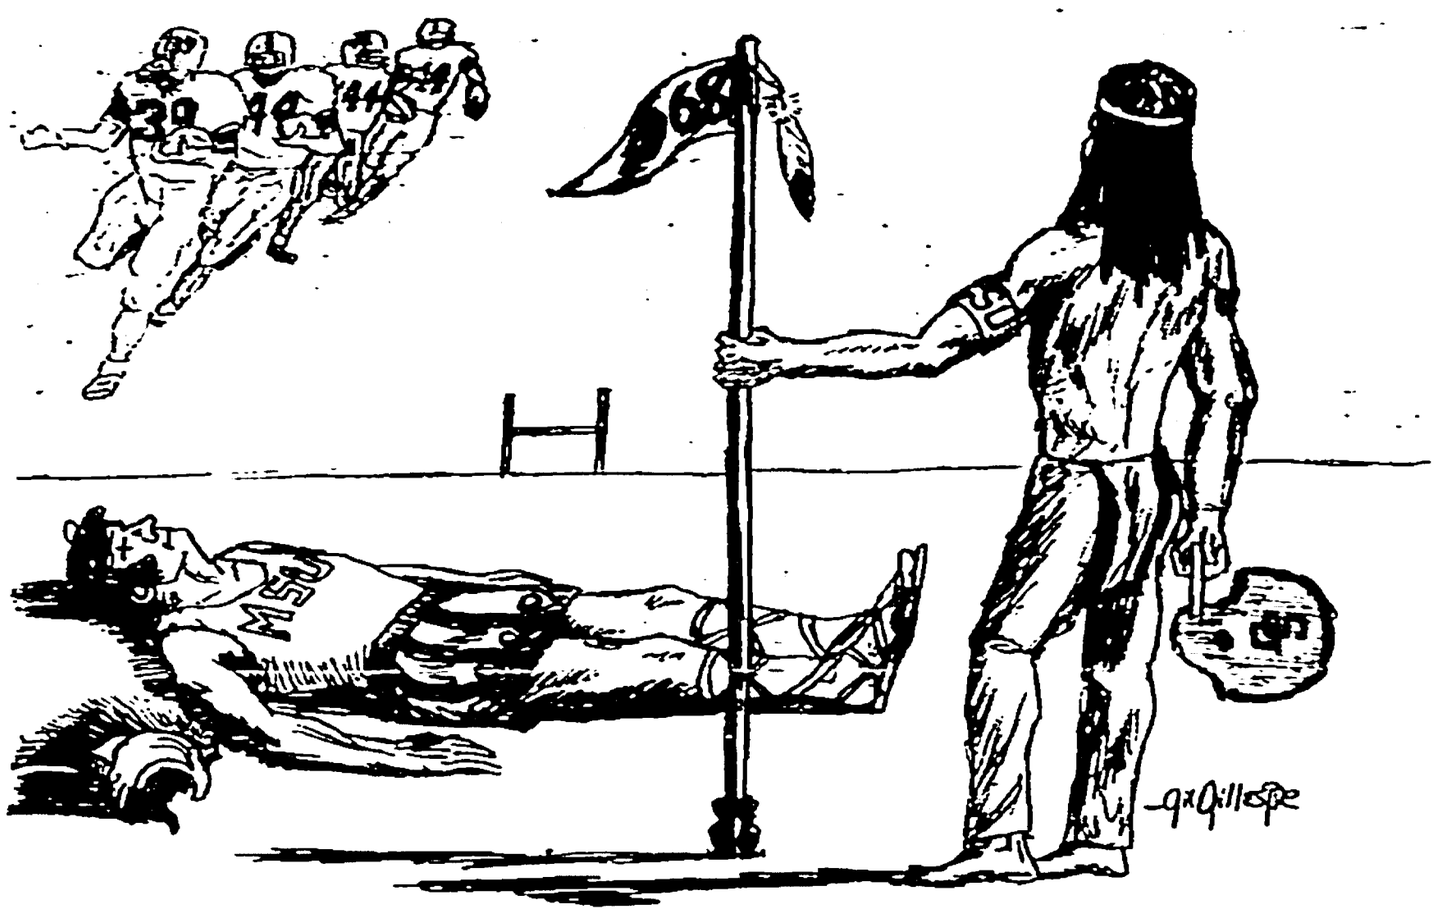
"The number of formations will give a tipoff on what he (Duffy Daugherty) thinks of his team," Ben said. "If there are few, he'll be depending on execution, which is what wins football games."

Leading the varied offense will be senior quarterback Bill Feraco, the only signal-caller with experience. Behind Feraco will be a relatively "green"group of backs; sophomore Tom Love, Dick Berlinski and Charlie Wedemeyer.

Love was given his chance at tailback when LaMarr Thomas, considered a sure starter, was forced out of action with a sprained knee. Although inexperienced, Love, at 6'2" and 195 lbs., will pose problems with his 9.6 speed. Senior Berlinski returns following knee surgery and tiny Hawaiian Wedemeyer, after subbing at quarterback for two years, is getting his first shot at flanker. Behind these boys are speedster Don Highsmith, who scored three touchdowns in a scrimmage two weeks ago, and Regis Cavender.

Coach Dailey says that, although Daugherty has "lost most of his offensive line, he has replaced them with big, aggressive boys." The lone first stringer on the line back from last fall is right guard Ron Saul. The other guard will be senior Don Baird. Eddy McLoud, a 6'2" senior is at center, with juniors Dave VanElst and Craig Wycinsky at tackles.

The average size of this line is better than State's offensive line has boasted recently. Spartan line coach Gordie Serr says, "We are young and inexperienced, but we are physically and mentally tough. We have good size and overall ability."



Operating on the outside of this line will be tight end Frank Foreman, and at split end, All-American candidate Allen Brenner, who has great hands and good speed.

The Spartan defense is usually set up with a five or six-man line and a three or four-deep backfield with the roverback adjusting. Sometimes they will come with a safety blitz.

The biggest spring practice experiment was to use wide receivers on defense. Frank Waters, the first-string halfback last year, joins Brenner as a starter in the defensive backfield. Veteran Ken Heft starts with them.

The Spartans, says Dailey, will have a "strong defensive line that averages about 6'3" and 230 lbs." On this line will be veteran tackles Charlie Bailey and Dick Benedict, ends Ken Little and soph Wilt Martin, and middle guard Jack Zindel. At linebackers will be Rich Saul, Ron's twin, and Don Law, with newcomer Gary Parmentier at roverback.

At the start of spring drills, Duffy Daufgerty said, "We have few losses from our 1967 senior group that will hurt us. Some sophomores will help. If we can stay healthy and have some playing luck, we should show some improvement over last season." Tomorrow the Orangemen will be out to delay that improvement by at least one game.

A poem for fall seasons

Coach Ben begins his twentieth year
Of football at Syracuse.
He's as cunning as the proverbial fox,
He doesn't know how to lose.

With the opening game just one day away.
The Orange are set for the kill.
It looks like Schwartzwalder's magic has built
Another powerhouse team on the Hill.

Running the show at the QB spot
Are Paul Paolisso and Panz.
Whatever they throw soph Gabriel grabs
Just like he had glue on his hands.

In strong and stocky soph Al Newton
Is SU's next great back.
His running mates are Bulicz and Trask
And Tricky Dicky Bidlack.

Fusco, Pritzlaff, Vogt, and McCard
Make the offensive line look sound.
If anyone dares to get in their way
They are brutally hurled to the ground.

Big Art Thoms heads murderers row
Their muscle has no peer.
Ziggy and Gub and Beach and White
Charge like a herd of wild steer.

The linebackers' quick and bruising play
Is why the defense clicks.
When Bancroft and Dorr and Protz dig in
They hit like a ton of bricks.

All American Tony Kyasky
Leads the defensive backfield troop.
Ensley and Herm complement Tony Ky
Like matzoh balls enhance chicken soup.

They're going to East Lansing town
To kick off sixty-eight.
Let's go Orange, whaddya say --
CLOBBER MICHIGAN STATE!!!

SU is wary of TV test

By IRA SILVERMAN

Friendship backfired last year for Michigan State coach Duffy Daugherty, and SU grid fans hope history will repeat itself tomorrow.

Duffy scheduled the University of Houston as the Spartans' opening game opponents on their 1967 schedule because the Cougar coach, Bill Yoeman, had once been his assistant. Houston, however, forgot old friendships and thoroughly thrashed MSU, 37-7.

This year Daughtery's Spartans open against his old alma mater in the ninth renewal of a series begun in 1917. State leads in victories, 5-3.

The game will be televised locally on WNYS, Channel 9; with the pre-game festivities beginning at 1:30.

The starting quarterback assignment for SU may not be decided until gametime. Neither Rich Panczyszyn nor Paul Paolisso has been outstanding in pre-season drills, although Schwartzwalder is leaning towards the better passer, Paolisso, at the moment. Both, however, are scheduled to see a great deal of action. Third-stringer soph Randy Zur may also be used before the afternoon is over.

The success of the Orange offense this year may very well lie on the shoulders of this year's No. 39, soph fullback Al Newton. Newton, at 6 feet, 220 pounds, will be joined in the backfield by another soph, Ron Trask, and senior John Bulicz. Trask, who was converted from wingback to quarterback last spring, seems to have finally found a home at tailback. Dick Bidlack, who was slated to see action at tailback, too, will miss the game due to an ankle injury.

Bulicz, the only senior in the starting backfield, will be at wingback. Bill During, who was pencilled in the backfield also, will be out nursing an injured knee.

With end Dennis Kleinbach also out with a knee injury, most of the pass receiving duties will be up to Tony Gabriel and John Massis. Massis will be the most experienced receiver on the field for the Orange tomorrow, having caught 6 passes last year for 95 yards and 2 TD's.

The rest of the offensive line is inexperienced, and here is where much of the season's troubles may lie. Replacing All-East selection Jim Murphy at at center will be Gerry Vogt. Dave McCard and Jim Pritzlaff will be the guards, with Andy Fusco working from the inside tackle slot and John Cherundolo from outside tackle.

It is when Ben talks about his defense, though, that a little smile comes to his face. SU finished 4th in the nation in total defense last year, and first on stopping kick-off returns. Most of that squad returns, led by All-America candidate, Tony Kyasky. "Tony Ky" had four interceptions in '67, but is important in other ways, too.

SU plans unique venture with branch in Venezuela

By GREGORY SMITH

In an effort to "encourage understanding of the functioning of government and industry and how they interact," SU's Maxwell School of Public Administration is cooperating in the opening of a graduate school for higher administration studies in Caracas, Venezuela.

The school, known as Instituto De Estudios Superiores De Administracion (IESA), or Institute of Advanced Administrative Studies, is slated to open Oct. 1, according to Dr. John Honey, professor of political science and chairman of the Maxwell Latin American Studies School.

SU joins Northwestern University, the University of Chicago, Cornell University and Harvard University in the plan. The institute is the first overseas center established by a group of U. S. universities.

"Syracuse University's contribution," stated Dr. Honey, "is in that our faculty will be training faculty for the graduate school.

"In almost every modernizing country there is a shortage of capable managers and administrators. We are attempting to alleviate this situation in Venezuela," he said.

"The program was begun four or five years ago by the Creole Foundation. They contacted the Ford Foundation Latin American program and requested a financial grant," continued Dr. Honey.

Ford granted approximately $1 million with negotiations still under-way for further money. The Venezuelan business community pledged $3.5-million for IESA.

The Creole Foundation, a foundation created by the Creole Corporation, a subsidiary of Standard Oil, also contacted the United States Agency for International Development (AID) for help. AID is contributing $100,000 for the establishment of a library, including technical assistance on its construction and the training of librarians.

Realizing that IESA's faculty would have to be groomed in the U.S., the Ford Foundation initiated an advisory committee taken from colleges with well-known schools of business and public administration. Dr. Honey is the Syracuse member of the panel.

Syracuse and the Ford Foundation, in Dr. Honey's words, "talked for a long time before coming to agreement." Dr. Stephen Bailey, dean of the Maxwell School, spoke with the Ford Foundation in August, 1967 and finalized plans.

In early January, 1968, Dr. Honey and other members of the advisory committee traveled to Venezuela and interviewed prospective IESA faculty members who would come to the U.S. and study. The committee also worked on curriculum and "reviewed and revised all plans from the library, to the buildings, to the tuition."

Fifteen Venezuelans are now studying or have studied in the U.S. and more are due. Noel Key and Ildemaro Marinez, both candidates for a doctorate in public administration, are studying at SU.

Commented Key, "The institute will play a key role in the development of managerial

MAYOR JOHN V. LINDSAY

Lindsay depicts split nation, calls for solutions, reforms

By BETH HILLSON

New York City's Mayor, John V. Lindsay, described the nation as one of unrest, split by anger and antagonism in a speech to the Onondaga County Republicans' Annual Bonanzaree Friday night at Syracuse War Memorial.

The strong enthusiasm of students filling the balconies of the auditorium contrasted somewhat with the smothered response from Syracuse Republicans to the new breed Republican's proposals to end the war and support the young people's movement.

In his delayed appearance in Syracuse (held over by the City's current teachers' strike) Lindsay endorsed Republican congressional candidate, David O'Brien, following a much diminished support of Presidential nominee, Richard Nixon.

Lindsay, apparently directing his statements to Nixon and other conservatives, called for the preservation of the basic liberties of all Americans, those of expression and action.

He explained that "this seems to be a year in which almost any demagogue who can gain access to a platform can bring down the house by promising to beat up the hippies, delcare martial law in the slums, jail the militants, shut up the intellectuals, tear gas the demonstrators and expel the students.

"I hope we never enter a period of history in which we punish people for being different, for disagreeing with the majority, for speaking out against corruption or hypocrisy," Lindsay announced.

He attributed the country's greatness to the enormous freedom of action and expression and to the "unparalleled diversity of individual ideas and beliefs."

Lindsay criticized the police action which results from civil disorders. Referring to the Presidential Commission on Civil Disorders, he explained that the split in our nation cannot be mended if violence is met with violence.

"We've seen what happens when we fight disorder with machine guns and tanks. They may stop a riot, but they've never rebuilt a slum," he observed.

He porposed a quick and honorable settlement to the war and called the violent action taken against civil disorder as

Biafran conflict discussed by student who was there

By ELLEN BILOFSKY

While other SU students followed the Biafran conflict through news media this summer, Barbara ("Omar") Lundquist observed the controversial civil war from a personal vantage point.

Miss Lundquist, a first-year graduate student, was on the scene as a participant in the "Operation Crossroads Africa" program.

Miss Lundquist found herself in a country torn by internal battles, as federal Nigerians fought to bring Biafran rebels back into the nation.

"It was very frightening," she recounts, "to see the soldiers and to be continually questioned and asked to show our passports. We were always reminded of the war by posters asking for support and one-minute spots on TV."

Streetlights in Lagos had to be kept out for fear of bombings by Ojukwa, the leader of Biafra.

"Personally, I feel that both sides are wrong," Miss Lundquist explained, "but neither will give in.

"I feel Ojukwa was wrong in the beginning, because I don't think secessionsim is the answer to any country's problems. What is left of Biafra is not even one-quarter of its original size. I have a feeling the war will end shortly because the federal government has decided that peace talks will just not work."

Originally, the government had hoped to avoid killing what they considered fellow-Nigerians (Biafra is not a recognized word; Ibos are referred to as Eastern Nigerians) by settling the conflict with peace talks. However, Miss Lundquist said, three attempts were unsuccessful.

The theme of the people is, "To keep Nigeria one, that is the task that must be done." They want she explained, only to see the war end and to keep the country intact. Ojukwa's reason for carrying on the war, she said, is fear that those who have migrated to Biafra will never be accepted back into Nigeria.

In reference to atarving children, Miss Lundquist stated, "the children in recaptured federal Nigerian territory are receiving food and aid. Relief supplies are now being sent in on neutralized air strips."

The civil war in Nigeria characterizes what Miss Lundquist feels is the biggest problem Africa faces – tribalism. The need is to create a spirit of the nation, rather than of the tribe. "I personally hope," she said, "the war will end very soon and that Nigeria can once again be one."

Our new publication schedule

Yes. It's true. We don't want to go to the plant on Sunday.

Nor do we wish to continue to work within the rigid structure in which we have been trapped in the past. If we wanted to present an in-depth report of the 1968 election, it was impossible. If we wanted to publish a book review section or a literary supplement of fiction by SU students, it was unthinkable.

In the past the Daily Orange published three or four eight page editions a week consisting of a sports page, and editorial page, a front page of news, and five pages of advertising. Likewise, special supplement sections in the past consisted of a cover of editorid material and three pages of advertising.

The Daily Orange operates on a dollars-and-cents basis. This year we will receive $7,000 from the University and we expect to raise $58,000 through advertising revenues. (If we actually do receive money from the undergraduate general student fee, it is less than $1 per student.)

We knew dropping the Monday edition would be an unpopular decision. (The only staff member to share responsibility for this decision is the editor-in-chief.)

Nevertheless by dropping the Monday edition, we will be able to print larger papers with lower ad levels on days when news is generated through the week.

One dilemma we must deal with is the news-producing weekend. If an excellent speaker comes to campus Friday night, if a major concert is stages or an important football game is played, we have a duty to cover it.

In addition, we would like to establish a principle that to date has been excluded from the rigid Daily Orange financial structure. If our advertising sales exceed the amount we are expected to raise when the budget is drawn up, the additional money goes as profit into University coffers. Although this rarely occurs, we would like the chance to return extra money we earn to the newspaper.

We have long wished to publish special editions on Homecoming Weekend, Parents Weekend, and other special occasions during the academic year. Special editions were not possible under the former financial structure.

We are now planning a special edition for Campus Chest weekend October 5. Also, we would like to publish special editions on Monday after news producing weekends.

Any extra editions will have to be printed on a pay-as-you-go basis. If we cannot raise advertising revenue for a special edition, we will not be able to print it. On the other hand, if we do raise money for special editions, the extra money will be used to increase our service to the University, rather than as profit to the University.

At the end of our publishing year frustration of letting over fifteen major feature stories go unpublished. Under the revised schedule we shall find space for such material and gain the chance to experiment and innovate.

The Promethean's criticism has prompted us to state our objectives more directly. In turn, we offer a criticism of the Promethean. A critical analysis of a decision, if it won't consider the opposite point of view (admittedly an intellectual process), might at least hinge on a more significant point than "the editors of the DO want to have Sunday afternoon off."

"Each of you will be issued this air meter to be worn at at all times. For this service you will be charged only $15 a month."

More for less

Goldfinger vs. SU

By Abe Wagner

Editor's Note: The following was written by the editorial director in conjunction with members of the current fifth year architecture class. Any questions or comments to these students may be addressed to Abe Wagner.

Last Spring, the Architectural School was confronted with what seemed a rather difficult moral dilemma. For the first time in a number of years, it was forced to deal with a situation involving professional ethics, artistic license and alleged academic dishonesty.

The situation involved a fourth year design project concerned with a redevelopment area in Newark, N.J. The scope of the project was such that a team approach was employed, each team being assigned to develop a community center for the Newark area. The final designs, developed a community center for the Newark area. The final designs, developed over an eight week period were presented to a jury of unique composition. Made up of four students and two faculty members, the jury had been structured so that the students could in fact override faculty grading.

Two days subsequent to the jury's meeting, it was discovered that the project which had received the highest honors for both its design and rather impressive presentation had seemingly been plagarized from a professional journal.

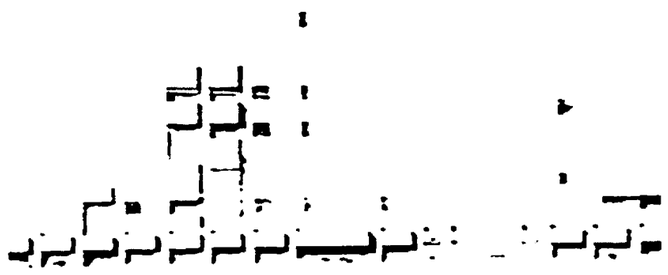
The jury was immediately recalled and the case of Long Island architect "Myron Goldfinger vs. two Syracuse Architectural students and friend" was re-opened.

A rather ambiguous and amorphous explanation was offered by the accused offenders, who pleaded their case for "nothing in life being really black and white," the meaning of which has yet to be discerned.

The unanimous consensus of the four student jury members was that a grade should be given such that it would be manditory for the students involved to merely repeat the second semester of the fourth year design sequence. This would allow them to exhibit a professional capability of their own, and at the same time preserve whatever ethical standards this academic institution seeks to maintain.

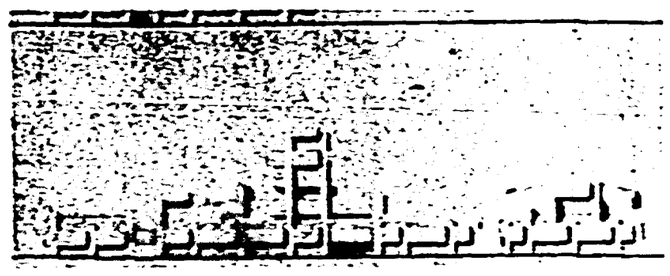
The final outcome of this saga remains somewhat of a mystery, since the matter was clandestinely taken care of by a non-commital faculty- administration panel, noticeably missing any students as had adjudged the other members of the class.

Apparently the incident was judged by them as being nothing more than student exhuberance in impinging upon Goldfinger's artistic license, without any particular moral or academic implications, for students who will be practicing architects in another year.



The outcome, or lack thereof, since the alleged incident has resulted in no punative action or censure of any type, presents a difficult context for students to evade a professional code at a purely academic level.

At the very least it would seem appropriate for a generally highly critical faculty to present in public, not only a professional but an administrative stand on such matters. This would allow an open dialogue to exist about unilateral reasoning on such matters. Allowing what appears as a direct reflection on the academic reputation of Syracuse to pass by merely because of an expedient "don't rock the boat attitude" cannot in good conscience be sustained.



In a sense, the integrity of faculty decisions is also at issue here. Having empowered a student-faculty jury to make decisions, and upon seeing the power used in a manner they felt was not appropriate, or possibly self-revealing, they removed the sham of authority from it.

Many questions now arise from this delicate matter which had the misfortune of falling into the abyss of summer recess. Until these questions are answered, a moral debt remains to those who are embittered and disenfranchised by the events that took place.

SU's Student Court commences its hearings for Fall semester

By DAVID ROBBINS

Under the experienced hands of Chief Justice Paul Snyder, the Student Court of Syracuse University swung into session at 7 p.m. last Thursday in the Chapel House.

Priding themselves in the fact that, "The Judicial Board is completely detached in fact as in appearance from student spoltical entanglements," they continue in their main aim to administer unbiased rulings on all court cases.

In the realm of representation from the upperclasses, the Seniors have five members, Paul Snyder, Mike Mayer, Paula Sullivan, Ronnie Shorenstein and Arthur Koch. The Juniors include John Nickulas, Marsha Zadorozny and Michael Shapiro. Three new sophomores round out the list, Steven Huffler, David Cohen and Carol Swanson.

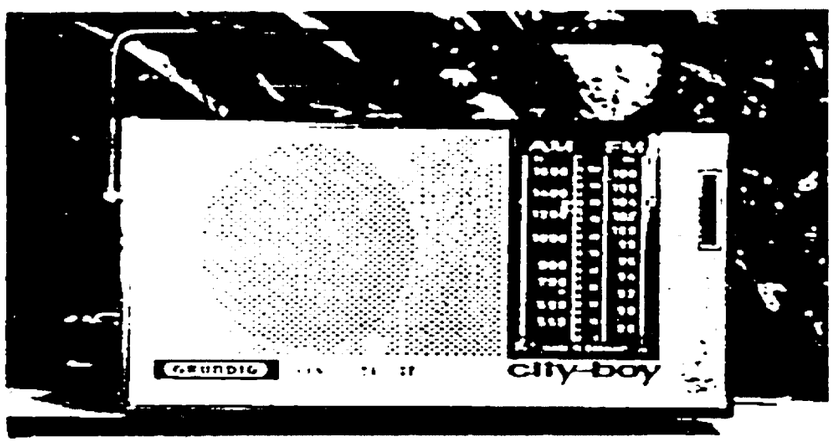
In an overall look of court cases last year, Snyder noted that 15 percent of the defendants were found innocent and that in some cases the penalties for infractions in the social regulations were lower than what the administration itself might have decreed upon the students. Snyder mentioned, however, that the court took a harder line in the situations where other students had suffered from the defendant's actions.

Testing available

New program for adults opens

SU has started participating in a national testing program designed to provide a new chance for adults who did not attend college.

Donald H. Piron, administrator at the Psychological Testing Center, will offer monthly tests to help adults evaluate their educational accomplishments and obtain recognition for them.



The tests are part of the College-Level Examination Program (CLEP) of the College Entrance Examination Board. According to Piron, they are designed primarily to serve men and women who have furthered their education through independent study, correspondence courses, on-the-job training, evening school or other "non-traditional" forms of study, Many colleges are also using the CLEP tests to evaluate students with more traditional academic preparation.

Over three hundred colleges and universities have agreed to consider CLEP test scores as a basis for granting credit to those who have not been formally enrolled as students, but now wish to seek a college degree. Various employers and agencies use the CLEP tests to offer an alternate route to better jobs which had once been available only to those with formal college training. The use of CLEP scores varies from institution to institution.

Two kinds of tests are available within CLEP. The general examinations measure an individual's achievement in broad areas of knowledge. They are not based on specific college courses, but rather seek to cover the broad scope of studies required of most students during their first two years of college. The general examinations are complemented by a number of subject examinations which are designed to evaluate an individual's accomplishment in the area of a specific college course. Tests are offered in subjects ranging from Analysis and Interpretation of Literature to Money and Banking. Registration materials and descriptions of the examinations are available at no charge from Piron at 102 Sims.

Although the College-Level Examination Program is a relatively new endeavor, it is opening up opportunities for those previously denied a chance simply because they did not attend college. Based on their performance on CLEP, individuals have been promoted to positions requiring a college background. Other men and women have received college credit on the basis of their CLEP scores, and thus shortened the time it will take them to receive their college degree.

Seniors offered chance to 'meet' Placement Center

By KAY CHRISTENSEN
Associate Editor

Job opportunities and other service information will be presented to interested students at the annual Senior Convocation on Wednesday night in Hendrick's Chapel.

Sponsored by the Senior Class, the convocation is an opportunity for seniors to become acquainted with the services provided by SU's Placement Center.

The presentation will begin at 6:30 p.m. to avoid interference with other activities and will continue for approximately 45 minutes.

Up-to-date information on employers, graduate schools, and military service are offered by the Placement Service. George Abbott, Director of University placement, will explain these and other services of the Placement Center. Counselors are available with whom students can talk about their careers.

"Any Senior who is at all interested in discussing his future career plans or needs assistance ought to come to see us," said Director Abbott. Proceedures on how to register for the Placement Center will be illustrated at the convocation.

Barry Randell, senior class president, emphasized attendance at the Convocation by saying, "It's a must for all Seniors."

"Every Senior should be aware of the kind of knowledge the Placement Center has so he can take advantage of it," he added.

Football posters

Frosh, show your psych and get points for the Bill Orange Trophy by bringing a sign to football games. This year, signs will be permitted in the Placard Cheering section and one or two will also be put up at the ends of the Stadium.

Placard Cheering signs must be either paper or cloth and not more than five feet high. They can be displayed before the game, at half-time and at time-outs. Signs to be hung at the ends of the Stadium must be cloth and must fit the area. Only signs displaying pep and identifying the sponsors will be considered. Each entry must be accompanied by a 3x5 inches index card which is a replica of the sign. Only approved signs can be brought into the Stadium.

All signs for the Maryland game must be turned in by midnight, Wednesday, September 25 at 113 College Place. Approved signs can be picked up Saturday, September 28 between 9 and 10 a.m. Winners of Placard Cheering signs will be announced at the game, and winners of signs to be hung will be on display during the game.

and administrative people for Venezuela."

Martinez remarked, "This school is going to have the complete support of both the public and private sector in my country."

IESA, whose president is Dr. Santiago Vera, former rector of the Central University in Caracas, will have a beginning faculty of both visiting and native instructors and will present a two-year masters degree program. It will open with 35 students.

"The institute will be offering a broad training in the social sciences, economics, politics, history, sociology, etc. while focussing on Venezuela," explained Dr. Honey. "The students will learn the way in which go vernment controls, influences, and modifies business, and the way business is dependent on government through subsidies, taxes, and the like." Dr. Honey considers the first-year course "Government-Business Relationships in Venezuela" to be the pivotal curricular offering.

Concluded Dr. Honey, "Our hope is that this will be a very distinguished school of public and business administration, and when it gets its full complement of 100 students it will turn out enough graduates to serve the needs of Venezuela."

TV panel

Does society need or want creative individuals?

This is one question scheduled to be discussed on local TV by a group of noted pre-school education authorities, indlucing Miss Dorothy Kavalcik, a research assistant at SU's Center for Early Childhood Education.

Miss Kavalcik will join the other panelists at 9 a.m., Oct. 1, on WCNT's hour-long program, "Creativity and the Pre-School Child."

An ugly word sees its end of usefulness

EDITOR'S NOTE: Lew Howell, a graduate student in international relations, will observe the contemporary scene as a Daily Orange columnist.

The word "racist" has just about reached the end of its usefulness in current American speech. It used to be that a racist was that southern red-neck who called blacks "boy" and shot them if they went to school.

Then someone added those whites who had never shot a black in their lives but who just didn't want their children to go to school with them. Soon were added those whites who went along with school integration but still didn't feel that they had to live near blacks. Then the whites who were willing to live near blacks too, but didn't want their children to marry outside their "religion."

Next, the term "racist" included those white liberals who had spent twenty years working for civil rights but who still had white friends. Finally the term began to include assorted blacks who had an opinion about the race situation in America, those who decided that perhaps they didn't want their children in a 'white school,' and of course those blacks who called whites "whitey" and shot them if they went down the wrong street. Consequently, a "racist pig" is anyone who doesn't think the way you do and "racists" include just about everyone.

Of what use is the word any more? How can one convince a workman who tells jokes about the "coons" that there is something inherently prejudicial in his feelings toward blacks and that, in the long run, his feelings and those of many others like him promise nothing but disaster for American society? By calling him a racist? He would probably note — if his anger could be contained for the moment — that he believes in God, that he lives in an integrated neighborhood, that his children go to the same school as "they" do, and that he will punch you in the mouth if you call him a racist again.

The situation of this fictitious workman, nevertheless, represents a dilemma in which much of American society — both black and white, and probably yellow and brown as well — finds itself: facing and overcoming the exaggerated racial awareness that has been built into them through hundreds of years of stagnated cultural identity and even more hundreds of years of religious condescension, without seeing their world and their beliefs completely destroyed.

The word "racist" is now being used for name-calling and serves only to alienate the groups and individuals which fire it at each other. It creates confusion in that everyone thinks it refers to the other guy but not to himself. Its use causes one to forfeit the opportunity of bringing about an understanding of what racial antagonism is all about and exactly who is involved.

There is no question that racial prejudices and subsequent antagonism permeate much of American society. It is not just the problem of a small minority. But little can be changed or achieved in any society by attempting to alienate the vast majority. Continued use of the word "racist" will bring about neither self-awareness nor a willingness for accommodation in a society where its meaning is always derogatory and it refers to almost everyone.

Hendricks Chapel set as site of political forum

By MARK HERWEG

A chance for SU students to express their views in this year of politics will be offered Thursday by the Citizens for Nixon in conjunction with Young Republicans of Onondaga County.

At 2 p.m. in front of Hendricks Chapel, Bill Flynn, a campaign aid to Richard Nixon, the Republican nominee for the presidency, will speak. Also on the program will be student leaders and faculty members from the campus community to contribute their views.

Opening remarks will be followed by an open forum at which any student may express his political riews regardless of his leanings.

Each speaker will be limited so that they may be recorded. It is hoped that these recordings will be presented to staffs of the major political candidates and that any questions posed will receive written replies.

This program is aimed specifically at college students across the country, with Syracuse University being one of the first stops on the tour. Flynn will be coming directly from Harvard Law School where a similar program is to be held on the preceding day. The group will also visit Cornell University on that same day.

Construction of $11.4 million Bird Library to start in Walnut Park early next year

By JEAN HAVENS

Although the only visible indications of beginning work on the new $11.4 million Bird Library are two trucks belonging to a soil surveying company, progress on the structure is very close to being on schedule.

According to James V. LaTorre, assistant to the vice president of administration and research, companies will submit their bids in December or January, and construction will begin a month later.

The building will be at least two years in construction and is now scheduled for completion by late 1970 or early 1971.

Acquisition of the Walnut Park site took almost a year. Working out the final design details also caused a delay in the proposed schedule.

Named after Ernest Stevenson Bird of Austin, Texas, an alumnus who donated $3 million toward its construction, the library will cover about three-quarters of an acre. The main building consisting of seven levels with 38,000 square feet per level has been designed by King and King Architects of Syracuse.

The new library will house 1.5 million volumes and provide seating for 2,500 readers. SU's present library ranks 13th in size among American private universities.

The projected schedule also calls for the closing and demolishing of university cottage housing in the immediate construction area.

1969 yearbook has new format

By LARRY SAMPSON

If you should notice an unusual number of smiling faces about campus, don't jump to the conclusion and think they are presendential candidates. They are probably the faces of prospective graduating seniors, practicing their photogenic smile for the 1969 Onondagan.

Beginning yesterday and until Oct. 25, seniors will be visiting the old offices of Student Government at 406 University Place, to have their portraits taken for the senior yearbook.

Since her appointment last spring by the Board of Publications, Onondagan Editor, Justine Perdunn and her staff have been striving to eliminate much of the "cut and dry" character of the yearbook, the usual content and number of divisions. An immediate change involves the hiring of Merin Studios, Inc. of Philadelphia to handle senior photography in an effort to improve quality of the portraits. Merin Studios, Inc. have done work for such schools as Cornell and Harvard.

Aside from its proficient photographic expertise, Merin provides an excellent card system to obtain biographical material of seniors.

Miss Perdunn refers to the Onondagan as a "book of memories" of the senior year and is selecting candid photographs of the campus that truly represent life within the University. Pictures taken for an effect "don't help the memory," she feels.

The Onondagan will not only be improved in the area of photography but is expected to be more coherent. Miss Perdunn and her staff have planned a surprise theme that will prevail throughout the the yearbook. Various sections including sports, Greeks and Independents, and organizations have been expanded.

Though the staff consists of 10 editors, much of the work will be done by students interested in contributing poems and candid photographs of the campus. A dollar is offered for each photograph used in the yearbook.

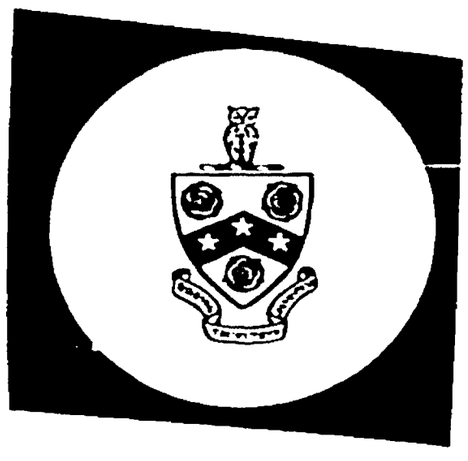
The Onondagan should be completed by April. Seniors will receive it free, while others may purchase a copy for $10.

'Protest'

There is a special type of protest organization on campus that doesn't advocate closing buildings or minds. It's called Sing-Out, SU and is one of the hundreds of spin-off organizations from the international Up With People movement.

Sing-Out recognizes the scope of problems in our society. It seeks to alleviate these problems by spreading the message that although society may be in a mess, there's a basic goodness in people which makes working for a better world worthwhile.

Sing-Out members transmit this message through music, words and action. It is non-profit and not affiliated with any religious group, political party or pressure organization.



Sing-Out is conducting an organizational meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in 105 Crouse College. Students who enjoy singing, playing a musical instrument and like the idea of Up With People are urged to attend.

Dean Bailey's resignation

As many of you know by now, I shall retire as Dean of the Maxwell School as of January 30, 1969.

The past seven years have been joyous ones for Peetie and me. No one could have asked for any greater or more considerate support than I have received from the Chancellor, Vice Presidents Piskor and Ahlberg, from Liberal Arts Deans Faigle and Kramer, from colleagues and associates on the Maxwell faculty and staff, from the students and from alumni. Our gratitude to all of you is heartfelt and profound.

My reasons for leaving the Deanship are simple. I wish to devote my total energies to the development of a University-wide Institute for Policy Studies here at Syracuse that will facilitate interdisciplinary and interschool policy-oriented research and teaching designed to bridge the gap between academic and world affairs.

As Don K. Price wrote some years ago, "The range of government policies and the depth of study necessary to deal with them adequately can be matched only by the resources of the university as a whole."

POlicy problems cannot be sufficiently mastered through the eyes and resources of single scholars, disciplines, or schools. The resolution of some of America's most important urban problems, for example, involve the melding of insights from Engineering, Social Work, Architecture, Journalism, Business Administration, Education, Nursing, Medicine, Psychology, and all of the Social and Behavorial Sciences. The population problem in India can be resolved only if intellectual contributions are made by Demographers, Religionists, Cultural Anthropologists, Mass Media Communication specialists, Economists, Public Administrators, Bio-technologists, etc.

Precisely how an Institute for Policy Studies should be structured, staffed and funded has yet to be determined. Thinking through viable structures and procedures for such an Institute will be my first order of business. I have set myself two long-range goals: (1) producing policy-oriented studies of use to practitioners, and (2) creating a University-wide educational involvement in the policy implications of disciplinary and interdisciplinary learning. Drawing upon the enormous intellectual resources of Syracuse University, and upon increasing concern of administration, faculty and students for making the educational experience more relevant to the continuing concerns of society, such an Institute can, I believe, be a major force for constructive reform -- societal and educational. This, at least, is my hope and faith.

I look forward especially to a continuing association with Professor Alan K. (Scotty) Campbell who will succeed me as Dean of the Maxwell School next winter. Scotty will bring enormous energy, insight and experience to his new assignment. His brilliant direction of Maxwell's Metropolitan Studies Program over the past several years, and his wide personal involvement in public affairs at the local, state, and national levels, give some indications of the qualities of mind and heart that he will devote to the leadership of the entire Maxwell School.

I know that Scotty will receive, as I have, unstinting support from Maxwell's alumni and friends.

Your confidence in the future of Maxwell can be symbolized by your continuing contributions to the Appleby and Mosher Funds. The Appleby fund, administered by a committee of the faculty, provides assistance for faculty and student research. Contributions to the Mosher Fund are devoted to an endowment for student fellowships. Unrestricted gifts will be allocated to priority needs of students and faculty.

With warm personal regards.

Sincerely,
Stephen K. Bailey

Student power: its causes and efforts to be discussed

By JEAN HAVENS
Associate Editor

Eyewitness accounts of the student revolutions in France, Chicago and at Columbia University will be featured in discussions tonight at 7 in Grant Auditorium.

Sponsored by student government, the program will cover what the participants saw and how they reacted. They will also discuss the cause of student power: whether it was furthered in all three cases, and whether the revolutions in fluenced each other.

Speaking on the incidents in France will be three French international students: Vincent Torresi, Francois Doupouis and Eric Bajolle.

Students reporting on the riots in Chicago will be Eileen Lerman, Chip Beiling and Chuck Hicks. Columbia will be discussed by Amy White and an SDS representative.

Hicks, student government president, explained that many different viewpoints have been heard from outside the student revolutions, but little has been stated by the students themselves.

Tonight's discussions will therefore attempt to explain the causes and focus of student concern and will be open to the public.

Dutch Elm Disease

Blight attacks campus shade trees

The screeching of chain saws has become a predominant campus sound of late. Students may catch the rapid disappearance of the city's and campus' stately elm trees. But how many realize the more serious implications?

The elm is one of the hardiest and attractive shade trees known. It was the only tree planted at one time, both due to its sturdiness and appearance. But since the early thirties, the Dutch Elm Disease has proven an almost unstoppable force.

James E. Heath, commissioner of the Syracuse Parks and Recreation Department, indicated some of the difficulties in waging war against Dutch Elm Disease.

On the city's 400 miles of streets and roads, Heath says, there are 20,000 elms, and 5,000 of these are now diseased. This means roughly 12 sick trees per mile. Last year, the city's budget provided $650,000 for the removal and destruction of 6,000 infected trees. This year, the sum has been reduced to $120,000.

According to Dr. Howard Miller, extension pathologist at the School of Forestry, there are 196 elm trees on the SU campus. He says that only a few are infected at present; those between the Law College and Irving Ave., several in front of Sims Hall and some located around Bowne Hall and the old Physics Building.

Since the University is a private land-owner, it is responsible for the removal of all blighted trees on its property, Miller says. Both the University and the city maintain detailed listings of the location and extent of all disease cases. Commercial tree surgeons are allowed to submit bids for the cutting.

The city's work is done by commercial firms also, but city trees must be removed on a priority basis. The limited municipal funds do not permit removal of all afflicted trees.

Both the city and the University mark infected trees with a yellow paint tag. The University's removal program is thorough, and each season all known diseased elms are destroyed. After felling, the timber is carted to a dump on Brighton Avenue for burning.

The problem is that the city cannot force private landowners to incur the cost of elm removal. The disease is spread by bark beetles, carrying fungus. These beetles breed in cut wood. Hence, there are many woodpiles in the city from which the disease can radiate.

The beetles can fly 200 to 700 feet, so no healthy tree within that distance, whether cut or standing, is safe. Root grafts also spread the disease underground.

Since so many healthy trees are susceptible near a diseased elm, the sickness commonly "walks" up and down streets, crossing them, and rounding corners. One look at long rows of stumps along University Avenue illustrates this.

While the city is now essentially concerned with the more advanced cases, those trees which threaten public roads or property, the "sanitation" program is suffering.

The city's program is failing since city trees will always be endangered by private elms. Likewise, the University's elms are jeopardized, since the city's scarcity of funds make them no longer safe.

As in cancer, the only path open is to keep excising the infected parts, and wish for the best. Unfortunately, as with cancer, no cure is now known.

Announcers learn skills at SU seminar

Fifteen persons from 12 countries arrived here Saturday to spend four weeks as part of SU's eighth International Broadcast Seminar. The annual seminar is conducted by the University in conjunction with the U.S. State Department.

Members have already visited the United States Information Agency, the Voice of America, the State Department, the Pentagon, the Washington International Center and the Washington offices of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

While in Syracuse, the international broadcasters will live with local families. Their four- week academic program is designed to provide an understanding of United States broadcasting and teach them skills pertinent to their professional goals.

They will leave Syracuse Oct. 17 for trips to New York City, Boston and Los Angeles to tour broadcasting networks, the United Nations, advertising agencies, commercial and educational televisions stations and television film production companies.

The visitors will return to Syracuse Dec. 14 for a four-day summary review and debriefing sessions and a commencement convocation. W. John Hottenstein is administrator of the program at Syracuse University.

NSA speaks your language

And furthermore, if you are especially adept in a foreign language, the National Security Agency is ready to give you immediate linguistic assignments or may even train you in an entirely new language.

Demonstrated ability in language research can lead to more complex and sophisticated duties. The systematic accumulation of information, examination of data and preparation of special reports are important parts of these assignments. And scientific linguists will find nowhere else the opportunities for practical applications of their craft.

At NSA you will be joining an Agency of national prominence—a unique civilian organization responsible for developing "secure" communications systems to transmit and receive vital information.

NSA offers you this opportunity to further broaden your knowledge of modern language or area studies, and to use your talents in a challenging and rewarding career while you enjoy also the broad, liberal benefits of Federal employment. In return, we ask that you not only know your language, but that you be flexible, naturally inventive and intellectually curious. That's a lot to ask.

Do you fit the picture?

Where to go . . . what to do

Language applicants must take the Professional Qualification Test (PQT) as a prerequisite to NSA interviews for employment. Pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office, the sooner the better. It contains a brief registration form which must be received in Princeton, N.J. by October 9 (for the October 19 test).

building fear and unrest rather than solving the origin of the disorder.

"We are entitled to lead our lives in freedom and safety. This is a minimum requirement of civilization." asserted Lindsay.

In support of O'Brien's policies he suggested applying the resources that would be freed by an end to the War to rebuild neglected areas of the cities and to "overcome the antagonism that poisons the atmosphere of our cities."

Lindsay called the present welfare system "bankrupt of both money and ideas" and suggested replacing it with an "incentive and assistance program that truly helps people break out of degrading dependency."

Charging the present administration with projecting disunity to the country, Lindsay asserted that it's time for a new administration, that of the Republican party.

"The overriding need of America is to be reconciled, and a campaign that preys upon disunity may find it impossible to amke this country whole once again," charged Lindsay.

"It was fear that kept the present administration from doing what must be done about the war in Vietnam. For this administration was afraid to admit the mistakes of the past, and thus it could not face the realities of the present," Lindsay criticized.

"A republican Administration will take office free of the delusions and fabrications that have infected our policy in southeast Asia."

"We can begin to close the huge distances that separate race from race, young from old, class from class, which are eroding the broad base on which popular democracy must stand.

"Let us understand that the only victory worth winning will be one that succeeds in calling up the finer instincts of the American people - the fundamental allegiance to freedom and justice that has made democracy work and has made America great," he emphasized.

Republican crowd

Mayor Lindsay received a warm welcome Friday night from an estimated 1,500 Republicans at their party's annual Bonanzaree, although students appeared more enthusiastic to his liberal views on "law and order." (Photo by Richert)

Psychedelic poster

Psychedelic poster master Peter Max is looking for stars on the Syracuse University campus. He's hard at work trying to find the spiritually beautiful girl who'll be made famous on his next poster extravaganza.

With the help of the Balfour ring people, and the co-eds of Syracuse University and five other specially selected colleges, Peter is going to find his girl. The only live model he's used so far is actor Michael J. Pollard. That made a pretty popular poster. So now Peter has to scramble around and find a star to top C.W. Moss.

It will all begin this Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 25 and 26, in the SU Bookstore. Any co-ed may register and be photographed.

Suicides Anonymous

Unique group aims at affirming ideals rather than attempting to prevent death

By LYNN ECKSTEIN
and TOM GREENE

"Suicides Anonymous is an organization designed to affirm life, not to prevent death," according to executive Secretary Stanley Many. Their major purpose is not to take over another person's life, but to give him the will to live.

This unique organization, which began last November, is staffed by volunteers who work six-hour telephone shifts between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. A phone call usually lasts about 15 or 20 minutes. A follow-up meeting for the caller with a volunteer can take place if necessary. At the end of the conversation, if the caller still desires to commit suicide, all the volunteer can do si apologize for not being able to help.

Under no circumstances will volunteers call the police or any other agency without a caller's consent. Most people who call, however, have an unconscious desire to be helped. They trust this organization since they know outside help will not be solicited without their permission.

The five basic motivations for suicide are revenge, expiation, hostility, appeal and ordeal. suicides Anonymous averages less than two serious calls per week. The highest percentage come from the 20-to-30-year old age bracket. Suicide is the second leading cause of death among college students.

Volunteers are reminded to treat callers as people and not objects. They must affirm callers' ideals of self-responsibility and self-determination. "The most difficult thing in giving love is to give it unselfishly," Many tells volunteers.

Suicides Anonymous can be reached by calling 422-1000.

The soul sound will dominate UU weekend beginning with the Chambers Brothers Friday and ending with Smokey Robinson and the Miracles in concert Sunday afternoon.

The Friday night dance, "Gettin' Together with the Chambers Brothers," begins at 8:30 and ends at 12:30 at the War Memorial.

The Orangemen open their home season against Maryland Saturday afternoon and the movie "El Cid" will be shown on the quad at dusk.

Sunday afternoon, Smokey Robinson and the Miracles will perform at 4 p.m. at the War Memorial.

The Chambers Brothers, a Mississippi-raised family, became famous with their single "Time Will Come Today"

Smokey Robinson is making his first Syracuse appearance Sunday although is familiar to Motown fans for his recordings of "The Tracks of My Tears" and "Mickey's Monkey."

Tickets for the concert and the dance are $4.00, $3.50 and $3.00 and $2.00 for the dance alone. They will be on sale through Friday at the ticket booth in HBC and at the War Memorial beginning Friday afternoon. Buses will leave from the Corner Store.

UU positions

University Union's Board of Directors has announced that they are now accepting applications for positions on both the Policy Board and Development Board.

Positions on the Policy Board are Treasurer and News Bureau Director. Duties of the Treasurer are formulating the budget and coordinating the duties of the other two treasurers. The News Bureau Director organizes press releases and publishes the Underground, Union's weekly newspaper.

The development Board works toward a building and on Kimmel. Positions of Director and Treasurer are open.

Applications are due Sept. 25 at 5:00 p.m. at Chapel House. They should be no longer than two typed pages and should contain the following: name, campus address and extension, average, other activities, ideas for Union in general and the position applied for in specific. All applicants must sign up for interviews to be held Wednesday night. If there are any questions, please call Jerry Tatarian at x3225 or Mary Franciosi at x2738.

Tatham praises St. Mary's points

By KAY CHRISTENSEN
Associate Editor

Sleeping, storage, and study are the three functions of a dormitory room according to Dean of Men David Tatham, and the St. Mary's dormitory complex site has separated "the most important one."

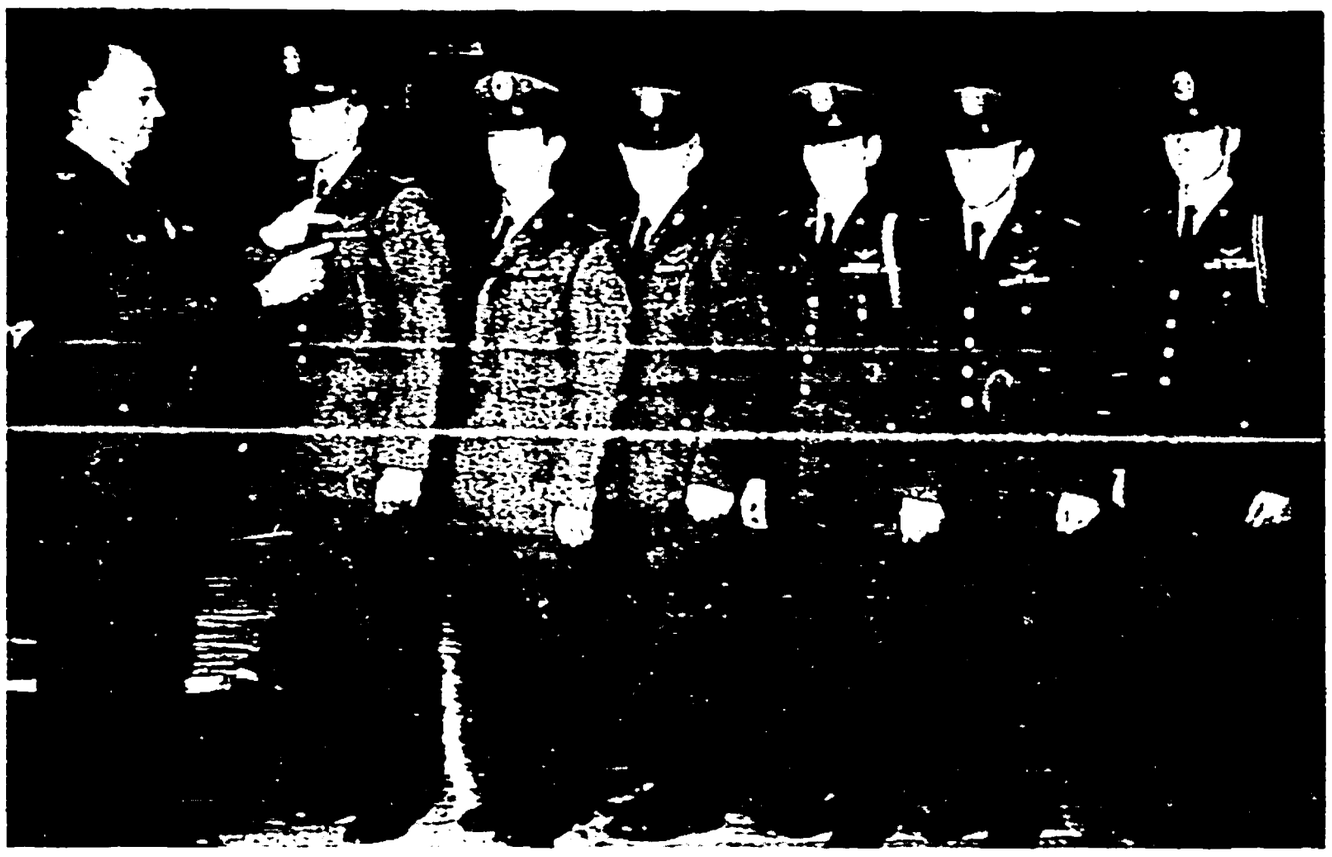
Referring to the separate study cubicles available in the new dorms, Dean Tatham said, "we've given it special prominence." For instance, the Van Buren Street wing of the men's dorm accomodates 14 students per corridor in double rooms. Each room is equipped with beds, dressers, closets and storage space, but there are no desks.

There are 14 single study rooms at the end of the halls, one assigned to each student on the floor. Each soundproof cubicle has a window, desk, and extensive book shelf space. The 5 x 6 ft. compartments can be locked.

Both freshmen and upperclassmen have been assigned to the St. Mary's dorms. There are 284 coeds in the women's dorm and the men's dorm houses 469. Both dorms include divided doubles, suites for either three or four students, undivided doubles and singles. Typing rooms and lounges are available to the residents.

Other new construction designs in the complex makes St. Mary's an unique dorm. The men's dorm has three-men suites which are divided into sleeping rooms and big living rooms.

Dean Tatham speculated that the living rooms might make good drawing rooms for architects and other students who need the extra space. There is a possibility that the dorm may rent out drawing boards to students for use in living rooms. If there is another need more important than this one, however, the rooms might be converted respectively.



Due to the construction of St. Mary's, the suites can be converted to married student housing or single rooms can be converted to resident apartments. "This is not in the foreseeable future, however," said Dean Tatham.

Most students on campus refer to the complex as St. Mary's dorms, but technically the name is St. Mary's dormitory complex site. This name has been used because the area previously was the St. Mary's Cemetery.

It is possible that when an old building is removed its name could be transferred to St. Mary's buildings. The University perpetuates names of chancellors and other prominent people in this way. Presently there is no indication of a name for the complex.

The new complex will help the University continue its "shake-down" system for cottages. Gradually, fewer cottages are being used as resident living centers as the University either removes them or converts them for academic purposes.

Some men's cottages will definitely close down by the end of first semester, said Tatham. The fate of cottages depends on their locations and conditions.

Maryland Terps shedding their shells

Sports sidelights

After holding Cornell's Ivy League champions even for the first half, SU's Soccer Club bowed to the Big Red, 3-0. Cornell won the game on superior stamina, scoring twice in the last 15 minutes.

SU will have its first home game on Wednesday against Colgate. The game will begin at 3:30 p.m. at Barry Park, at the corner of Wescott and Broad Streets.

Future opponents of the Club include Utica College, LeMoyne, Niagara and Buffalo State.

By MIKE GREENSTEIN

Maryland's Bob Ward has never been on the winning side as a head football coach. His Terrapins, in fact, have lost 14 straight over a three season span. But nobody in Syracuse is expecting them to play dead on Saturday during the home opener in Archbold Stadium.

There are two major reasons for this attitude. The first is the memory of last year's game in Maryland, in which SU turned back an 0-9 team by only 7-3. The touchdown came in the second period on, of all things, a halfback option pass from Tom Coughlin to Ed Nowicki. The other reason is the Terps' showing last week against nationally ranked Florida State, whom they held to a 24-14 triumph. Maryland was only three points down until late in the fourth period.

"They have improved 100 percent over last year," remarked Chuck Fogarty, the SU assistant who scouted them last week. "The enthusiasm was there right down to the last gun."

Ward, speaking via telephone from College Park, seemed a little surprised by his team's showing. "We were lucky to come as close as we did," he said. "Our fans down here were real pleased that it was so close."

Maryland's defense concentrated on shutting off Florida State's potent passing attack, dropping as many as nine men off the line of scrimmage. SU coach Ben Schwartzwalder does not expect them to use the same one against Syracuse. "If they do," he said, "I may faint before the end of the first quarter."

Alan Pastrana, the quarterback, is the center of the Terp offense.

"Pastrana didn't play his best game, mainly because of the Florida State defense," agreed Ward, "and we feel the Syracuse defense is as good, if not better."

Schwartzwalder and Fogarty were lavish in their praise for the Maryland quarterback. "Pastrana is potentially a great quarterback," Fogarty said. "He's poised and gets rid of the ball very well. We will have to put a good rush on him."

The offense, which impressed Ward with its "wide open approach," remains intact for the Maryland game. "We won't ease up on the passing," Ben said, "but we will work doubly hard on our running." He called the running game against Michigan State "a disappointment. We must play much better this week.

Player of the week

Tailback Ron Trask stands out in defeat

By DOUG GARR

This is the first in a series of weekly articles in which the DO sports staff will select the outstanding players of the previous Saturday's game.

Despite Saturday's 14-10 loss to Michigan State, the Orangemen played an excellent game, with numerous players who showed outstanding potential. One such player is sophomore Ron Trask.

In his varsity debut, he rushed for 69 yards in ten carries to pace the Orange rushing attack. The six-foot, 195 pound tailback showed great running style, as he had the longest single Syracuse gain of 38 yards, on a pitchout from quarterback Paul Paolisso.

According to Trask, the Michigan State team did not hit any harder than Syracuse, but had the key breaks that won it for them. Michigan State recovered two SU funbles that stopped Orange momentum on long drives into enemy territory. Trask, however, figured in our only touchdown of the afternoon, as he caught a three yard pass from Rich Panczyszyn in the third quarter.

In reflecting on the Saturday opener, Trask was not impressed with the usual Midwest powerhouse. He said, "They didn't push us all over the field, as a lot of people thought they would." Later he added that "Michigan State didn't have anybody that outstanding, such as former All-American Bubba Smith." He did consider State's sophomore Tommy Love an excellent runner.

"We were definitely 'up' for the game," he said. Michigan State had a good ball club, but we could have beaten them. They just had a couple of more breaks than we did."

Although Ron has played quarterback, wingback and defensive halfback in the past, he played tailback on Saturday. He likes this position, especially his favorite play, with the quarterback faking to the fullback and optioning to the tailback. It was on this play that Trask took a pitchout and scampered 38 yards around right end.

Ron Trask

Trask thought SU had an excellent running game until the fourth quarter, when the Michigan State rush dumped Panczyszyn for three huge losses. He also had high praise for our defense, especially Lou Gubitosa and Art Thoms. The Michigan State ground attack was really strong in the last quarter, but the Orange defense may have tired a little.

Asked if the weather had any effect on their performance, Ron replied, "No, I don't think that the heat was that big a factor. We practiced the last three days before the game in warm weather and a high humidity."

Trask also said that there wasn't a big home team advantage. After the opening kick-off, the crowd of 63,488, and the television cameras did not even bother him. Ron also insisted that the loss would not affect team moral, as they will just take one game at a time. Using last year's upset win against UCLA as an example, he said, "On any given day any team can beat any other team. Saturday's game could very easily have gone the other way."

Although Coach Be Schwartzwalder calls every play, Ron implied that fans will see more of a balanced passing and running attack. Paolisso and Panczyszyn combined for 21 of 30 and 186 yards in the air. Ron also thinks that end Tony Gabriel will be an added threat in th coming season. "Right now he's probably the main reason we're throwing more." Actually, the fact that SU does not have a "super-back" is also a big factor.

The toughest games of the year, the sophomore tailback says, are "Penn State and then probably UCLA." SU will have a home advantage against UCLA but State will be tough in University Park this December.

Sophs get feet wet

Ben on State game: 'We flunked our first test'

By ED AGRANOWITZ

This is the first in a series of articles based on conversations between coach Ben Schwartzwalder and DO reporter Ed Agranowitz.

Having left their hopes for an opening game victory in East Lansing, Coach Ben Schwartzwalder's Orangemen are back on the Hill preparing for Saturday's home opener against Maryland.

Reflecting on his team's heartbreaking 14-10 loss to Michigan State, Schwartzwalder remarked, "A lot of people turned in fine performances on Saturday, but we lost the game. This means we flunked our first test.

"We had a lot going against us," continued Ben, "opening game, TV and some inexperience in our lineup. But the sophomores had a good chance to get their feet wet, and now we should be able to settle down and play some good football."

The starting lineup will probably not change for the Maryland game, as the Orange escaped serious injury. Junior tailback Dick Bidlack, out on Saturday with a bad ankle, is now available, but is not likely to be used in a starting role. Soph Ron Trask took Bidlack's place on Saturday and was very impressive with some clutch runs on third down situations. "Ron had a strong game," said Ben, "and we're hoping that a sore heel that he has come up with will not give him any trouble. We should also see a little more of John Godbolt and Billy Knox this weekend."

As it stands now, Art Thoms will handle the punting on a full time basis. Against State, Thoms punted three times for 124 yards, a 41.3 average, as compared to Rich Panczyszyn's three boots for 88 yards and a 29.3 mean. "We would have liked to been able to stay with Panz," said Ben, "because that would always give us the threat of a pass from punt formation. But take a look at the figures and I'll let you call that one."

Looking ahead to the Terrapins, who sported a dismal 0-9 record a year ago, including a 7-3 loss to the Orange (the closest they came to winning), Schwartzwalder indicated that they would be far from a soft touch. "Maryland has a lot of spirit," said Ben, "they just won't quit. They proved they can play tough football by staying with Florida State for three quarters."

"In Al Pastrana, Maryland has a real fine quarterback," says Ben. Pastrana sat out all of last year as the result of a knee operation early in 1967. In 1966 he set an Atlantic Coast Conference record with 17 touchdown passes. According to Chuck Fogarty, who serves as SU's chief scout, "Pastrana has a lot of ability, but looked a little rusty in their opener. The bootleg option play is their best but Pastrana seems to have slowed up a little since the last time we saw him. He may be favoring that leg."

Terp coach Bob Ward, now in his second year at the helm, will also be counting on senior fullback Billy Lovett and junior tailback John King to help the Maryland offense move. Lovett has led the squad in rushing for the past two seasons, and is also rated as a good pass receiver. King, a junior transfer, was the leading terp ground gainer against FSU, but will probably have to share his spot with Paul Fitzpatrick, a junior power runner who averaged close to five yards per carry in limited action last year. Junior Bernie Demczuk completes the backfield at wingback.

The Orange team morale hasn't suffered despite the opening loss. According to Ben, "We're not depressed now like we were after the Baylor game (1966 opener, 35-12 loss). But Maryland is going to be a desperate football team on Saturday. We'd better be desperate too."

ED'S ITORIALS: Many of the players lost a lot of weight in the heat at Spartan Stadium, with Ray White's 21 pound drop leading the pack.....Dennis Kleinbach has been running daily in an effort to whip his thrice injured knee back into shape....

Popovic finds new class doomed

Yugoslav Embassy condemns book

By RONA KAVEE

The publication of a book by the Syracuse University Press has been condemned as a "tendentious hostile gesture" by the Embassy of the Republic of Yugoslavia. Nenad D. Popovic, visiting Maxwell professor of economics, is author of the volume, Yugoslavia: The New Class in Crisis, which deals critically with the nation's current administration.

The letter condemning the publication was based on an advertisement for the book observed in the Washington Post by the embassy's press and cultural attache. In his reply, Richard C. Underwood, director of the SU press, expressed regret at the official's conclusion.

Essentially, the book is a discussion of a "new class" of elite government officials that has subordinated all interests, even that of the Communist Party, to its own desire for control. Popovic sees this as a threat to the stability and well-being of the nation.

Formerly a Plenipotentiary Minister in the Yugoslaw Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Popovic defected to the United States in 1961. He was noted as one of Yugoslavia's foremost economic experts.

In a press conference, Popovic expressed surprise that he had been "accused and condemned without trial" by the Yugoslavian embassy. "My accusation was tantamount to my conviction," he said.

It is his contention that the democratic forces in Yugoslavia "are many" and are to be found in the writing and practices of the intellectuals. Popovic holds that these people are "good for talking, not for the real struggle."

Ultimately, he believes it is the Yugoslavian working class that will lead the trend twoard democracy. This is a reversal of classical Marxism.

Popovic stressed the need to develop trends toward democracy in Yugoslavia, and holds that such liberalizing movements as the dismantling of Stalinism existed in Yugoslavia long before they did in other Eastern bloc nations. "We need to rely more on Western nations," he observed.

Popovic himself does not believe that he has harmed relations between Yugoslavia and the United States and hopes that his book "would contribute to better understanding.

Although he stated that Yugoslavia does not have censorship, for example, it does have "a long way to go to the beginning of democracy." He believes that the government was "in favor of liberalization in Czechoslavakia," but would not be in favor of such movements within its own nation.

Students voice opinions

Student committee to select new chancellor begins briefings

By KAY CHRISTENSEN
Associate Editor

Seven undergraduate SU students have been selected to represent student opinion in the selection of a new chancellor.

The Student Committee for the Selection of a Chancellor (SCSC) has begun briefings with administrative personnel to determine the role of a chancellor. After the committee has familiarized itself with chancellor's duties and necessary qualifications, it will approach the student body for their opinions and evaluations.

The committee members who have been approved by the Committee on Student Life, and who must be approved by the Student Senate Tuesday night, are to represent the diversity of SU's student body. Because a chairman has not yet been chosen, Student Government President Chuck Hicks has been organizing their activities thus far.

Members of the committee include Amy White, a senior majoring in psychology. She works in the brain research laboratory.

Mary Lou Leary is a sophomore English major. She is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and works in the library.

American history major Saumdra Haynes is also serving on the committee. She is presently working on the Orange Aid, and her past activities include goon squad, sophomore executive, University Union, and freshman class secretary.

Representing the freshmen will be Tom Whitlow, the only frosh on the committee. He is a forestry major.

Ray Rafalik, junior, is a zoology major who works in the department of science and education.

President of Campus Alliance Party (CAP), president of the 1963 frosh class, and a financial elections commissioner are past activities of senior Jim Richards. He is registered in the urban teaching program at SU.

Four graduate students will join this committee after their selection in the near future.

These committee members believe SU's admittance of a student voice in the choosing of a new chancellor is a "real breakthrough in these times of student suppression."

Hicks pointed out that the existence of the SCSC shows that the Board of Trustees and the Chancellor "consider us (students) as people, not just IBM cards."

Although the committee members have not decided upon the chancellor's role yet, they

Students comment on riots and youth power effects

By ELLEN BILOFSKY

A discussion of student power and how it was affected by the demonstration in France, Chicago and Columbia was sponsored by the student government last night at Grant Auditorium. Students who were involved in these demonstrations described the events and their reactions. Student Government President Chuck Hicks informally introduced the speakers.

Three French students began be describing the Paris riots. Vincent Torresi summarized the events. He emphasized the entrance of police into the Sorbonne, their roughness in clearing the building and the arrest of four or five students as a basic stimulus to the riots.

Francois Doutouis attempted to analyze the situation in terms of the causes. The participation of the workers in the riots, according to Eric Dajolle, was due to an economic crisis in Western Europe. The riots appeared to indicate a weakness in the government which the workers took advantage of.

Columbia was discussed by Amy White, an SDS representative who knows some of the people involved. The basis for the present trouble was laid four and a half years ago when Kirk refused to listen to demands for student participation in administration and faculty decisions. The students who opposed Kirk had programs as well as gripes, yet "Kirk shut the door."

The police brutality in Chicago was discussed by Eileen Kerman, Chip Bailey and Chuck Hicks. Miss Kerman described it as "a very personal thing." All three gave many instances where police charged and beat students, clergy and innocent bystanders with no provocation.

Referring to the alleged use of obscenities on the part of students, Miss Kerman said, "If pig's an obscenity...they really were pigs." All felt that violence could have been avoided by the issuance of the permit to use Lincoln Park which had been requested.

Summarizing the results of the three demonstrations, Hicks felt they all contribute to the student movement in the United States. The Paris riots made Americans take a second look at our system of government. Columbia made universities stop and think. "It pushed the student movement ahead five years," according to Hicks. The worry "Is my university next?" caused many administrations to give students equal voice.

Chicago woke many people up, especially white students. The Democratic Party was severely damaged by Humphrey's refusal to comment on the situation.

During the open discussion which followed, Hicks mentioned a student-power, student-revolt weekend, which would consist of work shops and speakers on student power. (Interested students should call ext. 3569.)

Liberal Arts dean selection

Professor Donald E. Kibbey, Chairman of the Liberal Arts College Committee on the selection of a Dean, has announced that the Committee will hold open hearings on Friday, Sept. 27.

The hearings will be held in 204 Physics Bldg. from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m. Those who wish to testify may call Miss Marcia Paige on extension 2375 to arrange for a specific time. It is hoped that individual presentations can be restricted to 10-15 minutes. The Committee would appreciate brief written presentations which can be amplified.

The purpose of the hearings is to provide the occasion for undergraduates, graduate students, and faculty of the College to present their views on the qualifications of the office or to present specific nominations from inside or outside the University.

The Committee was established by the faculty of the College of Liberal Arts last spring. It has the responsibility of proposing candidates for the Deanship. All deans and directors are appointed by the Board of Trustees.

Coffee-power comes to Syracuse

The Daily Orange would like to announce a major technological advance in our day-to-day operation as a newspaper.

Through the generosity of the Board of Trustees and the unremitting efforts of the Dean of Student Services, we now have a coffee pot.

To those who understand the human element in the production of a newspaper, this event portends great significance. To those who are ignorant, of this marvelous profession we offer a brief explanation.

Coffee is to the reticent tongue of a University Administrator as oil is to the rusty bearings of a Model T Ford. Coffee revives the "all-nighters" in the student leader set, and with a dash of cream and sugar, adds zest to their denunciations of University policy.

Coffee enlivens the meek, tames the militant, and agitates the craniums of the thoughtful. It quickens the pulse, brightens the eyes, and loosens the tongue. What more could a newspaperman ask for?

(It is, of course, Joanie Richert's coffee that makes Evan more efficient than ever this year.)

After a proper amount of hissing and sighing, the Daily Orange coffee pot settles down to the difficult task of perking coffee to suit every staff member's taste.

First, there is early afternoon coffee with a light and delicate enough flavor to satisfy the gentlest taste.

Then comes the mid-afternoon java that tickles the tonsils and subverts the unsettled digestive tract.

Finally our perspiring pot produces that challenge to intestinal fortitude, that most ultimate drink — Mud.

We invite you to sample any one of these miracles of the electric percolator. Our doors are open, our styrophone cups are held at ready. We await the opportunity to share your ideas and conversation over a cup of coffee.

Greeks look-out
Fraternity rush
By Arthur Nacht

Indeed, it is true that the greeks are a dying breed by non-greek standards. Organization breeds conformity, tradition is by definition outdated, and non-universal membership is equivalent to cancerous bigotry. Ask any independent.

Any definition of future American college life excludes a Greek "way-of-life". Students must be willing to sacrifice whatever is necessary to pursue study, and abolition of secret organizations is a prerequisite of modern America. Ask any independent.

But if you are eligible to rush this week or next February do some observing for yourself. Ask yourself if the hard work of the fraternities'and sororities' members in competitions is drudgery or the exertion required to obtain results which they as individuals could not arrive at alone. Ask each house what is excellent and worthwhile.

Examine whether the self-government of a greek house trains leaders better than any other activity on this campus. Consider whether the personal responsibility you're probably seeking in return for individual rights, is not a cornerstone of the house you visit. Does each member's actions reflects on those with whom he lives?

Carefully examine the friendship and loyalty of one greek for his brother. Ask yourself if you'll ever come back for a reunion of your dormitory floor. Ask an independent how many people he knows and likes on his floor in Lawrinson.

After a rush visit to a house begin to piece together rebuttals to the independents' pot criticisms. Thoughtless conformity should be disdained, but not purposeful organization. Traditions which enlighten the past without veneration, shed light on the future too. Discrimination against the quality of men, rather than their skin or religion, is commendable.

Finally, be sure that you reach out for a house that's more than better food, prettier rooms, and a fast social life.

Rush!! Find a great house. Go greek!!

Letters to the editor

To the Editor:

It's so sweet of you to print all of those nice articles about famous women.

Women have been discriminated against for so long, it's dreadful. Nobody realizes that all females are Trustworthy, Loyal, Helpful, Friendly, ...etc., and always broke, (but that's minor.) Even in the darkest hours of crisis, women have always been there; in the way of course but they've been there.

And what would the world have done without such notables as Lucretia Borgia, Mata Hari, and the most famous of all, Christine Keeler. Yes, we have footholds everywhere. We're going to take over the world starting with the U.S. government. Sock it to 'em Shirley Temple.

Of course, the first law will be to do away with fought over paychecks. Wives usually only see about three-quarters of the earnings anyway. The dollar will have to be eliminated also in order to stabalize the economy. It will be replaced with a universal charge plate. Down with INFLATION

The social standards must be changed also. Girls will be given the right to ask out boys so that everyone gets a turn at trapping. Men are too masculine anyway, they should have second place for a while.

Women must become more proficient in newspapers also. We'll start by replacing you with Gretchen Patey, she's a beautiful person, and move on down the line to sports, including Greenstein. Females can naturally write better, we're not so prone to emotional outbursts as the male commentators are. We're better, I KNOW WE'RE BETTER.

Things are going to change, you'll see. We'll obrain equality just like it was in Eden before the serpent tricked Eve. Women won't desire anything more after obtaining that; not even apples.....

Mrs. DoGood

To the Editor:

In answer to the September 16th article, "A vote for responsiblity," the New Dorm Women's Steering Committee would like to vote 'yes.' This committee which has over 30 members was established last May. Peg Johnston was given authority to act as the co-ordinator for this committee by AWS, Interdorm Council, and the Dean of Women. A meeting was held for all those interested in May and the group has been corresponding about the dorm government all Summer. An elected representative from each floor is now serving on this committee.

Without the steering committee, it is doubtful that the opening of New Dorm could have been as smooth. They arrived in Syracuse two days early and set up the constitution and helped with the tremendous amount of paperwork. With the help of guides, goons, and staff,

Opening Day was accomplished with no difficulty. They organized activities and programming to eliminate the possibility of initial apathy.

Furthermore, because the constitution was written and available for the first day, it was ratified during the first week and approved by AWS on Monday. Optional hours were granted to eligible residents that Monday, September 16.

Every resident received a notice explaining the provisionary government, and informing them of the October 10 election for a permanent dorm council. Under the provisions of the constitution anyone can run for office and everyone votes for the candidates.

The New Dorm Women's Steering Committee has met the difficulties of opening an unfinished dorm responsibly. They have succeeded in establishing the groundwork for the high expectations that everyone obviously has for the New Dormitory.

The New Dorm Steering Committee

To the Editor:

Sunday, Sept. 22, 1968, at approximately 9:00 p.m., marked the innauguration of the annual gross-out contests between the scholar-residents of Lawrinson and Sadler Halls.

Long in tradition, these contests consist of a concerted effort by the participants to bellow out creative obscenities such as "Lawrinson*!@!" in concentrated clarity and distinct diction. Sunday's effort was highlighted by a tremendous team effort by the Sadler residents who were congregated on the Sadler steps and floor lounges. Unfortunately, because of the onset of heavy rain and thunder, the festivities were curtailed, but they are assured of being continued in the near future, weather conditions and group inspiration willing.

These interdorm rivalries are to be commended for not only are they an indication of the fine school spirit pervading S.U., but they are representative of the brotherhood, benevolence, and intellectual ferment prevailing in our great university. For instance, those few who were studying, had an opportunity to stop working, refresh their minds, and join in on the group festivities. Intellectually, these outbreaks can be interpreted as a direct challenge to the archaic and strictly enforced rules which govern the various living centers.

Also, the vital health aspects of the contests should not be overlooked, for they are a sanctioned opportunity to exercise one's vocal cords and to clear out one's lungs of excessive tars and nicotines. One can look forward to the combination of collegiate spirit, altruism, protest, and vitality from these uniquely creative individuals.

SG Convo tonight

Frosh to be wooed by student heads

By CHARLES SHAPIRO

Interested in running for a frosh office? Or perhaps you were thinking of becoming a goon? If either of these ideas attracts you, or you just want to become active on campus, then you should attend the Student Government convocation for freshmen and transfers, to be held this evening at 8 p.m. in Hendricks Chapel.

The purpose of the convocation is to show freshmen how they can get involved in the many activities open to them at SU. The program will include several speakers: Chuck Hicks, president of the Student Government; Cindy Bailey, AWS president; Jeff Portnoy, Student Government vice-president; Jerry Tatarian, president of University Union; Ed Feldman, Senate speaker; Paul Snyder, chief justice of the Student Court; Charles Babcock, Daily Orange editor; Promethean editor, Bruce Chadwick; SDS president, Bob Tompowski; and Mike Sussman, president of the Traditions Committee. In addition to a discussion of the various activities, there may also be some talk about the evnets in Chicago surrounding the Democratic Convention.

This convocation, which at one time was mandatory for prospective goons, was organized by Gilda Harris and Stu Finer. Although it was not held last year, this type of meeting could become an annual event, or possibly it might be held more often, if enough interest is shown. After the convocation frosh can meet the various leaders during "informal mingling."

Candidate will speak

David V. O'Brien, Republican candidate for Congress, will speak in the Congdon Room of the Law School today at 3 p.m. The public is invited to attend.

Hillel holds first meeting

By LAURA BLUM

The sounding of a shofar opened the first meeting of Hillel's Frosh Council recently. During the two hour meeting, Hillel's upperclassmen informed its freshman audience of 40 of the activities the world's largest Hillel has to offer:

The Hillel Choir sings weekly at Friday night services. The organization also performs for such groups as B'nai B'rith, the Old Age Home, and synagogue sisterhoods. Its director, Harry Dank is working for a performance on radio station WHEN. It look's "promising."

A committee with some new ideas is the religious committee. Officials representing this committee suggest holding Friday night services with modern music and perhaps sermons by chaplains of other faiths.

Undergrads get priority

New seating arrangements made for games

"The best possible arrangements have been made for undergraduates at home football games this year," according to Athletic Commissioner Jim Striker.

Striker has put undergraduates' welfare before that of graduate students. As a result, his new system will provide undergrads with their best seats in years.

"This is an undergraduate team," explained Striker," so undergraduate students deserve special consideration. There are two segments to this university. The graduates, who are in the mainstream of academic life, and deserve priority in academic areas and undergraduates, who dominate extracurricular life. Each segment must be included in academics and extracurricular activities, but priorities must be maintained under the present circumstances."

Striker has also arranged for what he feels is a fairer system of ticket distribution to block-seating organizations and underclassmen.

Regarding block-seating arrangements, Deputy-Commissioner Rich Stone revealed "a rotating system based on geometric patterns."

"One fraternity, say Phi Epsilon Pi," said Stone, "might get the best seats for the first game, while another say Kappa Sigma, might get the worst. This system insures that during the course of the year Kappa Sigma will have seats equal to those of Phi Epsilon Pi in desirability."

Striker announced that desirable seats would be put aside each week until Wednesday or Thursday before the game. In this way, sophomores and freshmen might get choice seats.

Striker also cited improvements in the ushers system. Another of Striker's assistants, Gordon Morrell, has been placed in charge of ushers. He pointed out that more will be used this year "for the convenience of the student." Also, they will hold reserved seats until ten minutes after kick-off time.

Striker indicated that placard cheering was in "the position most advantageous to being seen by the student body," thus making these seats more desirable to freshmen.

In answer to a question concerning dates of different classes sitting together, Striker said, "This year, we will allow dates to pick up tickets together at the earlier indicated time: that is, a senior boy and freshman girl do not have to wait until the freshman day-Thursday-to get their tickets. They may pick them up on the seniors' day, Monday."

Tickets may be picked up by juniors on Tuesday before each game, and by sophomores on Wednesday. Graduate students may pick up tickets on Thursday and anyone missing their scheduled day may pick up tickets on Friday. Windows in the gymnasium are open from 11 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. Coupon tickets and validated identification cards are required.

"As usual," Striker added, "no drinking will be permitted at games."

Also present at the conference was Striker's appointed assistant, Dan Baum.

The first of 10 weekly science programs for 12 and 15-year olds will be offered by Syracuse University faculty members Saturday, Sept. 28, in Room A-1 of Newhouse Communications Center.

This is the fourth year that the Young Peoples Science Programs have been offered by faculty members. There is no charge and there are no requirements or restrictions other than age, according to Dr. Arnold Honig, professor of physics. The group meets at 10:30 a.m. Saturdays for about an hour and a half.

Dr. Henry Levinstein, professor of physics, is the first speaker. His program will be "Taking Pictures' With Infrared Light."

Need stressed

Dream of student UU building continues throughout four decades

Syracuse University is one of the few large schools without a student union. Interest in constructing such a building has always been high, and has resulted in the creation of an organization, University Union (UU), to perpetuate the interest. This article, the first of a three-part series, will explain the early history of the student union movement.

By JEAN HAVENS
Associate Editor

"Deliver to: the Quad: purchase from: anybody: date needed: now; quantity: one; description of item: union building; estimated cost: $10 million." This requisition form hanging on the University Union bulletin board in the organization's Chapel House office expresses a 41-year-old dream. A student union was first dreamed as early as 1927-- and probably earlier--when student meeting established the groundwork for the Club Sahara: three transformed rooms in the Slocum Hall basement.

This meeting of 150 students under the chairmanship of Dean William Mosher had resulted in a $10,000 student union goal. Once this total was reached, the students planned to purchase a structure located at 110 College Pl., and set up a temporary student union.

Increasing their goal to $25,000, the fund drive began on March 26, 1928. Due to poor publicity and the refusal of the administration to allow students to solicit from alumni because of a faculty pension fund drive, the union drive was a failure, resulting in just over $2,000.

A 1939 Daily Orange article explained, looking back, that "even in the prosperous days of 1928, students and faculty could not be expected to contribute a sum of $25,000."

The failure of the drive was followed by eight years of spasmodic effort. In 1936 the Daily Orange ran an enthusiastic month-long campaign which resulted in a 4,023 signature petition asking the University Senate to provide a temporary student union in Yates Castle.

The structure housed the journalism school, which was contemplating a move to a new location. The journalists remained in the Castle, and the student Union was forced to seek another home. The search ultimately led to the Club Sahara.

Chancellor at the time, William P. Graham, cut the ribbons opening the doors to the Slocum basement "dry night club" on November 26, 1937.

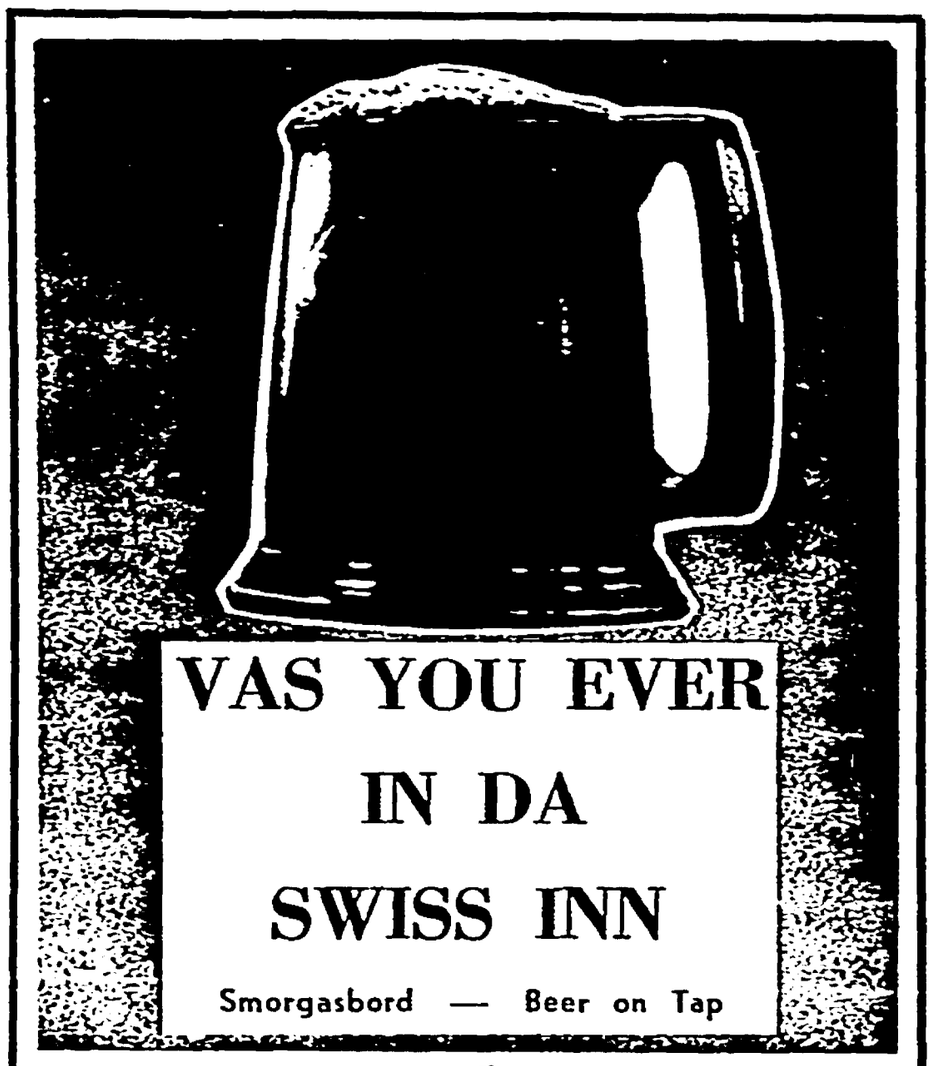
Financially, the outlook for a union building looked very bleak. A Daily Orange article (April 26, 1939) reported: "Chancellor William P. Graham stated that despite an operating surplus of $17,438 for 1937-38, any hope that the University will build a Student Union for at least 10 more years is out of the question."

Chancellor Graham also stated that even if funds were available, a new women's building and more women's dormitories would have precedence.

Undaunted; the student union committee was supported by a Daily Orange editorial (April 20, 1940) which struck out against student apathy, declaring in deathless prose that "...every nail in the women's building will only drive deeper the determination of their (the union committee's) dream."

TOMORROW: THE STUDENT UNION IN THE POST-WAR YEARS.

The soul sound will dominate UU weekend beginning with the Chambers Brothers Friday night at 8:30, War Memorial, and Smokey Robinson and the Miracles at 4 p.m., War Memorial.



Journalists

Seven hundred student journalists on the staffs of New York State high school publications, and their advisers, are expected to attend the 31st annual convention of the Empire State School Press Association here this weekend.

The School of Journalism, where ESSPA has its headquarters, will be host to the young people. Many events on the two-day program will be held in the Samuel I. Newhouse Communications Center. These include news writing and current events competitions for three scholarships for journalism study at Syracuse. Sessions in techniques of editing high school newspapers, magazines and yearbooks will be conducted by faculty members of the journalism school and by high school advisers.

Daily Orange sports editor Mike Greenstein has been invited to impart his omniscience at a sportswriting seminar.

At the awards banquet in the Hotel Syracuse on Friday, Sept. 27, at 8 p.m., prizes and a sweepstakes trophy will be presented to individual and publication winners of contests for the 1967-68 academic year in 26 categories of journalistic performance. The banquet speaker will be Robert G. Fichenberg, executive editor of the Knickerbocker News, Albany, and president of the New York Society of Newspaper Editors.

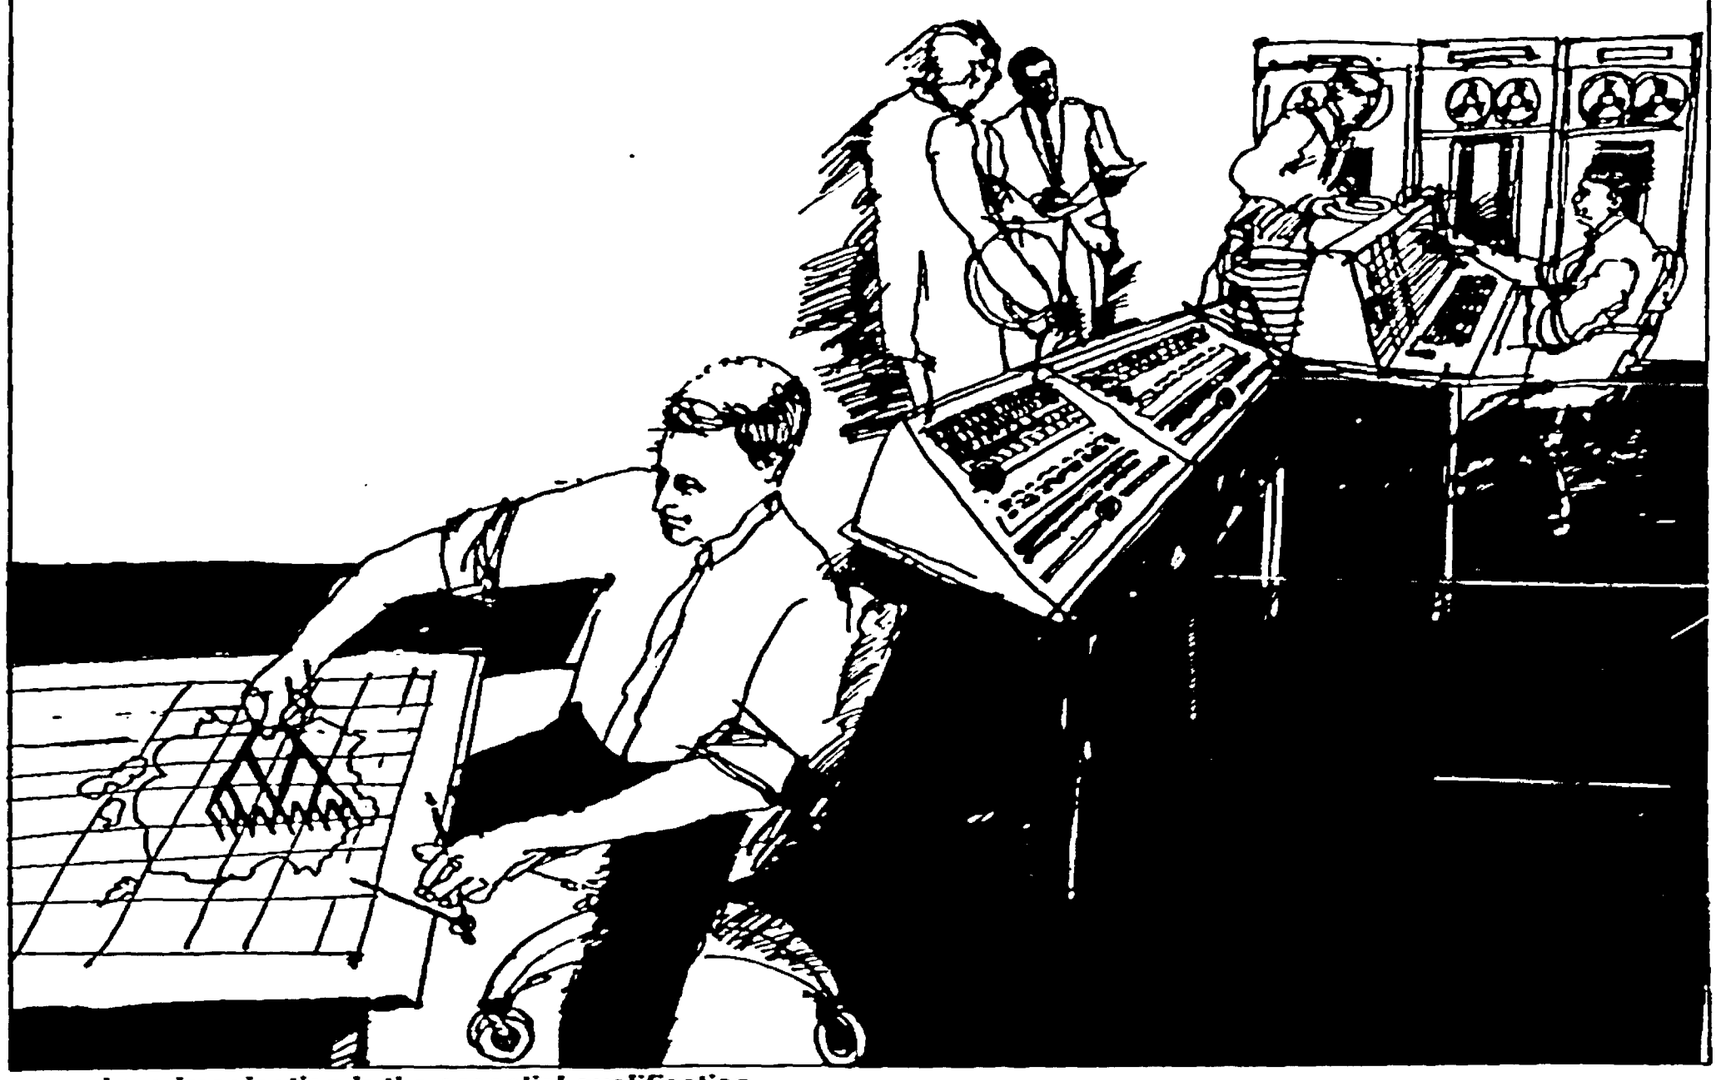
For the Liberal Arts Major, PQT can open a whole new world of opportunity . . .

Each year, NSA offers challenging career opportunities to Liberal Arts majors through participation in the Professional Qualification Test. This year, NSA has scheduled the PQT for Saturday, October 19, 1968. Completion of this Test by the Liberal Arts major is a prerequisite to consideration for NSA employment.

The Career Scene at NSA:

The National Security Agency is the U.S. Government agency responsible for developing invulnerable communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. As an NSA professional, you will be trained to work on programs of national importance in such areas as:

- Cryptography—developing & logical proving of new cryptologic concepts
- Research—the gathering, analysis, and reporting of substantive data
- Language—used as a basic tool of research into a number of analytical fields
- Programming—includes data systems program writing, and development of mechanical and administrative procedures
- Documentation—technical writing in its broadest sense, including research, writing, editing, illustrating, layout and reproduction



Your specific academic major is of secondary importance. Of far greater importance are your ingenuity, intellectual curiosity and perseverance —plus a desire to apply them in assignments where "imagination is the essential qualification."

SALARIES start at $6981.00 and are supplemented by the benefits of career federal employment.

ADVANCEMENT AND CAREER DEVELOPMENT—NSA promotes from within, and awards salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. NSA also is anxious to stimulate your professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal as well as on-the-job training. Advanced study at any of seven area universities can be partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships and other assistance programs.

The deadline for PQT applications is October 9, 1968. Pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office. It contains full details and the necessary test registration form. Students help pick chancellor . . .

indicate they are looking for a "chancellor to walk among the student." They are trying to lessen the communication gap between students and administration.

The origin of SCSC stemmed from Chancellor Tolley's recommendation to the Board of Trustees last spring to let the students have a voice in the selection of a new chancellor. The trustees approved the proposal, then Hicks was contacted. In order to organize a committee representative of SU students, applications were open to anyone on campus.

To communicate their opinions to the administration, CSCS will meet with both the Trustee Committee and the Senate Committee. Royal L. O'Day, president of the Marine Midland Trust Company of Central New York, chairs the Trustee Committee. The dean of the College of Liberal Arts, Frederic J. Kramer, is chairman of the Senate Committee, which is composed of faculty members.

SCSC is open to any ideas, suggestions, questions, opinions or disagreements from SU students. Any one of the committee members may be contacted for such information.

An understanding wife

University changes as years pass trustees selected Chancellor Tolley

By ETTA FIELEK

In 1942, when the tuition was $400 and the total enrollment was 5,410, Syracuse University chose a new chancellor.

In 1968, with a tuition of $2,000 and an enrollment approaching 25,000, the chancellor-choosing machinery is again about to be set in motion.

In 26 years the mood on the campus changed. The focus has moved away from the administration and now rests on the faculty and, more particularly, the students, as witnessed by the inclusion of a committee of students on the selection committee.

The 1942 selection was handled completely by a committee of ten chosen by and from the Board of Trustees. According to the minutes of the Nov. 13, 1942 , meeting of the board, the group met 10 times, devoting the first two meetings to determining the qualifications of the new chancellor.

They decided the new chancellor should not be over 55, be in good health, have university administrative experience, display proper leadership qualities in educational and civic circles and have an interest in the religious and spiritual life of the school and community.

Also, he had to have good financial and educational contacts, an understanding of scholarship and a wife who would not detract from any of these qualities.

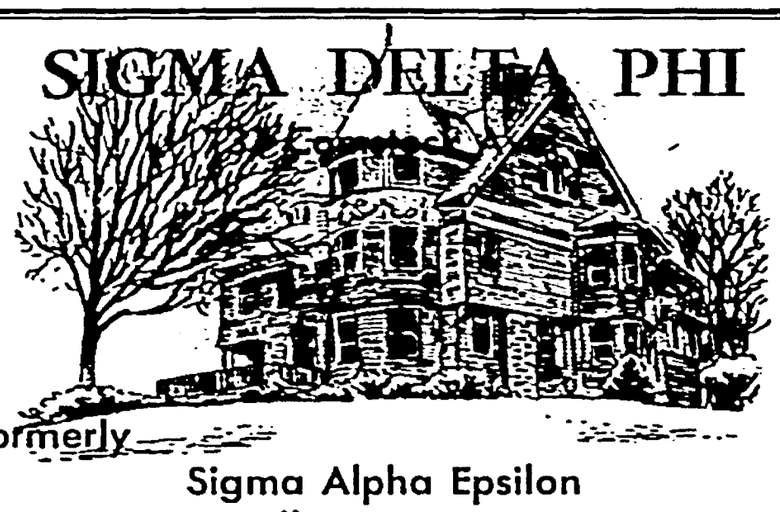
Nominations were received by members of the board as well as from a list of possibilities left over from the last selection of a chancellor in 1936, the New York State Board of Regents, officials of other universities and the more than 5,000 letters sent to alumni asking for nominations. In all, 264 nominations were formally made.

Of the original 264, those who were obviously not available for the position or who did not meet the qualifications were weeded out by a subcommittee of four. Of the remainder, two lists were prepared. After initial eliminations, 30 names remained in the first list. Each individual was discussed at length by the committee, which then reduced the list to ten.

These ten names were submitted to the directors of the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations who, with committee members, discussed the potential and qualifications of the ten.

Six names were left after this round. They were all subject to intensive investigation on their own campuses, including interviews with faculty, students, alumni and businessmen. With five men left, the selection committee invited them all to visit Syracuse, see the campus, and meet personally with the committee.

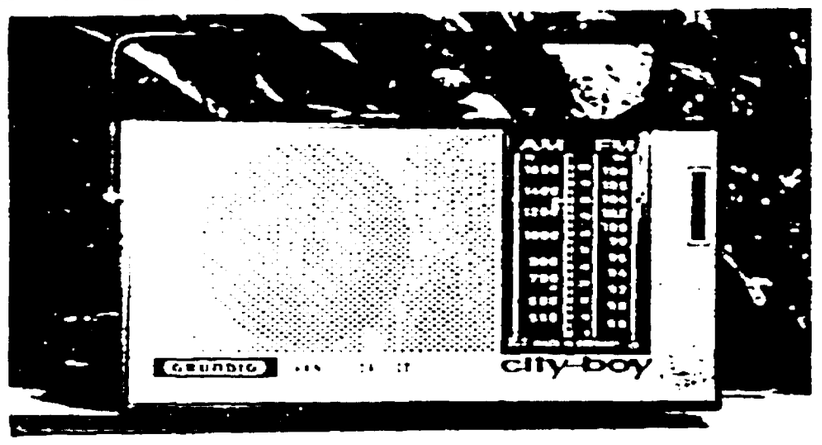
On Aug. 4, 1942, the selection committee named William Pearson Tolley as its choice to be seventh chancellor of Syracuse University. The selection of the eighth chancellor might not differ drastically in actual method, but the transformation of the university into a place of administration + faculty + students will definitely lead to a more comprehensive selection committee.



Alumni

Three Syracuse University graduates will represent their alma mater and Chancellor William P. Tolley at official functions at universities in their local areas during September and October.

Donald E. Peterson, a 1950 graduate, will be the official representative of the University and Dr. Tolley at the inauguration of George Abel Hodson, Jr., as the first president and the dedication of North Country Community College, Sept. 27 and 28.



Mrs. George D. Sherrill, Jr., will represent the University and Dr. Tolley at the inauguration of John Herbert Hollomon as the eighth president of the University of Oklahoma.

LOOKING NORTH for football talent proved profitable for Syracuse, as it landed end Tony Gabriel. The split receiver has all the equipment necessary to become the Hill's greatest pass catcher. (Photo by Biggar)

Canadian Gabriel making it South of the border at SU

By ED AGRANOWITZ

According to sophomore pass catching sensation Tony Gabriel, the best decision he ever made in his life was to quit his school football team in his senior year.

Gabriel passed up his final scholastic grid season in favor of playing with the Burlington Braves, a town team in his home of Burlington, Ont. Tony explains, "I began working out with the Braves during the summer before my thirteenth year (Canadian colleges require 13 grades of primary education), only with the intention of keeping in shape for high school in the fall. I didn't think I would be good enough to play for the town team."

When school time rolled around, and it was apparent that he had the ability to play for the Braves, Tony had a monumental decision to make. "At this time I was president of my school (Burlington Central H.S.), and I was intent on building up a lot of school spirit," says Tony, "but I realized that I would also have to look out for my own interests."

Those interests came in the form of the recognition and stiffer competition that playing with the Braves brought. The age limit in this league is 21 years, and many of its players are former high school stars, and onetime college players.

Gabriel's desire for a college football scholarship also played a big part in his decision. Tony comes from a 12 child family and lost his father eight years ago. "There are no athletic scholarships offered by colleges in Canada," explains Tony, "and there was no way my mother could have financed my education. I thought by playing with the Braves I'd have a good chance to get a scholarship from a U.S. School. It's the best choice I've made in my life."

With the Braves, Tony played under coach Bernie Custis, a Syracuse alum who had three pretty fair seasons on the Hill (1948-50) and is still the leading career passer in Orange history.

"Bernie was a great coach and a tremendous leader," says Tony. "He was really an inspiration to me and the entire team." Custis was also a contact to a possible football scholarship, and was the man primarily responsible for bringing Gabriel to SU.

"I visited the campus for a weekend with Bernie, and knew that I'd like to come to Syracuse," recalls Tony. "When I was told that they would have a scholarship for me, it was the happiest day of my life."

Tony gave the SU football coaches something tc be happy about with his outstanding play at end for the Tangerines. His three touchdown receptions caused the Orange staff to regard him as the best end prospect to enter the school in many years.

The first tests as a varsity performer for the 6'4", 205 lb. "Gabe" made his observers even more enthusiastic. In last year's spring game, Tony led all receivers with eight catches for 115 yards and one TD. Then against Michigan State on Saturday, Tony was the top pass catcher on the field with five grabs for 54 yards.

Actually, this is only Gabriel's third season as a full time end. In two years of high school ball he played flanker and fullback. Ralph Sazio, a coach with the Hamilton Tiger Cats, a Canadian pro team, spotted Tony as an end prospect when Gabe took part in a week long rookie camp sponsored by the Ti-Cats in June of 1966. "I'm glad I would up as an end," says Tony, "I love to catch passes."

In addition to his football chores, Tony served as the official guide when the Orange's team plane flew over Niagara Falls on the way to East Lansing. The trip home was not as much fun, however. "It was a tough game for us to lose because we gave it all we had," says Tony, "but the guys on the team are winners, and we'll get rolling soon."

Voice from the bleachers

Pickens' picks

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

With everybody from Playboy to the Promethean making preseason football predictions these days, the bleacher fan decided, in the interest of his followers, to uncover any debauchery in the polls.

A visit was paid in late summer to the New York City offices of Paul Pickens, proprietor of the Paul Pickens Preseason Pigskin Predictions Poll. He was found relaxing, sprawled over his desk and watching the demolition of a tenement next door. The smell of scotch was heavy in the small room.

After the preliminary chit-chat of the interview, which took place over three cups of black coffee, Pickens began explaining how his predictions, which he calls "the most under-rated ratings in the U.S.," are made.

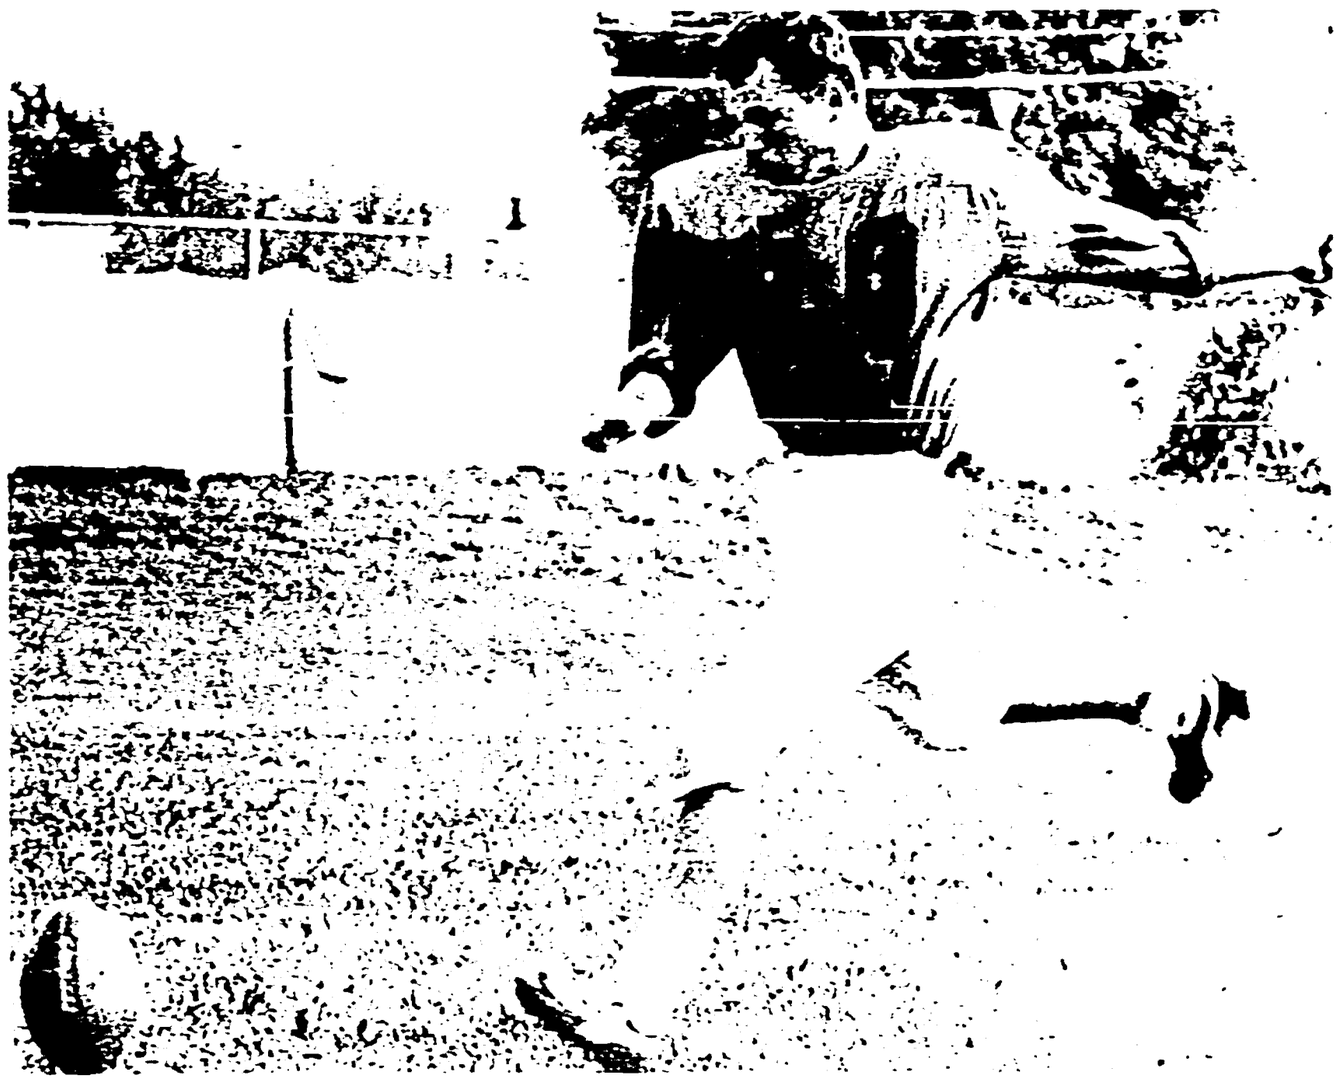
"Now, a lot of pollsters go around to colleges and get their information," he said, smiling. "But why bother?"

Pickens gets most of his background from football stadium programs, college catalogs, Variety and interviews with his campus representatives--the local presidents of the SDS. He went on then to explain each of these sources.

"The Stadium Review gives me vital information about the line," he shouted above the sound of the jackhammers. "I, myself, consider the line the most important facet of the game, and the program offers the best pictures of the cheerleading lines available. I mean, how can you win with ugly cheerleaders?"

When he saw that his point was well taken, he explained the use of the course catalog. "You must have a smart quarterback these days, one who has the time to learn all the intracacies of the complicated defenses. So I look in the catalogs to find out if the quarterback will be able to find enough gut courses to keep him eligible."

Next he came to the use of the show business weekly, Variety. "Very, very important," Pickens said. "It educates me in two vital areas. First, I look at the reviews of the coach's weekly television show. A coach has got to have some pizzazz to succeed today. Why, Alabama almost walked off with the national championship when Bear Bryant was nominated for President!



"I also look in Variety to see what kind of entertainment the kids are getting for after the game. It's a bad scene if they want Big Brother and the Holding Company and they get Little Anthony and the Imperials."

The final phase of his process involves his interviews with local activists. "It's a fairly new idea," he said, blushing a little. "I did come up with it myself. It just involves checking up with the campus demostrators to see if they are planning any picketing of games during the year. You see, if there are distrubances at the stadium, the alums may be offended, some to the point of cancelling their periodic gifts to the slush fund."

Pickens is always on the alert for new methods. The SDS interviews replaced such worn out techniques as evaluating the halftime shows and the amount of meat in the hot dogs. "Those methods leaned heavily toward the California schools," he said.

After Pickens has selected the nations best teams, he goes about picking his preseason top ten. Even here he is constantly striving for perfection. "I used to go with the old reliable pick-the-name-out-of-the-hat technique," he said, "but I found it wasn't accurate enough. I've got a better method now." Out of his desk he pulled a cork dartboard in the shape of the U.S. He hung it on the wall, aimed a dart, and fired. It landed in Indiana, about halfway between Lafayette and South Bend.

Pickens slumped down in his chair, dejected. "Now whom will I pick for number one?" he sighed. He perked up instantly, however. "Hell, I'll just look it up in Sports Illustrated."

Harriers triumph in first

The cross country team, coached by Bob Grieve, became the first winning Syracuse entry of the yeat last Saturday with a double win over Buffalo.

Larry Zuller of the Orange paced the runners over the Drumlins course, turning in a winning time of 25:48. SU took seven of the first 10 spots in the 21-40 victory.

Also finishing high for Syracuse were Dale Parfait, third; Dave Crans, fourth; Don Kuntz, sixth; Phil Riposo, seventh; Steve Billman, eihth; and Bill Swift, ninth.

In the frosh meet, won by the Tangerines, 18-45, two local harriers tied for first. Chalking up the dead heat were Andy Huray and Bob Quinlan. The Buffalo squad took third place, but SU swept the rest of the first ten. Jim Vermeulen was fourth, followed by Mark Sandberg, Chuck Eckerline, Tom Stoyan, Mike Sweeney, Mike Affleck and Steve Maloney.

"I'm real happy," said a smiling Grieve. He hopes to regain winning form this year after last year's losing record.

The frosh and varsity go against Cornell in their next outing. The meet will be held Oct. 5 in Ithaca.

Soccer today

The Syracuse Soccer Club will host the varsity team from Colgate this afternoon at 3:30 in Barry Park, at the corner of Wescott and Broad Streets. Barry Park, which is city-owned, is being used because of the lack of an adequate facility on the campus.

UU building — when will its 'eventual construction' occur?

By JEAN HAVENS
Associate Editor

"SOS!" cried the victorious senior slate for the SU class of '46. Members of the Spirit of Syracuse party, they had included the reorganizing of a student union committee in their platform.

Years had passed since 1937 when the temporary student union, the Club Sahara, opened in Slocum basement. With the coming of World War II, the club had been closed and made into a university dining hall.

Now the war was over and an enthusiastic groups of seniors again presented the idea of a student union to William P. Tolley, who had become Chancellor in 1942. Tolley approved, a new committee was formed, and the Club Sahara was reopened in the nurse's recreation hall in the 800 block of S. Crouse Avenue.

Optimism again ran high as Chancellor Tolley announced that two or three steel and aluminum army barracks were being purchased to be converted into student union buildings. Their probable location was to be "the parking lot along University Place between Walnut Avenue and Comstock Avenue."

The construction of a permanent structure also seemed quite definite. The Syracuse Post-Standard spoke of "...construction of the permanent Student Union, which University officials hope will begin during the next academic year," while the Daily Orange stated "either the block from the back of the Delta Kappa Epsilon house alo University Place and down Comstock or Mount Olympus will be the probable site of the permanent building."

Again, however, dormitories took precedence and the halls Watson, Flint, Day and Graham were scheduled for construction on the "probable sites."

Hicks urges AWS to help in selection of new dean

By HELENE MACDONALD
Associate Editor

Student Government President Chuck Hicks called on the Association of Women Students last night to examine its role and suggested that it play a part in the selection of the new Dean of Women.

Since the students have been given a voice in choosing the new Chancellor, Hicks told the 40 girls assembled in Newhouse that "You should have something to say about the dean you want."

"Stop and think about your role in solving the country's problems," he urged. "Consider the part you can play in helping the poor and working to end discrimination against the Black man.

"Look at the sororities on this campus which refuse to take Black girls or Jewish girls. And don't say it's not true, because it is."

University life blocks out the "big world," he warned. "However, when you walk off this campus, you will be shocked and surprised."

AWS has formed a committee to help with the selection of a new dean of women although the committee's role and function has not yet been defined.

Dean Marjorie Smith, who has reportedly been considering retirement since at least last spring, probably will not make an official announcement until a new dean has been appointed.

Floor presidents from large dormitories and the presidents of medium sized living centers, cottages and sororities attended the year's first assembly meeting.

Living centers having difficulties with group relations or maintenance can call AWS housing chairmen Anne Marie Kis at extension 2639 for help with its problems.

AWS is planning an active year with legislation beginning with an effort to obtain optional hours for second semester freshmen.

A standard constitution giving all living centers optional hours has also been proposed. Each living center would write its own manual of operations, but eligibility and parental permission requirements would remain the same.

AWS president Cindy Bailey called this year's AWS "an activist group intent on achieving a fuller realization of self-government and individual responsibility and freedom. We have certain demands that must be met without sacrificing student dignity and rights."

Spirit of '72

'Normal channels can solve ills'

By BOB TEMBECKJIAN

About 350 freshmen and transfer students attended a convocation at Hendrick's Chapel last night, in which various student leaders outlined the extracurricular activities at SU.

The keynote speaker was SG president Chuck Hicks, who an hour before had spoken to an AWS assembly. He expressed delight at the spirit of involvement and concern being displayed by the class of '72.

Hicks said there are problems in this school that can be solved with "diligent" student effort. He asked that all students ask themselves a simple question: "What can I do about these problems? There are things wrong in this country," Hicks went on, such as the unfair treatment of Negro citizens, and it is "incumbent on the young to solve these problems."

SG vice president Jeff Pertnoy followed Hicks, and charged that "Student government is usually criticized by those who do nothing to help it."

He added that SU hopes to accomplish things through the "normal channel," and SU need not become another Columbia.

Among the other speakers was Charles Babcock, editor-in-chief of the Daily Orange, who asked that freshmen stop in at the DO office and offer assistance in writing news articles and reviews.

The president of Traditions Commission, Mike Sussman, explained that the spirit of the freshmen class can be continued through participation in next year's Goon Squad. Speaking of the attitude the new students were likely to have concerning SU, Sussman said, "They think it is Utopia."

But that idea rapidly dissolved, he said. Therefore, he hopes that membership in the Goon Squad can not only serve to continue spirit, but also to foster more involvement in student affairs.

In what was probably the most important part of the program for freshmen, Ed Feldman, speaker of the Student Senate, described the process of electing freshmen class officers.

A convention to determine which three candidates for president will be placed on the ballot will be held on Oct. 6.

In order to run for office, a candidate must present Feldman with a petition containing at least 25 signatures in support of his candidacy.

Each candidate will also deliver a brief speech before the nominating committee, which is comprised of one representative from each dormitory.

SU scene of 'Experimental' forum for Nixon in front of Hendricks Chapel

Today at 2 p.m. in front of Hendricks Chapel any interested student at SU will have the opportunity to take his political views and put them right in the ear of Republican presidential nominee Richard Nixon.

It's all part of a special program of the Nixon campaign aimed to foster communication between the college student and the politician. Syracuse is one of the first stops on this tour to gather student viewpoints. It was a successful venture at the University of Tennesee which was the initial campus to be visited, and yesterday was held at Harvard Law School.

The program will include a short introduction by top Nixon aids from Washington, followed by remarks by student leaders, faculty and administration. After this, any student will be allowed to make a three minute tape recording on any aspect of the current political campaign.

As many students as pos..le will be allowed to participate, and their remarks may center on any issue, any candidate. The purpose of this open forum affair is to let Mr. Nixon have a first hand source of what is in the minds of college students across the country.

Citizens for Nixon, which is sponsoring the forum in conjunction with the Young Republicans of Onondaga County, promised that every tape will be heard by Nixon or his staff, and questions posed will be answered in writing as soon as possible.

The nation-wide program has been christened "Experiment in Candidate Education," with the primary purpose being to have the voters and students speak to the candidate rather than the candidate speak to the people alone. As soon as trends and majority opinions can be tabulated, it is expected that Mr. Nixon will make a major address concentrating on them.

The intellectual's agony over Vietnam

The intellectuals who oppose the war in Vietnam are unlikely to gain any satisfaction when the next president of the United States is elected in November.

Both Richard Nixon and Hubert Humphrey would try to end the war because the country wants to end the war. But the effort to reach a settlement might be protracted and the temptation to resort to force would be great.

But assume the next president does end the war. The wounds and fissures it has caused would not be immediately bound up. There is a segment of the population made up of college professors, students, clergy and professional people who want more than an end to the war. They want a frank and open admission that our Vietnam policy has been a drastic mistake.

They go beyond the many Americans who want to conclude the war because we can't win or because we're paying too high a price. Instead, many of the intellectuals want to sear into the American consciousness the belief that we can't impose our institutions on other peoples in order to save their country for our defense alliance. The intellectuals want us to remember, because they will remember, that we can't foolishly blunder into a war and kill and kill and then back out muttering apologies.

Orangepower

Is it true that R.A.'s are paid $10 per game to look for students with alcoholic beverages at football games? A.N.

According to Dean of Men David Tatham, some R.A.'s are paid a "sum less than ten dollars" to act as "checkers at the student gates." Students stopped carrying 'packages' into the game will be asked to check them, and will be allowed to redeem them following the game. If this occurs a second time, the persistent booze-hound will be called in to "discuss his actions."

It does however seem curious that no one has thought to register the football games as University social functions at which liquor may be served. Until this happens students will be forced to either get loaded before the game or buy a general admission ticket and get plastered with the townspeople, who pay visable dollars for their seats and are left to cart in their spirits unmolested by the University. Ed. Dir.

Why are graduate students being given the lowest priority, along with Freshmen for picking up their football tickets? C.K.

Seating officials advise us that "football is primarily an undergraduate activity," with the implicit assumption that the primary interests of graduate students lie in other areas.

Thus they have reserved the first day for Seniors alone. It has also been pointed out to us that no grads are on the team or the cheerleading squad. Ed. Dir.

Letters to the editor

To the Editor,

In resigning as dean of the Maxwell School, Dr. Stephen Bailey has not altered what he stated were goals upon his appointment, but he has greatly magnified those goals and has taken a step toward making them a reality.

Dr. Bailey stated at the time of his inaugural to the post of Maxwell School dean, that "...it is clear nothing short of the total resources of a modern university are adequate for public affairs." (PAF syllabus)

Now, seven years later, Dean Bailey has found that to make these ideals a reality it will take more than his work at Maxwell School. To accomplish this he is initiating a movement that will lead Syracuse University into the forefront of public affairs.

By understanding that magistrates alone could not be "viable to a democratic society" and astutely observing that it takes a combined effort from unconnected fields to solve the complexities of modern life, Dean Bailey is striving to make academics and world affairs co-operate.

He is actively engaged in fitting the university into a living society. In doing so, Dean Bailey is making Syracuse a leader in that role, and is inspiring students and faculty here and at other institutions throughout the world to attempt to solve the problems that beset us.

Name Withheld

To the Editor

Never in nature's blueprints has there been a duplication; this is the essence of creativity. To create is to participate in the dynamics of life, a process in which every artist is intimately involved--whether writer, painter, sculptor, or architect. Those who can produce only plagerisms threaten to stagnate all that is vital, inspirational and meaningful in human life.

Without creation, there can be nothing but extinction. For the University to confer a degree upon two architectural students who plagerized their designs is to make a travesty of every other degree, and to move the University just one stop closer to extinction.

The need to be heard

A new auditorium?

By Marc Balkin

Anyone who attends - or has tried to attend - the Friday night film showings in HBC may have gotten the idea that Syracuse is in need of some new auditorium facilities. There are over 20,000 students at SU, and not one auditorium is large enough to hold 1,000 students in comfort. The auditoriums we do have -- Crouse, Grant, Gifford, and Marshall - all have features which knock them off the "Suitable Auditorium" list. Exactly what is a suitable auditorium for Syracuse University? It is a facility which can seat between 1,500 to 2,500 students, and has a stage large enough for any type of production (drama, opera, Broadway shows).

Films should be able to be shown on a large screen, not to mention the need for an orchestra pit. Plenty of storage room should also be provided, and perhaps even a rehearsel room or two might be fit in. To complete our picture of a suitable auditorium, we must ask that curtains and a large backstage area be included.

Why are the campus auditoriums not fit for membership on the "suitable" list? Crouse is large, but has no curtains, no backstage, no orchestra pit, no wings, and seats which face the sides of the building. It has good acoustics, though, and would make a good recital hall. Grant, the newest auditorium on campus, is a small step toward the right direction. It has no curtains, no backstage, no wings, and no orchestra pit. The decor is not bad at all considering it was intended to serve as a lecture hall. It is too small, however, to be called a full-fledged auditorium. Gifford, another lecture hall, has the same deficiencies as Grant, and is simply not large enough for important film showings. As a lecture hall, it is acceptable; as a concert hall, we must reject it. Kittredge is more like an oversized subway car than an auditorium, and it should have been designated as a large closet with a stage and some audio-visual equipment. Marshall Auditorium on the Forestry campus is fairly large, and it does have curtains and some wing space. But it is too old to really serve well, and to refurbish it is not worth the cost or effort.

The Regent Theatre is the only auditorium left to be discussed. It is the sole imitation of a real auditorium we have. One reason I think it is unfit for membership into the "suitable" club is its location. Many students avoid it because of the undesirable neighborhood it is in. Again, it is not quite big enough, and is also fairly old. It is becoming apparent that Syracuse University is going to flunk the auditorium test.

Now that we know that we could use a new auditorium, let us try to find out why we don't have one. Syracuse University builds auditoriums like a child piles up blocks: a drip here, a drab there, but unfortunately these are all little drips and drabs. Could it be that the reason SU enrolled only 39 new music students is the lack of decent performing facilities? And why are voice majors given a chance to perform in operas, operettas, and musicals, while instrumental players do not receive the experience of playing in these types of productions? Because no auditorium on campus is suited for a program of this type. Music students and drama students are paying the same tuition as physics majors and other students who have new buildings. They should be given equally good facilities. Lacking them causes the loss of a vital part of their training. The absence of a large and suitable auditorium affects everyone, not just music and drama students. Many people must be turned away from films and other entertainment because they cannot fit into the building. If a person comes to see a production, he deserves to see it, or at least know there is room for him to see it if he wants to. The construction of a new auditorium would do many things. It would stimulate new

Students find dining plan inconvenient

By ETTA FIELEK

Everybody complains about the food, but this year a lot of people are also complaining about where it's eaten.

As a result of the closing of Sims Dining Hall and the opening of the new St. Mary's complex, a drastic re-distribution of students was undertaken to allot the bodies more equitably over the remaining dining facilities.

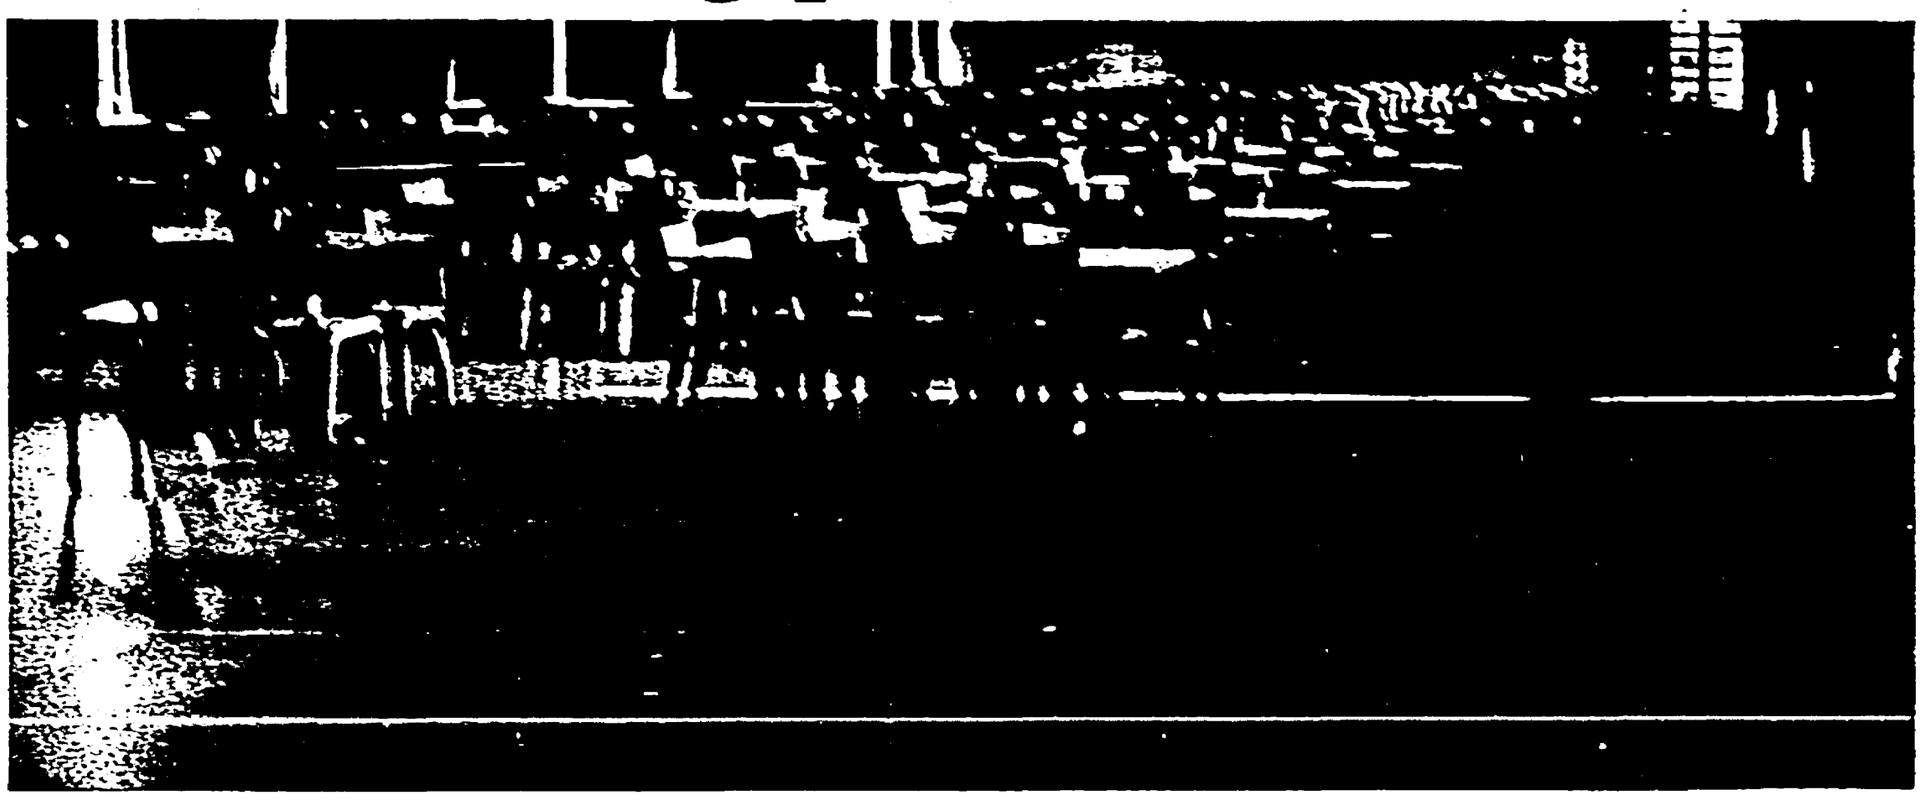
The closing of Sims came about almost entirely because of the opening of St. Mary's and because, according to Dean of Student Services Jim G. Carleton, "There's always a crush for space in the Sims area. If the space is not now utilized, it soon will be."

One of the major problems of the re-distribution was the assignment of students from Grover Cleveland and Lehman, both on University Avenue, to the St. Mary's Dining Hall.

"It's all a matter of geography," Dean Carleton said. "The new dining hall can accommodate as many students as Sims and must be used to capacity. The cottages on South Crouse and the surrounding area are eating there and the two mens residences were next in line."

In response to appeals from students at the two residences, however, arrangements are being made to gradually shift the majority of them to more convenient dining halls. Already, at least 50 men from Grover Cleveland have been notified they will be changed to Haven. It is doubtful that all the changes will be made before November, however.

A problem subsidiary to the closing of Sims is the apparent over-crowding of the other dining halls. Student complaints about staff inefficiency have resulted in petitions at Kimmel, where a 30 minute wait for dinner is not unusual.



Dean Carleton said, however, that "there are no more students eating in a particular dining hall this year than last year," since the total number of students on board remains about the same.

Many of the complaints of long lines are tied in with the new and as yet untested "mug shot" system of dining hall admittance which replaces the old meal ticket system. Dean Carleton called the innovation a matter of "convenience" for dining hall personnel and student alike.

First of all, he said, "you had to have your card to get in. If a girl left her wallet in her room and her card was in it, she couldn't eat."

A second consideration in the new system was that it would save time. "It is hoped," Dean Carleton said, "that simply checking a picture will be quicker than punching a usually mutilated card."

A third problem connected with the old system was that students, especially men, were not often available to receive new cards.

URC directs concentration on more than religious matters

By MARTY BLOCK

A group representing thousands of Syracuse University students swung into its third year of operation this month. Unfortunately, the name of this organization, United Religious Council, tends to isolate it from most of Syracuse's highly secularized student body. Actually, URC is far more concerned with SU policies and programs than with issues of a basically religious nature.

The United Religious Council is so named because each member represents one of fourteen on-campus religious organizations (Hillel, Newman, etc.) It is directly responsible for Link, an organization promoting understanding and friendship between SU students and families of the Syracuse ghetto. Operation Volunteer, a tutoring program in downtown Syracuse, is also under the auspices of URC.

While many students still think of URC as a Church controlled, inactive organization, campus leaders now realize its potency. During the first URC meeting, this term, representatives from three organizations requested aid from the Council for fund raising. Byron Merritt asked for aid in the formation of a Dr. Martin Luther King Scholarship Fund for black students. Bob Leighninger sought aid from URC in raising $1900 for Operation Shoestring, and Stan Hunterton requested aid in raising money for another tutoring program, Projection '70. All these people were assured of assistance from URC.

URC conducts meetings every other Tuesday evening at 7:30 in Chapel House. The next meeting, open to observers, will be on Oct. 8. Any inquiries should be directed to President Nancy Sargent (478-8763).

Senior convocation

Counseling and memoranda services set up

The primary objective of the Placement Service Center is to aid students, especially seniors, in planning their careers. To do this, the Placement Center, 804 University Ave., has established a system of counseling to provide both guidance and information for students.

Mr. George Abbott, principle speaker at the Senior Convocation last night at Hendricks Chapel, advised seniors about the various services offered.

To make information easily accessible to the students, a system of Information Memorandum has been set up. To date memoranda has been published dealing with jobs offered by government agencies, summer employment opportunities, teaching and studying abroad, and graduate work-study programs and fellowships.

In addition to these services, the Center also gives students a chance to meet perspective employers by holding a six-week period of interviews in October and February. Approximately 400 employers, primarily representatives of government agencies and various businesses and industries, conduct interviews during this period. No committment on either side is required; each student is encouraged to investigate as many different opportunities as he wishes. In this way, the Center hopes that each student will have the widest possible selection of careers to choose from.

Students are urged to take advantage of the many services offered by the Placement Center. Any interested student should make an appointment for counseling. A free copy of the College Placement Manual is also available.

SDS schedules political teach-in, military freak-out during '68-'69

By SUE LEVY

"Vote PIG in'68."

This was the message students received Tuesday night as they walked into SU's first SDS meeting of the new term. Last year's achievements and plans for the coming year comprised the agenda.

The meeting was conducted by Bob Tumposky, who welcomed all freshmen and transfer students. He briefly cited last March's sit-in in the Administration building and the 1300-member Peace March as two of last year's more noteworthy SDS projects.

SDS will officially get under way on Oct. 1 and 2, when recruitment for the Marines will be conducted on campus. At this time, SDS hopes to get some students in old military uniforms to "stand around and freak 'em out." This won't be a "straight" demonstration, because it is generally felt that can get boring and attract fewer people.

Also of particular interest was the news that comedian Dick Gregory will be coming to Syracuse during Homecoming Weekend. At 4 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 13, Gregory will speak at Grace Memorial Church, not in his role as comedian, but as a presidential candidate. In some states Gregory is a recognized candidate in the presidential race.

Other plans for the coming year include a teach-in on the campaigns of Humphrey, Nixon and Wallace, and an educational monopoly game. This would be set up on the quad with people as players, a pair of giant dice, and different squares pertaining to today's vital issues, such as "move six squares and land in Vietnam." There will be a meeting this Monday night at 7:30 for all those interested in working on the game.

On the basis of the meeting it appears as though SDS has set up a busy and industrious schedule for the year. However, it remains to be seen if, after all the joking around that took place, they can stick to their plans they've made and carry them out.

Dr. Golden called 'faithful' to Miller's 'The Crucible'

By JAMES KING

Arthur Miller wrote his 1953 drama "The Crucible" as a bitter response to the hysteria of the McCarthy days. In his depiction of the Salem witch trials, he offered a scathing condemnation of that kind of mass hysteria which attacks the rights of the individual to be different. And Miller's parallel suggests that McCarthy's war on heretics-in-politics was just as irrational and unthinkingly inhuman as the seventeenth century witch trials in Massachusetts.

Now that the play has lost some of its topical significance, it has come to be regarded by some as a social document. But it is still a fine play--a bit burdensome in its dialogue, perhaps, but a fine play neverless. The Syracuse Little Theatre is giving it a creditable production at the Experimental Theatre this weekend, and what stands out here is Miller's compassionate treatment of those individuals caught in a mire of irrationality which holds them helpless to change their fates.

Dr. Joseph Golden has staged the production, and what I most respect about it is his fidelity to the playwright's work: he has given "The Crucible" the most straightforward and complimentary treatment possible, a production where the director uses his consummate skill to make himself look as inconspicuous as possible.

In fact, Dr. Golden may respect the Miller play a bit too much. There is a point where fidelity becomes a nuisance, and the director comes close to that point when he includes a scene where the hero, a rugged individual with some radical opinions about the Church, has a meeting in the forest with the repressed woman-child whose rumors have spread the hysteria of "Cry witch!" over the countryside. The hero had committed adultery with her once, and this is something he wants to forget in order to salve his conscience. And yet the girl continues to lust after him, and is even willing to accuse his wife of witchery in order to have him as her husband. The scene explores further the character of the girl and her motivations, yet Miller himself will admit that the scene rattles the tempo of the play and that whatever information it offers is implied elsewhere in the play. The scene was eliminated in the Broadway production and in many other local productions; since the Little Theatre production already runs too long, it would have been a good idea to throw out the scene here too.

But Dr. Golden has worked wonders with some of his actors. There are, of course, a few novices in the show who just have to be quietly tolerated, but the ensemble playing is very good indeed, especially in the climactic sceme where a quartet of girls, pretending to be bewitched, goes through some unnerving, but theatrically effective, histrionics.

As the individualistic hero of "The Crucible," Keith Taylor has a lot of stage presence and a George C. Scott-type profile. (Mr. Scott, you may remember, played the role in the network television production two years ago.) The audience liked Taylor immediately.

Sue Tanenbaum is excellent as the wicked villainness; not only that, but she also manages to convey the struggle between her concealed desires and the society's expectations of her as a woman. Jay Stone is convincing as the reverend who has been summoned to lead the witch hunt, and his youth gives credence to the transition he undergoes in the play. An older man, it seems, would be too obstinate to perceive the inhumanity of the situation. Casting a young man was a clever move.

University Union dream—myth or reality?

The student union committee refused to give up, and on December 1, 1947, opened a new student union in the former Pi Alpha Chi chapter house, 405 University Pl. The building was enlarged with the addition of a prefabricated metal wing and "The Clipper," a war surplus diner which could seat 60 persons at a time.

This new union was a great success, and presented a very full program including dance lessons, a classical music hour, a travel bureau, lending library, club meeting facilities, bridge, chess, table tennis, and a Book Mart which sold used textbooks.

With this success, the student union settled into oblivion again until the 1963 annual Activities and Exchange Conference at Sagamore Lodge. At that time the organization changed its name to "university union" because of its new philosophy which aimed for "one united campus community, not just closer relations among students."

That same year, Chancellor Tolley stated that "1966-67 could be a realistic date for a University Union building at SU." In 1965, Ann Cooney, then chairman of the student union board, said, "We might have a student union building in 1968 if the money is available." No one seemed certain exactly when the building would be built, but, if nothing else, the funds kept building up.

SU's profit from the New Year's Day '64 Sugar Bowl game ($54,479) was credited toward the "eventual construction of a new student union," along with the university's profit from the '66 Gator Bowl.

But in a 1966 Daily Orange article, Dr. Allen Best of the Syracuse Development office explained why we don't have a union building: "There's only one reason and it's very simple. There has never been a donor to give us one, or to give us the major portion of the cost of one...when we have $2 million, we will borrow the rest and begin working on the building."

"When we have $2 million," "when we have $10,000,"—the totals have changed in 41 years, but the goals have remained the same. Or have they? Will the University Union ever be a reality?

Chancellor Tolley, at the Sagamore Lodge Activities and Exchange Congerence in 1963, said, "the 'university union' is definitely in Syracuse University's building program.

Present UU board chairman Jerry Tatarian considers the Union a reality. Citing such UU projects as The Place, Bull Sessions, the UU Underground, Friday Night Flicks, and the proposed Kimmel Basement facility, Tatarian said: "Union is real—it fits into life at Syracuse by trying to bring different segments of this campus together at various times with the final goal, union of a community—SU."

"University Union contributes to both the social and academic facets of student life at Syracuse," said Mary Franciosi, present UU vice-chairman. "It is a reality to those who are interested and are willing to become sincerely involved."

JERRY TATARIAN

An SU freshman, when asked, laughingly considered the prospect of the construction of a union building. " 'After the library...' they'll say. Then after that's finished they'll find something else that has to be built first. UU might become a reality someday, but right now, it's like you said, a 'perpetuated myth'— a nice myth, though; what other myth do you know that shows free movies on Friday nights?"

A myth to a freshman, an involving and unifying reality to interested upperclassmen, University Union is and always has been a topic of debate. The 41-year struggle has not been in vain-everyone now knows about UU and will hopefully do something about it.

Auditoriums . . .

interest in Syracuse as a cultural school and center.

The need for building an auditorium is quite obvious. It is not obvious why one has not been built. Sure, dormitories, classrooms, and field houses are important. If Syracuse expands to, say, 25,000 undergrads in the next several years, just what does the University expect them to do with their leisure time? Students already have trouble visiting each other. We have no "union" building. Most entertainment and restaurants are off campus and hard to get to. And no auditorium on campus will be big enough to hold more than a small percentage of these students. SU must, without delay, plan to construct an auditorium in the very near future, perhaps starting later today. Maybe an alumni will donate funds for part of it. Maybe the Administration will devote part of the student fee toward a fund for the building. Or if we are lucky, one might just appear out of the smog some day. However it is done, let's get to work to provide Syracuse University with an auditorium - now, not 20 years from now. It is later than you think.

It would bring in more income to groups sponsoring events in it. Most important, it would give students an opportunity to receive a fuller education by learning how to perform on stage, behind the stage, and in the orchestra pit. Music majors might even become enthusiastic. Everyone would benefit by the addition of a large auditorium to the campus.

Dr. Edwin H. Hammond of the Georgraphy Department was one of four persons recently cited by the Association of American Georgraphers for "meritorious contributions to the field of geography" at their national convention in Washington.

Professor Hammond was recognized "for his contributions toward a rigorous analytical approach to study of land surface forms, and his application of this approach to the entire United States." His map of the land surface features of the United States is to be included in the forthcoming national atlas being published by the U.S. Geological Survey.

Professor Hammond, also co-author of a widely used college text on physical geography, came to Syracuse in 1964 from the University of Wisconsin.

Sing-out SU formed

Sing-Out Syracuse University, a subtle protest movement whose media is music, was born Tuesday evening at Crouse College.

Gerry Fidel, one of the first students to become interested in having a Sing-Out SU, explained to an audience of over 70 students that while the problems in the world today are burdensome and numerous, there is still an inherent goodness in man. If the idea of goodness can be communicated from one person to another, a major obstacle in working for a better world has been removed, he explained.

Sing-Out members try to communicate this message through music, songs and actions. At Tuesday's meeting, Sisters Cecile and Janet, both full-time music students at Syracuse, introduced the group to such characteristic songs as "Which Way America?" and "Up With People." The Sisters will work with Sing-Out members throughout the year on the actual music.

Rev. Charles L. Borgognovi, who has over twenty years of experience in the theatre, will direct the staging of productions.

Sing-Out meets every Tuesday evening from 7 to 9 in room 308, Crouse College.

Members needed

Board formed to aid in dorm self-government

Interdorm Council has established a Resources and Planning Board to aid dormitories and their councils in creating the kind of self-governing units they want. This group of people with special skills will help dormitories with both common and specific problems; it will research and analyze the particular problem along with the dorm council (or with the D.C. as a whole), and make recommendations for action. This board could handle problems like finding the right kind of programming for a dorm, or like helping a group focus on one issue or change it desired.

The membership would be drawn from the entire university community, ie., independents, Greeks, graduate students, faculty, and administrators. The only requirements are skill and an interest in helping dormitories. The members of this small board (5-7 people) should be "innovators and good analysts to a certain degree"...The board needs the following skills and positions filled. An individual may serve in more than one capacity.

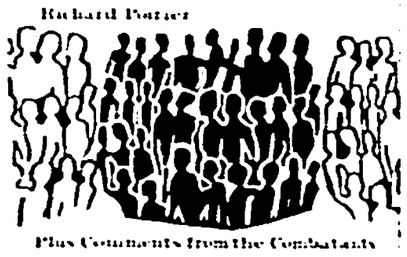
Publicity - Someone who knows techniques of advertising and publicity and their effect. Also, a practical knowledge of the mass media at Syracuse would be desirable.

Programming - This person should know what can be done with programming at the dorm level...and have some information on how to get these things going.

Legal Advisor - This man should know some of the legal aspects of university policy.

There is no title for this position, but it would be someone who knows Syracuse University, its structures and student groups. He should be able to analyze prevailing attitudes with a knowledge of structural change.

"Groups" expert must have a practical knowledge of groups and group behavior. Skill in group dynamics and such training is also desirable.



Applicants can be from any segment of the community. They should submit a brief description of their particular skill or experience, and how it can be applied to dormitory problems. Give these to Peg Johnston, New Dorm, or Fred Boss, Lawrinson. An interview with the Interdorm Council Exec will be arranged at this time also. If you have any questions please feel free to call Peg Johnston at x3046, 47 or Fred Boss x 3532.

Can't stay together

Parson cottage men resist evacuation

By ELLEN BILOFSKY

Complaining of increased personal expense, inconvenience and the loss of companions, the 18 residents of the doomed Parson's Cottage promise "little ripples" of protest.

One of 40 university-owned "temporary housing" units, Parson's Cottage at 104 Walnut Pl. must be evacuated by Oct. 11 according to a directive from Director of Men's Housing John W. Wade.

"We don't want to make giant waves," one Parson's resident told the Daily Orange yesterday, "just little ripples. The fellows have put time, effort and money into fixing up their cottage."

The main gripe of Parson's residents is that they will not be able to stay together. They may all be assigned to Sadler, Lawrinson, Lehman or even another cottage. Although they would be in the same dorm, they say they would have to adjust again to new roommates and friends.

Moving into any of these living centers would increase their room fees, they complain.

The switch in dorms would also entail a switch in dining halls. The reassigned students would eat in St. Mary's for two weeks, and then go back to Haven where they eat now, or to Kimmel.

Other cottages will be vacated to fill some 280 openings in large living centers, Wade told the residents. Parson's Cottage was one of the first chosen because of a faulty heating system. Now several residents, claiming that only minor repairs are needed on the oil burner, have volunteered to pay for the repairs themselves.

Other residents are accepting their fate. "If we have to go, we have to go," concluded one student. "But if anyone ever comes up to us and asks where we're from, we're from Parson's, whether it's here or not."

UU concert

University Union will bring Motown to Syracuse Sunday afternoon, when they present Smokey Robinson and the Miracles in concert.

Bill "Smokey" Robinson, Bobby Rogers, Ronnie White and Pete Moore formed the group in 1953, but their success was modest until Motown Record Corporation signed them up in 1958.

The Miracles, like all Motown groups, went through an extensive development program of dancing, staging, lighting, makeup, music and diction lessons.

The group soon had "Got A Job" (the answer to the Silhouettes' "Get A Job") on the charts. Their first big hit was "Shop Around" in 1961.

Other outstanding singels for the Miracles include "You've Really Got A Hold On Me," "Mickey's Monkey," and "I Second That Emotion."

The Friday night dance will feature the Chambers Brothers. They are four brothers: George, Willie, Joseph and Lester, and a friend, Brian Keenay.

Tie Colgate, but

Soccer Club running into a dead end

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

On a borrowed field, wearing uniforms bought with borrowed money and, ironically, with the strains of the Syracuse alma mater being played in the background, the SU Soccer Club faced Colgate yesterday.

The Colgate team is a university financed and sanctioned squad that plays a full intercollegiate schedule. The SU Soccer Club is a group of players of assorted backgrounds and nationalities which hopes someday to attain the level of recognition that their opponents enjoy.

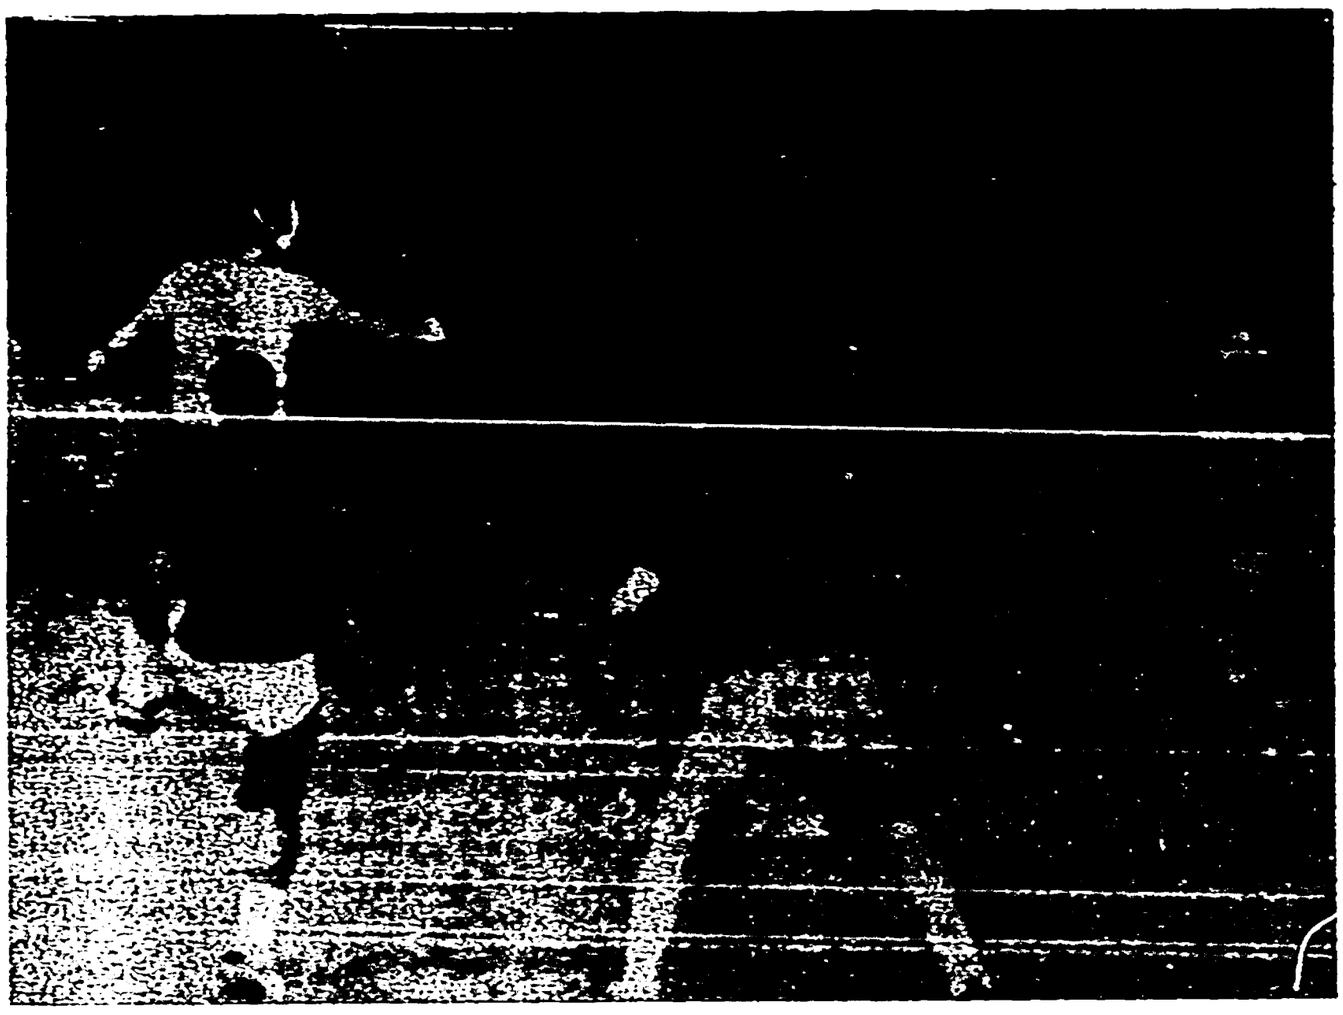
The Club was born last spring, hatching out of a natural rivalry between freshmen soccer players from Booth and DellPlain dorms and graduate students, mostly foreign born. Steve Kass, of the foreign players, and John Marchyn, of Booth, got together and merged their teams. Now Kass is the president, general manager, public relations man and chief worrier of the Club, while Marchyn is the team captain.

Kass is getting a lot of cooperation from the other colleges in this area. "Varsity teams like to work out against us, because they know we can give them a tough game. We made our reputation in the spring. But since we don't have varsity status, they have to call the games scrimmages," he said.

At first, the team went completely unrecognized by the university. Recently, however, their charter has been approved by Dean Jim Carlton, and is awaiting approval of the Student Senate. This encourages Kass, but not much. "Ultimately, it can never succeed as a club," he said. "It costs too much money, and the organization might disappear."

The key to success for the Soccer Club is in gaining the ear of athletic director Jim Decker, who, according to Kass, is leading them around in circles. "Decker is completely disinterested," Kass explained. "It's like talking to a wall."

Decker explained to Kass that soccer has failed in two previous trials at SU, the last time only a few years ago. "He told me that in his eyes soccer at Syracuse had been set back 10 years," Kass admitted. "He wants us to prove ourselves over a number of years before he will consider it. But it's a different situation than before. It is amazing that someone can be so obstinate about something."



According to Kass, Kecker promised the Club a field last year, but when the SUSC president went to see him this fall, he was informed that none was available, because of fall lacrosse practice and band rehearsals. Kass, however, maintains that both lacrosee coach Roy Simmons and the assistant band director told him that use of their fields would be all right during certain hours.

The game was held in city-owned Barry Park, watched by a high school team that usually plays there, as the SU band played in the background.

The team played in uniforms bought with a one hundred dollar loan given by the International Students Organization, while the university's old uniforms rested unused in the Field House.

"In the long run, it's much better if the university organizes it," said Kass. "The kids want to know they represent Syracuse University, not just the Syracuse University Soccer Club."

The Orange squad showed skill and poise, however, as they tied Colgate, 2-2, in front of a crowd of about 50 people.

Transfers from Southland welcome additions for SU

By BOB GALLAGHER

Some people would rather fight than switch, while others would rather switch than fight. Junior football players Bill Maddox and Jack Protz have switched to SU from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. They both are now anxious to begin the fighting.

Maddox is a six-foot, five inch, 241 pound tight end from Tupper Lake, N.Y., while Protz is a linebacker from Colonia, N.J. Protz weighs 218 pounds and stands six geet, two inches.

"I transferred," said Maddox, "because coach Jim Hickey and his staff, by whom I was recruited, were fired, and I couldn't get along with the new coaching staff under Bob Dooley, brother of Vince Dooley, the coach at Georgia." Maddox also felt that Dooley was not straight forward because "he told the players one thing then told the newspapers something else.

Maddox decided to switch to SU mainly because of the coaching staff. "They are good coaches and they treat me decently. There is no criticism of guys who get the job done," he said. Maddox played football at Manlius Prep, where he was a teammate of Orange captain Tony Kyasky. "Since I played prep school ball in this area, I didn't at first want to play my college ball here," said Maddox.

Linebacking coach Chuck Fogarty, who was a mentor of Maddox at Manlius, heard that he was disatisfied with North Carolina, and contacted him about coming to the Hill. "Coach Fogarty," said Maddox, "told me that if I came here and did all right, they would give me an athletic scholarship. So I came here in the fall, just before the beginning of classes and received the scholarship."

The main reasons Protz gave for switching were "I didn't like the South; it just wasn't for me. Also the brand of football played at North Carolina was not my type. Syracuse plays a better brand of ball."

Protz feels that the coaching staff at SU is more straight forward and better than the one at North Carolina. "The coaches here," Protz says, "have more of a feel for the game. Since the staff has been together for a long period of time, the style of play is better and more thought out."

"The defense here," he continued, "is much more refined. We adjust to meet the other team's strengths and we move with their motions. At North Carolina they were set with a side tackle six."

Of the two, Protz decided to switch here first. Originally he was going to attend SU after high school, but later chose North Carolina. He decided to come here after the completion of his freshman year.

The Eastern College Athletic Conference, of which Syracuse is a member, rule governing the eligibility of transfers states that they must sit out one year of their eligibility. Maddox and Protz didn't play their sophomore years. "We worked out with the team at practice on a voluntary basis," said Maddox.

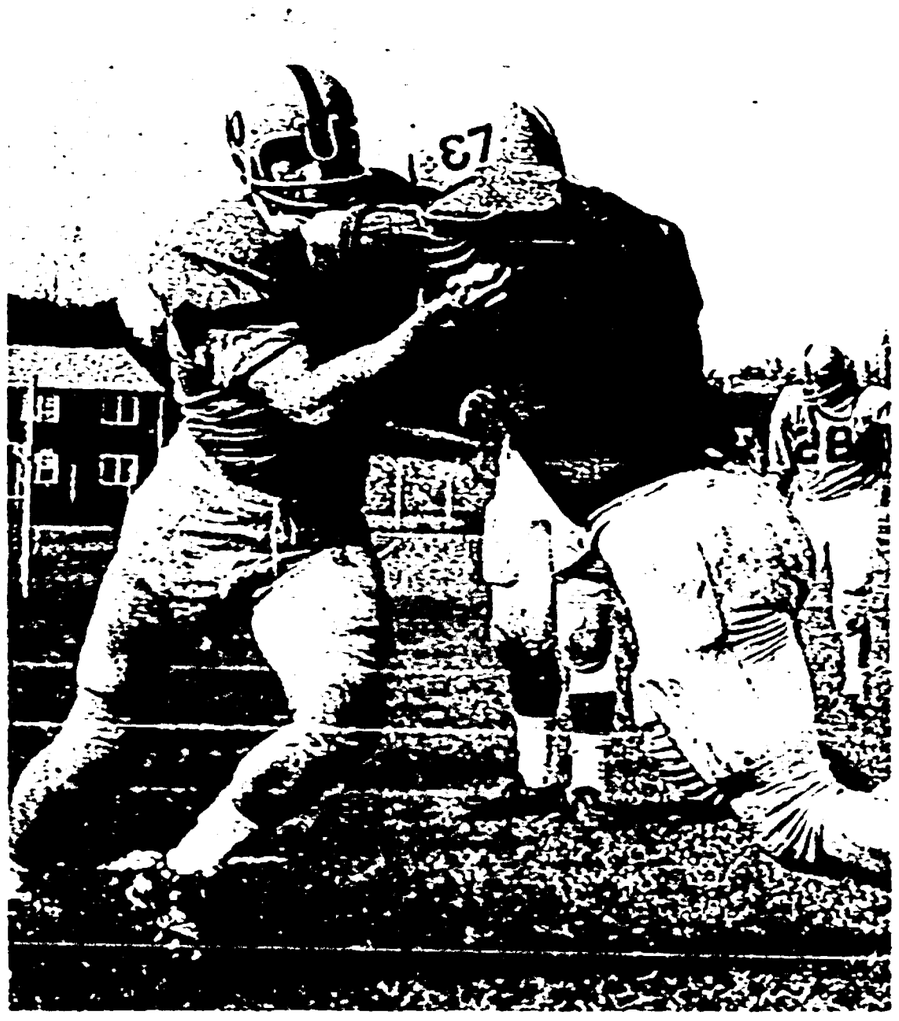
"It was a good idea," said Protz, "because we were able to learn a lot about the Syracuse system."

The two find many differences between football the North Carolina way and the Syracuse way. Maddox says, "The players up here are bigger, tougher and smarter." The stabilized offensive system of Syracuse with the unbalanced line is a welcome change from the three different formations which North Carolina employed while they were there.

"There were drills at North Carolina," says Protz, "whose purpose was to hurt players. If there were players who were not thought to be as good as the rest, an attempt was made to injure them during practice rather than admit theymade a mistake in recruiting them."

Since Maddox is an offensive end, he has many new plays and formations to learn. "My first job is to recognize the opposition's defense, so I will know who I'm supposed to block," said Maddox. He went on to say that the names for the pass patterns are different here. "The pass pattern I'm used to running under a certain name," he said, "is not the same name they use here."

Protz doesn't believe there is anything difficult for him to learn. "If you want to play, you learn," he says.



Both like the Syracuse schedule much better than North Carolina's. Maddox thinks SU's opponents are more challenging and varied, because North Carolina plays mostly teams in its Atlantic Coast Conference.

The two were disappointed in the outcome of the season's opener, a 14-10 loss to Michigan State. Protz felt, "We made too many mistakes, but we will come along and eliminate them."

Looking ahead to this week's opponent, Maryland, both feel it has improved vastly over last year's 0-9 team. "With 32 lettermen returning, they are no easy team, "Protz said. He believes they have a good quarterback in Alan Pastrana, but not a great running game. "It will be another tough day," he added.

From the offensive side, Maddox thinks the execution of the Orange will improve. He said, "The running attack will be better, and we will also continue to pass." Maddox says Maryland won't be able to use the defense, with only two men on the line of scrimmage, that they used last week against Florida State, "because fullback Al Newton will tear right through it."

Orange fans are hoping that North Carolina's loss will be Syracuse's gain.

Campaign for Nixon attracts large crowd

By BOB ZUER

Republican presidential nominee Richard M. Nixon's campaign express rolled into Syracuse yesterday in the form of his two daughters and future son-in-law.

Julie and Tricia Nixon and Julie's fiance David Eisenhower arrived for the grand opening of the Onondaga County Citizens' Committee for Nixon and Agnew headquarters at 438 S. Salina St.

During the 12:30 p.m. ribbon cutting ceremony-political rally, both Nixon girls poked fun at Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, Nixon's Democratic opponent. Tricia recalled signs she had seen during the campaign like, "Hush, Hush Sweet Hubert" and "Trade Hubert for the Pueblo."

For the most part, however, all three seemed content to spread congeniality among their fellow Republicans here and leave any discussion of the issues to the former Vice President.

They spent most of their time listening to plugs for local GOP candidates and shaking hands and signing autographs for the crowd that lined part of the 400 block along S. Salina St.

Republican Congressional candidate David O'Brien shared the rally platform with other local GOP dignitaries.

O'Brien welcomed the Nixon girls and Eisenhower referring to them as three people who have practiced the ideology, "If you want to change the world you've got to get into it and work at it."

He also mentioned what he considered the important issues of the campaign: the Vietnam war, establishing "an orderly and just society," overhaul of an outdated welfare system, and he added jokingly "whether or not there will be a wedding in the White House this year."

The trio arrived in Syracuse after making stops in Albany and Binghamton Wednesday. In Binghamton a small but loud band of hecklers forced Tricia to sit down during one point of her speech until the group quieted down.

Local Republican officials said they received information that a group from Syracuse University was supposed to picket the new Republican headquarters during the ceremonies but the demonstration failed to materialize.

Commenting on student demonstrations at a press conference at the Hotel Syracuse earlier in the day, Eisenhower said students sometimes hurt their own cause by their actions. He cited a recent Gallup Poll that said 59 per cent of the American people condoned Chicago Mayor Richard Daley's handling of the demonstrators at the recent Democratic National Convention as an example.

Students must "operate within the confines of the law," he emphasized.

"Mayor Daley is an anachronism and the Democratic Party is an anachronism, he said. But he added the intention of the leaders of the demonstrations was to "state a confrontation" with Chicago police and "create disorder."

Tricia said one of the ways to cure the supposed alienation of today's young people toward the government is to give those people a voice in that government. Her father is in favor of lowering the voting age to 18, she added.

Commenting on the campaign, Julie said regardless of the outcome, "It will be great to look back and say I was a part of it."

Russians not welcomed

Professor praises Czechs for 'good will and courage'

By BOB ZUER

A Syracuse University geology professor in Czechoslovakia at the time of the Russian invasion praised yesterday the "good will and courage" shown by the Czechoslovakian people and labeled the Russians as "occupiers" of that country.

Dr. William Romey spoke and showed slides of the takeover at a forum on the "Invasion of Czechoslovakia" in Kittredge Auditorium. The program was sponsored by the SU Russian and East European Studies Program.

Dr. Romey was attending a World Geological Congress in Prague and said he saw no prior signs that indicated a Russian invasion was imminent.

Two days before the invasion he saw no evidences of troop build up while travelling through East Germany. Even as late as 24 hours before the takeover Dr. Romey saw only "normal street scenes" and "pleasant situations" in Prague.

He did say he saw a number of anti-Russian and anti-East German slogans written on walls and sidewalks throughout the city. The night before Dr. Romey attended a play that poked fun at socialism.

But once the Soviets did arrive, according to Tomey, it was clear that they were neither invited nor welcome as they would have the world believe.

Dr. Tomey showed a slide which reprinted in English a Czech newspaper report that labeled the Soviets as "occupiers." Another report emphasized the four words, "sovereignty, freedom, socialism and solidarity." A number of other slides showed signs demanding the Russians "Go Home."

The streets were filled with troop carriers, tanks and many

Javits to discuss draft here Monday

U.S. Senator Jacob K. Javits (R - N.Y.) will discuss the draft when he visits Syracuse University Monday (Sept. 30). He will speak at 8 p.m. in Hendricks Chapel at a Public Affairs and Citizenship Lecture Program and will participate in a panel discussion with students.

Sen. Javits will speak first on the Selective Service System and then he will join a panel of students to answer their questions and questions from the audience. The program is open to the public without charge.

Javits attended Columbia University and graduated in 1926 from New York University Law School. He was elected to Congress in 1946 and served four terms. He then served as Attorney General of New York State and was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1954, 1956 and 1962.

Reforms pending?

Pressure intensifies against campus politics

By ALAN STAMM
News Editor

Campus politics here may be dangling on the brink of a revitalized era as pressure for extensive reforms gains momentum.

Two dorm council presidents and the speaker of Student Senate yesterday enthusiastically endorsed an impending investigation of alleged misconduct by SU's two political parties.

Senate Speaker Ed Feldman cited personal experiences as he charged parties with the use of "physical force, destruction of personal property, forgery and embezzlement" in recent campaigns. "It's time to clean up the parties by exposing their tactics," Feldman stressed.

"Evidence" against parties will be gathered by the Senate Committee On Political Equity (SCOPE). "This will definitely not be a whitewash," emphasized chairman Fred Tuccillo.

In a joint statement issued yesterday, DellPlain President Dick Conrad and Booth President Steve Tober expressed hope that SCOPE's inquiry would lead to significant reforms.

The two leaders, who represent almost 1,000 dorm residents, hope that student officers in other university living centers will follow their example.

"Dorm councils represent a lot of independent students on this campus," explained Conrad. "These independents are almost totally excluded from the present political system."

"Even Greeks are not offered a fair system since they must vote for one party with the rest of their house," added Tober. "This campus needs a democratic system where students can make choices as free individuals whether they're Greeks or independents. That's something no one can logically or morally oppose."

If SCOPE's open hearings fail to produce such reforms, Conrad and Tober said there is "a very good chance" that a new party "of free individuals" might oppose CAP and GIA in this spring's elections.

"You can't expect 75 per cent of the student body to support candidates they had no voice in nominating," Conrad said. "Sooner or later that 75 per cent is going to pick some candidates of their own--and this could be the year."

Tuccillo has "challenged" both parties to make his investigation unnecessary by disbanding and reforming to include independent members. His proposal would not bar Greeks, but would exclude "forced" membership along Greek lines. Greeks could still join either party individually by paying membership dues directly. Currently, dues are automatically extracted when one joins any house belonging to either party.

"It's obvious that a system can't be democratic when individual choice is restricted like that," Tuccillo remarked.

In effect, his "challenge" to parties to reform themselves offers CAP and GIA an opportunity to avoid the

Choosing a Liberal Arts dean

A committee is receiving suggestions this afternoon on how to best pick future deans of the College of Liberal Arts. The long-range process of questioning future subordinates rather than relying on the dictate of a dean's future superiors belongs at a university.

What are some suggestions that might be relevant to this committee?

In a classic statement on higher education, Cardinal Newman in "The Idea of a University" says ". . .all branches of knowledge are connected together, because the subject matter of knowledge is intimately united in itself as being the acts and the work of the Creator. . . to give undue prominence to one is to be unjust to another."

Seventy-seven years later Alfred North Whitehead in "The Aims of Education" said, "There is a proverb about the difficulty of seeing the wood because of the trees. That difficulty is exactly the point which I am enforcing. The problem of education is to make the pupil see the wood by means of the trees.

"The solution which I am urging, is to eradicate the fatal disconnection of subjects which kills the vitality of our modern curriculum."

More recently, Mark Van Doren in "Liberal Education" notes, "We glibly list the skills and the knowledges that mark an educated man without inquiring whether there is a necessary relation between the columns of terms."

These three men whose writings cover a century of human experience dwell on a common theme. Knowledge is not meant to be divided and subdivided by artificial distinctions. A familiarity with sociology, economics, political science or history does not constitute knowledge. Man compartmentalizes knowledge so that he can deal with it, but his distinctions are not forever valid.

A future dean of the College of Liberal Arts should hold this foremost in mind and seek to bind together the disparate courses that make up a liberal education at Syracuse.

Better health

Chancellor Tolley to move into dorm

Dear Chancellor Tolley:

We of the Parsons Cottage Board of Health like to think of ourselves as responsible administrators attuned to the greater interests of the majority of residents in our university family. So, realizing perhaps that you may not take this very easily, we have taken time out of our busy schedule to explain why you must evacuate your present residence.

First of all, our inspectors have discovered after a series of exhaustive tests that your present residence is in certain aspects unsafe. No fire escape route has been planned and an efficient fire escape not installed, and the heating is insufficient as well--most rooms have as few as one or two heating units!

Secondly, we have located several vacancies in our men's dorms that should all be filled so that we can tell the federal government that we are overcrowded, and we wouldn't want to tell a lie.

Thirdly, we think that the change to a dormitory atmosphere would help you feel more a part of Syracuse University since most do live in this fashion.

Now, even after we have so completely explained our reasons for evacuating your present residence, you may feel quite indignant about not being consulted earlier. You must remember, as everybody else must, that the chancellorship of Syracuse University is not a right but a privilege. Where you live is not important as the role you must fill for the image of our illustrious institution.

Still, we like to think of ourselves as very tolerant of any protest which you wish to organize as a part of our democratic heritage. That is not to say that we will listen to or consider anything which you have to say, however. Good luck in your new home. We will be over in a few hours to move you out.

Our regrets to Mrs. Tolley. She will stay at Day Hall on the Mount.

Letters to the editor

To the Editor:

Just why were the architecture students of Tuesday's editorial not immediately suspended or expelled, particularly when they were admittedly guilty? Contested cases have resulted in such action. Both students are now enrolled in the senior (thesis) year as if nothing had happened. Their presentation model occupies the place of honor in the dean's office--more evidence of that impressive presentation (even of plagiarized work) silences faculty/administration voices which should honestly be raised in protest.

Appropriate measures apparently involve too much responsible activity. This incident not only hurts the Graduate School of Architecture but the entire university community. Please do not sign my name as that would undoubtedly bring unwarranted accusations of personality clashes, which are not in fact at work here. Thank you.

Sure beats us too. That's why we printed the column. Ed.

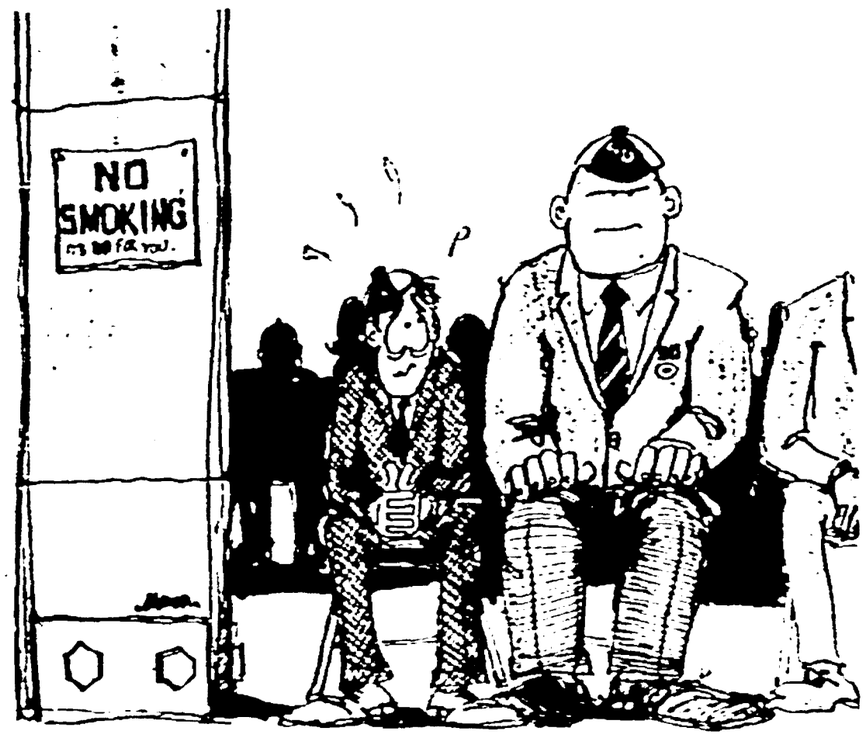
Chicago recap

Sacrifice for change

By Paul Finkelman

Discussion of the events in Chicago will undoubtedly continue on through November with passionate debate and rebuttal. Mayor Daley, in tones reminiscent of Governors Wallace and Barnett, will continue to attack the press for "trying to ruin his city and state." He will also reiterate his claim that unwanted "communist agitators" flooded his city. (At the same time he will proclaim that Chicago is still "convention city - USA" capable of handling all large groups and conventions). Liberals will decry the travesty of the convention and refuse to support its candidate. Foreign press representatives will heal their bruises and further hurt our image abroad.

Yet, in all the discussions it is doubtful if one question, perhaps the most important one about the convention, will be asked, much less answered. It seems as if society is afraid to seriously contemplate why thousands of white, educated, middle class young adults with seemingly nothing to gain and everything to lose from their actions, attempted to march through the streets of Chicago and were willing to face the wrath of their parents and Chicago's "finest."



The question cannot be answered with a simple and pat reply, such as "communist conspiracy." If this were indeed the case, as Mayor Daley and others seem to imply, than there are more communists in this country than in the USSR. To blame the student protests on communism, or even the youthful desire to raise Hell and rebel, is to seriously misjudge the temperament of today's youth. The answer can be found in the general discontent with, not only how the adults in power are running the country, but also with the system that they are using.

Those in Chicago were prepared to sacrifice the benefits of the affluent society for a change in the political system. They were naive enough to believe that the leaders of the Democratic Party would be willing to share their power with the youth of the nation. They were naive enough to think that the popularity of a man and a platform might prevail over the power of a boss.

When the dreams of the students were beaten in Chicago the nation effectively told its youth that the system is more important than the individual and that the power of a party must remain in the hands of tired old men. It also made the students realize that the system will not allow itself to be changed from within. The middle class youth who were in Chicago, or participated in the campaigns of Senators McCarthy and Kennedy, in any way, are now faced with the dilemma of either dropping out, or actively working against the system from the outside.

Thus, the result of Mayor Daley's work in Chicago may be a self-fulfilling prophecy. Since the system has failed the youth, and the nation, the system must be destroyed. American youth went to Chicago in an attempt to bring about a peaceful revolution. They were ready to sacrifice much of their future for an idea they thought was right. Beaten, they may now turn to violence or a "communist conspiracy" to change the system.

The ultimate results of Chicago may not be known for years, but for too many the American Political System has failed its last examination, and like any student who fails his exams, the system must be expelled.

Look to your left, look to your right! One of you won't be here next year!

St. Mary's to vote

Dorm council sets date, rules for election

By CHARLES SHAPIRO

Striving toward the goal of a unique living center, the men's dorm council at St. Mary's has formed explicit rules for the forth coming all-dorm election. Meeting Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week, the council formulated and voted on all election details, and then met with each candidate.

The council itself is composed of two representatives from each of the 12 floors. From their number the council chose five to form an election committee. Those on the committee included: Sol Fulero, Barry MacDonald, Tom Cunningham. Starting with no pre-set rules, the group of five drew up a set of election regulations. It was first formally decided to hold an all-dorm election from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. and that only a dorm council president and vice-president should be elected at this time.

Qualifications were then debated about, and the following were determined. All candidates must be undergraduate males, residing in the New Men's Dorm (residence is defined as physical occupation of a room), and in good standing academically, as defined by the University. To become a candidate for either office, any person meeting the qualifications was required to submit a petition, which included the signatures of 20 fellow dorm residents, to either the dorm council or to Steve Beltzer, advisor to the council. The petitions deadline was noon, yesterday.

For the office of president, petitions were received from Gary Bacal, Ed Barron, and Gordon Morrell. Petitions for the position of vice-president were received from John Pierce, Doug Widman, and Robert Zimmerman.

During the campaign, each candidate may have one poster, maximum size two by two feet, on each of the 12 floors. A sheet describing the candidates platform must appear with the poster. In addition, one poster will be permitted in the main lobby. Each candidate is permitted to have a maximum of five campaign assistants. The names of these helpers must be submitted to the election committee. It is not permitted to distribute printed material of any type, and the use of physical dorm facilities is prohibited. Campaigning is to end by midnight on Sunday. While the dorm council will not sponsor any particular election events, the candidates may hold debates or other campaign activities.

The actual election, to be held in the main lobby, will progress in this manner. Each resident of the dorm wishing to vote will, upon showing his I.D. card, receive a ballot. On the ballot the names of the candidates for each office will be listed alphabetically, and the voter is to mark his choice. Write-ins will be disqualified. After marking the ballot, the voter will return it to the table, and his name will be crossed off a master list.

At 7 p.m., when the voting is completed, Beltzer and the members of the election committee will count the ballots. A simple majority (one half plus one of those voting) is required to win. The name of the winners will be posted. If no candidate receives a majority for a particular position, there will be a run-off election between the two candidates receiving the largest pluralities. This election will take place on Tuesday. No further campaigning will be permitted for the run-off election, should there be one. Voting regulations and counting procedure will be the same as on the previous day.

The eleciton committee has the power to postpone either the election or the run-off, should this become necessary. After discussion, the regulations drawn up by the committee were adopted unanimously by the dorm council. Any candidate who does not comply with the rules set forth, may be disqualified.

'Making faith real'

Sawyer speaks Sunday at 11 a.m. Chapel service

Michael O. Sawyer, professor of political science, will speak at the Sunday service at Hendricks Chapel. Sawyer, a Roman Catholic layman, chose as his topic "Render Unto Caesar--in November." The public is invited to the 11 a.m. service.

The Rev. Dr. John H. McCombe, Jr., dean of Hendricks Chapel, said in announcing the Chapel's program for the year: "This is the first time we have asked a Roman Catholic layman to speak at a regular Protestant service. It is part of the expression of the ecumenical spirit of the Chapel."

He said that after consulatation with students on the Chapel board it was decided to invite prominent campus personalities, rather than off-campus "stars," to share the preaching with McCombe, a Methodist.

"The students are stressing the aim of making faith real on campus," the dean said. "They said it would be helpful if the professors and leaders they work with during the week had an opportunity to express on Sunday the faith and values which motivate them and which help all of us achieve our goals."

Future speakers will include Rabbi Milton H. Elefant, the Jewish chaplain; the Rev. Charles L. Borgognoni, the Roman Catholic chaplain; Prof. Donald Meiklejohn, director of the public affairs and citizenship program of the Maxwell School; and Prof. Charles V. Willie, chairman of the sociology department.

McCombe said the Chapel choir has 38 new members and is singing at its full, 110-member strength. "Dr. David Johnson, the choir director and organist, is looking forward to an outstanding year of musical accomplishment," he said.

The Oct.6 service will feature an experimental folk communion led by Methodist Chaplain Frank A. Halse, Jr.

Students speak on dean selection

By BETTY SCHUYLER

Syracuse University students will be given the opportunity to voice their opinions and present nominations for the Dean of the College of Liberal Arts today at 2:00 in room 204 of the Physics Building.

Professor Donald E. Kibbey, chairman of the Liberal Arts College Committee on the selection of a Dean, stressed that this meeting will provide undergraduates, graduate students, and faculty of the College with a chance to openly express their views on the next dean's qualifications. The group will also be given the opportunity to nominate candidates from inside or outside the University.

Individual presentations must be limited to 10-15 minutes. The Committee would appreciate brief written presentations which can be amplified. Those who wish to speak may call Miss Marcia Paige on extension 2375 to arrange for a specific time.

The Committee was established by the faculty of the College of Liberal Arts last spring. It has the responsibility of proposing candidates for the Deanship. All deans and directors are appointed by the Board of Trustees.

University plans for national expansion of recently acquired advertising company

Syracuse University has recently acquired Civic Survey, a personalized advertising company, from a former Syracuse resident, Miss Thelma Padgett. Miss Padgett, who founded the firm which has operated in Syracuse since 1946, made this gift through the University's Deferred Giving Program. The encouragement of civic-minded merchants has led to the expansion of this service throughout New York and other States.

Mr. Victor J. Colway, Comptroller of Syracuse University, said that the University plans to expand Civic Survey nationally. He continued that already...."the entire operation has been organized into one of the most exciting and dynamic advertising approaches for the generation of new business. Civic Survey promises to be the most effective service of its type anywhere!"

Civic Survey specializes in introducing newcomers and newly married couples to their community. The firm publishes a guide to the city entitled "Introducing Your City to You," sponsored by the city's foremost local merchants.

This guide highlights the cultural, historical and civic aspects of Onondaga County. The booklet is designed to become a permanent part of newcomers' homes, showing the many advantages offered by their new community.

Peter H. Jeffer, a native of Great Neck, N.Y., has been retained to serve as National Executive Director of Civic Survey. He is a graduate of Syracuse University where he served as President of the Student Government, the Senior Men's Honorary and the Sophomore Class. A co-founder of the "Leadership Through Education" scholarship program, he also received the highest undergraduate honor by being elected Class Marshall at his Class Commencement.

Jeffer has an academic background covering business management, advertising and public relations. He is listed in "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges." He was also chosen "Outstanding Fraternity Man" by the University's Inter-Fraternity Council and "Undergraduate of the Year" by the national chapter of his fraternity, Tau Delta Phi. He is married to the former Susan Sherman of Merrick, L.I., who is a senior mezzo soprano voice major in the School of Music at the University. Mr. and Mrs. Jeffer reside at 124 Remington Avenue.

Kenneth G. Sheinkopf has been named Copy Director and Account Executive for Civic Survey. He brings to the job wide journalistic experience, including work as assistant editor of the Syracuse University "Alumni News," editor-in-chief of the University's 1967 "Senior Magazine" and executive editor and daily columnist for the "Daily Orange." He was also managing editor of "Vintage" magazine.

A member of sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism honorary, Sheinkopf received a B.A. from Syracuse in 1967. He expects to receive his master's degree in advertising from the University in January. He recently served as a class chairman for the University's 1968 Annual Giving Phone-A-Thon in Onondaga County.

A former employee of the Syracuse "Post Standard," Sheinkopf has written for several local publications. He also served as a summer intern with Cunningham & Walsh Inc., a New York City advertising agency. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris D. Sheinkopf, 147 Fayette Boulevard, Syracuse.

Mrs. Eva M. Slocum has rejoined Civic Survey as an Account Executive after an absence of nearly five years. She first was associated with the company in 1946, working as a local representataive in the Syracuse area. Later she was named Field Supervisor, setting up the Civic Survey service in such cities as Buffalo, Rochester, Utica, Auburn and Cortland.

Mrs. Slocum was also active in building the service on a national scale and assisted in such cities as Washington, D.C. and Cleveland, Ohio. She was organizer of the Civic Survey Club--a group designed to help newcomers get better acquainted with the city and each other. Mrs. Slocum resides at 347 Mildred Avenue, Syracuse.

Jeffer called Civic Survey's product "kind of a permanent shopping guide" for newcomers. Several other "welcoming" agencies do business in the area, he said, "but there's plenty of room for competition."

URT to present Electric Circus

Syracuse music fans of diverse persuasion are offered smorgasbord at The University Regent Theatre September 29 at 8:30 p.m., when The Electric Circus presents the "ultimate in legal entertainment."

Comprised of such unlikely components as Rock band and Medieval choir, mime, improvisation, lights, free form scenery, electronic sound composition, The Electric Circus has delighted not only young fans with its totality of theatrical presentation, but has attracted the attention and admiration of serious musicians and dancers and performers from all areas of show business. Marcel Marceau plans on doing a show with the Electric Circus in New York.

The Electric Circus has the distinction of being one of the few presentations at Carnegie Hall in recent years, not only to sell out the house, but to do so twice in a row.

UU faces possibility $8,000 weekend loss

"I think Union is the Place, Bull Sessions, concerts. I think it is the spirit of Syracuse, and the spirit depends on the students. In essence, the students made Union what it is, and thus far, they have made it successful.

"I think the reason I chose to run for SG president is because I wanted to raise Student Government to the level of University Union in terms of service to students."

Chuck Hicks, who said the above words, may not have a University Union to emulate after this week. Due to apathetic student response, UU could lose as much as $8,000 on the upcoming UU Weekend.

Since, the University Union operating budget for 1968-1969is $9,000, and UU has spent $1,000 already this year; the losses on the concert and dance will totally deplete Union resources.

All University Union activities will have to be cancelled for the coming year. This includes Friday evening movies, University Union Bull Sessions, The Place, mixers and dances.

Money from the UU Building Fund has been allocated for the Kimmel Project, which will be a temporary Union facility in the basement of Kimmel with snack bar and recreational area. The Kimmel space will still be developed, but cannot be used this year for lack of funds.

"We need $8,000 to make it a totally successful weekend," commented UU Chairman Jerry Tatarian, "but we could manage on $6,000, or the profits from 1500 more tickets. People have suggested that one way to help Union and do something for the community as well would be to take someone from the city with you to the concert."

New York Press Convention opens this morning at SU

By NANCY KLINKENSTEIN

The Empire State School Press Association's 1968 convention opens this morning at SU. Composed of approximately 700 delegates, the convention represents leading journalists from 100 New York State high school newspapers, yearbooks and magazines.

Conducted each fall in Syracuse, the convention also has contest and scholarship competition. Discussions between students, college progessors and authorities on high school journalism are provided on the problems of producing high school publications.

Opening session is in Hendricks Chapel at 11 a.m. The principal speaker is Professor D. Wayne Rowland from Syracuse's School of Journalism. This afternoon, study sessions in various phases of journalism are scheduled. Delegates will take part in newswriting and current events competitions for three scholarships for journalism study at Syracuse.

Tonight at 8, the 31st Annual Awards Banquet will take place at the Hotel Syracuse's Grand Ballroom. Robert G. Fichenberg, executive editor of The Knickerbocker News and president of the New York State Society of Newspaper Editors will address the students. Twenty-five plaques and 100 certificates will be presented to individual editors and publications for performance in 26 categories of journalistic work during the 1967-68 year.

Saturday morning, study sessions will be held at the Hotel Syracuse. To complete the conventioneer's weekend at SU they will attend the Syracuse--Maryland football game on Saturday afternoon.

Man always finds a reason for war

By LEW HOWELL

Why is it that after all these centuries we are still amazed at war. We still arise in righteous indignation and attempt to search out that small "minority" who have obviously caused this flagrant aberration. But here is where we go astray.

Look for a moment at the history of this being called man who often considers himself to be above the other animals because of his ability to use his intellect in the governing of his life. In an interesting TIME Essay in September 1965 it was pointed out that since the beginning of recorded human history there have been an average of 2.6135 wars per year. Of 185 generations of man's recorded experience, only ten have known relative peace.

The record does not seem to improve. For the period 1945 to 1965, TIME listed 40 wars, to which we can add the conflict in the Sudan——which according to a recent 'New York Times Magazine' article may have already cost as many as 500,000 lives, the Arab-Israeli War of last year, the Biafra-Nigeria conflict, the apparently regular fighting and high death count in China during the past two years, plus assorted other minor battles. TIME's essay was entitled, significantly, "On War As A Permanent Condition."

What is it that seems to drive man on to such persistent violence. There is perhaps an element of absolute necessity for war on the part of one of the combatants. Other Men show greed and We must protect ourselves against it. Other Men would destroy our Way of Life and we must prevent them. Aggressors must be Punished, we say.

In his book Sanity and Survival: Psychological Aspects of War and Peace, Jerome Frank lists five other reasons why men go to war. Briefly, they are: "war has been the medium of the birth and growth of modern nations," and they continue to exist primarily as a result of their ability to fight; "the demands of war have powerfully stimulated technological progress." Advancements in production methods, scientific knowledge, and improvements in health services have come about largely as an aid to the soldier; "the preparation for and waging of war afforded a livelihood and paths to status and prestige not only for soldiers but for industrialists, engineers, and scientists." Military investments have meant temporary economic prosperity for the entire nation; "war, or its anticipation, has had the attractive feature of stimulating a feeling of social solidarity," often removing differences within a society; finally, and perhaps most significantly, he notes that "war has satisfied certain important psychological needs of men, especially young ones. The role of warrior, much esteemed in many societies, affords a means for establishing a feeling of manhood as well as an outlet for aggressiveness. Many young men seem to need to stretch themselves to the limit, including risking their lives, to achieve a sense of identity. War affords many opportunities for heroism or the altruism of self-sacrifice for others' welfare. It is a break in the humdrum routine of life, a means of supplying the excitement that everyone craves."

There are, then, some reasons for war that one might admire. There are others that we condemn as serving the selfish interests of a few who benefit from war but who seldom pay the toll which falls upon those in lesser positions. There are those reasons deeply rooted in the character of man——reasons which drive the young to seek to be Men by learning to kill and maim under the sanctions of a national flag and which drive other young men to do battle in the streets and on the campuses under similar flags.

We have survived past wars on platitudes and luck, most of us. We refuse to blame ourselves for the feelings which have brought man to the decision that perhaps 'no world' is better than 'their world.' We continue to rely on violence as a primary expression of human intention and hope. We pass from cause to cause. Swords have not been made into plowshares and man continues to plod on with that activity which seems to benefit and satisfy him the most——war.

Chevrolet plans for more success

By PETE KAPCIO

Chevrolet has just announced that they plan to build 27,000 Z-28 Camaros in the 1969 model year. This street version of their winning Trans-Am racer has really taken off in popularity, considering only a thousand were built in 1967. The Z-28 can be named second only to the Corvette in its performance. One of the reasons is the incredibly strong 302 cubic-inch V-8 under the hood. Chevy has taken the basic 327 engine, and after decreasing its size to comply with the 5-litre limit of Trans-Am racing, added reworked heads with larger ports and valves, solid lifters, wild camshafts, and a four-barrel carb about the size of a Depression soup kettle. Add the optional Ram-Air package and right away, 400+ horsepower, giving quarter-mile times in the low 12's. But the best part about the Z-28 is that it goes around corners as well as straight lines. Chevrolet has spent a lot of energy to achieve superior handling and braking. Evidently it was worth it; Roger Penske's Camaro has won eight out of the eleven Trans-Am events this year for Chevy! The super heavy-duty suspension and Goodyear Polyglas tires give the Z-28 the cornering ability of a four-wheeled Floyd Little. The steering is quick and precise, but without the optional power steering, a lot of effort is required. If you order the optional 4-wheel disc brakes, never drive without your seat belt buckled, or else wear a crash helmet! Needless to say, stops are sudden.

The Z-28 started life as a racer. It's obvious that driving a car like this on the street will produce all sorts of undesirable side effects for the owner. After two hours driving time, the arms go numb from steering, your left leg is all kinked up from the clutch, your backsides are sore from the pitifully inadequate seats, and your wallet is probably as empty as the gas tank. Gasoline mileage is not one of the car's high points--somewhere in the range of 10 miles per gallon.

The Z-28 Camaro is a rugged car, a complete joy to drive. Its road racing heritage has done well for it, and it is certainly refreshing to see a major Detroit manufacturer take time out from building sleds and build a real car. If you had one, you'd probably forget all about the little inconveniences and fall in live with it. I wonder if the "Z" really does stand for "Zap!"...

Incidentally, 1968 has been the year for Chevrolet in all the major road racing events. Roger Penske has already clinched the Trans-Am title for Camaro with three races in the series still remaining. Mark Donohue, in another Penske-sponsored car, won the U.S. Road Racing Championship (unlimited sports cars) in his McLaren/Chevrolet. And in the richer, faster Canadian American Challenge Cup series, also for unlimited SP. cars, odds-on favorite is either Denis Hulme or Bruce McLaren in their McLaren/Chevrolets. These three series of races have all been, (or will be) swept by Chevy. Now that's not a bad record for a manufacturer who claims that they are not involved in racing!

More info on the Glen....The Grand Prix is only two weeks away (Oct. 4-6) now, so a little more information would bein order. Admission for the whole weekend is $12 at the gate, or $10 for Sunday alone. As in the past, there will be plenty of tickets available right up to race time. Believe it or not, twelve bills is not really all that exorbitant, considering what is charged at other major races or sporting events. Don't forget that this is a World Championship race. All the available rooms in or near Watkins Glen have all been taken by now, so if you don't want to miss the partying or practice Saturday, include tents and sleeping bags along with the beer you bring. A camping permit for the infield is a paltry .50 per night, and you don't have to worry about finding the track Sunday in your stupor. The inevitable menu of hotdogs and hamburgers is available at any of many refreshment stands.

Chances are you won't need much food, though. If you come down for Sunday alone, better come early. Sometimes it's impossible to find parking,

"Touring" provided by SU's Regent

Travel without trouble is the motto of the Regent Theatre World Adventure Tours opening for a new series Sept. 29 and 30. "The Two Worlds of Polynesia" is the initial film lecture program narrated and filmed by the two-time winner of the Costeau award for underwater photography, Stan Waterman. The showing covers the world of the people of the South Pacific and the underwater world of beauty and adventure which Mr. Waterman has captured.

In keeping with the theme of the film, the Regent lobby will be decorated with Polynesian artifacts, ushers will be costumed authentically and tickets will be taken by a gentleman garbed for diving.

Two showings of the World Adventure Series will take place Sunday at 3 p.m. and Monday at 8 p.m. Individual tickets are $2.00; the entire series of eight films is offered for $12.00 with discount prices available for senior citizens, servicemen and students.

For information call the Regent Theatre (476-4536) or visit the box office at 820 E. Genesee St., open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday and from noon to 9:00 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.

Fraternity men visit infirmary

By BETTY SCHUYLER

Syracuse University students who are ill, whether legally or ingeniously faked, and are "resting up" in the infirmary, look forward to the evening visits of the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega, the National Service Fraternity. Besides offering catering service directly from Marshall Street, APO members fraternize freely with the patients. Discussions range from courses and University happenings to the possibility of blind dates in the near future.

Active on the Hill since 1931, the Phi chapter of APO has emphasized its principles of Leadership, Friendship, and Service by participating in campus, local, and national projects. On the national level, the brotherhood has given assistance in the annual blood drive for the past several years. One of the biggest annual traditions on campus is the erection of the Christmas tree in front of Hendricks Chapel.

Students who wish to sell their books at a price not obtainable at the book outlets both on and off campus, were given the opportunity with the invention of the Student Book Mart. This fall the Book Mart was put on wheels, and the traveling van met with great success. There is a strong hope within the fraternity and on campus that the Book Mart can successfully compete with University bookstores.

Tatham says 'no'

Alcohol drinking again banned at football games

By BOB STRUGATZ

Any warm feelings of satisfaction tomorrow will have to come from witnessing a Syracuse victory over Maryland, and not from the effects of alcohol, as Dean David Tatham's ban on liquor at Archbold will again be in effect.

This system, initiated last year, includes investigation of all packages and bundles carried into the stadium. The investigation will be carried out by representatives from the Dean of Men's office. Any liquor found will be confiscated, and returned at the end of the game. If the person involved is an SU student, his name will be recorded. If he attempts to bring liquor a second time, he will be referred to the student judicial board.

When asked whether the system would be expanded to include patrols inside the stadium, Dean Tatham said this would be the responsibility of the security police or the Department of Athletics.

Last year the number of packages taken ranged between 60 and 70 per game. Compared to the thousands entering Archbold, this would not seem a large amount and the efficiency of the system is questioned by some. Dean Tatham remarked that his staff assumes that most students entering the stadium are not carrying liquor. He added that since there are no personal searches, it is impossible to be 100 per cent accurate.

Disorderly behavior, especially in the student sections was noticeably reduced last year, according to Dean Tatham.

A student conduct code?

SG to bring Police Chief Connor to campus

Student Government will begin monthly dialogues with city administrators Oct. 9 in hopes of improving student-city relations as part of its program for the coming year.

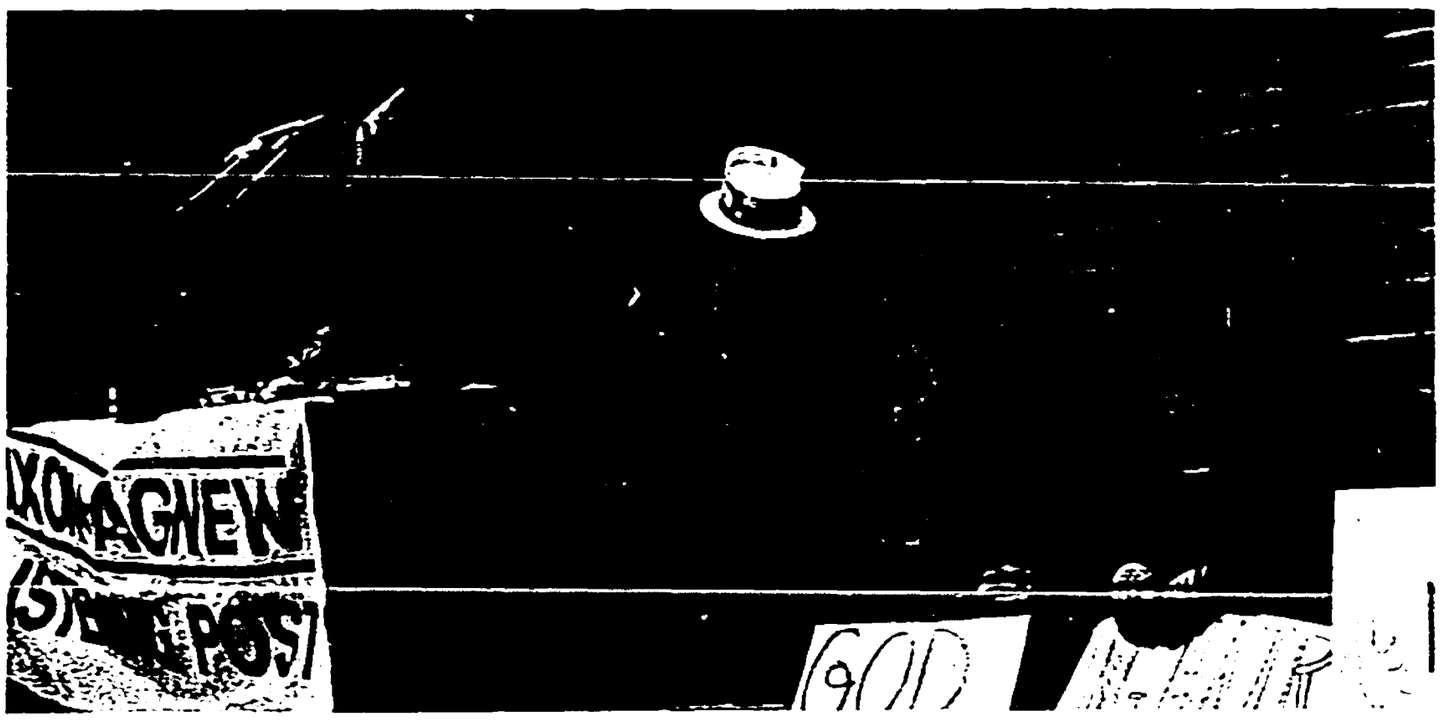
Syracuse Police Commissioner John F. O'Connor will discuss street parking around the St. Mary's dormitory site, handling of student demonstrators and changing the direction of streets in the University area at the first session.

Chuck Hicks, president of Student Government, described SG's plans, social, academic and community, last night at a meeting of SG Exec where commissioners outlined their programs for the coming year.

A code of student conduct is in the "talking stage" and SG wants to form a committee of 25 to 30 administrators, faculty and students to hold open, then closed hearings and draw up a code of conduct.

This year's Pinebrook Conference, a weekend retreat for student leaders, will take place Oct. 18-20. Academics at Syracuse University including an evaluation of curriculum at Syracuse, a discussion of the grading system and how to make Syracuse an undergraduate-centered school again will be discussed.

One hundred residents of Lehman and Grover Cleveland who had been assigned to eat in the new dining hall, a 20-minute walk from their living centers, have been transferred to Haven and Kimmel dining halls through the work of SG's food service committee.



The committee also hopes to switch the remaining 180 students to the closer dining halls.

Three SG publications are planned for the year, beginning with a semi-weekly Student Government newspaper informing students of SG activities.

A literary, art and photography magazine similar to Vintage, last year's literary magazine, is also being planned.

SG will work on a survey of courses all year and finish it in May so that it can be printed and ready for next fall. This year's survey ran into difficulties because the registrar reportedly would not tell SG the new course numbering system.

Besides individual committee program, SG plans to sponsor a drug study program and a weekend seminar on student power, improve the Alpha Phi Omega book exchange and try to initiate a pre-registration system.

Demonstrators as well as speakers turned out yesterday at the Nixon-Agnew listening post on the steps of Hendricks. Bill Flynn, a campaign aide to Richard Nixon, the Republican nominee for the presidency, also spoke.

Religion and space

Pugsley starts endowments

Chester D. Pugsley, a retired lawyer of Peekskill, N.Y., has set up endowments at Syracuse University to finance an annual essay contest in religion and a seminar on space law.

The contest is open to undergraduates, graduate students and faculty members at any university in the world. A cash prize of $50 will be given for the best World Prize Essay on "A Postulate for the Existence of God through Science." The University's religion department will administer the contest for Pugsley, who stipulated that each entry should be no longer than 50 words, exclusive of the title. The first contest is to be held this year.

The Syracuse University College of Law will sponsor the space law seminar, probably during the 1968-69 academic year. Pugsley suggested that a series of round-table conferences could usefully discuss "research in exploration and communications law in outer space and maintenance of law and order to correct world unrest."

'Ungentlemanly Art'

Cartoonists wield smack In Gilded Age of press

By DAVID TATHAM

The Ungentlemanly Art, by Stephen Hess and Milton Kaplan, 252 pp. MacMillan $12.50

The Art and Politics of Thomas Nast, by Morton Keller, 353 pp. Oxford $12.50

Hold on, and you may walk over the sluggish animal up there yet. December 27, 1879. From "The Art and Politics of Thomas Nast" by Morton Keller.

The Gilded Age was the Golden Age of the American political cartoon. From the close of the Civil War to the close of the century there was a happy coincidence of good draughtsmen, a keen national appreciation of the comic in art and literature, and the arrival of new and inexpensive means of mass pictorial reproduction. By the 1870's the numerous illustrated weekly magazines had oriented their readers to a taste for editorial comment in pictorial depiction of recent events. In so doing, the weeklies gave rise to a school of comic artists whose techniques and attitudes were willingly shaped to the regimen of meeting the weekly issue deadline.

Half a century earlier, during the last years of the separately-issued political caricature sheet, comic artists were able to wait for a pregnant moment or to comment variously on public tastes, working by season rather than by week. The pictorial weekly caricaturists were required to have a weekly observation, however uninteresting the week may have been. Yet their work was remarkably fresh and carried with it the smack of novelty in the absence of other visual media commenting on the same subjects. There have been better draughtsmen since—the present galaxy of political cartoonists has never been matched in sheer skill—but the medium is now just a bit tired. Twentieth century political cartoonists have tended to be clever rather than vicious, "deep" rather than comic. They remain vulgar, as they must, but they have sought respectability and one wonders if that motive is not of questionable value to the health of the genre.

In their survey of the American political cartoon from colonial times to date, "The Ungentlemanly Art," Hess and Kaplan devote a generous section to the post-Civil War decades and include a broad range of well reproduced examples of the art. The accompanying text is a brief popular summarization of the history of political caricature. It catches fire when it dwells on the Gilded Age. Otherwise, it is helpful and cheerful, though this reader would have been happier had the authors skipped much of the chatty commentary on the private lives of the artists. The fifty or so pages that form the final major section of the book are puzzling and fascinating. It must have been no

Samuel book sheds 'Light on Israel'

By ABE WAGNER

Maurice Samuel, Light on Israel, Alfred A. Knopf, 212 pages; $4.95.

Since the founding of the State of Israel in 1947, each succeeding period of crisis has seemed to produce a number of significant books in response to the current crisis. Prevalent not only in 1947 and 1956, the events of June 1967 have thus far generated several works of major inportance, Maurice Samuel's "Light on Israel", the product of a veteran and articulate midn now promises to be the finest of the lot.

In this latest in a series of books on modern Jewish history, Samuel transcends the immediate persuasion to publish detailing a chronicle of the June 1967 events. The task he does take up, that of placing these historic events in the context of both Jewish and world history proves not only more meaningful but of greater value in terms of truly understanding what took place and why it is of significance to the entire world Jewish community.

Few men besides Samuel seem capable of producing such a book. The author draws upon more than half a century of deep personal involvement in the establishment of the State of Israel and historical studies of it.

What Mr. Samuel has attempted, is to provide a reasonably short book which concisely relates Jews to their "homeland," putting the continued conflict in a certain perspective where it becomes relevant for all readers. As Samuel puts it, he has tried to "enclose within a small compass the essentials of my views and feeling for the State of Israel and the Jewish people as they relate to each other, to world history and to the contemporaneous world scene."

Unlike many similar attempts, Samuel begins the book with a brief account of the loss of the biblical Jewish homeland and of the classic attempts by scholars and statesmen to reclaim the promised land from ancient times to the present day. Curiously though, Samuel begins this narration with a chapter on "the shock of self-identification." The identity problem, currently associated with the crisis in black American is one Samuel finds within himself. All his life he has held the belief that "the Jewish people still have a creative function in world history, and that an indespensible instrument of the function is the Jewish state or homeland on its ancient site." It is this almost ancient vision which has come to pass in the short course of his lifetime, and the lifetime of millions of other Jews that puts them in a 'state of shock'.

Tracing the development of this belief through history, Samuel lands upon the Zionist movement as a matter of course. The practical implementation of this age old dream, world Zionism forms the major portion of "Light on Israel." It is in this delicate and engrossing story of recent Jewish history that Samuel is at his best. It seems fairly impossible to read any portion of this without sensing the total involvement Samuel maintains with the history he narrates.

Few men share Samuel's capability as an author and his record of dedication to the movement about which he writes. It is the rare combination of these elements that make some books truly outstanding. He shares a particular awareness and omniscence, much as Churchill did in his history of the Second World War.

In telling the story of the recent era, Samuel is able to present both a narrative and his personal analysis of nemerous points. In some places he has taken issue with various historians for 'missing the boat', and praised others such as Toynbee for their keen insights. With a particularly clear style, he integrates the Mandate period, the Balfour Declaration, the British White Paper of 1922, the "heroic and tragic period of migrating during World War II, the United Nations Resolution of 1947, the War of Independence and the June 1967 war.

Samuel concludes the book in much the same way he started it. --concerned with a dream and a belief. What he succeeds in doing is to place this belief in the context of the current world situation. As for the present state of affairs, he finds "the greatest obstacle to the realization of this vision is the weariness and disenchantment (of people) that regard it only as a vision. It is perhaps the particular usefulness of the Jewish people that, with much more occasion than any other, it has not become weary and disenchanted."

Golden Age of Cartooning...

common injury that led the authors to seek revenge by intermixing figure captions and notes in a separate section of triple-columned, lavishly illustrated pages, but the right selection of cartoons and the informative text notes make the struggle to find them worthwhile.

A key figure in "The Ungentlemanly Art" is Thomas Nast. Nast had two good things going for him: New York City's Boss Tweed and his gang and the aforementioned novelty of weekly pictorial commentary as a means of mass communication. Any single cartoon of Nast's is not likely to be much different from the standard of his day but his series of cartoons acquire extraordinary power through narrative and character development. In Morton Keller's "The Art and Politics of Thomas Nast," the Boss Tweed series is reproduced virtually complete. As in any drama the protagonist is not always on stage, though the forces that drive him are there in the form of a supporting cast. Nast selected and developed a managerie of supporting players, including Mayor Hall (Haul), Peter "Brains" Sweeney, "Slippery Dick" Connolly and the allegory-turned-mascot, the Tammany Tiger. Of course, Nast neither invented nor controlled this cast (until the climax when one of his caricatures resulted in Tweed's arrest in Spain) though he immortalized it. Nast's other series are less interesting now but show the same strengths and weaknesses; a lot of Nast is much better than a little.

Professor Keller's commentary is sharp, extensive and of great help in placing Nast's work within its times. Despite his title, Professor Keller has really not devoted much attention to Nast's art as art--for instance he passes over the artist's propensity to use paintings and prints familiar to the Harper's readership as the bases for several of his designs. But the point of the book is Nast's skill as a commentator--viciously biased, happily--in continually taking the same subject under scrutiny. Nast had little humor in his soul but was tenaciously consistent in his views. His sense of timing was superb. Professor Keller's act of homage does Nast justice.

In Memoriam--Our Civil Service as It Was. April 28, 1877. From "The Art and Politics of Thomas Nast" by Morten Keller.

"Anytime I can bring a god down to human scale so people can say, 'Gee, Johnson has big ears, just like my kid,' I'm delighted," comments David Levine. The New York artist has almost single-handedly revived the caricature for. --From the "The Ungentlemanly Art" by Stephen Hess and Milton Kaplan.

Groom me! Groom me!

'The Naked Ape' shows man's feeble evolution

By PAULA SULLIVAN

If your boyfriend starts saying, "Groom me, groom me," probably he has read "The Naked Ape" and wants his back scratched. Apes physically groom one another's hair as an expression of warmth and liking. Some of the civilized and less hairy apes, i.e. humans, have displaced the inherited tendency toward physical social grooming onto pets, such as cats and dogs.

In fact, that is the primary value of soft, furry cats—Remember the lie-detector question on the freshman psychological tests: do you like soft, furry things next to your skin?(Dogs, on the other hand, also function as an adjunct to man's abilities through their keener senses of smell and hearing; they are helpful as hunters and watchdogs.)

According to Morris, the hunam equivalent or replacement of this grooming ritual is small talk, in which little is communicated other than a feeling of goodwill and social solidarity. This replacement has come about because physical grooming is too laden with sexual overtones to be acceptable to the civilized, refined apes. For the same reason, hairdressers, paid groomers in our society, tend to play down their sexual role and to act downright effeminate. Morris also points out that many psychosomatic illnesses are caused by a desire to be pampered and made to feel emotionally secure. This is the feeling that grooming once gave.

Are you a vegetarian, carnivore, or combination? Both pure types represent different stages in the evolution of the naked ape. He first fed on plants and berries, then later developed weapons and hunted for food. (Wolves symbiotically hunted with man and gradually became domesticated; dogs are still regarded as man's best friend.) During the vegetarian stage, when man fed on stationary plants and animals in the immediate environment, he nibbled at frequent intervals. During the later, carnivorous stage, when man hunted in male packs for long periods of time, he learned to delay his gratification and then feast. Similarly, modern man goes to the job world with other men, then returns to the home base and dinner at night. He still prefers warm food, at the temperature of freshly-killed meat. He still forms a pair bond, so that his mate is faithful while he is away.

The pair bond is strengthened by the increased sexual satisfaction of the naked ape. He is the only animal who can have sex at any time, having no physiological constraints. He is also the sexiest ape due to factors which I won't mention. Morris devotes a whole chapter to this matter of sex. No doubt many of the sexed primates on the Syracuse campus will dash out and read the book, or this chapter, which was quoted in a recent edition of the "Reader's Digest."

But what Morris is basically demonstrating, the over-all insight to be gained from the book, is how similar man's behavior patterns are to those of his forbears, how little man has changed. Morris stresses that the process of evolution is exceedingly slow, much slower than man's advances in technology. Morris ends the book on a somber note, leaving you to ponder what this portends for the future of mankind in terms of wars, etc. In his talk on Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show," Morris stressed his fears concerning the future.

Thus this book, which is a bestseller, does have a more serious and worthwhile purpose than to merely expose our self-delusions and our spicier side. "The Naked Ape" synthesizes these insights into a vision of how short and feeble is the era of our evolution in the whole course of history.

Our 'African genesis' creates killer instinct

By EVAN RICHERT

Robert Ardrey is a playwright turned scientist or, if the critics of his controversial African Genesis have their way, a mad scientist. Man was not born in innocence, wrote Ardrey in his 1961 bestseller, nor in Asia. Such conclusions were certain so rankle the public (and Ardrey knew it), for they met self-righteouness and anthropological tradition head-on.

No, Ardrey argued, man wasn't born in innocence, but rather with a weapon in his hand. Nor was he born in Asia, but in South Africa, the direct descendant of Australopithecus Afrocanus (southern ape), a carniverous ape that was driven to kill in order to survive the Pleistocene age and its stormy climactic changes.

And Australopithecus Africans killed, not with fangs or claws (for he had none), but with the antelope humerus bone, a perfect club. Man's father was a hunter, and the weapon was the tool for survival. Man evolved only because the weapon had kept his father alive: the weapon, consequently, created the man, and left its mark deep within man's being.

"We've tried everything else," said Ardrey, " we may as well try the truth." And that is that man was born with the instinct to kill.

Ardrey's critics — at least his literary critics — seem to avoid his facts (or at least what Ardrey, upon six years of study and the accumulation of scientific data, considers to be facts):

That something less than man, a big-brained gorilla, could indeed recognize, even if by instinct, an object and its potential as a lethal weapon; and that man is but a point in evolution, an experiment with an enlarged brain — put here by mutation, to be whisked away by natural selection if we fail in our struggle to survive.

Man is, in a sense, in a tight spot. He is at that point in the evolution of the enlarged brain where he possesses just enough rationality to create, but not enough to be as rational as he believes himself to be. He has just sufficient rationality to recognize — and feel — good and evil (or perhaps happiness and pain), but lacks what is needed to choose between them. In the conflict between rationality and instinct, instinct invariably wins. Perhaps at a further point in evolution, a sudden mutation will grace man with a greater capacity to reason, and instinct will be effectively suppressed. But until then — perhaps thousands, maybe millions of years from now — the killer instinct will surge to the fore, and with it the territorial instinct that drives nations to defend their lands.

Perhaps it is Ardrey's dynamic style that is so persuasive. But add to that 350 pages of scientific observation and anthropological study, and 5,000 years of war. "We may as well try the truth," for few solutions have been found for problems yet to be understood.

'A Man for all People'

Humphrey portrayed in picture and prose

By BETH DURCHSCHLAG

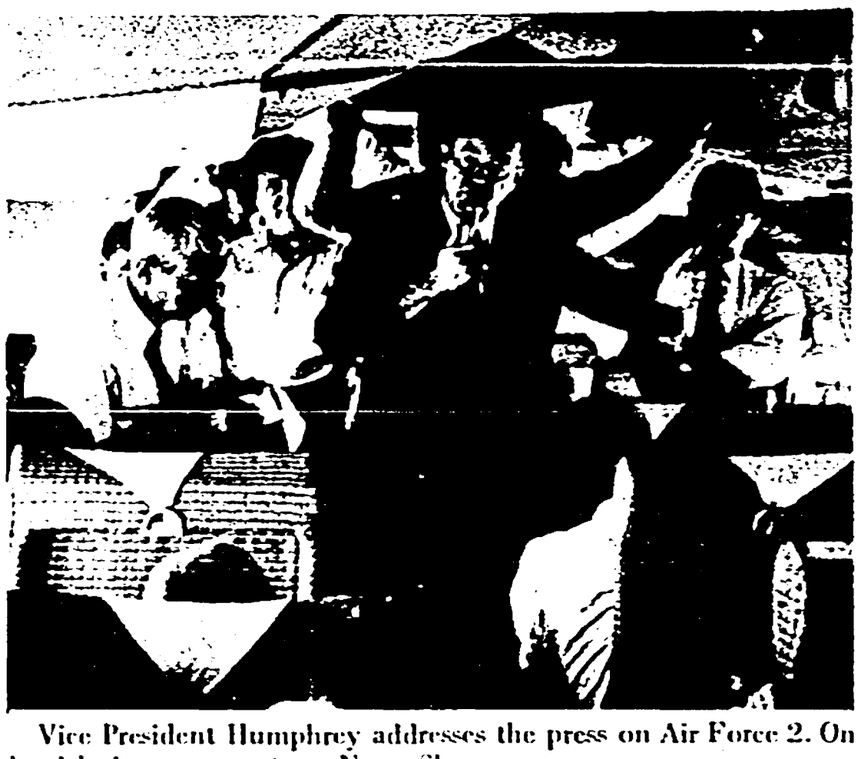
"A Man for All People," a pictorial biography of Hubert Humphrey by Ralph G. Martin.

A partisan pen, a familiar friend and a discriminating eye make up the successful formula of Ralph G. Martin's "A Man For All People," a pictorial biography of Hubert H. Humphrey.

Mr. Martin, a respected author of political and historical biographies, has known the Vice President for many War Chest years and has lent his talents to bolster the HHH campaign wheels with this photographic collection.

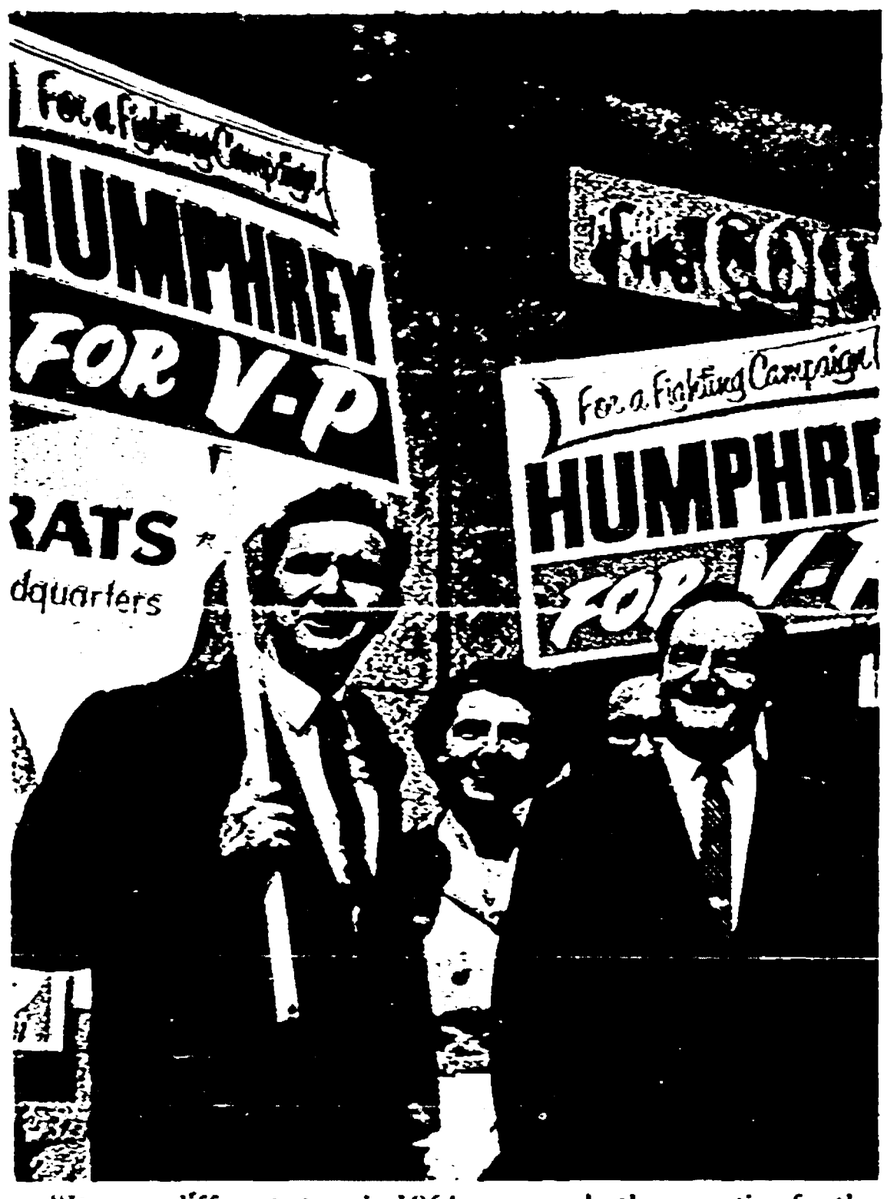
For fourteen pages, his vivid and relaxed style captures and capsules the life of the Vice President—with a fair measure of out-and-out admiration included.

But if the reader wants Mr. Martin to continue, he almost changes his mind when the photographs start.



They are, as the title of the book indicates, of people: young and old, rich and poor, the taunted and miserable, the affluent and great.

Captioned by Humphrey himself, these photos have been collected from a variety of sources and origins. They compile an assembly of memorablia that spans Humphrey's 57 years of his love affair with America and capture the people that have molded him.



From South Dakota to Minneapolis to Washington and on to the world's ports of call and trouble spots: Vietnam, Africa, Europe. Happy times in a man's life, sad occasions, frustrations (typified by the inclusion of a memory sketch by Howard Brodie of an empty Senate while Humphrey pro'd alone for the Civil Rights Act), and the mood of the confused but delightful non-organization of a Humphrey journey.

Although the Humphrey-written cutlines are down-home-folksy and straight from the apple pie knife of America, they are secondary. Again, the pictures reign supreme except in a few rare cases of written eloquence for the Vice President dealing with his frustrations over some base human prejudice and backwardness.

Perhaps the "politics of joy" have cemented this volume as to make the reader impervious to other realities. But it is first, a public record of the founder and inspiration of the Peace Corps, Medicare, Food for Peace, Job Corps and the Nuclear Disarmament Treaty, and second, an enjoyable work that was obviously a labor of admiration, dedication and pleasure for Mr. Martin to compose.

Vice President Humphrey addresses the press on Air Force 2. On the right is press secretary, Norm Sherman.

"It was a different story in 1964—we were both competing for the vice presidential nomination, both waiting for the same phone call from President Johnson." Hubert Humphrey in "A Man for all People."

'Decisions for a Decade'

Kennedy argues for politics of change

By CHUCK STOFFEL

We have a choice. The politics of change or the politics of fear. This is not an article on Vietnam, or civil rights, or law and justice. This is an article on government. Government as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy sees it in his book "Decisions for a Decade."

As the distinguished senator from Massachusetts states in the opening pages, "Let us be sure that in 1976 we have something to celebrate." Vietnam, civil rights, law and justice all have one thing in common--government. In the opening chapters Sen. Kennedy discusses the public view of that government.

It is big. It is complex. It is almost unwieldy. A senator has to vote on almost 20,000 bills a session. He cannot read them all. That is why he has legislative assistants. These men keep him going. A congressman has the same problem.

The same situation exists in State Legislatures and city councils. Men in public office must be awed by their task. How can we ever expect the public to understand these thousands of items that effect each of us?

We can't. This is why todays policy of passing bills the public is unaware of has led the public to be unsure about their government. How much is done that the voter has no control over? This is the politics of fear.

We need a politics of change, Sen. Kennedy argues. We need a government that keeps the people informed, we need legislatures that are not just politicians but public servants.

The answer I believe lies in youth. For once we have a total generation that cares about legislative decisions. Youth is willing to work with government--to stop a government by the politicians, for the politicians, of the politicians. Youth must and will return government to the people.

The gap is too wide. Politicians are old hat, public servants are in.

This is the "new politics." Gov. Nelson Rockefeller demanded and lost. This is the "new leadership." Sen. Eugene McCarthy demanded and lost.

The time is set. The fire has been started by such great Americans as John Kennedy, Eugene McCarthy, John Lindsay, Nelson Rockefeller and Robert Kennedy.

The torch must be carried by youth now. Let us stop the politics of disaster and begin the government of people. Let us make sure we have "something to celebrate" in 1976.

Chuck Stoffel traveled throughout the East this summer as co-ordinator in the campaign of Governor Nelson Rockefeller. He is a vice president of SU Young Republicans, directed the Students for Rockefeller drive on campus last spring, and is currently a legislative aide of Congressional candidate David V. O'Brien.

Justice Abe Fortas urges dissent within the American Tradition

By CHARLES BABCOCK

Concerning Dissent and Civil Disobedience by Associate Justice of the Supreme Court Abe Fortas. A signet Broadside, 64 p. $.50, May 1968.

Associate Justice Abe Fortas, writing outside the Supreme Court, explains and encourages dissent-- within the bounds of law. It is a reflection of our disorderly times that a Supreme Court justice feels compelled to encourage dissent by invoking a conservative tradition.

Justice Fortas is obviously a man with a high regard for the law, who has pledged to uphold the law and who must assume that each citizen is subject to the law. What then does he have to say to today's militant Negroes and college students?

First, he recounts the effectiveness of our constitutional rights to dissent. The instruments of freedom marches, organized boycotts, demonstrations, and the literature of protest have accomplished great changes in this country.

"It would be difficult to find man situations in history where so much has been accomplished by those who, in cold realism, were divorced from the conventional instruments of power."

Second, he defines precisely our tradition of civil disobedience. A law is broken because it is immoral or unconstitutional. It is then challenged in court, appealed, if necessary to the Supreme Court, and if it is immoral and unconstitutional, it will be changed. At least that is the theory. If the law is not declard unconstitutional, the violator must accept the penalty.

Constitutional rights to dissent are bread. Civil disobedience directed at persons or institutions which may incidentally be protected by law will not test the morality of those institutions or the constitutionality of the laws. Or if in the process of exercising his constitutional rights, a dissenter interferes with the rights of others, he will not be protected.

Justice Fortas explains how such consittutional cases turn on subtleties of fact.

Finally Justice Fortas casts a sympathetic eye on the revolt of youth. He realizes the ramifications of the war in Vietnam among the youth. He acknowledges the country's failure to deliver justice to the Negro. But he nevertheless upholds the law and considers toleration of violence (domestic, not foreign) an erosion of American society.

His conclusion insists that democratic processes based on law will bring about "fundamental response to fundamental demands."

This will not satisfy the moralists who find the war in Vietnam so intolerable that law at home seems insufferable. But implicit in Fortas's argument that law reflects reason is the assumption that reason reflects morality--perhaps morality of society as a whole, not of the individual. His faith is profound and, if he becomes Chief Justice, it will probably be proven correct.

'Townies'

Life of commuters on campus very active

By NANCY TROJNAR

What is it really like to be a "Townie?" Are there a great many more disadvantages than advantages?

"No" is the answer one will get from the commuters who make their "home" in the Commuters Lounge, 309 Women's Building.

In years before, very few people used this spacious and well-equipped lounge, probably because it was previously known as the City Women's Lounge, thus discouraging the men students and many of the women. Since September, 1966 the lounge has become active; now when some one walks the corridors of the third floor, especially around noon, he will know by the sound that commuters, contrary to popular belief, do exist.

Friendly atmosphere characterizes this lounge; the first time you walk into the room you probably will be greeted with a cheerful "Hello" from members of the Commuting Students' Association (CSA).

You will then be confronted by a group of students who would like to know if you would like to be dealt in a game of "Pitch" or "Conflict," or "Monopoly."

While one observes the occupants of the lounge, he will note that there is nothing different about these people from those who live in Haven or Watson.

Commuters can be found "TGIFing" at T.C., the Big "O," or at the Orange; they can be found at Winter Weekend events as well as in the library. They can be found on campus at one as well as seven in the morning.

According to George Facteau, 24, junior history major, who commutes from Grace Street on the City's west side, there are two main classes of commuters: The chronic complainer and the "Happy- go-lucky" commuter.

The chronic complainers are those who do nothing to become part of the university, but will complain because "no one will take interest in them." The Happy-go-lucky" commuter is one that we find in the lounge.

Most people only hear about the commuter as a chronic complainer, and very little about the other side of the story. Of course the loves of these commuters are not beds of roses, they do have their problems, but then who does not?

What is the average day like in the life of the commuter? According to Bonnie Urciuoli, 18, a sophomore history major and CSA president, she starts her day by walking to school, from her home, one mile away. Getting to school at about 7:30, she goes to Commons for a cup of coffee with a few other commuters.

In between her classes, Bonnie continued, she does go to the lounge, where at lunch time she will eat lunch, which she brought from home, or bought from the Club, in Slocum.

Lunch time is the most interesting time of the day at the lounge; everyone is always trying to make different exotic meals, chicken curry, pizza, puddings, or other exciting dishes.

When the morning or afternoon classes are over, many evenings you will see commuters still in the lounge, probably waiting for a speech or a test.

Some people complain that the lounge is quite a way from campus, but is it as far as Roosevelt or Washington Arms? Pat Kotash, 18, sophomore in the college of liberal arts, said that it takes about 8-15 minutes to get to class, depending on where the class is.

The commuter is very much part of the university. He appears no different than the campus resident. In fact, some commuters believe that there are more advantages to commuting than there are to living on campus.

Bowling league

The Women's Athletic Association (WAA) is organizing a competitive women's bowling league at SU this fall.

Organized - competition among living center teams and heterogeneous teams will be held every Thursday night.Handicaps will be computed to equalize abilities.

The first organizational meeting will be held Thursday night at the Women's Building.

China patterns

New patterns in table china by Spode, Lennox, Noritaki and Royal Doulton will be on display at the College of Home Economics, Room 304F Slocum, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesday, October 1. The exhibition is a "market test" arranged by these companies to determine preferred patterns for display at the China Fair in Atlantic City next January.

UU needs support

UU Weekend begins today and with the beginning may come the end.

Thus far support of the Weekend has not been overwhelming. In fact, the support has been so meager that Union won't be able to operate unless much greater support of the weekend is shown.

We feel UU programs such as the Place, Free Friday Night Flicks, mixers, and Bull Sessions add to campus life. These Union activities will come to a hal: unless students support UU Weekend.

If you can, come see Smokey on Sunday and the Chambers Brothers tonight even if there's something you might rather do. Consider the loss of Union.

Buy your ticket and come or give it to someone in the city less fortunate who would like to go see Smokey.

Union cannot exist without your support. Time has come Today. UU IS YOU. I hope to see you this weekend.

Professionalism at Grumman
...is personal development programs

As a graduating engineer, how can you position yourself so that your career chances are constantly optimized? Answer–get with an aerospace company where the optimum conditions are . . . Grumman. Here we take a keen interest in seeing that our engineers and scientists develop personally. We are sincerely interested in their personal progress within the company . . . that they keep abreast of the sweeping advances in technology, not because they can contribute more (although this is true), but more because it makes for greater individual progress and well-being. Job satisfaction, if you will. Let's look at these personal development programs.

Tuition Reimbursement Program
Directly applicable to their work, these programs offer engineers and scientists financial assistance for graduate studies at the many institutions in the Long Island-New York area.

In-Plant Courses
Engineering courses, particularly those not available at neighboring institutions, to deepen technical knowledge to the specific needs of the engineering sections.

College-Industry Courses
Selective attendance for rapid technical updating on fundamentals, theoretical methods and design information. (One to two weeks' duration.)

Engineering Masters Fellowship Program
To enhance creative design capability, one-year fellowships, renewable for a second year, are awarded to new engineering Bachelor of Science graduates and engineers with a year or more company service. The program combines two days of graduate school study with three days of in-plant engineering (in fixed or rotating assignments) and covers payment of full tuition, books, fees, a stipend, and a salary at engineering hourly rates for the hours worked.

Professional Development Programs
Lasting for 2 years, participants are given, in 4 six-months' terms, an exposure to Grumman operations which broadens their technical knowledge, sharpens ability to make sound decisions, and raises their career potential. Separate programs serve individuals in Business Systems, Engineering and Manufacturing.

Senior Engineers' Program
Intended to overcome the threat of technological obsolescence, individual disciplines are updated with regard to new scientific discoveries, new or expanded applications of long existing knowledge, and computer applications to problem solving.

Senior Management Development
Selected individuals within Grumman junior and middle management groups are nominated to attend management development programs such as the MIT Executive Development Program, the Program for Management Development or the Advanced Management Program at Harvard University.

Basic Principles of Supervisory Management
A series of discussion sessions provide a course in management principles to group leaders who show technical management ability.

Here then is a real opportunity for PhD candidates in AE, CE, EE, ME, IE, Physics and Chemical Engineering . . . to take their place in the continuum of technology that is Grumman. Grumman representatives will be Hicks tells students about 'real world'

By FRANCINE PINTO

At the freshman and transfer students convocation, Chuck Hicks, president of the student government, spoke to his audience on their role in the university and in the outside world. His major question was, "What can we do to make this university and the world a better place?"

In previous years, the freshman class has sponsored a concert and a week-end. This year the freshman concert will be eliminated although the week-end will remain intact. According to Hicks, this is of no great concern, since a concert is generally involved in simply how much money did we make or lose. He said that instead of preoccupying ourselves with the financial situation, it is up to us, the young people, to straighten out the problems of the world.

Among the problems cited by Hicks were discrimination, starvation, poverty, and health. He suggested a camp for poor children or an experimental or free university as among those projects that interested freshmen could pursue. "There is so much to do, and so little time to do it," he added. "We young people have a lot of things to correct; we can stop only when we can look at other people with love and respect no matter what their race, color, or creed is."

His major thesis was that students should concern themselves with real issues this year. There is a "real world" outside this university, and it is toward the problems of this situation that we must be concerned.

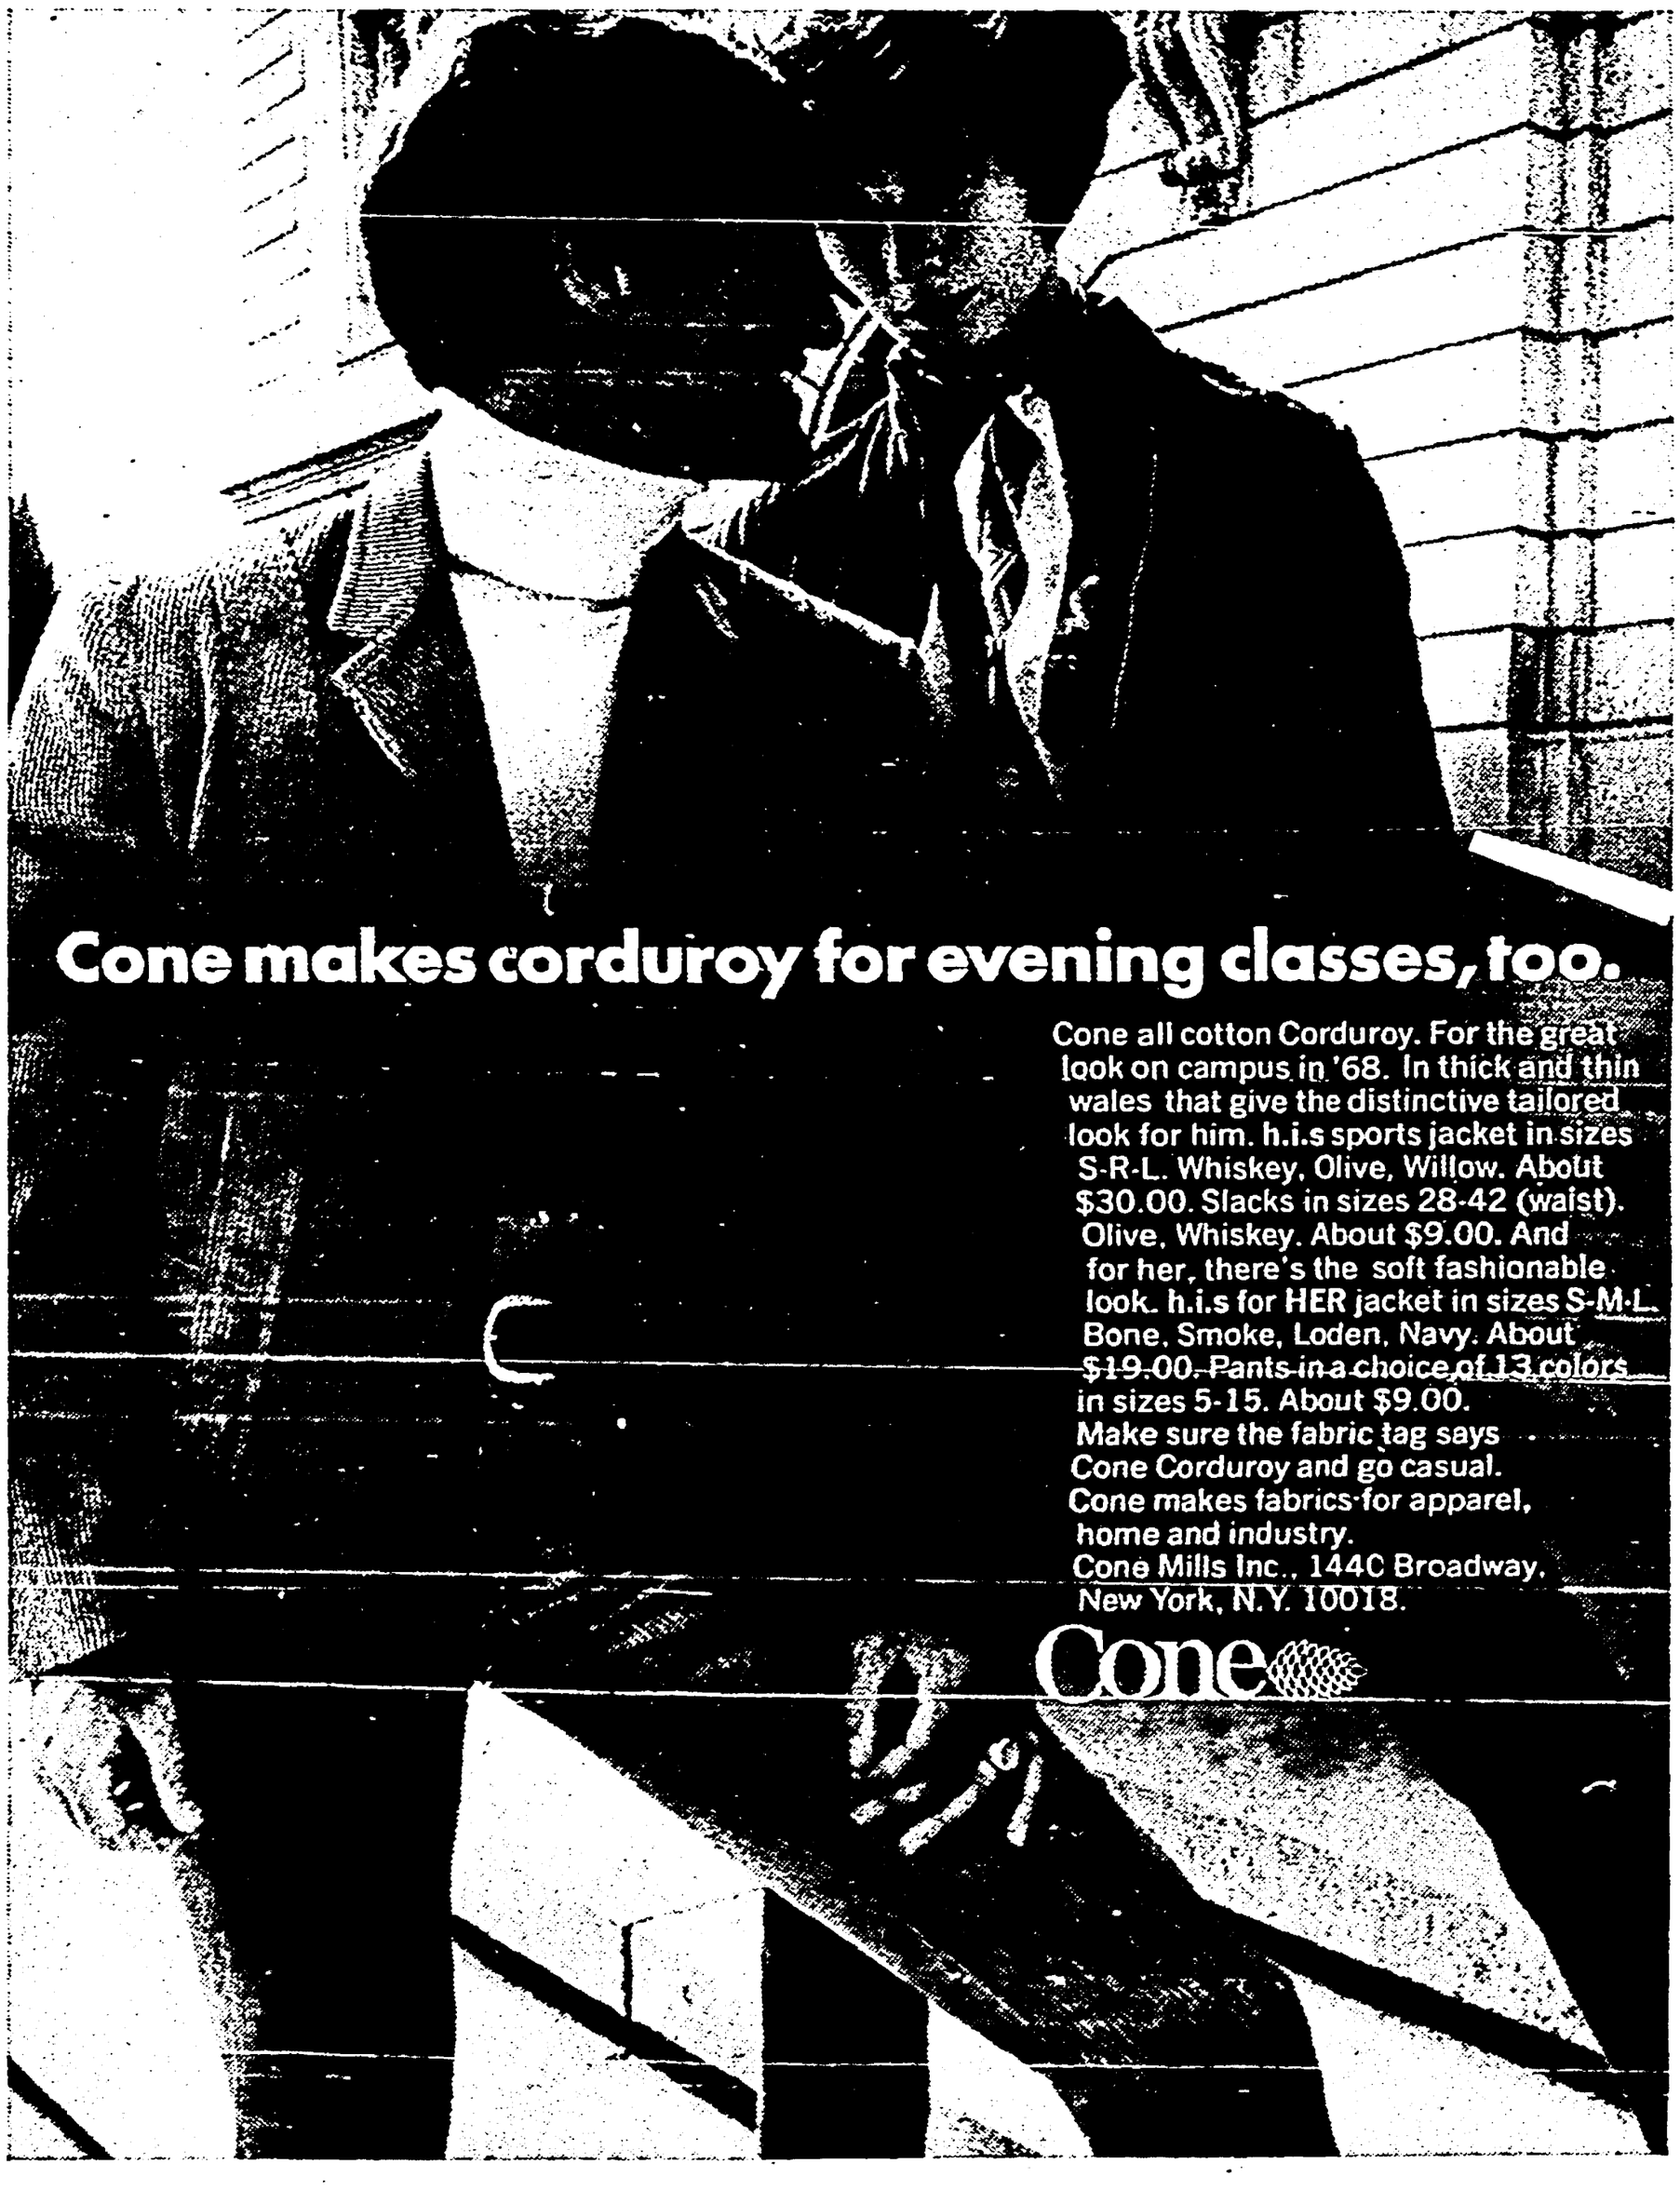
Concert here next Monday at Crouse

The Lament of Mary Stuart, a new work by Howard Boatwright, Dean of the Syracuse University School of Music, will be offered for the first time in its entirity in Crouse College on Monday night at 8:30.

Composed for soprano voice and harpsichord, The Lament of Mary Stuart will be sung by Helen Boatwright, wife of the Dean, with George Pappastavrou at the harpsichord.



Based on the text of a cantata by the seventeenth century Roman composer, Giocomo Carissimi, entitled Il Lamento Di Maria Stuardo, Howard Boatwright originally planned his new composition for a concert at Traqhuar House near Edinburgh, Scotland, during May of this year. The actual performance, under the sponsorship of the Scottish Arts Council, took place at Borthwich Castle on May 21.

Mary Stuart was the object of much interest and sympathy in the Catholic countries of Europe where she, not Elizabeth I, was regarded the rightful queen of England, Scotland and, for a time, France. The drama of her deposition and execution was the topic of many Latin composers and writers who at the time were preoccupied with describing, in the most colorful terms, the fate of notable women.

The May performance, which featured part of the now completed work, was also sung by Helen Boatwright. Location of the event at Borthwich Castle was particularly appropriate since that dwelling was often the hiding place of Queen Mary in her flight from persecution.

Sponsored by Syracuse Friends of Chamber Music, the Monday night event will be the first concert of that organization's 1968-69 season.

In addition to Helen Boatwright and George Pappastavrou, other guest artists will include violist Anita Halverson and cellist Eleanor Howells. They will join the Krasner Chamber Music Ensemble.

The Great American College Bedspread may send you to college free!

You've been taking us to college for so many years, we created this contest because we finally felt it's our turn to take you.

To enter, go to the domestics department — might as well call it the bedspread department — of any of the stores listed in this ad (there's one near you). Fill out an entry blank and drop it in the ballot box.*

Naturally, if you're not already an owner, we're hoping you won't fail to observe Bates Piping Rock,* the Great American College Bedspread, draped or made up on a bed near the contest area.

You know how Piping Rock got to be a college bedspread? One reason is because it comes in 18 different colors, which covers one of the colors of practically every school around. Let's say your colors are red and white. O.K., you get a red bedspread and white sheets, and that's it.

Another reason is that our No Press finish makes this spread machine washable and dryable without ironing. In an hour. Or roughly as long as it takes to get through a homework assignment if you don't knock yourself out.

Bates* Piping Rock in 18 college colors. In sizes: twin, $10.98; double, $12.98; and bunk, $9.98. Prices a bit more in the West. Matching draperies available. 112 West 34 St., N.Y. 10001

*CONTEST RUNS FROM SEPT. 9 TO OCT. 5. FULL DETAILS AT STORES. Piping Rock is a Bates T.M. Reg.

Professor praises Czechs . . .

other armored vehicles but the people were politely defiant of the Soviet invaders, according to Tomey.

"All it took was for one of the tanks to start its motors and the people would start a chant, "Go home,"" he said.

They did not have to be in large crowds to show courage either, he said. Persons would march singly carrying flags and shaking their fists at the Soviet troops, he emphasized.

At first most of the Czechs offering resistance were young people, according to Dr. Tomey and he thought the Russians would use this to try to convince the people their country had been taken over by "hippies or yippies."

Dr. Tomey maintained the younger people were the only ones who had enough courage to come out once the invasion was at hand. Later when the demonstrations had started the older citizens also came out, he added.

"The people chanted for Dubcek (party Secretary) and Svoboda (Czech President) and waved flags," he said.

As the days went on the Russian troops became "trigger-happy", according to Dr. Tomey.

"There were more bursts of fire then when the Russians first arrived," he said.

He also mentioned the harassment the people had to endure. Tanks would take aim directly at a crowd and come to a screeching halt, he added.

Dr. Tomey said there were many Russian soldiers who could not take the pressure put on them by the people and were "rooted out early."

He quoted one soldier as saying, "I didn't know where I was going I just got in my tank and drove it."

Other soldiers were close to tears when they learned they were not liberators but occupiers, he emphasized.

Prague was physically and mentally torn up by the Russians, he said.

Although he personally saw no one killed, Dr. Tomey said he heard stories of how people were run down by tanks. He also saw many bloodstained flags.

"It's not what you consider a friendly show of force as it was said to be," he added.

Investigation hits SU politics . . .

possible embarrassment of a full-scale, public investigation. "If they comply," Tuccillo explained, "we'd have an entirely new political system and an investigation would be unnecessary."

Tuccillo, a sophomore senator-at-large, admitted that some officers of one party have indicated that his proposed changes might be feasible. He will be meeting with presidents of both parties this weekend.

Although Tuccillo is somewhat wary of destroying campus politics by "digging up all that dirt," he is prepared to launch the inquiry if all else fails.

SCOPE's study would include open hearings and culminate with a public report, expected to be ready by December.

Campus politics have never been subjected to a full-scale, public study. The extensive inquiry will examine alleged inequities in candidate selection, election procedures and party finances. "Evidence" will be gathered through research and weekly hearings. All Student Government and class officers, former candidates and party officials will be asked to "testify." The committee will also solicit pertinent information from any students, administrators or faculty members willing to speak.

"We expect cooperation from the officers and parties. I can't foresee anyone refusing to testify, unless they have something to hide," Tuccillo ventured.

"In view of our goals, I can't anticipate any responsible party leaders or senators trying to obstruct our investigation. Not only would any such attempt be a waste of time, but it would also become a part of our report," he stressed.

Senate may very well be the best student organization to conduct this investigation, since it is largely divorced from campus parties. Only 18 senators are in office as a result of party politics (six senators-at-large from each of three upperclasses).

Tuccillo will appoint several senators from the Government Structures Committee to aid his investigation. He has already selected Dick Oster, a senior who is not affiliated with any fraternity. Oster is a former president of DellPlain.

Tuccillo, elected on the Campus Alliance Party ticket, is also not affiliated with any fraternity. He distinguished himself as a freshman senator by introducing the favorably received Open Campus Act, which supported unrestricted recruiting.

In view of his senate record and wide victory in last term's election, Tuccillo was considered to have a promising future in campus politics. Asked if the probe may jeopardize this position, he replied, "I just don't care. If this system is as corrupt as some people claim, I'm not interested in having any future in it. I'd rather have a clear conscience."

Dean Bailey's final convo

Stephen K. Bailey, dean of Syracuse University's Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, will be the featured speaker at the School's annual convocation Monday at 8 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium.

Dean Bailey will address the students in the school and will introduce department chairmen and program directors of the various Maxwell programs. This will mark his last Maxwell Convocation as dean. Bailey retires in February and will be succeeded by Alan K. Campbell, director of the Metropolitan Studies Program.

During the program a $50 prize will be awarded to the author of the best article appearing in the last edition of the Maxwell Review. A student-faculty coffee hour will be held after the convocation.

Foreign Study Programs of Syracuse University

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY offers the undergraduate student an opportunity to spend one semester, preferably during the junior year, living and studying in a foreign country. A student thus may enrich his education with a foreign experience in depth, yet complete his undergraduate program within the normal four-year period.

Students from all accredited colleges and universities are eligible for the programs. Those accepted undertake a full semester of work during their stay abroad. In order to insure opportunity for full participation in the life and culture of the host country, each student will live in a private home for part or all of the semester.

SEMESTER IN ITALY

The Semester in Italy was inaugurated in the fall of 1959. It is unique in that it enables the American undergraduate who has had no previous study of the Italian language to engage in a full semester of liberal arts work within the life and culture of that country.

Courses, except those in Italian language and literature, are taught in English. The faculty is composed of personnel from Syracuse University and Italians appointed as visiting professors or conversion teachers. All students are required to enroll for sixteen hours of work, including six hours of Italian

SEMESTER IN FRANCE

The Semester in France is offered in cooperation with the University of Poitiers in Poitiers, France. The student may spend either a fall or a spring semester in Poitiers pursuing liberal arts studies while developing a high level of language competence. The language of instruction is French. Six semester credits earned in the University of Poitiers and nine in regular Syracuse courses taught either by a Syracuse Faculty member or visiting French professors.

SEMESTER IN COLOMBIA

The Semester in Colombia is offered in cooperation with the University of the Andes in Bogota. The student may spend one semester, approximately August 15 to December 10, studying in Bogota. Students take one Syracuse University course, one special course offered by the University of the Andes for Syracuse and three regular courses offered by the University of the Andes. The language of instruction is Spanish.

SEMESTER IN THE NETHERLANDS

The Semester in Amsterdam was inaugurated in September of 1967 by the College of Home Economics. The program offers courses in home econmics, art history; sociology and history. The language of instruction is English. The program is offered with the cooperation of the Netherlands — America Institute.

ADMISSION TO THE PROGRAM

The curriculum is designed primarily to fit the needs of college juniors. Applicants who would be in their senior year will be considered if they have the support of their home college. (Students are normally expected to take the last thirty hours of work on the home campus.) Applicants who would be in the second semester of the sophomore year may be considered. Ordinarily such applicants are expected to demonstrate that participation during the junior year would not be possible.

The program is open to students from all accredited colleges and universities. An applicant from an institution other than Syracuse must have the support of his home college and must be elegible to take a full program of course work for full credit at his home school.

To be accepted, the student must establish that he has the necessary academic ability and emotional maturity to succeed in the program for which he applies.

Students are advised to begin thinking about a possible semester abroad early in their college career. In many instances, careful planning of the student's total academic program will be necessary. The applicant considering study abroad is urged to discuss the matter with his academic adviser. The student may also obtain advice and assistance by contacting the Foreign Study Programs office at Syracuse University.

It is not necessary to be a major in any particular field or fields of study to be eligible to participate in a foreign study program; past participants have come from all of the undergraduate divisions of the University. However, the applicant whose major field of study is one not included in the curriculum of the program offered abroad must be especially careful in planning well in advance.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

The cost of a foreign study program is moderately higher ($300 - $400) than the cost of a semester on the Syracuse campus. The student pays $1,840 for tuition, fees, insurance, orientation, outbound transportation, board and lodging for the semester. All scholarships valid for use at Syracuse University can be applied to the program. There are a limited number of grants-in-aid for a semester abroad.

APPLICATION

Applications must be submitted on forms obtained from the Foreign Study Programs office, 335 Comstock Avenue in Syracuse (13210). APPLICATIONS FOR A FALL TERM ARE DUE BY APRIL 15 AND BY OCTOBER 15 FOR THE SPRING. It is advisable to submit an application early in order to allow for adequate advance planning.

Orange back on Archbold grid

SU opposes Maryland 11

By ED AGRANOWITZ

Syracuse football teams are not known for throwing in the towel when the going gets rough. Two years ago, the Orange dropped their first two games to Baylor and UCLA by 35-12 and 31-12 scores. Captain Floyd Little rallied his mates to eight consecutive triumphs, the Lambert Trophy and a Gator Bowl bid.

Last year, Coach Ben Schwartzwalder's Saltine Warriers won their first three encounters before being run off the field by Navy, 27-14. Two weeks later, after edging California, the Orange played what many observers called their best game of the year in losing to Penn State 29-20 in a game that was infinitely closer than the score indicates. With Lambert and Bowl hopes gone, the Orange showed their guts by mowing down three mediocre opponents and humiliating UCLA 32-14, only one week after the Bruins missed by one point (21-20) against national champion Southern California.

The situation will be much the same tomorrow, when the Orangemen will be looking to pull themselves together and regain their winning ways after a tough 14-10 setback at the hands of Michigan State last week.

A crowd of 30,000 is expected at Archbold Stadium to see the Orange open the 1968 home season against the Terrapins of Maryland.

Second year Terp coach Bob Ward will be fielding a squad that is vastly improved over last year's edition, which went winless. Last week Maryland gave top 20 possibility Florida State fits by staying within three points until less than two minutes remained.

The Terps boast 31 lettermen from last year's squad, which came closest to victory in a 7-3 loss to Syracuse. Alan Pastrana, after a year of absence, will direct the Maryland attack at quarterback. Pastrana, whose 17 TD passes two years ago set an Atlantic Coast Conference record, looked a little rusty last week but still managed nine completions in 21 tries for 108 yards and a touchdown.

Pastrana's chief targets will be ends Ron Pearson and Rick Carlson and wingback Sonny Demczuk. These three each had three grabs against FSU.

Leading the Terp ground game will be John King (17 carries for 86 yards last week) and Billy Lovett (12 for 59).

Schwartzwalder will open with basically the same lineup that started at East Lansing. One position that may be in for a realignment is the linebacking. Bobby Bancroft seems set at one corner, but it appears that Bob Schoonmaker or Jerry Ruccio will take Don Dorr's place at the other corner. Bob Rust may get a shot at Jack Protz's middle spot.

Another possible change may be at right defensive halfback. Earlier in the week Schwartzwalder noted, "Tom Hermanowski had a bad game, especially against the runs. This may have been caused by a bad foot he had at the time, but if he doesn't come around against Maryland, we may give soph Gary Bletsch a shot at it."

The offensive lineup will not change, and Paul Paolisso and Rich Panczyszyn will continue to divide the quarterback duties. Schwartzwalder was reasonably pleased with their passing on Saturday, but mentioned, "We need more consistent passing. We just didn't connect in the fourth quarter." Paul and Panz hit 16 for 22 in the first three quarters, but managed only four of nine in the final frame.

Orange captain Tony Kyasky will continue to see spot duty as a flanker in addition to his fulltime work as a defensive halfback. Tony thought his defensive unit did a fairly good job against Michigan State, but cautioned, "Against Maryland we'll have to be at our best. Pastrana is an excellent quarterback, and their passing attack is much stronger than Michigan State's.

"The guys all know we have got to do a job against Maryland, or it'll be a long season," continued the Puma, "but I know we'll pop back."

The game has a little added significance for safety Cliff Ensley. "Pastrana threw a touchdown pass against me in the first game I started as a soph," says Ensley, "and that was the only TD I gave up all year. I'd like to get a little revenge with a couple of interceptions."

A fired up Orange squad will face the suddenly respectable Terps tomorrow at 1:30. Says Kyasky, "Losing last week hurt us and we want to prove we're a good team by beating Maryland." Says Ensley, "We're going to kick the hell out of them."

ED'S ITORIALS: Tomorrow's game is the first of a three game homestand-.....Pastrana passed for 144 yards and a TD against Orange two years ago.....SU leads in Terp series, 8-5-1,.....Maryland has a great punter in soph Greg Fries.....Ben is still looking for career victory number 125.

There will be full coverage of Saturday's game in a special Monday edition of the DO.

Off comes the hair

Frosh athletes get shaved

By DOUG GARR

Every year at Syracuse University you may run into one or more gentlemen who seem to be lacking something. That something is the hair of the 30 to 40 freshman football players who seem to be going prematurely bald.

It has been an SU tradition for the varsity football players to cut the hair of all the freshman recruits. After their hair is completely shaved they buy hats either to keep their heads warm when its cold or to avoid any embarrassing stares. Probably the latter is true, as Syracuse weather is beautiful when the football players arrive on campus, usually the last week in August.

This year the frosh footballers were hit early. After a football meeting on the first Tuesday they arrived, it was all over, or all off. Very simply, a couple of distinguishing blotches were cut in each one's hair. The only way to even it out is to get it completely shaven. The Marshall Street barbers give them complimentary haircuts.

The varsity evidently has overlooked a few latecomers to the squad. Ends Dave Prutting and Mark Connell have an unusually large amount of hair, because they joined the squad late. Dave commented that he was kind of "worried" about the possible rapid loss of it.

Hairless Ray Karosz reflected on the fateful day. "We didn't particularly like the idea, but what can you do with 10 varsity guys holding you down? We were hopelessly outnumbered. The only good thing about it is that people know you are a football player." Anyway, at least their hair is easily manageable.

Football is not the only sport that indulges in this gruesome preseason activity. Wrestling and crew teams seem to be adopting this tradition also. The wrestlers are easy to spot, as they are a lot smaller than the gridders. The only difference is that the wrestlers do the complete job themselves.

SHAVED HEAD of frosh Joe Erhman.

This year the wrestling team (mostly vengeance-hungry sophomores) cut the freshman crop between the hours of 2 and 5 a.m. "Most of the frosh were pretty cooperative," said 160-pound Woody Barry. Actually, who could resist when awakened at such a God forsaken hour?

They did have some resistance from a spunky lightweight who insisted that he was not going to wrestle. He was asked two questions: First, "did you attend the meeting?" then, "did you sign the roster?" When he answered yes to both of these, it was all the barbers needed.

"It's just like the Army," said soph Richie Haagen, "once you sign up there's nothing you can do about it." At this time that unfortunate freshman can be found wearing his beanie in Sadler dining hall.

This type of initiation does have its good points. Where else can you get a haircut at 3 a.m.? And when did you ever have four barbers working on you absolutely free? Of course they only know one hairstyle, but you can't have everything.

When Spring vacation comes, you'll see other athletes in a similarly frustrating state. That can only be the sign that the crew team is beginning practice.

Ticket sales rally

UU Weekend apparently cutting its loss to $4,000

By RICH KORN

The University Union, which feared bankruptcy Thursday, is still alive and in fair condition as the Smokey Robinson concert brought UU weekend '68 to a close yesterday.

There had been speculation last week that this weekend would lose as much as $8,000, but a rally in ticket sales reduced the deficit to between $4,000 and $5,000.

The dance given at the War Memorial with the Chambers Brothers and the Page One was financially successful. Tickets to the dance were $2 but many were received free by students when they bought tickets to the concert on Sunday.

The Chambers Brothers dance drew 3,200 people.

"It was possibly the best received talent at the University in the last four years," according to UU Chairman, Jerry Tatarian. The success of the Sunday afternoon concert was undetermined at press time. An audience of more than 1,500 was expected for the performance by the Miracles yesterday. But this would not be enough to cover expenses.

This was the second time in the last four years that a deviation from the usual concert format was attempted. Last year the junior class brought in Sam and Dave, and Wilson Pickett for Winter Weekend. That dance was attended by about the same number of people.

There is much speculation on why the weekend did not break even:

1) The time and date picked for the Smokey Robinson concert may have been bad because Sunday afternoon is a big homework day and men did not wish to spend the extra on taking their dates out to eat after the concert.

2) Many girls went through upperclass sorority rush which was scheduled for early yesterday afternoon.

3) Many fraternity houses had scheduled inter-fraternity football games for the afternoon.

A big question now is: what does this mean for the future of concerts at Syracuse University?

"I think that concerts have to be taken out of the hands of the classes and individual student groups and centralized in a group that can insure itself against losses," said Tartarian.

"Concerts can be worthwhile as witnessed by the Chambers Brothers Friday night," continued Tatarian. "The University at this point should begin to reach outward. One of the initial steps it could take would be to welcome its neighbors in the city of Syracuse to a University social event other than a basketball or football game."

Faith in November

Sawyer is first Catholic layman to speak at Hendricks Chapel service

By KAREN WIEDIGER
Campus News Editor

The first Roman Catholic layman to speak in Hendricks Chapel called for faith in the political man, for "with faith and only with faith can one face elections in November."

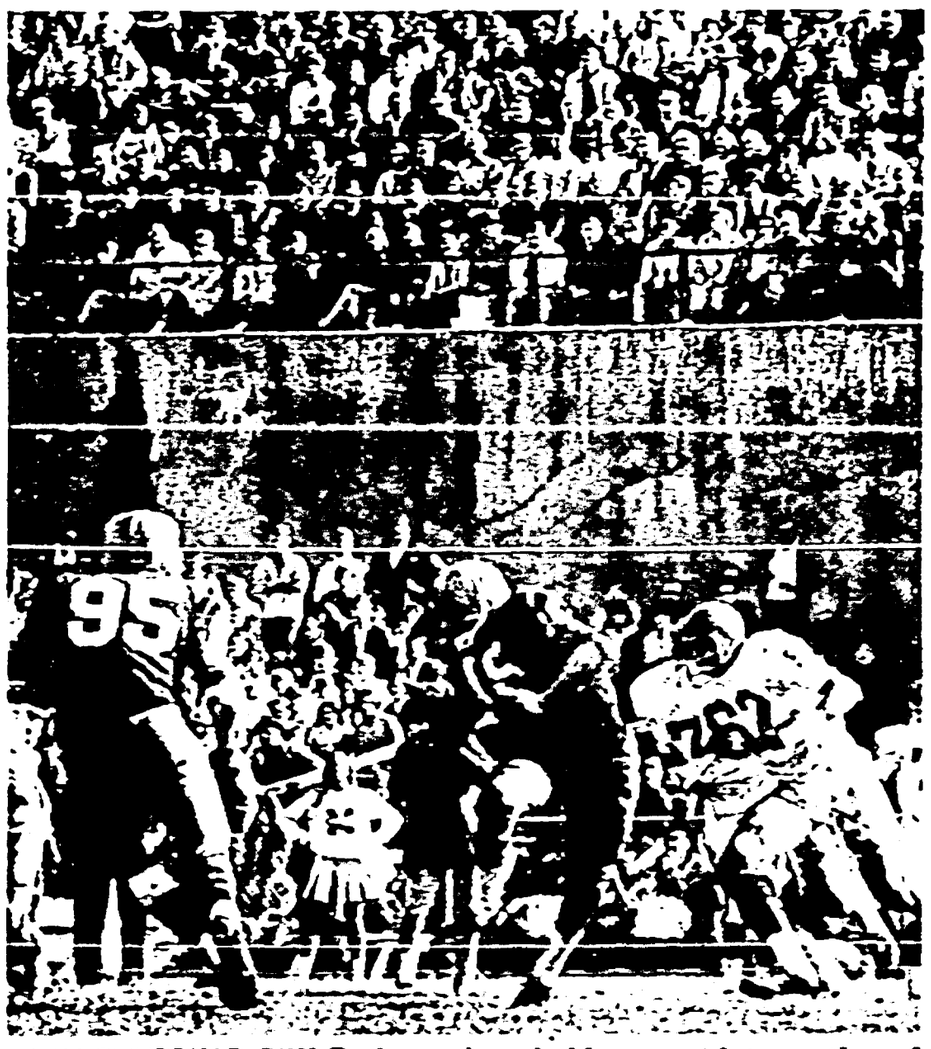
Speaking at the 11 a.m. service yesterday, Dr. Michael O. Sawyer, professor of political science, said, "With faith, does one believe in a perfect world and pick up his cross and relax? Faith is not so simple; it provides mellowness and perspective, a sense of love in order to sustain on the deck of the world."

He addressed the congregation as "The Faithful," because the greeting is "roomy enough" for those who have it and for those who are still searching.

Sawyer posed the question, "How does one apply faith at a time of a political campaign?" and answered it by stating, "You need a good temper and a constructive spirit. Without faith, the elections are seen from a Stoic point of view as a bore or as savage buffoonery."

The Blacks and the poor are saddened and have given up the idea of a brotherhood of man, while the political candidates make friends during the conventions and then serve them with hate and fraud after elections, commented Sawyer.

"Those who have the faith understand that there is a divine plan. We are not called upon to be God, but we understand that we are all brothers — even the Democrats," he continued.



The Maxwell Professor said there are things that bind us together that are more important, and even in politics, along with evil, there is a great goodness.

"We have to understand there is a great regard in working for the common good, and that we are all fellow men and all make mistakes.

How one comes upon the gift of faith is a question Sawyer said would have to be answered by the chaplains. "But faith makes the world one not just to be endured but one of delight. Faith is a gift of incalcuable worth, and we must polish it again and again."

Ben's 125th Hill win

Orange beats Maryland to even slate

HIGH STEPPING Cliff Ensley gathers in his second interception of the afternoon against Maryland. It set up the third SU score in the 32-14 triumph. (Photo by Biggar)

By ED AGRANOWITZ

Syracuse built a 25-7 halftime bulge and coasted to a 32-14 victory over Maryland Saturday to present Coach Ben Schwartzwalder with his 125th career win on the Hill.

Quarterback Paul Paolisso, fullback Al Newton and ends Tony Gabriel and John Massis all turned in fine performances as the Orangemen rolled up 460 total yards.

A deft punt by Art Thoms was downed on the Maryland one yard line to put the Terrapins in an early first quarter hole. When the Orange regained possession on their own 48, Rich Panczyszyn marched the club 52 yards in seven plays for SU's first score, a one yard buck by Newton. George Jakowenko's PAT try was blocked.

The Orange came right back again and took over after a Terp punt on the SU 23. Nine plays later Syracuse was one yard away again, but this time Newton lost the handle and Maryland recovered in the end zone.

On Maryland's second play, Orange safety Cliff Ensley picked off a deflected Al Pastrana pass at the 32 and ran it back to the 8. After two unsuccessful runs, Paolisso finished the job with an eight yard touchdown peg to wingback John Bulicz. Jakowenko's kick was wide, and Syracuse led 12-0.

After an exchange of punts, the Terps put together their only sustained drive of the afternoon, going 57 yards in 12 plays. Maryland needed a crucial fourth down Orange holding penalty to keep them rolling before Billy Lovett cracked over from the one.

Paolisso got the Orange rolling again as he marched the team 86 yards for another TD. Paul threw twice to Gabriel for 31 yards and handed three times to speedy John Godbolt for 37 yards. Bulicz scampered 21 yards to the one on a scissors and Godbolt's score at 6:57 made it 18-7. Panczyszyn missed on a two point pass try.

After Maryland received and made one first down, Ensley pilfered his second Pastrana aerial and darted 40 yards back to the Terp six. On third down Paolisso kept for the score, and Jakowenko's boot put the Orange on the fat end of a 25-7 score.

Maryland tried to get on the scoreboard again before halftime, and made it to the Syracuse 30. Here, Orange linebacker Bobby Bancroft made a juggling one-handed interception to kill the threat. Later Bancroft said, "I knew Pastrana would try to throw the ball out of bounds. The pass was behind me, but I was lucky enough to get a hand on it."

Syracuse's only second half touchdown came late in the third quarter. Paolisso hit on seven of eight tosses in this 68 yard drive, the last one being a five yard jump pass to Massis, who bulled to pay dirt.

Gary Van Sickler set up Maryland's final touchdown in the fourth quarter when he picked off Randy Zur's first varsity pass and missed by a half yard of going all the way. John King pushed over on the first play and Rick Carlson closed out the scoring with his second conversion of the day.

Syracuse displayed a well balanced ground attack, with four players accounting for most of the team's 201 yard rushing total. Newton (14 carries for 74 yards), Panz (8 for 50), Bulicz (6 for 48), and Goldbolt (8 for 40)

Sawyer in chapel

Professor Michael O. Sawyer spoke at the Hendricks Chapel service Sunday and it was a delight to hear a student of a most secular science, politics, address a Protestant congregation on the subject of faith from the point of view of a Catholic layman. This is putting flesh and blood on the ecumenical spirit.

UU Weekend

We do not know at this point how much money University Union will lose on its weekend, but we do know its leadership is worried. If the weekend loses money, Jerry Tatarian and Mary Franciosi are exempt of guilt for lack of planning and hard work. What they and many of us may bear responsibility for is the presumption that the only way to raise money is to stage the "traditional" weekend which the general studentry refuses to support.

Congratulations

Congratulations to the SU football team for their 32 to 14 victory over Maryland. We have confidence that future Saturday afternoons will prove the Michigan State game was the exception to the Orange rule.

Letters to the editor

Fulbright

To the Editor:

As most of you may now know, on Thursday, September 26, Congress voted to reduce the financial allocation for the Fulbright Fellowship program by approximately 80%. Several of the agencies engaged in dispensing these funds feel that this action may, in affect, end the program.

No matter what your position in the university, as undergraduate, graduate, or faculty member, you are affected by this action. It may alter not only your own educational future, but also that of those about you. It will limit the background of those who will someday lead this nation. It will restrict the experience of those who will teach your children. It will affect America's image abroad by drastically limiting the international exchange of students — and ideas. And it would seem to foretell a decrease in American interest in the intellectual, social, and political activities of the world.

Regardless of your personal politics, this is a matter to which you should react. It's not too late to reverse this action, if we move now. Probably the most effective method is through your own letters, and possible targets for these letters are your local representatives, both of your US senators, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the president.

Letters need not be long nor argumentative. Simply state how you feel and why you feel that way. Any effort on your part will help reverse this unforeseen, uncalled-for, and unfortunate action.

Anyone interested in helping to initiate a nationwide inter-university program to reverse this action should call me at 478-6068.

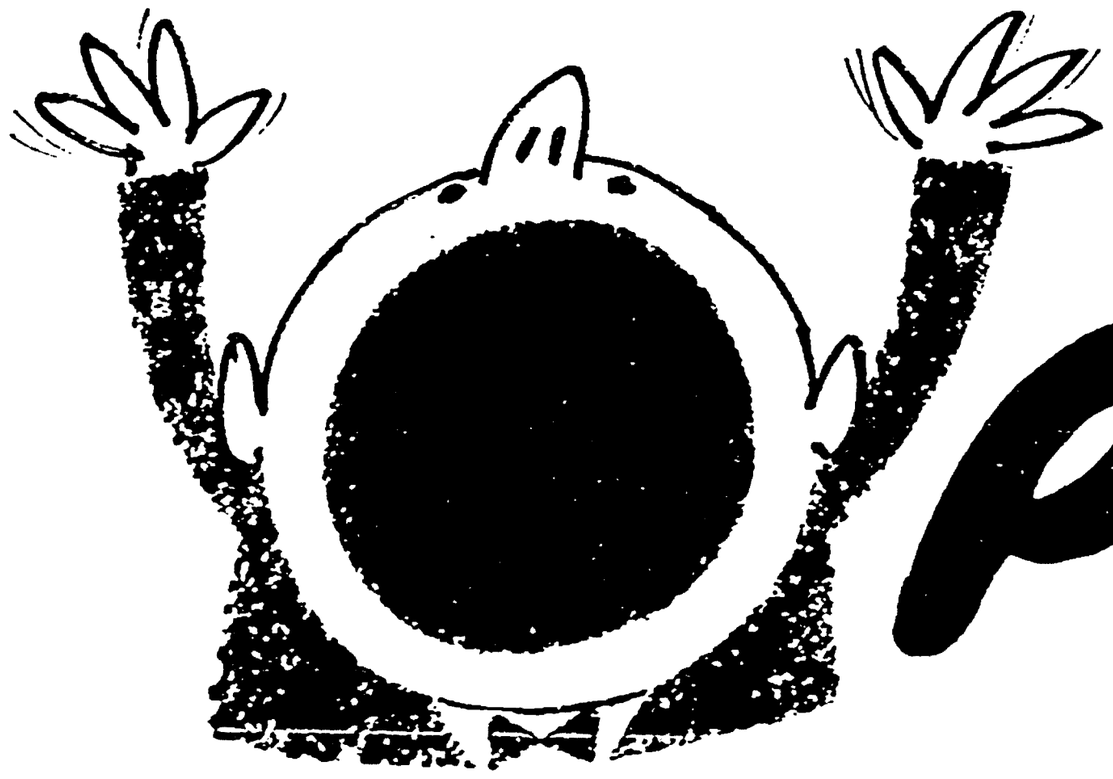
Biafra

To the Editor:

If Miss Barbara Lundquist's views on the Biafran situation have been faithfully reported (and the disconnected article by Miss Bilofsky leads one to believe they have not been entirely), it appears that those of us who stayed home over the summer have had an opportunity to learn more about the war than the visitor to Lagos. Aside from the misspelling of Col. Ojukwu's name, several remarks by Miss Lundquist strike one as being terribly naive in light of the steady flow of news and film we are getting from reporters and photographers who are much closer to the scenes of fighting and starvation than the federal capital.



Miss Lundquist said that the federal government had originally tried to "avoid killing fellow-Nigerians" by attempting to get the Biafrans to the peace tables. Yet, throughout those early months of the way (let us say, from June 1967 to February 1968), there was ample evidence that federal toops were not willing to show mercy even to civilians who either surrendered or showed no resistance to the federal advance, as the mass executions in Asaba attest. (The uncle of Michael Obi, senior in economics at S.U., was one of of the few who lived to describe that event.)

This plus other remarks made by Miss Lundquist indicate that she has, as have so many others, failed to understand the basic motivation of Biafra's tenacious military and political resistance: They fear genocide. What evidence do we have that this fear is unjustified? The Ibo pogroms of the North in the winter of '66-67, the bombing of hospitals, schools, churches, and other non-military targets in the East (Miss Lundquist might have pointed out that when she was in Lagos, the Biafrans had no planes flying over blacked-out Lagos nor, save for one abortive attempt last year, ever had); the executions in Asaba, Ogoja province, and the hospital wards in Port Harcourt; the shooting of an Ibo civilian who denounced the idea of secession before western cameras; these are the reports I have

Must we assume that the Ibo Biafrans have not heard of, if not witnessed, many more events as hideous as these?

I doubt whether the root cause of this war is simply "tribalism," as Miss Lundquist says. It is much more complex than that. But it is certain that the federal government and its police force, regardless of their intentions, have been unable to provide personal security for a large and important segment of its citizenry (even before the war began). Is it when the very existence of that segment (Ibos, by the way, are not the only group in this segment) is necessarily put into jeopardy?

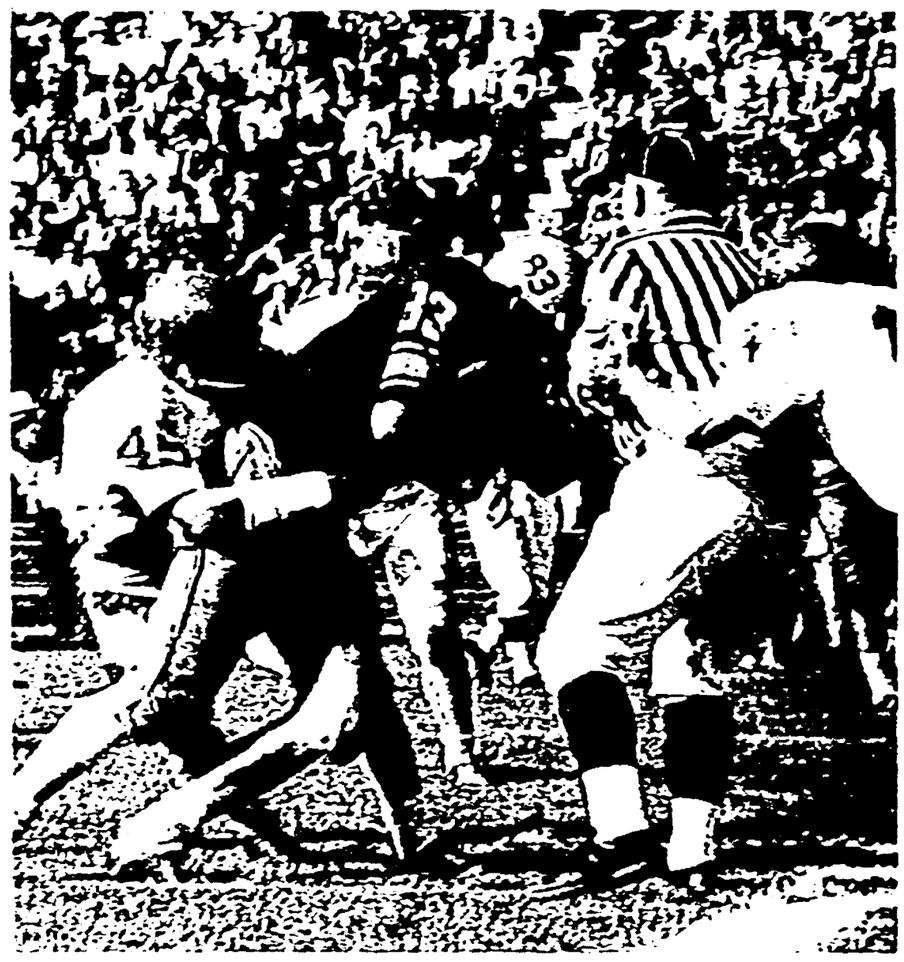
Archbold locker room filled with happy faces

By DOUG GARR

The locker room at Archbold Stadium was filled with happy faces as the Orangemen easily defeated the Maryland Terrapins Saturday, 32-14.

Most impressive of all was the balanced offensive attack, which moved the ball almost at will against the Terp defense. The total yardage gained was 460, 259 on the ground and 201 in the air.

Cliff Ensley was voted the game ball by his teammates, but insisted that the victory was a real team effort. "We improved a lot over last week," the Gip said, "even though we still made mistakes. The defense is going to have to improve on short yardage plays, and we're going to have to cut down on the penalties."



Ensley also insisted that "We can get a lot better." The Gipper had the highest praise for the offensive line, which opened up the holes for the sophomore running backs.

Leading the ground attack was fullback Al Newton. Al netted 74 yards in 14 carries for a better than five yards per carry average. "I played okay, but could have played a lot better," said Newton. "All the backs did a really great job running, including John Godbolt, who subbed for Ron Trask." Godbolt rushed for 40 yards, averaging five yards per carry.

Bill Maddox, who caught two passes for 42 yards, was not at all impressed with the Terrapins. "I had read in the papers that they figured we would be the easiest team on their schedule, because of last year's 7-3 score," he explained. "The team wasn't even up for the game until about 10 minutes before kickoff."

Quarterback Paul Paolisso was the big gun for the Orange passing attack. He completed 12 of 18 for 134 yards, and passed for two touchdowns. He only played for one drive in the second half, as the 25-7 halftime lead put the game out of reach.

Sophomore end Tony Gabriel had nothing but superlatives for Paolisso. "Paul played a great game, he said," and made me look good even though I missed a couple." Gabe, who caught five passes for a total of 78 yards, added, "The Gipper really played a great game and really deserved the game ball, but everyone did a good job. It was a team effort."

EXTRA EFFORT is exerted by end John Massis as he cracks over for an Orange touchdown. Neither the referee or Maryland's John Dyer (45) can stop his forward motion. (Photo by Biggar)

In the midst of all the slaps on the backs, everyone is concerned with the next game as soon as this one is over. John Massis, who had five receptions, said that UCLA, next week's opponent, has a very fast team. Al Newton has a lot of respect for the Bruins. "They don't have as much power as Michigan State, but they are a lot faster. Their starting quarterback is out, but their second string quarterback is filling in adequately. They have a lot of depth."

The Orange, however, is already getting psyched for next week's game. The spirit is high, and everybody is trying to prove that last year's 32-14 victory was no fluke.

There will be a meeting of the DO sports staff today at 4 p.m. in the DO office.

all picked up five or more yards per carry.

In the passing department, Paolisso wound up 12 of 18 for 134 yards and two touchdowns. Panz managed only two of 11 and one interception.

Gabriel (78 yds.) and Massis (63 yds.) led the Orange receivers with five grabs each. Art Thoms continued his fine punting job with 6 kicks for a 41 yard mean.

Schwartzwalder was pleased with the victory, but expressed concern over some sloppy play at times and his team's 103 yards penalized. "This was much better than a loss," said Ben, "but all of those penalties could lose a game for us."

Javits stresses lottery for more equal draft

By KAREN WIEDIGER
Campus News Editor

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) sharply blasted student draft deferments in an address to the Public Affairs and Citizenship lecture class at Hendricks Chapel last night.

"National standards of fairness and equity are key elements in any law requiring military service of citizens. The current selective service law simply is not in keeping with a social contract calling for equality under the law," stated the Senator.

He continued by saying student deferments are prime examples of special treatment that is accorded to particular groups of citizens.

The senator also attacked the system of local draft boards and called for a law authorizing the use of a national lottery system to determine those in the country who must render military service.

At a press conference earlier in the day, Javits answered a question concerning the lottery system by stating, "A national lottery would call all men of the same age at the same time and only during that specific year.

"I urge a law requiring the establishment of uniform national standards for students and occupational deferments. The President, given the nature of the current international situation, would be permitted latitude in determining the quality and the number of deferments granted under an equitable draft system," stated Javits.

He continued by recommending that the President be permitted but not required to grant student deferments and said the major criteria for these decisions must be related to the principle of equal service and equal opportunity.

Javits went on to say, "When national security permits, the President should be required to grant deferments to students not only at four-year colleges or universities, but also to students who wish to attend vocational schools, technical and junior colleges and join apprentice programs.

"Because we speak of life and death, I recommend that the President be required to end all student deferments, if in his judgement, there is a substantial risk that a potential draftee be exposed to armed conflict. So long as we are engaged in a tragic conflict in Vietnam, we must all bear the burden of that conflict," said Javits.

The Senator also spoke of the possibility of a wholly Volunteer Army after the conclusion of the Vietnam War. He feels that such a decision will have to be weighed with care before it can be made.

"Up until now, at least, free men have been willing to bear the burden of fighting for their own freedoms," stated Javits. "No matter how we, as individuals, feel about a given course of national action, we are the responsible inheritors of a tradition that demands equal service and mutual obligation."

Following the Senator's speech, a panel of four students, composed of Louis Jacobs, Tom Mabry, Neil Wallace and Joan Watson posed questions which were answered by Javits. Questions were then taken from the audience.

Where they stand

Only the draft and conscientious objection divide the two New York State U.S. Senatorial candidates, according to a New York Civil Liberties Union poll, which was reported in Sunday's New York Times.

Senator Jacob K. Javits was quoted as saying, "We cannot do away with the draft now, but under no circumstances should we have conscription without an equitable and fair system as possible."

Although he has called for a study of the volunteer system, "it would not necessarily be in the best interests of the country." He also said that conscientious objectors must be recognized, but not on the basis of particular wars.

Paul O'Dwyer, on the other hand, was reported to support a voluntary army, with military conscription "only in time of great national emergency, requiring full mobilization." He favors the right of conscientious objection to particular war, according to the poll.

Dean Bailey's last convo

Links hecklers to Nazi book-burners

By BOB ZUER

Stephen K. Bailey, dean of SU's Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, condemned oppressors of academic freedom last night, likening them to Nazi book-burners of World War II.

Dean Bailey's censure came at the school's annual convocation in Maxwell Auditorium.

"A threat to academic freedom is ultimately a threat to democracy," he emphasized.

Bailey said he was expressly concerned with hecklers, who "hoot down speakers," noting numerous disturbances during speeches by presidential candidates.

Everyone has the right of disagreement, but everyone also has the right to speak, he added.

Bailey said he was appalled by the reception former Alabama Governor George C. Wallace received from SU students and faculty when he spoke at Manley Field House in the spring of 1967. "This type of thing should not happen and especially not at a college campus," he emphasized.

Bailey told the grad students it was their job to extend the depth and range of human understanding to solve the pressing problems facing today's society.

Today, man depends on social analysis and social theory in his handling of public affairs, he said. But social knowledge is no substitute for social wisdom, he added.

Dean Bailey cited the Maxwell School's record for involvement in the field of public polity, including local, national and international problems.

It is the faculty's job to motivate students and give them "practical wisdom," he emphasized. The Maxwell School has tried to integrate teaching, research and policy oriented activities, he stated.

He cited the fundamental changes occuring in Maxwell, the University and the nation as a cause of setting new goals and priorities and establishing new values.

Bailey asked grad students not to "see man as he was or even as he is, but as he can be." Their job is to affirm and restore man's sense of his own nobility

Grad students win grants back 'with a little help from a friend'

By JEAN HAVENS
Associate Editor

Through the efforts of Maxwell Dean Stephen K. Bailey, the proposed withdrawal of New York State scholar incentive aid to graduate assistants has been postponed for a year.

The decision to deny funds to grad students holding research, administrative and teaching assistantships in private universities throughout the state was made in the early part of the summer, but students weren't notified until their return this fall.

Dean Bailey said of the SU grad students, "Some of them came in to see me and very courteously explained that is wasn't so much the decision that they objected to, but the procedures. Sufficient time was not given to enable them to make different plans."

In an effort to aid the grad students, the dean explored the possibility of altering or temporarily suspending the State Board of Education ruling. He also called Cornell, Rochester, Columbia and New York University to discover the ruling's effect at other major state private colleges.

Last week, at the regular monthly meeting of the State Board of Regents (of which he is a member), Dean Bailey made a brief appeal on

Art students rap 'system'

Our attention has been called to the dilemma of many students in the School of Art. Although we do not know how many students are affected, we do know there are certain malfunctions in the school's curriculum.

First, some required courses were closed at registration long before all the students who needed them were served. In some cases, two required courses were scheduled for the same time.

Second, the School of Art lacks more than a token advising system for many of its students. Its current advising system results in students being "advised" what to take a few moments before registration.

There is also a need for balanced scheduling of courses. Some students were assigned schedules that made them attend classes between 9 a.m. and 10 p.m. two days a week.

There will be a meeting this evening at 8:30 in HBC lobby for distressed students of the School of Art. Barry Randell, senior class president, will listen to grievances, document them, and carry them to the administration. He is not a student with an axe to grind, coming from the School of Business Administration, and his integrity is established with the administration. We hope justice will be advanced at this meeting.

Grad students

The organization bug

By Jacques Lebel

"I'll make you a King if you make me Prime Minister." And so it goes. Graduate Student Organizations have come and gone at old S.U. with regularity and their periodic demise is not for lack of need. About 4 years from now we will have a 50/50 undergrad to grad ratio but if present patterns of organization continue the bulk of the university pie will still be eaten by the teeny-bopper bachelor degree hopefulls.

A bit of analysis is in order. Mary Jane is an activist. John is too. They meet one day while picketing the D.O. for not being "graduate oriented."

"Say, let's form a Graduate Student Organization."

"Wahoo!"

From here they seek out a friendly administrator who will listen to them (usually kindly Dean Harrison.... it seems that neurotic graduate student organizers find his confessional most satisfying) and next thing you know...Voila! a Graduate Student Organization is born.

Who are these representatives of graduate desires? Of course there are co-chairmen Mary Jane and John who end up doing 9/10ths of everything. There are a few duly elected representatives from organizations of graduate degree granting programs. But as only a few of the several score such programs have formal organizations the bulk of the membership are dean appointed, self appointed or unappointed.

A year of action ensues. Half the members find their academic load too heavy and drop out. Others find that this group won't play undergraduate games like "Robert's Rules of Order or How to Ruin a Meeting" so they quit and take up Monopoly instead. Who is left?...some guy who has an active speakers bureau going (one speaker so far but much optimism), another guy who has a crush on Mary Jane and runs her unimportant errands and, of course, Mary Jane and John.

A few things do, however, get accomplished. A representative of the Organization is placed on some University Planning Board. Also a "dialog" has been set up between undergraduate and graduate students...i.e., Mary Jane has been permitted to sit as a non-voting member of the Undergraduate Student Senate. Finally, after much diplomatic give and take, the intramural office promises to give a trophy to the team of graduate students doing best for the year. Indeed a year to be remembered.

The picture should be clear now. Representation; No! Action; barely. Broad base; Nefer! Mary Jane and John have a club. When they bid farewell to these hallowed walls the walls come a tumblin' down. Next year there is Phil. Phil is an activist.

"Which way to Dean Harrison's office?"

Letters to the editor

Propaganda?

To the Editor:

It is with a touch of bitterness and much anger that I write you the following letter. Reading through the Friday, September 26 edition of the DO, I could not help but notice the half page book review by a member of your editorial staff. Neither the name of the book nor the reviewer are important. What is of greatsignificance is that this piece of Jewish propaganda is but another link in a long process which is making absolute fools of the American people and is turning the United States into a major laughing stock of the world.

It is not in any spirit of disrespect for the Jewish religion that I continue, but rather with an open challange to anyone to openly defend, morally and legally, the existance of the state of Israel in the Middle East. Are there no Americans who have tried to resist the barrage of zionist propaganda and ask for an Arab viewpoint of the Middle East crisis? Are there no Americans who would dare go beyond asking for peace in the Middle East, and start asking for justice? Would any of our student dissenters question the United States' foreign policy in the Middle East, if they could channel their verbal rhetoric away from South East Asia?

The fact is, sir, students, and others who sneaked in, that what Israel and the United States have done in the Middle East is far worse than what is happening in VietNam, South Africa, and the Soviet Bloc. For God's sake, somebody please have the nerve and guts to put in one Arab word for the hundred Jewish ones we get thrown at us.

Rami G. Khouri

When the call went out for book reviews, no "Arab" book reviews were in fact submitted. The hundreds of Jewish words that "are thrown at you" probably reflects the proportion in which they are submitted, rather than a question of "guts". Ed.

Crucible

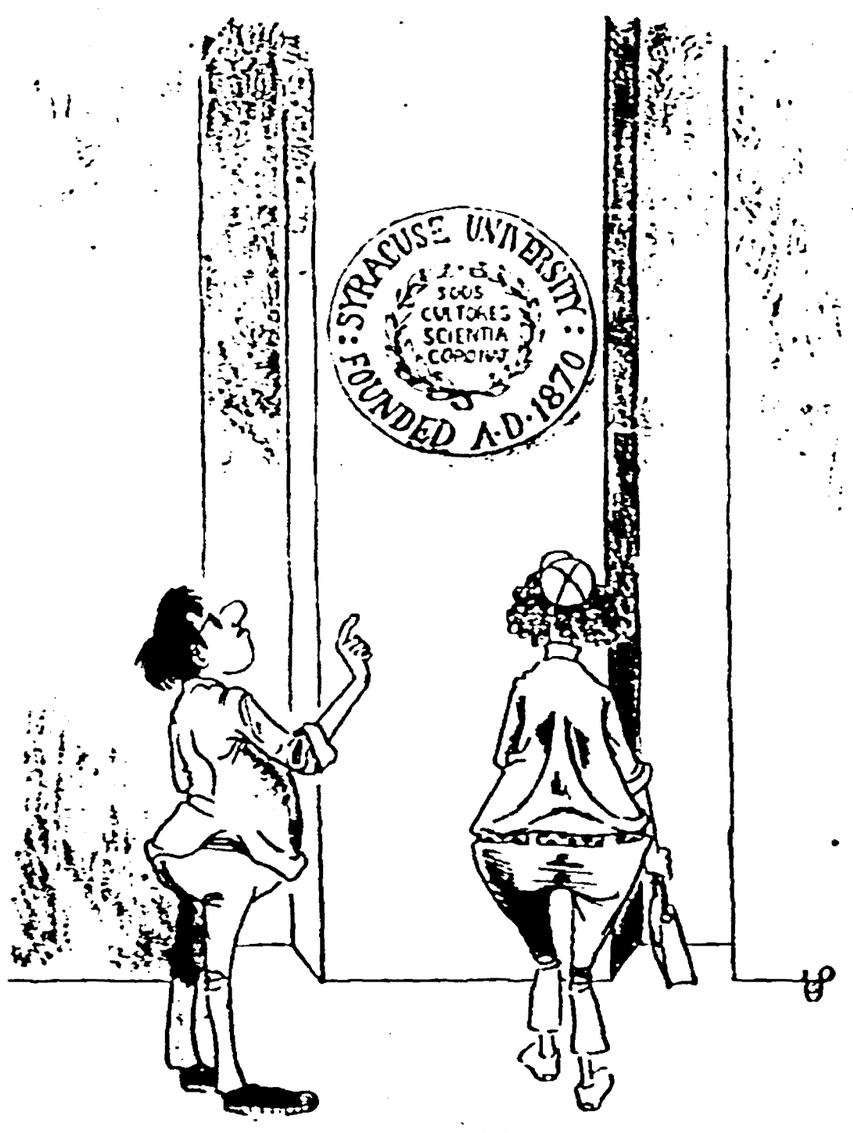
To the Editor:

Having been a Drama major as an undergraduate at another university, I was attracted to James King's review of "The Crucible" in Thursday's Daily Orange. Sad to say, though, I found the review condescending in deference to the play itself and to the actors.

Mr. King passes judgement on Miller's work: "But it is still a fine play - a bit burdensome in its dialogue, perhaps, but a fine play neverless." Mr. King, from his position as reviewer, grants Mr. Miller a "fine" play. It was nice of him to do so.

And then, with unmitigated gall, James King states: "There are, of course, a few novices in the show who must be tolerated...." Has Mr. King acted, has he tried to work with a role, and has he earnestly tried to do his best in a play? The last thing any actor needs is to feel that he must be "tolerated!"

M. Newman



Uprising

To the Editor:

Several critics have attributed the current discontent on college campuses to the "priority in academic areas" (i.e. better professors and courses) given to graduate students, and the relative neglecting of the undergraduates. According to your article on football seating (September 25) Syracuse has no such problem. Although undergraduates may be slighted academically, we have something equally important, something that undoubtedly justifies a tuition of $2000: better seating at the stadium.

As long as we can sit happily at a game, the Syracuse campus will probably suffer no major revolts. What surprises me is that, having been victimized by unsatisfactory seating arrangements in years past, we were not the first among the universities to have a student uprising.

Opinion

Senator Javits vs. the new politics

By PAUL FINKELMAN

With the arrival and speech of Jacob Javits last night the S.U. community got a chance to hear the other side, since we were privileged to hear Paul O'Dwyer during orientation weeek. Javits has a record of being a "liberal Republican," who has voted for most liberal issues, except those pretaining to Vietnam and the draft. O'Dwyer, a labor lawyer, has fought for his liberal beliefs by running guns to Israel, refusing to cross picket lines, and fighting the New York City Democratic machine.

Clearly the issues of the campaign are not the abilities of the candidates. Both are capable of being competent senators. Rather the issues of the N.Y. Senatorial race are the politics of practicality and expedience vs. the politics of principle and character, party harmony vs. maverick individualism, and national tickets and the convention system vs. the will of the people.

Javits claims to be a liberal, and in fact has accepted the Liberal Party's endorsement. Yet, at the same time he is running as a Republican who backs non-Liberals Nixon and Agnew. The Senator seems to have sold his liberal beliefs for the lucrative benefits of following the party line.

O'Dwyer, on the other hand, has not sold his integrity for the financial support of the Democratic Party. He believes the Vietnam War must end (as Javits claims to believe) and thus he will not back a candidate who supports the war.

Javits seems to be running on the idea that party unity is more important than personal integrity. He has accepted his party's platform with its hawkish Vietnam plank, yet claims to be in favor of a troop withdrawal. O'Dwyer makes no attempt to get on the bandwagon of expediency through party unity. He is not in agreement with his party's platform, and thus he doesn't support it. O'Dwyer won his nomination as a peace candidate and will not support a war plank because it would be a betrayal of, not only his conscience, but the people who voted for him in the primary.

On the question of political conventions Javits seems to be the antithesis of O'Dwyer. Governor Rockefeller, the obvious choice of the people, was ignored by the Republican convention that chose Nixon. Javits, a Rockefeller supporter, has been able to forget, not only his preferences, but those of the people. Thus he backs Nixon, affirming the value of the convention system. O'Dwyer, a McCarthy backer, refuses to support Humphrey, not only because he disagrees with him, but also because he is not the choice of the people. The party rank and file, through the primary process, showed its preference for an anti-administration, peace cnadidate. Ignoring this mandate for change, the Democratic bosses nominated Humphrey at a closed convention.

The choice for the voters is a real one. Javits has compromised his principles for party unity, and in doing so has endorsed the outdated convention system of nomination. O'Dwyer has uncompromisingly stood by his convictions, and condemned the convention system, even though it has been politically impractical for him to do so. He stands for a "new politics" that is based on honesty, integrity, and true public participation.

'Only alternative'

Students try to arouse Humphrey support

By BOB ZUER

A group of Syracuse University students convinced that Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey is the only alternative to the threat of a Nixon or Wallace presidency have begun a movement here to arouse support for the Democratic nominee.

A meeting, at which Dean Stephen K. Bailey will speak, has been called today at 7 p.m. in 315 Maxwell to determine whether a student organization should be formed to work autonomously on campus or students should work individually with the Democratic Party in Onondaga County.

Edward Humberger, a graduate student in Public Administration, organized the movement after talking with Bailey, dean of the Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs and Chairman of the Citizens for Humphrey and Muskie Committee in this area.

County Democratic Party Chairman Richard Plainer has pledged full support and recognition whatever the group finally decides.

Plainer told Humberger and a group of SU students Friday that he was interested in seeing a Humphrey movement started here.

Humberger said the group will not be a part of the Young Democrats nor the Democratic Action Corps but would work closely with these groups.

Plainer said there was no other practical alternative but to vote for Humphrey.

"And that includes not doing anything," he added.

Plainer described himself as a "liberal Kennedy Democrat." He said he voted for the peace plank in the Democratic platform at Chicago and feels Humphrey is the only candidate who has shown some conciliatroy possibilities concerning Vietnam.

The Vietnam issue is so clouding our perspective today that it is "turning off" many people to the other issues, according to Plainer.

Plainer cited Humphrey's record as a "profound liberal thinker" who "supported liberal ideas when they were not popular."

This is a time when action not inaction is needed, he emphasized. Electing Republican Richard M. Nixon president would turn the nation back to the time of Nixon's teacher Dwight Eisenhower, he added.

"If you remain inactive and you get Nixon, you deserve him and the 20 or 40 years he'll set the country back," he said.

Plainer urged all students to get involved in the coming election even if it meant working for Humphrey's opponents.

"You don't change the party from outside it. You change it from within," he emphasized.

"I think Humphrey's record indicates he will make a great President," he said.

Plainer said Humphrey is beginning to come out as his own man now. He called this an "evolutionary process" that will become more evident as the weeks go along.

He predicted Humphrey would overtake Nixon in the popularity polls shortly, quoting the Vice President's campaign manager Lawrence O'Brien as saying that both candidates will be even in the polls within 10 days.

Undergrad history majors to select voting representatives for meetings

By BILL ROBINSON

At a special meeting on Thursday, at 7:30 p.m. in the Maxwell Auditorium, undergraduate history majors will select two representatives to serve as voting participants in departmental meetings. The Graduate History Club has already selected two representatives for graduate students.

Professor Marsh, chairman of the History Dept., explained that at a departmental meeting last Thursday it was decided that student representation at all future meetings would be initiated. The representatives will have voting privileges on all matters except student awards and appointments, faculty salaries and promotions and particular candidates for appointment to the faculty.

"This time, at least in the history department, Professor Marsh said, "the initiative for student representation has come from the administration." He also said that he was, surprised, but also thankful, that students haven't kicked up more."

The idea for bringing history students into the decision making of the department came to Prof. Marsh over the summer. On his return, he found that by "spontaneous combustion" the same concern was voiced by other professors. "In fact, Prof. Marsh said, "Dean Bailey raised the same question at a meeting last week."

behalf of the grad students. He offered his information concerning the timing of the decision and suggested ways in which its chaotic impact could be modified.

"Very graciously," the Maxwell dean said, "the staff agreed to postpone the date of the ruling's effectiveness for a year." Assistant Commissioner Sherman Tinkelman sent a letter to all state colleges on Sept. 26.

The news was greeted with enthusiastic appreciation at SU and resulted in a "Thank You, Dean Bailey" banner suspended from Maxwell's roof columns.

"The praise and thanks should go to the graduate students themselves, who brought this to my attention in such a courteous manner," Bailey ventured. Assemblyman Kenneth G. Bartlett (R - Syracuse's 119th district) brought this matter to the attention of the Joint Legislative Committee on Revision of Education Law. Bartlett, a member of this committee, is also a University vice-president.

Last week's ruling will also affect 260 dependents of SU employees and faculty members.

and excite his awareness, according to Bailey.

He quoted the words in the foyer of Maxwell Hall, "We will ever strive for the ideals and sacred things of the city. Both alone and with many; we will increasingly seek to quicken the sense of public duty. We will revere the city's laws; we will transmit the city not only, not less, but greater, better and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us."

This marked Dean Bailey's final convocation as Maxwell dean. He retires in February and will be succeeded by Alan K. Campbell, former director of the Metropolitan Studies Program.

Art students

In the face of increased complaints from art students concerning sectioning and registration problems in the Art School, Barry Randell, president of the senior class, has called a brief meeting tonight at 8:30 in the HBC lobby.

"This is a chance for these students to effectively voice the present difficulties in their school," said Randell. "Something can be done."

Birkhead to direct Studies program

Guthrie S. Birkhead, professor of political science, has been named director of the Metropolitan Studies Program at the Maxwell Graudate School, Syracuse University, Dean Stephen K. Bailey announced last week.

Prof. Birkhead, 47, succeeds Alan K. Campbell, who becomes dean of the Maxwell School Feb. 1, 1969.

A Princeton Ph. D., Birkhead has been on the Maxwell faculty since 1951. During the past year he was a consultant on public administration for the Ford Foundation in Pakistan.

He has been associated with the National Municipal League, the Delaware Valley Project, the Pakistan Administrative Staff College and the United Nations Pulbic Administration Institute for Turkey and the Middle East. He was a co-author of "Decisions in Syracuse" (1961), "Science and State Government in New York" (1960) and "River Basin Administration and the Delaware" (1960).

Birkhead was chairman of Syracuse University's political science department and its director of public administration programs from 1959 to 1962; in the 1966-67 academic year he again was chairman of the political science department. He was executive director of the committee on local government and and home rule at the 1967 New York State Constitutional Convention.

The Metropolitan Studies Program was established in 1962. Since 1963, more than 75 students have completed degrees in the program, in which about 100 students are enrolled. They represent 84 different undergraduate institutions. Half of the graduates are in academic positions and half are in government service.

In addition to training

GUTHRIE S. BIRKHEAD

the Metropolitan Studies Program has been involved in a variety of research undertakings. Among the most significant are a study, sponsored by the Carnegie Corp., of the problems of urban education, and a study of the effects of reapportionment on New York State, supported by the Ford Foundation through the National Municipal League.

Croton-on-Campus

Johnson leads youth education experiment

Dr. Franklyn Barry, superintendent of schools for the city of Syracuse, and Dr. David R. Krathwohl, dean of Syracuse University's School of Education, last week announced the appointment of Dr. John L. Johnson as full-time coordinator of the Croton-on-Campus program.

Last fall a six-classroom building was built on University property and is used by 300 children in the fourth, fifth and sizth grades of Croton School, an elementary school in the inner city. The youngsters attend classes on campus half a day and spend the rest of the day in their regular classrooms.

"I consider Dr. Johnson's appointment a very significant step forward in the School of Education's effort to bring its research to bear on the problems of the inner city," said Dean Krathwohl.

Johnson has bachelor's and master's degrees from Wayne State University and a doctorate in special education from Michigan State University. A member of the Syracuse University faculty since 1966, he has also been a teacher of emotionally-disturbed children at LaFayette Clinic, Detroit, and a member of the faculty at Michigan State University. He was a consulting educational psychologist for the West Genesee School district and a consultant to the Central New York School Study Council.

The Rev. Forest Adams of Syracuse, whose suggestion led to the inauguration of the Croton-on-Campus plan, said, "Under Dr. Johnson's leadership, I believe that Croton-on-Campus will become a model for all of our schools.

In outlining the aims of Croton-on-Campus, Johnson said, "To my knowledge no other university has made such an investment--a building on campus, assignment of faculty people to full-time administration of schools and providing intellectual and technical support. The whole issue of university-community cooperation is involved here, and there is a high degree of cooperation between the two in the project. This is a clear example of institutional response to community suggestions, in this case the suggestion of a leader of the black community."

DR. JOHN L. JOHNSON

He pointed out that special emphasis is placed on communication skills, behavorial sciences and Negro history. The Croton-on-Campus program is not subject oriented but rather tries to relate to the day-to-day life experience of the child and seeks to offer a variety of experiences new to the students.

Dr. William Wayson of the School of Education faculty is assigned to the Syracuse city schools on a full-time basis and is principal of the regular Croton School.

Ben drawing a bead on quick UCLA

By DOUG GARR

According to the Syracuse coaching staff, if the football team is without the services of tailback Ron Trask and quarterback Paul Paolisso, the Orangemen will have their hands full in this Saturday's eighth meeting with perennial powerhouse UCLA.

Although Coach Ben Schwartzwalder was satisified with his team's decisive win over Maryland, he insisted that "We made an awful lot of mistakes." The mistakes were different from those in the Michigan State game, but it seems as though they made just as many. "We hope we can correct them," said Ben, "because Saturday's game is going to be a real challenge to us."

Ben did comment that many players turned in solid performances in Saturday's game. He complimented his linebackers Bill Smith, Jerry Ruccio and Bob Bancroft, along with middle guard Ron Womack. Also Cliff Ensley "played a real good game" as he returned two interceptions for 64 yards.

Schwartzwalder was very happy with his offensive line last week, as they opened enough holes for his backs to gain 259 yards rushing. He was also satisfied with fullback Al Newton's performance even though "he fumbled and missed a couple of blocks." Newton, only a sophomore, should get a lot better before the season is over.

Turning to the UCLA game this week, the big "if" is whether Trask and Paolisso will be healthy enough to play. "If those two are all right, we'll have a big lift," said Ben. "If not, we may be in real trouble."

Schwartzwalder has the highest respect for the Bruin squad. They have nothing short of a "fine team." They trounced Pittsburg in their opener, 63-7 and beat Washington State last week, 31-21. They are a Top Ten team, and could be rated as high as three or four in the nation.

Ben also lauded the Tommy Prothro's coaching staff as being "one of the best in the country."

He continued, "They have a lot of depth and have an extremely fast team." Right now the Bruin squad has between 15 and 20 players who run the 100 in under ten seconds. The slowest of their two wingbacks and tailbacks runs the 100 in 9.8. It looks as though Ensley, Kyasky and co. will have their hands full.

Asked to comment on last year's 32-14 upset of the Bruins in the Coliseum, Ben said, "It was one of the best football games a Syracuse team ever played. The boys were highly emotional." Schwartzwalder also indicated that UCLA's beating by national champion USC (21-20, in a real thriller) had a lot to do with UCLA's performance. If the SU team is "up" on Saturday, it should be a close ball game.

This week the Syracuse squad will see movies of the UCLA squad in their first two games. SU's top-ranked defense should get a good look at the California speedsters. If the defense can stay with the Bruins' speed, it will be a toss-up on Saturday. This prediction also takes for granted that the Orange will have ther services of Paolisso and Trask. If not, the Orangemen are in for a long Saturday afternoon.

Bolden of Bruins an unlikely starter

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

With the first victory under their belts, the Syracuse coaching staff has turned its attention to UCLA, which will come into Archbold on Saturday as one of the fastest things on 44 legs that the United States can offer.

The Bruin squad is bigger on speed than even Ginger Baker. Last season they boasted better than 15 men who could run the 100 in less than 10 seconds. "I was most impressed by their aggressiveness. They hit hard," assistant coach and scout Joe Szombathy told the weekly press luncheon yesterday. "We won't meet any other team this year that's so quick, with such great pursuit."

Szombathy, who has seen both UCLA games this fall, praised both Bruin units. "They have an excellent defense, with their greatest strength in linebacking," he said. "They are touting Mike Ballou for All-America, and he's worthy of the praise he's been getting. He's as quick as a cat." Quick as a lion might be closer to the truth, for "Cat" is 6 foot 3 inches and weighs 225.

On offense, the only position that the Uclans are unsure of is quarterback, where their number one man, Bill Bolden, is an uncertain starter, because of a shoulder injury suffered in their opening game.

Soph Jim Nader, a transfer from Pasadena City College, is the probable starter, backed up by junior Greg Jones, a converted tailback. Neither was very consistent in their 31-21 victory over Washington State.

"We were staggering and stumbling last week," Bruin coach Tommy Prothro said over the phone. "Bolder thinks he can play Saturday, but I don't."

Prothro has been right much of the time in the past, and Ben Schwartzwalder would like to give him a gold star on this question.

Player of the week

Gipper Ensley gets last laugh on Pastrana

CLIFF ENSLEY, DO player of the week, intercepted two passes on Saturday against Maryland. Called "the Gipper" by his teammates, Ensley also captains the lacrosse team.

By ED AGRANOWITZ

Saturday's home opener at Archbold Stadium saw the Syracuse Orangemen chalk up their first victory of the 1968 season. It saw Orange coach Ben Schwartzwalder collect his 125th career victory on the Hill. It also saw Cliff Ensley get his revenge.

Ensley's revenge, which led his team to a 32-14 romp, came in the form of two interceptions against Terrapin quarterback Alan Pastrana, which set up a pair of first half Orange touchdowns. "The first game I started as a sophomore was against Maryland," explains Enslwy. "Pastrana threw a touchdown pass against me and that cost me my starting berth for the rest of the year. Saturday I wanted to eat him alive."

Ensley's two thefts earned him the presentation of the game ball by Orange captain Tony Kyasky, and the title of "Daily Orange Player of the Week."

Ensley's first interception came with the Orange leading 6-0 in the first period. "The Gipper" took a deflected Pastrana pass in full stride and scampered down the sideline before being bumped out of bounds on the eight yard line. Three plays later, SU was on the scoreboard again.

In the second quarter, with the Orange now ahead 18-7, Ensley all but iced the game by picking off a Pastrana bomb at the Terp 46 and sprinting all the way to the six. Only a jersey tackle from behind by Roland Merrit prevented Ensley from scoring his first collegiate touchdown. Paul Paolisso kept for the score on third down, and the Orange were home free, 25-7.

"That's probably the best game I've ever had at SU," said a happy Gip, "I think I could have gone all the way on the second one if I'd been wearing a tear-away jersey. I'll have to use them from now on."

Early in the second half, the 6 foot 2 inch, 192 lb. safety again electrified the Archbold crowd by swivel-hipping his way 36 yards with a Maryland punt to the Terp 29. The jaunt was nullified by a clipping infraction, however.

After the game, coach Schwartzwalder suggested that perhaps the official had erred in his judgement. "That was a terrible call," said Ben, "Gerry Beach threw a beautiful block to spring Cliff." Schwartzwalder was a little happier with Ensley's showing than that of the ref. "Cliff played one whale of a ball game, didn't he?"

"I saw that guy coming, and I knew if Gerry couldn't get to him I would've been smothered," said Ensley, "but I couldn't tell whether or not it was a clip."

Ensley came to Syracuse unrecruited, tried out for the football team, and earned a scholarship. His contributions to Syracuse sports do not stop on the gridiron, however, As a sophomore he lettered in wrestling, and already has two lacrosse letters to his name. This spring he will co-captain the stick squad. The Scarsdale, N.Y. resident will probably pass up wrestling this year, as he did last winter, to spend a little more time with his engineering studies.

Looking ahead to next week's big one with UCLA, Ensley says, "We've improved a lot since the beginning o the season, and now we're ready. UCLA is a team with a lot of finesse and we'll have to keep our mistakes to a minimum.

"We'll need a good rush from our defensive line, like last year," continued the Gipper. "If they have time to set up and throw, it could be a long afternoon in the secondary.

"Potentially, I think this is the best team I've played on in my three years here," says Ensley. "We could make a bowl if we beat UCLA, but our backs are to the wall.

Ensley paused for a moment in his appraisal of the Uclans as he watched the New York Giants take apart the Washington Redskins on TV. The Giants' safety, Spider Lockhart, had just made his second interception of the afternoon and bolted for a touchdown. Gip grinned and said, "I guess it's the weekend of the defensive back."

WAER presents forum

Popovic views change in Yugoslav power class

By BOB STRUGATZ

In an interview last night on WAER's SU Forum, Nenad D. Popovic, a visiting professor of economics and author of the book Yugoslavia: The New Class in Crisis, expounded on the condition of the Yugoslav state, and the reasons for the recent condemnation of his work.

The thesis of Popovic's book is to "give insight into the structure and function of the Communist system" with concentration on the Yugoslav situation.

He stated that Yugoslavia, while under dictatorships during the 1940's and 50's, is now experiencing rule by a new class, the top elite of the Party, which is tending to exploit the political and economic interests of the country.

"This new class does not want to be identified with Communism," Popovic remarked. "They call themselves socialists or self-managers."

Popovic went on to say that under this new class, Yugoslavia is experiencing great controversy, especially in the socialist-communist split, unemployment, deficits, and the sudden replacement of old values by new ones. However, the new class, in spite of these things, "is always struggling to maintain, stabilize, and strengthen their power." He further states that although Yugoslavia is known as a liberal regime, the new class has created a sort of obligatory freedom, and that Yugoslavia is a showcase for what will happen in other Communist countries later on.

Popovic's book was condemned by the Yugoslav embassy because its interests were "hostile" to the new class. The paradox is that no one at the embassy saw or read the book; they made their judgement completely on the basis of its review in the N.Y. Times. Although it was the Syracuse University Press which was actually attacked, Popovic feels that he has been accused also. In answer to these accusations, Popovic simply stated: "I love my country as a free country. That is the difference between me and the new class."

Witness to military takeover hopes country will resist Soviet threat

By RONI ZLOKOWER
Associate Editor

Dr. Vladimir Vinter of Czechoslovakia, at SU yesterday to deliver a lecture for a Department of Bacteriology and Botany Seminar, consented to offer a few of his personal conjectures and opinions on the impact of the soviet invasion on his country, its people, and their freedoms.

A member of the Institute of Microbiology of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences in Prague, Dr. Vinter was himself a witness to the military takeover of Prague which began on August 20th.

The main attack was aimed at the Presidium of the Czech Communist Party and its secretary Alexander Dubcek who had replaced Anton Novotny, to later become the leader of the Czech reformation.

The Academy of Sciences was among the other important Czech institutions to be seized by the Soviets. The first attack came on August 21 when the main building was surrounded by tanks and soldiers. The President of the Academy protested immediately and the Soviets then left the building alone. All the scientists retained their passports and important documents and papers throughout the invasion.

Commenting on the effect of the invasion on Czech academic freedom, Dr. Vinter said that the Czechs as a people were used to being "exposed to many different ideas and situations." He felt they would recover from the initial impact.

"Everyone is very disturbed right now,

Organizing 'opposition'

Cleaver looks for national solutions

By DOROTHY NASH

In a time of continuing political chaos still one more alternative is being offered to the increasingly confused American electorate. That alternative is the Peace and Freedom Party's Presidential "non-candidate" Eldridge Cleaver.

Cleaver, who is Minister of Information for the Black Panther Party, was instrumental in uniting the Panthers and P.F.P. into a strong political coalition. Striving to attain the status of an organized party, P.F.P. has swung full force into the '68 political melee by staging a national convention and proposing as its nominees Eldridge Cleaver for President and Judith Mage for Vice-President.

According to Larry Alexander, full time organizer of the Peace and Freedom Party in Syracuse, Cleaver was chosen because he was the "most attractive candidate. He best expresses the principles and platform developed by P.F.P." Alexander added that "Peace and Freedom looked all over and it's hard to find a Presidential candidate."

The actual candidacy, however, does not seem to be the major issue for the Peace and Freedom Movement at the present time. The party is attempting to make a point of representing the "opposition in America" rather than electing a President. In "Arguments for Supporting Cleaver" P.F.P. says "Eldridge's age (33) should not be a stumbling block. Even from a technical standpoint, the Constitution merely states that one must be 35 to hold office as President, not to run for that office." So it appears that even the Peace and Freedom Movement does not consider the election of Eldridge Cleaver to be a feasible plan.

The personal character of Eldridge Cleaver can only be discussed by elaborating on his P.F.P. platform because Cleaver has made its radicalism the focal point of his own radical personality.

At first glance the platform sounds much like one from the liberal Democratic wing from which P.F.P. is attempting to disassociate itself. Playing the worn out game of "please every voting faction" P.F.P. and Eldridge Cleaver demand:

--immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam
--liberation of oppressed Blacks, Mexicans, Indians
--gun control
--an end to onerous tazation of the working man
--guaranteed jobs at decent wages
--quality education for all
--decent low-cost housing
--free medical care
--community control of schools
--abolition of the draft
--an end to government interference in labor.

However, upon closer examination of the movement's programs, radicalism and much inconsistency become apparent. Admitting that P.F.P.'s views were idealistic and radical, Larry Alexander did not agree that they were extreme.

"Our views aren't really extreme. Idealistic views are the only realistic ones because we're planning for

ELDRIDGE CLEAVER

Committee of promise

The Journalism School is establishing a nine member committee to improve its relations with its students. Although its specific functions are uncertain, we hope the committee will become a many-headed ombudsman for the students.

One role the committee could assume is that of an academic appeals board. Students convinced they were graded unjustly on papers or tests would be able to appeal their dispute to a higher body. It might also provide the first hearing for students accused of cheating or plagairism.

Another role the committee might assume is that of a curriculum review board. Students distressed over the content or lack thereof in journalism courses would have an outlet for their complaints.

Establishing procedures to form a Committee on Student Relations is not the same as realizing an influential body capable of improving such relations. The idea, however, recognizes a need, and if it works, merits duplication by other schools.

Frosh adjustment

The search for purpose

By Bob Tembeckjian '72

That there is a great difference between high school and college is known by everyone, and it is most effectively felt by freshmen. For freshmen must live the transition and make the adjustments, and often if is not easy.

One difficulty is realizing that we have suddenly become facts on a computer sheet, that our names are now social security numbers. But becoming a statistic is contrary to man's being. We are individuals, not numbers. Our feelings and thoughts cannot be regimented and neatly classified by machines. What we should expect to find at Syracuse and other universities is an emphasis on individuality, not an attempt to nicely systemize everything.

Another problem freshmen are likely to encounter is loneliness. Despite the large number of people at Syracuse, or perhaps because of it, a person might feel "lost" or think himself unable to make friends. The real danger of this alienation is that it works to destroy the student's confidence in himself, and that is just the opposite of what one hopes to find at college.

But there are other "crises" freshmen face during the first few weeks, and they are basically related to our being on our own. High school, in contrast to college, is very protective. In the former, every activity is arranged by the faculty and administration, and there is a perfect order of things to do. The student rarely asserts himself and does little on his own. Study halls, classes, and athletic activities are organized for him, cuts are not allowed, and punishment is often distributed. At Syracuse there is a new kind of freedom that a freshman might be unable to control. He is more or less on his own. He has a lot of time between classes , and that is often used to waste time rather than do something constructive.

Finally, a seemingly common concern of new classmen is to outdo each other, either in athletics or academics. And while competition can be healthy, it should not be a primary concern. We are here to learn, not necessarily compete. We are here to help one another, not walk all over each other. We do not come to college primarily to make teachers think highly of us. More important than what teachers and administrators think of us is what we think of ourselves. Are we satisfied with our own attitudes and ideas about college? If we can leave Syracuse in four years and truthfully say we are satisfied, college will have been worth the effort. If we cannot, or if we falsely delude ourselves into believing we are satisfied, college will have been four wasteful years of self-deception, for we will not have been better for our coming.

That should be a universal concern among freshmen and all students, for that is one of the basic purposes of college--to make us truly happy with the kind of people we are.

Letters to the editor

'M' Street

To the Editor:

I was walking down Marshall Street when this guy grabs my arm. Unshaven and dirty, an earring swinging in the breeze, he spoke with fumes emminating from his mouth like acetylene gas. "See that, man!" he breathed, "The Outcasts hung up the colors." He pointed to a denim vest nailed to a tree with the words "The Counsel" written on it in faded red and gold. "They're gonna have a choose out right here," he said. "Nine o'clock. Declaration of war!" He opened his own grubby vest revealing a heavy chain running over his shoulders and down into each pocket of his jeans. "I'm ready," he said.

A while ago, I was sitting in the Pizza King enjoying my weekly steak when I noticed three bodies draped over my car. I walked outside and told them that my car was old and it didn't like being leaned on. Besides they were getting it dirty. "Hey man, don't hassle us, man. We're not doing nothin'." The fellow laying on the roof slid down and sat on the hood. It buckled beneath him. "Don't hassle you!?" I said. "You lay all over my car and you say don't hassle you?!" They finally got off and sulked down to Carroll's. I went back to my steak. It was cold.

These little incidents point out the miserable state of affairs down here. As a "resident" of Marshall Street I'm tired of getting panhandled every ten seconds. I'm tired of people who get indignant when I tell them to get off my car. And I'm tired of seeing cheap, imitation Hell's Angels wheel in on their "hogs" with chains clanking and exhausts bellowing to "choose out" in front of Cosmo's.

Is there any excuse for Hippies and their pals? I'm no square. There's nothing wrong with long hair and dirt. I've had my share of both. It's the Hippie philosophy that's so annoying. The uncaring, dropout, destructive phenomenon that festers on Marshall Street like an open sore. Now that the Gridiron is gone, the bandage is off. The windows are too big in Carroll's to hide the sad, vacant faces staring out.

I've had a nice pad down here on East Adams Street for the last two of my four years here. I've seen 10 o'clock curfews changed to no curfews, beer served at University functions, the Savoy give way to Carroll's and Marshall Street go from good to worse.

What does it take to get rid of them? The University tried sheep manure this summer on the grass across the street, but it drove away everybody except the Hippies. They loved it. Police harassment is a drag and winter will only drive the barefeet indoors; like dormant flowers to bloom again in the Spring. Probably only time will be effective. As did the Beatniks and Screamies of other generations, the Hippies will fade away. Never growing up, just growing old. And the excuses of irresponsible youth, peace,love; they won't work anymore. Nothing's worse than an old Hippie. They themselves will fall victim of a generation gap of kids who haven't discovered Carroll's yet. And hopefully won't want to.

Moving

Dear Dad,

None of your letters have caught up to me yet; the Post Office has evidentally put me on a rotating address form due to the fact that I have moved around so much. I know originally I was supposed to be in Vincent Appartments but it was closed to undergrads so the University put me in Scott Cottage. They are now closing Scott, so if you want to write me, please send letters in care of Lawrinson, Sadler, or Lehman dormitories.

After a few weeks they should get to me. If there is an emergency at home and you want to call me try any of the following extensions: 3524, 2909, 3930, or 2893.

The guys have been petitioning against our eviction but the last petition was sent to a Dean who is out of town and we won't find out until next Friday if he can help us.

Rember the 20 Juniors and Seniors that you met when I moved in, and how pleased you were with the friendships that were formed and the fact that we made stringent study rules for the cottage such as quiet hours after six o'clock? Well, now that we will be dispersed all over the campus and are receiving our room assignments last, we will probably be placed in with a lot of freshmen. Consequently, the conditions for studying won't be as good as at Scott Cottage, but this will be compensated by the satisfaction I will get telling the frosh about the privileges offered an SU upperclassman.

Hey Dad, I know we've already budgeted for this term and you can't afford to send me any more money, but the larger dorms are more expensive so I'll need checks for $110, $130, $140 or ? depending on which dorm I get sent to. But don't worry about the money Dad.

With all my moving around I have not gotten the chance to study and will probably flunk out this term. Then I will be able to work next term and pay you back. I really didn't want to be a doctor anyway.

Your son,
Dave Brown

Food service

In response to the large number of allegations received concerning "food shortages" in the various dining halls, The Daily Orange is initiating the following service. As of today, we will begin accepting reports from dining hall patrons of any shortages that occur. From these a comprehensive list will be compiled and published.

If any of the food you paid for at registration is not available during the contracted meal hours, we want to know. If it takes 30 minutes to get breakfast, let us hear about it. For your convenience, we have provided the following report form. Completed reports may be submitted to the Daily Orange Editorial Director.

Individualism vs. new conformity

By JAMES RAY

'M' Street

In a faded black and white horizontally-striped knit dress and black flats, she saunters from shop to shop. She carries a shoulder bag by the strap so that the purse skims along only inches from the hot cement walk. The young woman, in her early 20's, moves in and out of the shops slowly but at regular intervals, apparently only "window shopping."

She is only one of hundreds of Syracuse University students and city dwellers from surrounding streets who daily make their way to the T-shaped business area formed where Marshall Street collides with Crouse Avenue.

Some claim the collision is a loud one. To the north is the main campus of the university, west is the university hospital complex, east stand blocks of fraternity and sorority houses, and student dormitories, and to the south rests a settlement of independent student housing and Negro ghetto.

Three barefoot Negro boys in shorts and tee shirts scamper west along Marshall and around the window shopping girl.

Above, an operator in the Crouse Beauty Salon recalls scenes on the grassy knoll, or "part," on the southeast corner of the intersection on warm evenings last month. She claims that the Marshall Street "crowd" lives as though no one else is around.

Stretched out for a noontime nap in the "park" now is a young man in khaki shirt, blue jeans, and "tennies." As "style" prescribes, he is sockless.

Nearby two girls, clad in blouses, shorts, and sandals, sit on the steps and eye a barefoot "surfer" boy across the street. He is heading toward one of the two Seigel's Pharmacies in the block.

Seigel's has not always been a resident of Marshall Street. In 1924, when the center was born, only two restaurants formed the business community of Marshall Street. Then The Cosmo (no relation to the present mid-block cafe) stood where Seigel's now stands on the northeast corner. Across the street where the "park" is today was the original Varsity, started by the father of the Dellas brothers, present owners. Speros Dellas, who was put to work in the restaurant back in the 30s when only nine years old, has probably seen as much of Marshall Street's growth as anyone.

Today 52 businesses are compressed into this small commercial-social center. A young man, wearing cut-offs, university sweatshirt, and sandals, seems oblivious to—or perhaps alienated from—the four barber shops, as his hair reaches his shoulders and sideburns stretch toward each other only to become frustrated at the jaw.

But there are those like the young man in neat single-breasted suit with vest, clean blue shirt, striped tie, and polished wing tips. Walking with him is a neatly-dressed, matronly woman. They stop momentarily to speak to a beautiful Hindu woman, draped in bright orange sari.

These three stand out as paradoxes with their "conformity." It is those who seek nonconformity who give Marshall Street its reputation. In this search for individualism and self-expression, they seem to discover a new conformity.

A notice in one of the two coin-operated laundromats advertises for "roomate, male or female."

A young man wears his "flower" badge to tell the world he enjoys an occasional "trip."

Some business owners and managers are concerned for the future of Marshall Street. One group has formed the Marshall Businessmen's Association, headed by Alan Bloomberg, owner of Casual Miss dress shop.

Members of the association know that the University and some citizens of Syracuse would like to see the center disappear. There is talk of another shopping center being built near by.

Dellas, not a MBA member, questions the real reason for this. "The services are here. Through several periods of the year we face slow business for about 20 days a year." He claims competition will hurt the center seriously, but not attract enough business of its own to succeed.

Gone is the girl in black and white.

A new crowd is moving in. It is still a mix-match crowd. It's still Marshall Street.

J-School announces plans for Committee on Student Relations

By RONA KAVEE
Associate Editor

Reflecting a University-wide trend toward greater influence of student opinion, the Journalism School has announced plans for a Committee on Student Relations. Pre-dating the J-Schools efforts are the Liberal Arts College Committee on the Selection of a Dean, the presence of students on the committee to appoint the next chancellor, and attempting to incorporate student desires into administrative decisions.

Plans for the committee have been formulated by Dr. Edmund Arnold, chairman of the graphic arts department, and by student and faculty representatives.

The committee will consist of five elected student members. There will be one representative of each class, and one for the entire graduate division. Four faculty members will be appointed to serve as representatives.

Arnold stressed the emphasis on the "positive responsibilities" of the committee. "This will not be just a gripe session," he said, "we are concerned with positive actions and planning."

Nomination for candidacy is by petition. Freshmen taking Journalism 1a or 1b, and sophomores taking News 50, 51 or five hours of other journalism subjects are eligible. Only those juniors and seniors enrolled in the J-School may present or sign petitions.

In order to be nominated, a student must have the signatures of at least 20% of his classmates in journalism. A student may sign as many nominating petitions as he wishes, but only for members of his own class.

The deadline for petitions is October 10, four o'clock, and must be submitted to Evan Richert in the Newhouse Lounge. The following day a list of candidates will appear in the Daily Orange.

Campaigning will continue until the day of elections, October 16, when ballot boxes will be set up in the lobby of Newhouse. An elections committee consisting of the officers of Theta Sigma Phi, and Sigma Delta Chi, women's and men's journalism honoraries, will supervise the casting and tallying of the ballots.

The committee is being instigated "primarily because the Journalism School is so large that we have lost individual contact with the students," according to Arnold. He added that he would like to see the committee as a model for other schools to follow.

and since scientists must think to work, they will be somewhat affected,"

It was first thought that Czech leaders had been kidnapped and forced to sign a proclamation inviting the Soviets to take control. Danger of an attack from West Germany was then attached to the reason for invasion. However, Czech leaders had travelled to Russia for a meeting with Kremlin officials and the West German threat could not be justified since the entire Soviet Politburo had proved itself united at two separate conferences held before the invasion began.

Finally, it was thought that the Soviets had hoped to crush a Czech Counter-Revolution. Dr. Vinter pointed out however, that expressions of free speech, free press, and increased outside contact, were natural parts of all democratization processes and not the characteristics of counter revolution.

"I hope we will resist every attack on our scientists' freedom as well as on our nation's freedom," the scientist said in conclusion.

Cleaver looks . . .

the future. Otherwise realistic means Humphrey."

While it would be ideal to "remove the tax load from ordinary people and put it on the corporations" at the present time it is also unrealistic. Cleaver's economic program would put corporations in the power-wielding position of being almost the sole financial support of our government. It calls for community control of corporate-financed projects such as "free transit, free day care centers for working mothers, and free medical care for every man, woman and child." While charging industry and corporations with the financial responsibility for community control projects Cleaver gives them no power to administrate or direct them.

Cleaver's labor platform, which includes repeal of Taft-Hartley and the Taylor Law, as well as nonrestrictive right of labor to unlimited strike and boycott, would place all corporations at the mercy of an impulsive and continually dissatisfied labor force. It is unrealistic to believe that the power structure of management and corporation would allow itself to be hogtied and slaughtered in such a way.

Radicalism in Cleaver's gun control policy causes it's own inconsistency. He proposes to "take the guns from the cops and the Army, not from the people," while also urging Americans to "organize to defend the Second Amendment to the Constitution, guaranteeing the citizen's right to bear arms...."

While most of Cleaver's programs are radical, his housing and education policies are realistic and could easily rally support. On schools the program states: "Quality education has priority. Demand neighborhood control of schools, small classes, bilingual instruction, curriculum changes to include history of the Black and Mexican-American people."

Regarding housing Cleaver suggests: "Protect tenants and the small homeowners victimized by exorbitant rents and taxes by setting up community controlled Rent and Taxation Control Boards." He also deems it necessary to "build decent low-cost housing, for use not for profit, in such a way that existing communities are not levelled or disrupted."

A speech delivered by Eldridge Cleaver on July 27 of this year at Lincoln Auditorium in Syracuse reveals his impatient attitudes. But it also contains a shadow of tempered political understanding. "So we don't have time to be fooling around trying to justify anything. We don't have time to be going through these changes in court. We don't have time at all to be involved in the whole superstructure of this country. I don't have time to be running for President."

It remains to be seen whether the Peace and Freedom Party and Eldridge Cleaver, which at this point are synonymous, will be effective in organizing the "opposition" and "freedom struggle" behind their radicalism with sufficient support to even get Cleaver on the ballot in a majority of the states.

HCO activities promote inter-faith understanding

By MARK MASTERSON

Threatening to bring increased understanding among a diversity of religions, an embracing web of shared concern weaves its way across an unsuspicious SU campus.

The heartbeat of the movement centers in the extensive machinery of the Hendricks Chapel Organization (HCO), headed by the Rev. Dr. John H. McCombe Jr., dean. He and 14 other campus chaplains and denominational advisors meet twice monthly to help guide the movement through its phases.

The Ecumenical Movement, as it is formally known, is a progressive push toward inter-faith understanding. According to Dean McCombe, ecumenism respects the authority and traditions of the separate faiths while promoting joint participation among them.

Penetrating almost every facet of student life--cultural, academic, social and religious--HCO blankets the campus with a dozen ministries. Besides their individual worship services, each ministry schedules a variety of weekly and bi-weekly activities too numerous to list. In most cases, members of any faith are welcome and do attend these activities.

The chief ecumenical organ at SU is the University Religious Council (URC), part of the Hendricks Chapel apparatus. URC engages the energies of all on-campus ministries and opens itself to any student regardless of religious affilation. That a student be willing to freely express his convictions, is the only restriction.

Despite its open invitation to everyone, URC has gained only limited student support since its beginning three years ago. Nancy Sargent, URC president, attributes this to a "baseless fear" among students that their religious traditions will be imposed upon.

Miss Sargent says the council "does not seek to deemphasize religion," but provides students of all religions "a chance to express whatever they feel is meaningful through non-traditional forms of worship."

URC is involved in a wide range of what the council calls "modern worship," including tutoring programs, art exhibits, inner-city projects, movie forums, panel discussions, etc. A list of URC activities will soon be posted in school and dormitory lobbies throughout the campus.

Another ecumenical agent at SU is the Chapel Board, the older brother of URC. Described by Dean McCombe as "the Protestant voice on campus," the board is showing a more liberal spirit this year by inviting campus leaders from other faiths to speak at Sunday worship services at Hendricks Chapel. Michael O. Sawyer, political science professor who spoke last Sunday, is the first Roman Catholic layman to address a Protestant service at the chapel.

Presently URC is planning an ecumenical vesper service to be held week nights at Hendricks Chapel. Students will be free to convey their concerns through music, literature, art or whatever form they choose. Details of the service are as yet incomplete according to Miss Sargent.

Jewish services

Yom Kippur Services: The Hillel Foundation announces the following schedule of services. Yom Kippur services, Wednesday, will run throughout the day (with some breaks) beginning at 9:00 a.m. The Yiskur Memorial Service will begin approximately 11:00 a.m. At the conclusion of services (approximately 7:15 p.m.) there will be a break-the-fast.

Attention those people fasting on Yom Kippur: Hillel will hold a break-the-fast at the conclusion of services (approximately 7:15) at Hendricks Chapel. To accommodate those who have fasted, Shaw Dining Hall will remain open until after the conclusion of the fast.

Versatile White a charger on defense

By BOB GALLAGHER

In TV land they have a white knight who is stronger than dirt and makes things clean and bright. On the football field SU has a White knight who makes people hurt although he's lean and light.

This light ray of toughness is 220 pound sophomore defensive tackle Ray White. The knight is a liberal arts major from East Weymouth, Mass.

After his senior season in high school ended, White was offered scholarships from many small New England colleges, as well as Syracuse. "After I came here for a visit," White says, "I knew this is where I wanted to go. The coaching staff was impressive and the players who showed me around the campus were real good guys, which was important to me." He also added that the big time Syracuse football schedule influenced his decision to attend SU.

Coach Ben Schwartzwalder has said that White could play any position on either the offensive or defensive lines. In secondary school White played quarterback, fullback, end and tackle. "It doesn't matter to me where I play, as long as I do the job well. I like defense, but I'll play anyplace," he says. White was switched from offensive to defensive tackle when Bill Coghill, the regular tackle, quit school and joined the Navy.

The responsibilities of a tackle depend on whether it is a passing or a running play. White explains, "If the opposing quarterback is a good passer, my job is to get him before he throws the ball, or make him hurry the throw. On a run I try to strip the ball carrier of his interference so the linebackers can make the tackle, or if I can, I try to do both."

You determine the direction of the run by reading the man in front of you," he says. "The blocker always tries to get his head between me and the ball carrier, so I must fight through him in that direction to make the play..

"I thought teams would run at me a lot, because they know the other four linemen are good" he says, "but so far it doesn't seem that they have. I feel I'm stronger against the run than against the pass, although there's more satisfaction in dumping the quarter back. If I read pass, I just fly hard and straight ahead, while the ends come in wider and try to ground the quarterback."

In rushing the passer, he doesn't use any special technique. White says, "I'm still learning how to rush the passer. Gerry Beach is helping me a lot, so right now I just try to get around the blocker any way I can."

Playing on a veteran defensive unit is a trememdous advantage, White feels. "They really know what they are doing," he pointed out. "When I get trapped, they see it and react by making a good play and saving my neck. Beach, the middle guard, and Lou Gubitosa, the end protect me."

Preparation for a game is a week long process, according to White. He says, "I was always taught that it pays off to work hard in practice all week. You have to be precise in what you are doing. In other words, how you practice is how you play.

"The defense played better this week," continued White. "I hope we continue to improve. If we stop the opposition and give our offense good field position, we'll have better opportunities to score. We held Michigan State, but left ourselves in poor field position most of the game."

Being on television in his first varsity game against Michigan State did not affect White. "Thinking about it before the game made me nervous, but once your out there, you forget all about it—except for the timeouts for commercials."

Since most fans don't know the linemen, because they don't get as much publicity as the backs, White feels that most of his satisfaction is personal. "Usually somebody lets you know you made a good play by saying so or patting you on the back."

White thinks a good defensive tackle should possess quickness, strength and especially meanness." Meanness means," White explains, "you want to get to the man with the ball so bad you don't care how you do it as long as it's not dirty. Some guys hit once and push off, while the good ones keep hitting until the play is over. They are the ones who come out on top at the end of the game."

If SU's White knight and his teammates continue to play as they did last Saturday against Maryland, there won't be any more black days for them or Orange fans for the rest of this season.

Sports sidelights

The Syracuse Soccer Club won its second game of the year on Saturday, defeating Utica College by a 6-2 count.

The club has been invited by Colgate to play in their Parents' Weekend game. This will be held Oct. 26 in Hamilton. Steve Kass, club president, considers this a great honor, since the Raiders could have chosen any team in the area.

Another boon to the club is the offer of Niagara to pay the team's traveling expenses to the Falls for a game on Oct. 12.

The Intramural Council will meet on the first Tuesday of each month at 7:15 p.m. in the Intramural Office. Any suggestions regarding the program should be directed to one of the Council for discussion in the meeting.

Cliff Ensley, who Tuesday was named DO Player of the Week, has added yet another title to his laurels. The Associated Press voted the Orange senior its Defensive Back of the Week Award.

MAN IN MOTION, SU captain Tony Kyasky, will have his hands full against UCLA on Saturday. All of the Bruins wide receivers are sprinters, while flanker Ron Copeland offers size as well. (Photo by Biggar)

WALKING WOUNDED. Junior quarterback Paul Paolisso, who has been the Syracuse passing star thus far this season, is suffering from a variety of injuries this week. Paolisso has neck and shoulder pains from last Saturday's hard fought Maryland game. (Photo by Biggar)

TV or not TV

By ED AGRANOWITZ

To the sports enthusiast, weekend afternoons mean sitting in front of the television and absorbing the top sporting events which the nation has to offer. For the Syracuse sports enthusiast, weekend afternoons mean sitting in front of the television and wishing he lived somewhere else.

What makes Syracuse TV sports coverage the big time operation that it is? Probably the clever people behind the sports programming of the local stations.

WSYR-TV, channel 3 in the Salt city is the local NBC affiliate. For this reason, SYR has exclusive rights to all American Football League contests. This year, NBC is broadcasting AFL doubleheaders every Sunday afternoon. SYR, however, only offers its Syracuse audience the first half of this pigskin twinbill. This policy has been somewhat frustrating for local New York Jet fans, who in the past three weeks have seen two Jet games cut.

In place of the second AFL game, SYR features an action-packed spectacle whose excitement is beyond compare called "Syracuse Bowls." This show is hosted by Joel Mareiniss (the Mel Allen of Syracuse) and brings together the very best bowlers in the Central New York area. These keglers compete for big cash prizes and the coveted title of "King of the Hill." For every week that a man is King of the Hill, he gets the use of a brand new Buick from Pat Bombard. (Buick makes the car, Pat Bombard makes the difference.) If the tube fan has any energy left after this biggee he can always watch WSYR's Sunday afternoon movie.

Jim McDonald, the station's Programs Director offers a perfectly logical reason for the elimination of the second AFL game. "The second game in a doubleheader never has as much of an audience as the first one," says McDonald, "and in addition, we consider Syracuse Bowls to be one of the highest rated local television programs."

WNYS-TV, Syracuse's ABC station has been serving local fans with weekly "SU Football" shows, and frequent re-plays of Orange gridiron encounters. Last January, however, they did something which Salt City basketball fans may never forget.

Defending national champion and top rated UCLA was making a visit to Houston's Astrodome to play the Houston Cougers, undefeated and ranked number two nationally.

This game, played before the largest crowd in college basketball history, was also being billed as a battle between Lew Alcindor and Elvin Hayes, the two biggest college stars in the nation. The game was set for a nine o'clock tipoff.

When Syracuse fans tuned in at nine, they were treated instead to the charming music of Lawrence Welk. WNYS picked up the game a half an hour later, but the first and most exciting ten minutes of the game had already elapsed. NYS Operations Manager William Graudons defends his station's action saying, "Regardless of what local sports fans want, their are many people in our audience who are avid viewers of Lawrence Welk. We've got to consider them too."

Jack Morse, of WHEN (CBS)'s sports department seems to make a little more sense. "We're going to carry all of the NFL doubleheaders this year," says Morse, "If you've got a proven audience pleaser, why make changes?"

Here, here.

CHANCELLOR WILLIAM P. TOLLEY

Grad education needs reform

Chancellor states plan for 'three layers' of University

By TRISH MURRAY

Chancellor William P. Tolley believes that the "three layers" of Syracuse University's student body should have different rules and separate living centers.

During yesterday's University Union Bull Session at Chapel House, Tolley defined his three groups as freshmen and sophomores; juniors and seniors; and graduate students.

Because underclassmen lack maturity and need protection from outside problems, Tolley would like to see houses built for them near Thornden Park and the field house. These houses would constitute separate colleges, containing all facilities except science labs.

Juniors and seniors would live in humanities houses, which would attract language, fine arts, history, English and philosophy majors. The complex would be equipped with language labs, auditoriums and seminar rooms. Participants in this project, specially chosen for intelligence and maturity, could work on an accelerated level and have their doctorates in six years.

Graduate education is also due for a reform. Tolley says that grad students are being treated like freshmen, with courses, books and term papers. Instead, they should be given bibliographies in important areas of study, and their independent work should be discussed in conferences and seminars.

Tolley also spoke about future construction at Syracuse, noting that the block between Comstock Ave. and College Place will probably be reserved for biological sciences, since this would be a logical extension of Lyman Hall. The area between Marshall Street and East Adams will be used to house social sciences.

When construction of the new library is completed, the present library will be used for math and science or as an undergraduate library, containing 40,000 to 50,000 volumes.

When a question about Food Service was raised, Tolley explained that optional board is impossible, because the dormitories are built with borrowed money. The dining halls must be used to full capacity until these debts are paid.

Tolley claimed that the high board charges at Syracuse are necessary because of the cost of first quality food and because the university pays the highest wages of any food worker's employer in the city.

Muskie to come Monday; Dean Bailey praises HHH

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

Senator Edmund F. Muskie, Democratic candidate for vice president, will be at Syracuse University Monday and will speak from the steps of Hendricks Chapel late that morning. News of Muskie's appearance was released by a member of his staff last night, at the organizational meeting of the Coalition for the Best Alternative, a student group formed to support presidential candidate Hubert Humphrey.

Muskie is scheduled to arrive at Hancock Field at 11 a.m. on Monday and will proceed to SU directly. He will be accompanied by 65 members of the national press including newsmen from the three television networks. Expected to accompany him on campus are Maxwell School Dean Steven K. Bailey and Prof. Alan Campbell.

News of Muskie's visit came as a surprise ending to a meeting that began with an address by Dean Bailey urging support of the Humphrey—Muskie ticket. Bailey's speech in Maxwell auditorium preceded the business and organizational meeting of the Coalition, which was held in the Maxwell Founder's Room. About fifty students and several adults attended.

Speaking as a "deeply concerned citizen," Bailey touched on what he considered the three major issues of the presidential campaign: Viet Nam, domestic programs and law and order. In comparing the Republican planks on these issues to the Republican congressional voting record, Bailey pointed out numerous inconsistencies and strongly urged the support of the Humphrey ticket.

Bailey denounced the candidacy of Alabama's George Wallace, calling him a "racist, bigot and repressor of the poor," but warned that he must be heeded as symptomatic of the "deep social unrest in our society."

In criticizing the Nixon candidacy, Dean Bailey assailed Nixon's illusions to nuclear warfare in Viet Nam, accused him of pursuing a "dangerous containment policy" and of trying to postpone a disarmament treaty with the Soviet Union. He said Nixon was hiding behind the Paris peace talks to avoid making policy statements on the Viet Nam war.

Dean Bailey was extremely critical of the Republican congressional record, citing numerous statistics on Republican votes against the War on Poverty, a Model Cities Program and Social Security increases. Bailey said that 90% of America's Blacks support Humphrey."

In the short question and answer session that followed, Bailey justified Humphrey's nomination victory over Eugene McCarthy, saying the polls indicated 70% of the American people opposed McCarthy's plan "to fold the Communists National Liberation Front of South Vietnam into the regular Saigon government." He said Humphrey's support came from "an overriding majority of the party."

"The Democratic Party has been responsive," said Bailey, as he admitted that pressure generated by the McCarthy forces was somewhat responsible. He said a flexibility in attitudes was shown by what he termed as "President Johnson's resignation," the agreement to the Paris peace talks and the lack of threats to escalate the war.

Hicks asks Student Senate to cut talk and take action

By COLETTE STALLINGS

At the first meeting of the Student Senate last night, student body president Chuck Hicks said that it was the duty of the Student Senate to take action and not "just talk."

The Student Senate must "relate to the students," said Hicks. He stressed the need for communications among militant students, Black students, international students, SDS and the Student Senate.

Commenting on the State of the Campus, Hicks said, "It's in somewhat bad shape....things will work if we can get things going."

Hicks outlined planned action in three areas. Concerning social life, he plans to work with the Council on Student Life to obtain optional hours for all co-eds, to attempt to work with Food Service and for self-governing dorms. In academics, Hicks is interested in establishing preregistration for second semester, in placing seniors on academic advisory committees and in developing a system of senior advisors for freshmen. Concerning the community, Hicks called for more programs like Project '70.

John Diamond, speaker pro tempore, urged that the Student Senate not approve the appointment of athletic commissioners Jim Striker and Dan Baum, on the grounds that they "used no tact in the method of having graduate students seated last at football games." After a twenty minute discussion, the commissioners were accepted.

New business included setting up a freshman convention for Sunday at 1:30 p.m. in 117 Lyman, for the purpose of placing students in nomination for freshman class offices. Freshmen elections were set for Oct. 10.

A petition that a full investigation be made into the reasons why students are being asked to move out of Parsons Cottage was unanimously approved by the Senate.

Chairman of the government structures committee, John Roth, and Diamond were reported to be working on a new SG constitution. The constitution will be submitted article-by-article for approval by the Senate and will then be submitted for approval as a whole.

Concerning the proposed investigation of political parties, Speaker Ed Feldman said, "This will be done. I'm willing to step on a few toes to get this thing cleaned up."

SU Press defends author of book about Yugoslavia

Below is the text of a letter from Richard G. Underwood, director of Syracuse University Press, to the Yugoslav Embassy in Washington. Underwood was replying to a letter from the Embassy dated Sept. 12 which described the book "Yugoslavia: New Class in Crisis," by Nenad D. Popovic, as "a tendentious hostile gesture" toward Yugoslavia. Syracuse University Press published the book Sept. 3.

The letter from the Embassy, referring to an advertisement which appeared in the Sept. 8 issue of The Book World section distributed with The Washington Post, expressed "surprise and regret that the publisher of that book was such an esteemed institution as the Syracuse University, the author being himself among the associates of that University." The author's views are "patently aimed against better understanding between our two countries," the letter said.

Popovic is a visiting professor of economics in Syracuse University's Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. Until his defection to the West in 1961 he was a Minister Plenipotentiary in the Yugoslav Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Underwood's letter, dated Sept. 24 and addressed to the Embassy of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in Washington, said: Gentlemen:

Your letter of September 12 addressed to Kenneth G. Bartlett, Vice President for

Latent Humphreyism on campus

For an election year the campus is remarkably dormant. Political enthusiasm exists in isolated pockets but there is no widespread interest and dialogue, no islands of Goldwater fervor in seas of Johnson sentiment as we saw in 1964.

The enthusiasm that does exist is concentrated on the lesser candidates. There is genuine enthusiasm for Senator Javits and his opponent Paul O'Dwyer. Likewise, David V. O'Brien, the Republican Congressional candidate, has attracted support beyond that of party regulars.

There is also activity for the presidential candidates. But it is muted. The group of students for Nixon receives its organizational impetus from the established Young Republicans, and lacks widespread support. The advocates of Humphrey are more common among the faculty, many of whom remember him before LBJ, contrasted with students who associate him with LBJ.

In this election year it is likely that students for Humphrey are really students against Nixon with nowhere else to go. Nevertheless, as Humphrey's record becomes better known, as Nixon's evasiveness becomes more irritating, and if Humphrey continues edging away from LBJ, he will generate more support among students at SU and campuses around the country.

Court decision

Elections Commission

Judicial decisions must be written according to the results of rational evaluation of known facts. When the Court declared the Elections Commission unconstitutional, the following facts were known from testimony of student government leaders: (1) The Elections Commission Act was not an amendment to the Constitution; (2) The Constitution required some candidates to have at least a 2.5 average; (3) The Commission was empowered by the Student Senate to permit people with less than the 2.5 average to run for election; and (4) Many elected officers had less than the 2.5 average.

Within one week subsequent to the decision declaring the Elections Commission unconstitutional, student government leaders petitioned the Court to rehear the case because of new evidence. Petitioners contended that a copy of the Elections Commission Act as a constitutional amendment had been secured. Since no amendment was presented to this Court, petitioners' contention rested upon possible substantiation by Student Senate Minutes, two pieces of unsigned paper, dated 5 April and 12 April 1967. As authenticity of the Minutes could not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, the Court, at its own initiative, searched for and secured a 14 April 1967 Daily Orange, which reported that the petitioning clause of the Elections Commission Act had passed on the ballot during the election of spring, 1967.

The basis for declaring the Elections Commission unconstitutional was the apparent conflict between the petitioning clause and the Constitution. Because the petitioning clause was a constitutional amendment, the Court declares its former decision REVERSED. Additionally, the Court expresses extreme disapproval of conditions responsible for presentation of incorrect testimony, which the Court in good faith used to declare the Elections Commission unconstitutional.

For the Court,

Paul Snyder,
Chief Justice

Letters to the editor

Sen. Javits

To the Editor:

It is with chagrin that I find it necessary to write this letter in answer to Mr. Finkelman. As he stated it is indeed fortunate that we of the S.U. community were able to hear the viewpoints of two such distinguished candidates as Senator Javits and his opponent Paul O'Dwyer. Both are men of integrity and exceptional competence. However I feel that Mr. Finkelman missed what the Senator had to say Monday evening.

The Senator clearly showed that he is not only a man of integrity but also one of conviction and intelligence. He based his positions soundly on facts and showed that in a time when conservatism has come into the Republican Party that he can maintain his strong liberal convictions. One of the questions asked from the floor Monday clearly illustrated what I mean. After stating his policies on the urban crisis, and the war in Vietnam he was asked why he could support the Nixon-Agnew ticket. The Senator answered that while he could not support Mr. Nixon's policies he felt that Mr. Nixon was free from the mistakes of the present administration and could make a better start than could any ticket tied to the administration policies. I would submit that Senator Javits is not supporting Mr. Nixon's policies but the clean slate which the Republican Party can carry into an administration.

Senator Javits clearly demonstrated that he can stay in the advance guard of his party and his constituents within the system which he or Mr. O'Dwyer must work. Can someone who has successfully revolted against his party continue his revolt successfully against such a well entrenched establishment as the bureaucracy of Washington or against a well established Senate? I feel that Senator Javits promises to work within the existing system to do as much as he can. He, as one man, can accomplish much more from within than can many from without.

Correction

To the Editor:

I wish to apologize to Mr. Michael Obi for using his name in my recent letter to you concerning the Biafran situation. I did not ask for his approval and would not have received it had I done so. In no way are the views I expressed to be associated with those of Mr. Obi.

Pray for Parsons

To the Editor

As past residents of Parsons Cottage, we are well aware of the "faulty heating" that that cottage has. We lived with the boiler and pipes quite happily for nine months. We also feel that since the university has been aware of this problem for at least the past year that efforts should have certainly been made during the summer to complete the repairs begun while we were in residence last year.

Either the repairs considered sufficient for last year's residents should similarly be termed sufficient for this year, or the cottage should not have been opened to begin with. However, since the university saw fit to open the cottage, with the heating difficulty well in mind, they have neither the human nor the legal right to force the occupants out—particularly in view of the fact that the Parsons men have offered to pay for all repairs to the system if permitted to remain. Obviously, they have already learned that a dollar bill is the key to the administration's heart.

It is sad but true that these freshman are being faced with the first of a long line of "It's for your own good" remedies that this university hands out with heavy hand to young adults who, as students, have had the misfortune to be stripped of all legal rights simply because they are students. ("Attendance at Syracuse University is a privilege...")

As juniors and seniors, we have played the university game long enough, and offer these young men our heartiest support, both physical and moral, in their efforts to resist this invasion of personal and legal rights of residence. "We will go anywhere, at any time...." to let the administration know that these are not IBM cards or cold cash that they are attempting to manipulate, but living, breathing human beings.

Parsons, too

Briefly noted

Abe Fortas...

The forces of conservatism are on the march—and towards a possible victory! Grinding to a halt is the liberal movement that has guided the United States for so long.

At the forefront of the campaign are Wallace and Nixon leading conservative America backwards into a safe, harmless realm of "the way it used to be." And they seem to be going in the direction, believe it or not, that most Americans desire.

Just yesterday conservatives had a major victory in forcing Abe Fortas to withdraw his nomination as Chief Justice. In one swift move they flexed their suprisingly awesome muscle to end the dream of a better America.

For those who were beginning to think that representation in America, be it for politics or for government, was not truly representative, maybe you are assuming too much. Maybe these institutions give a very clear picture of what people want. Maybe there are other places to live!

Women's rights...

Today, the National Organization of Women, NOW, will picket the Hotel Syracuse for discrimination in their practice of not serving unescorted women.

Suit was originally brought against the Hotel in Federal District Court for violation of the Public Accomodations section of the 1964 Civil Rights Bill. The Court decision found in favor of the Hotel Syracuse, stating that the law prohibits discrimination against women only in the employment section. This decision is currently pending appeal.

Whether or not the women win this case is not really important. Something much greater is at stake here. What the Hotel Syracuse fails to see, what numerous vendors in the South failed to see is that discrimination of any kind makes little economic sense. People can't buy from you if you keep them out.

All the legislation in the world won't have as much effect as a little light of reason. When bigots of all sorts learn that only they have to lose, we will have come a long way.

SU India Association

Panel says India brain drain is minimal

By ETTA FIELEK

Four Syracuse University staff members agreed in a panel discussion last night, sponsored by the Syracuse India Association, that India is not suffering a "brain drain," but rather is experiencing an intense misuse of its manpower.

Prof. Peter Franck of the School of Business Administration called the problem an "internal brain drain." He claimed that statistics prove India is not losing a great number of people to other countries and actually ranks near the bottom in total number of scientific personnel leaving the country.

"There is a question of supply and demand," he continued, "with the supply being the availability of university graduates and left-over stock, and the demand being the ability of the country to absorb all these people in the economy."

In the labor force, he said 18 per cent of those trained as scientific personnel were employed in other fields, while an additional 10 per cent of the scientific labor force is unemployed. He blamed the minute brain drain that does exist on "internal maladjustment. The surplus moves elsewhere to find employment."

Dr. George Rudershan of the Physics department cited the role of India's scientists in the productive sciences. He said, however, "the scientists who stay in India are finding it difficult to do many things."

Jagannathan Gomatam, a graduate assistant studying for his doctorate in physics, agreed that "as far as engineers and scientists go, there is no such thing as a brain drain."

Gomatam divided the people who leave the country into two groups: the people who seek education in other countries and those unable to find work in India. The problem, he said, was with the "potential brain drain," that is the sapping away of brain power that could be used in India if the country had a stable economy.

The director of the Asian Studies Program in the Maxwell School, Dr. Robert Crane, cited the problem as being "one of under-utilization and malutilization of skills in India."

Dr. Crane emphasized the need for intellectual exchange between countries because "the crossing of national boundaries is essential to growth in any nation." He said, though, that when "the economics and polity of India could provide posts, I'm quite sure that most Indian people would be just as happy to work at home as abroad.

In his presentation, Dr. Crane cited the "reverse brain drain," in which some of the best U.S. scholars go to India to do research and study, as just as vital a consideration.

Before the panel discussion, Dr. Crane delivered a eulogy marking the 100th anniversary of Mahatma Ghandi. He called Ghandi "the great genius of the masses," who was able "to mobilize the masses, to politicalize the people..."

GSO meeting: need for unity

By MARTY BLOCK

The Graduate Student Organization held its first meeting of the year Tuesday night. The great obstacles facing the G.S.O. became apparent at this meeting.

At the 8 p.m. starting time, for example, the G.S.O. did not have a quorum present. By 8:15 seven additional representatives had drifted in to establish a quorum of 37 (out of 70) members, but 33 representatives failed to show up, and, consequently, nearly 4,000 grad students were without representation. Official voting on the final draft of a constitution was put off until the next meeting. Unfortunately, there was no guarantee that attendance at the next meeting would be any better. This great apathy, not only on the part of graduate students on the whole, but even of elected representatives, has haunted similar graduate organizations of the past.

After spending an hour discussing the wording of articles of secondary importance with no official vote possible, those present took up the overriding issue of representation. Here, a second major problem became obvious. Most graduate students seem to identify more with their own school or program than with the G.S.O. or Syracuse University. The Classics Dept. has its own representative. While some delegates represent hundreds of students, the delegate from the Classics Dept. represents only two students. There is no cure for this situation because the Classics Dept. cannot be combined with any other group. The alienation of each group from the other seems to make a unifying body of grad students impossible.

Pennies decide queen, aide student groups

By CHARLES SHAPIRO

One of the major events of Campus Chest Weekend, October 4-5, is the selection of a queen to reign over the entire event. Votes may be cast from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the lobby of HBC.

Votes are cast with money, however, rather than with paper ballots, since the purpose of the weekend is to raise funds which will later be given to various educational activities on campus, such as Leadership through Education, and Crossroads Africa. One cent gives a particular candidate one vote, one dollar represents a hundred votes, and so on. The girl who receives the most "votes" by Friday afternoon will be crowned Campus Chest queen at the halftime of Saturday's football game.

There are six finalists in the election. Nancy Hess, a Kappa Sigma little sister, is sponsored by Dellplain 4. Joyce Bleiman, sponsored by her own floor, Flint 4A., is a Phi Epsilon Pi little sister. Mindi Godshalk, also a Phi Epsilon Pi little sister, is sponsored by Delta Gamma. Linda Grimes, a sister in Delta Gamma and a Kappa Sigma little sister, is being sponsored by Kappa Sigma. Sandy Smeltzer, a sister in Kappa Alpha Theta, is being sponsored by her sorority. Eileen Day, a little sister of Theta Chi, is representing Gamma Phi Beta.

Speech here tonight

McCarthy movement to be analyzed

Vern Newton, a graduate assistant in the History department, will speak tonight on "The McCarthy Movement, Chicago, and the Aftermath," at 7 p.m. in 207 HL.

Newton was intimately involved in the McCarthy movement. He spent time last spring following Sen. McCarthy along the primary trail from New Hampshire to Indiana. He was Syracuse Campaign Manager for theMcCarthy slate in the New York State Primary. After the primary he went to Chicago and worked with Allard Lowenstein on the Coalition for an Open Convention. He was influential in working out the Southern Challenges. He was also in Chicago for the Democratic National Convention.

Along with McCarthy and Lowenstein, Newton has met and worked with Sen. George McGovern, New York Senatorial candidate Paul O'Dwyer, Julian Bond, John Kenneth Galbraith and other notables.

Newton will discuss his experiences and explain what can be done now by young people to change the American Political System.

Elections Commission declared legal by Court

By DAVE ROBINS

After deliberating for five sessions, the Student Court concluded to reverse its decision concerning the legality of the Elections Commission. The decision making the commission constitutional was made after new evidence had been brought before the court by Student Senate leaders.

These additional facts were in the form of the April 5 and April 12, 1967, minutes of the Student Senate which stated that the formation of the Elections Commission had passed in the Senate. Furthermore, the April 14, 1967, edition of the DO recorded, from the previous day's balloting, the passing of both the Elections Commission and the referendum permitting candidates with less than a 2.5 accum, as amendments to the constitution.

Questions concerning the constitutionality of the commission and the 2.5 average were based upon the "inaccuracy" of the testimonies of student government leaders, and the fact that "the records of the Elections Commission for that referendum have disappeared," reported Chief Justice Paul Snyder.

Snyder also added that "It is disturbing that the status of student government records is so decrepit that the Court must look outside the student government for information or assertions advanced by student government leaders. The Daily Orange, in effect, has become a substitute for the Elections Commission, whose records of the April 13, 1967, ballot are non-existent.

SU Press . . .

Public Affairs, Syracuse University has been forwarded to my attention.

I am pleased that you saw our advertisement in The Book World section of the September 8 edition of The Washington Post, but I regret that you regard the publication of the book announced in that advertisement as a "tendentious hostile gesture" toward your country. I am puzzled that you should reach such a conclusion from the announcement alone and without having read the book itself. If the Embassy of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia would like a copy of the book, I suggest that you write to Mr. Popovic at 319 Wedgewood Terrace, DeWitt, New York; I feel sure that he will be happy to send you a complimentary copy.

I myself have the utmost admiration, respect, and friendly feelings toward the peoples of Yugoslavia—sentiments which are shared by most Americans. Syracuse University, as an eminent private academic institution ever sponsoring and encouraging the search for truth, does not in any way try to restrict either the thought and the writings of its faculty or the publications of its Press. Indeed this trait of freedom of thought and press is characteristic of the United States, as I am sure you already know.

I am of course aware that at this particular moment Yugoslavia may be forced to assert her determination to defend her independence and free development and I, as do free men and freedom-loving men everywhere, support and applaud that determination. The growth of freedom in one country promotes the freedom of all mankind. The Syracuse University Press believes that Nenad Popovic's book supports that desired growth of freedom.

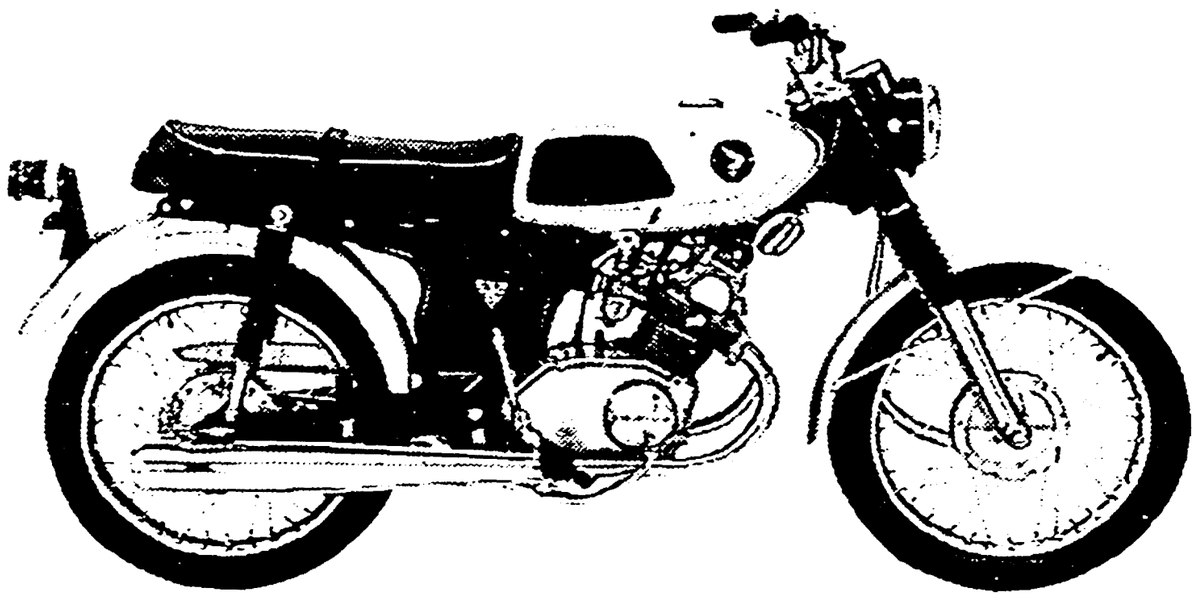
TOM PAXTON MINGLES



Internationally known folk singer-composer Tom Paxton will talk to students on the HBC patio at noon today. Paxton, whose compositions are found in the repertoires of most contemporary folk artists, is in Syracuse for this Saturday night's concert at the Regent Theatre.

Paxton asked to mingle with SU students to discover their sentiments about the current world situation. According to a PR release, "his mild manner veils the heart of a rebel, a social critic, a satirist and a doubter."

Big problem.

Simple solution:

New Honda.

This lean, lithe Honda 125 Super Sport can be the answer to a lot of problems besides parking.

Consider price. You can buy this beauty at an impressively low initial price; fuel it for a fraction of what you'd spend on a four-wheel gas gulper. And, of course, there are the pleasantly painless costs of maintaining and insuring a Honda.

The 125 Super Sport couples lightweight economy with red hot performance features. Its dependable four-stroke parallel twin engine produces a dazzling 13 bhp; acceleration that matches the best of them.

And styling. The 125 Super Sport is nothing but class from its streamlined pipes to its sculptured tank to its rugged telescopic front forks. The sleek and sassy 125 Super Sport. Is there a better way to solve your problems?

Lonliness plagues Orange harriers

By DOUG GARR

The life of the cross country runner can be summed up very simply--lonely. For the harriers at SU, only tiresome workouts and weekly dual meets take the pressure away from the daily routine of studies.

Coach Bob Grieve's long distance men train religiously, running between 70 and 75 miles weekly. Some members of the squad supplement their 1 1/2 hour daily workout with 4 to 8 mile morning jaunts. Grieve maps out their workouts by running distance, sprints, time-trials and the Drumlins home course to prepare them for each dual meet. "Workouts depends on what kind of shape they're in," said the harrier's coach. "It's individual--some need distance work, others sprint work."

Senior Larry Zuller didn't start running until his senior year in high school. "I had rheumatic fever in high school and wanted to run ever since," he explains. "I've always enjoyed running. It's a release from classes and homework." "Zeke" is majoring in forest management and has an extremely heavy schedule.

Before a race, Larry has a light workout on Friday and gets a good night's sleep. On the moring before a race he usually has only toast and jam and a slice of lemon. In the course of five miles he will lose around six or seven pounds. Asked why he likes to run, he answered, "I just enjoy it. Sometimes you wonder what the hell you're doing out there, though."

During the five mile dual meet his mind wanders after about three miles. "You just have to concentrate. If you're behind, you think--I have to catch that guy."

Sophomore Phil Riposo is another dedicated harrier that loves to run. "I like the competition in long-distance running," he said. "Cross country is a very individual sport. There's no crowd out there to push you. The only one that can push you is yourself. You have to love it. I don't think that there's anyone out here who doesn't love it."

Another soph, Dale Parfitt, runs because "it's the only thing I can do that relaxes me mentally." The electrical engineering major said that it also takes pressure off the books. "Before practice I'm mentally exhausted, and after a workout I'm physically exhausted." If 75 miles of running a week and electrical engineering can't tire you, nothing will.

Before a race, Dale usually picks a fast opponent to pace himself. "If I don't know anybody on the team we're running against, I pick someone on our own squad to beat." This Saturday the Orangemen have a dual meet with Cornell at Ithaca. Dale, along with the other SU runners, feels very confident. "If I see a red jersey in front of me, I'm going to set out to take him."

Grieve has a lot of respect for the Cornell harriers. "Cornell's always tough," he said, "and right now we don't have a lot of depth on the varsity." The varsity runners said that they have been psyched ever since their last duel with Buffalo. Riposo said, "I definitely think we have a team to beat." In any event the Big Red will get a run for their money on Saturday.

Syracuse defense centers on the Beach

By MIKE WEBER

"We didn't make half as many mistakes this week as we did against Michigan State. We're going to improve with each week as the younger players gain some experience."

Those were some of the comments of senior middle guard Gerry Beach after Syracuse whipped Maryland, 32-14, last Saturday in Archbold Stadium.

Beach, who hails from Ithaca, N.Y., is one of the key cogs in the Orange defense. As a middle guard, he must be able to fight the offensive blocks and be ready to stop plays which have been turned to the inside by the defensive ends.

A graduate of Ithaca High School, the senior stopper was named to All-Western New York and All-Southern Tier grid squads for his fine play as a high school tackle.

Beach was one of the leading tacklers for the Orangemen a year ago until he suffered a broken leg on the first play of the SU-California encounter.

"My leg just buckled on the play. I just hoped it wasn't broken," he said.

But it was, and with the sidelining of Beach for the remainder of the season, a gaping hole was left in the defense. The hole was not adequately filled until offensive tackle Dennis Fitzgibbons was moved to defense.

Teammate Lou Gubitosa, a defensive end for Bill Orange, summed up the loss of Beach this way: "You don't miss something until it's gone. When Gerry got hurt, we were really in a bad way."

Beach feels that his leg is just now coming back each day it is getting stronger.

"I'm not favoring it anymore," he said. "After being out so long, I was a little leery of it. But now that I feel it is as good as ever, I don't worry."

Jim Englehaupt, another line mate of Beach, also feels that Gerry's play has improved as his leg worries have lessened.

"There's just no comparison between an injured Gerry Beach and a healthy one," he said. "He is the hardest hitting lineman I've ever had to play against. He has that certain instinct which enables him to feel out the flow and be there at the right time."

Although reluctant to say he played a good game against Maryland, Beach said he definitely played better than in the Michigan State meeting.

"I played against a really fine guard in Ron Saul and for a first game opponent I couldn't ask for anyone tougher," he explains. "But, in the Maryland game, I was a little surer of myself, and I think my play showed it."

The physical education major feels that althought the offense is greatly improved over last year's edition, the defense is not.

"With (Jim) Cheyunski gone, we are a little weaker defensively. But again, only the experience of playing will help our sophomores. (Paul) Paolisso's passing has really helped our offense, as well as the fact we have a better balanced running attack."

When asked if the passing attack of the Orange will indirectly aid the defense, Beach replied an emphatic "yes!"

"There's no doubt that the more the offense moves, the better the defense will play. We get more rest, so we are stronger. And it is a lot easier to stay psyched if we know the offense can come back if we are behind."

In addition to being a standout gridder, Beach is a member of the Orange wrestling team. As a sophomore, he captured the Coast Guard Tournament crown and placed second in the Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association tourney.

Beach has his sights set on a coaching career following graduation. For right now, the utmost thought on his mind is to "beat UCLA and prove Syracuse is a truly fine ball club."

Sen. Edmund Muskie

Sen. Muskie to try his skills on Syracuse campus Monday

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

The national candidate who has been most successful with college hecklers this far into the presidential campaign will come to try his luck at SU on Monday. He is Edmund Sixtus Muskie, Democratic candidate for Vice President.

On Sept. 25 when Muskie was confronted by antiwar demonstrators at Washington and Jefferson College, he opted to offer their leader the microphone for 10 minutes rather than attempt to quiet him. Their spokesman accepted, and Muskie was able to continue with a minimum of interruptions.

Muskie is making headway with America's youth when no other candidates are. In accepting his nomination at the Democratic convention, he said that "we have learned that freedom does not work unless we work at it."

"And that I believe to be part of the reason for the surging determination of our young people and the disadvantaged among us to make a place for themselves in building the future of our country."

"Such a force as is generated by these young people should hearten those who believe in freedom as the most creative expression of the human spirit."

Sen. Muskie has not been a consistent supporter of the Johnson administration in its pursuit of the war in Vietnam. When before the Democratic Platform Committee in its pre-convention hearings, Muskie said that our involvement in the war was in line with "our postwar objective of discouraging and resisting external aggression."

Several days later on television interview show, he made it known that he thought the U.S. could unconditionally stop the bombing of North Vietnam without endangering American troops.

Candidate Muskie favors a negotiated settlement of the military conflict and is willing to take "calculated risks" in that effort. The Senator made it clear at the convention that he differed with Humphrey's Vietnam policy, but said he was willing to run on the party's pro-administration Vietnam plank.

Muskie has criticized Richard Nixon for his refusal to speak on Vietnam lest he disrupt the Paris peace talks, but himself has admitted that the candidates should do little

Students, administrators meet

Deans set forth reasons for closing of cottages

By ELLEN BILOFSKY

A meeting of cottage representatives sponsored by the Inter-Dorm Council last night to discuss the forthcoming closing of the cottages brought the reps face to face with the deans of housing, Jean Crawford and John Rade.

Twenty-one representatives of fourteen cottages stated their reasons for opposition to the closings. These included the strong spirit and unity among the residents, the effort put into the cottages and the plans and projects already implemented. The assignment to larger dorms, they felt, would entail loss of individuality, a separation from friends and possibly economic hardships.

Rade said, "Freshmen do not belong in places like Sibley and University." Living in cottages, he felt, made them distinct from the rest of the campus and made them miss out on the educational processes that go on in the dorms. The students protested that the value of the cottages lay in just such a distinction.

All the men's cottages are due to be closed, while some women's cottages will probably be left open. Neither dean, however, could be specific as to the names of the cottages to be closed or dates of future closings.

Miss Crawford emphasized that she did not want to see the cottages closed, but that there was no other economically feasible plan. Originally the cottages were not to be opened this year. However, many upperclassmen who did not return neglected to so inform provided for this additional number of students.

Need twenty men for Venture '69

By KAY CHRISTENSEN
Associate Editor

Twenty SU men are immediately needed for the actualization of Venture '69, announced Robin Erickson, vice president of the senior class, at Wednesday evening's senior executive meeting.

Venture '69 is an opportunity for SU students to befriend several underprivileged children as "big brothers." Two hours a week will be devoted to five or six children between the ages of five and twelve.

Big brothers are needed to give the young boys help and guidance with projects and problems. Some of the boys lack fathers, so they "need the love, understanding, and strength of a group leader with whom they can identify," said Miss Erickson.

The program is being organized in conjunction with the Huntington Family Center, which is an agency serving young families of low income in Syracuse. The Center has already organized groups so that volunteers can work from 3-5 p.m. or 6-8 p.m. on the day of their selection.

During the two hours, leaders can engage in activities such as field trips, working with arts and crafts, athletics, or creative and recreational projects. Each week an optional half-hour seminar is held for the leaders to discuss problems, questions and experiences.

Groups are segregated between girls and boys so the boys have the assistance of a big brother and the girls lean on a big sister. Because the home economics department of SU already sends coeds to work with the female childrens' groups, there is only a need for men at this time.

The Huntington Center programs include 150 families, encompassing over 450 children. Huntington's goal is to provide its neighbors with a personal experience through which they can come to grips with their own problems.

Songs don't protest

Music expresses Paxton's ideals

By COLETTE STALLINGS

"I write songs about love and kids, that's not protest. The reason they call me a protest singer is because they have to pigeon-hole everyone. What I really am is a songmaker," said singer-composer Tom Paxton.

Whether singing to thousands at Lincoln Center or to a relatively small number at the University Regent Theatre, Paxton enjoys singing to students because they are open-minded. "I am definitely left wing and I become more so each year," commented Paxton. "I have no use for Republicans, and my only hope is that we may bury them."

As an artist, Paxton feels he is better received in England than in this country because folk singing is "really a big thing over there." He plans a tour of England this November and a return trip in July for the sole purpose of singing to folk clubs. "That's where I hit it really big and I don't want them to think I could ever forget them."

"My wife and I took our last

Sound grievances

The case against the School of Art grows stronger. Barry Randell has documented some of the following injustices:

1) Registration procedures allowed students to sign class lists before their time of registration. Those who followed the official registration schedule ended up shut out of needed courses.

2) One section of Intermediate Illustration which, although it has an exceptional instructor, consists of a class of 40 in overcrowded conditions.

3) Draping and Design, Tailoring, and Costume Design, all required for art majors, were scheduled at the same time. Many students needing to fulfill the requirement were shut out.

4) No advising system capable of assisting students sees that their requirements are fulfilled.

One student planned and registered for a balanced schedule of classes between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Once in class she was switched out of painting by the school because the course was overcrowded. A mistake in the registration booklet caused her to register for Intermediate Illustration on the wrong day. She was mistakenly put on the wrong preregistration class list which resulted in a conflict between her photography course and her Costume Design course.

Her schedule was changed to: no classes on Monday. Classes 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. on Tuesday. Classes between 9-12 noon and 7-9 p.m. on Wednesday. Classes between 9-12 noon, 1-2 p.m., 2-5 p.m., and 7-9 p.m. on Thursday. And one class from 9-12 noon on Friday.

She had to drop her studio elective because of the mistake in the registration book. She still has a conflict between two classes Tuesday morning.

Said another art student: "I am really disgusted and unhappy with this school and I would transfer if I wouldn't lose so many credits. I'd hate to come so far and spend so much time and not even graduate from this place after what I've gone through."

We know the dean of the School of Art is aware of these grievances. We would like to know what he plans to do about them.

We would also like to know if Vice President Piskor, Registrar Smith, and Dean of Student Services Carleton are aware of these grievances and what they plan to do about them.

Campus Chest Weekend

In the past Campus Chest has been the United Fund of the University. It raises money for such projects as Crossroads Africa, Projection '70, LTE, and Footprints, the organization that brought Stokely Carmichael here.

Today begins another effort to continue this support. It offers inexpensive entertainment and opens the doors of fraternities across campus.

In addition, it brings a latter day poll tax to SU with the campaigns of six beautiful coeds for queen of Campus Chest weekend. Each penny deposited in the lobby of HBC is a vote for the candidate of your choice. Surely this democracy of the affluent deserves such stirring rhetoric as "Dimes for Day," "Singles for Smeltzer," or "Bread for Bleiman."

A Home

Sometimes you get home late and you see the porch,
Barely illuminated in the half-light of the night
And the old walls are beautiful and the old posts
With the chipped paint and cracked wood nails
Somehow are more welcome than any ornate pillars.
So when you shove the door open you start to smile
Then curse as you try to fit your key into the lock
But if it worked, then you would not be back home.

The worn posters plastered on the walls randomly
Proclaim a bit of the spirit of the old house
So that what was once a house is now a living home
And even the ashes ground here and there in the rug
And the paint stains in the woodwork and the creaks
In the winding staircase that is perhaps too old
And maybe it is a little cold at nights sometime
And maybe the electricity is not really efficient
But if it were perfect then it would not be home.

One day some guy from the outside world who doesn't know
What it is like to be living in a house that is home
Tells you that you will have to move out and forget
About the old walls and the chipped paint on the posts
And the posters scattered around all over the place
And the ashes ground into the rug and the paint stains
And the creaky old staircase and the front door that sticks
And the discussions and the chess games and the jokes
And all that studying that never got finished and "us".
So you feel like telling the guy you won't go away
And leave your old home to be abandoned or destroyed
But all that you can tell him truthfully is this:
You will never be able to forget your own home.

Opinion

Briefly noted

By Abe Wagner

Curtis LeMay . . .

When George C. Wallace began his drive for the Presidency many months ago he was largely discounted as "a spoiler" from the South, and unlikely to make much of an impact at all; even among the ranks of other third party movements.

The latest Gallup poll now shows Wallace with an incredible 21 per cent of the popular vote. When Wallace began, political commentators smirked "the more he talks, the more votes he is going to lose." If the best of the polls are to be believed, just the opposite has come true. The credibility of a Wallace impace has grown to such an extent that the New York Times was compelled to run a massive editorial entitled "The Wallace Sickness." As the weeks pass, his per-centage continues to rise.

Yesterday's naming of the retired General Curtis LeMay as Wallace's running mate represents another milestone for the Wallace campaign. First LeMay is a man totally divorced from the image of bigotry and hatred that has plagued Wallace from the beginning. For many voters who are wavering over voting for the American Independant Ticket, LeMay provides an additional measure of valuable credibility.

Second, war-hero LeMay's ultra hard line on the Vietnam war stands as a tangible change for war hawks who feel uneasy with both of the major party candidates.

The fate of retired military men in American politics has historically been excellent, at least in so far as getting elected. It hardly seems Wallace could have made a better choice. We can only hope that in the light of reason the American voters will.

Contrasts . . .

Following a recent column on alleged cheating in the School of Architecture, we received three letters from Architecture students asking why nothing had been done, but no faculty or administrative response at all. I think that's the answer in a nutshell.

Since we requested substantive reports of alleged food service shortcomings earlier this week, we received a grand total of zero complaints. Congratulations Food Service, for failing to generate one written complaint all week.

In contrast, we have received the following complaints: Seventeen graduate students and faculty members have complained about football seating arrangements; Eleven Freshmen have become distrought over the thought of leaving their broken down cottage for spaces in new dorms; and one aggrieved student has barraged the Daily Orange for "Jewish propraganda" in its Friday book review section.

Letters to the editor

To the Editor:

I am a graduate student with no vested interests in the Graduate Student Organization other than individual concern. For that reason, I attended the G.S.O. meeting held last Monday evening. Impressions gained at that meeting were so different from the comments published as "The Organization Bug" in Tuesday's Daily Orange that a rebuttal must be made.

I find Mr. Lebel's article unfortunate, uninformed, and rather stupid.

It is this writer's belief that the proposed G.S.O. Constitution is a mature, sincere, and stable document which, I would argue, is not the work of "...neurotic graduate student organizers..."

Mr. Iæbel makes several assertions which demand comment--particularly those referring to the election of representatives and organizational procedure.

As it now reads, Article VI of the proposed Constitution--if it is read--states that appointment is not to be made by either a departmental Dean or by one's self, but, rather, on the basis of a democratic election. Similarly, to call the use of Roberts Rules of Order an "...undergraduate game..." is an unnecessary slur upon undergraduates and anyone else who uses this established procedural method.

But, a more serious inference of the article is that Mr. Lebel does not want G.S.O. to succeed. If he wants to harm its potential he has made a start. (Particularly when his comments are given credence and importance by rating two columns in the upper right hand corner of the editorial page.) If harm is his intent the reader is entitled to know why.

If graduate students are concerned--and I believe that they are--about the meaning of the time, talent, and money they channel into the University and about their rights as citizens and students, they now have an opportunity to do something about those concerns. That opportunity is via the G.S.O.

May I suggest that any graduate student would profit more from constructive involvement with and support of this organization than from destructive comment masquerading as intelligent journalism.

After all, who is Jacques Lebel? What is his beef?

'Presidential fatigue'

Time gets enthusiastic, frank replies from Chancellor

Time Magazine recently interviewed a number of university and college presidents, including Chancellor William P. Tolley of Syracuse University, on the subject of "presidential fatigue," noting that this was the reason Florida's J. Wayne Reitz gave for leaving his post last year at the age of 59. Time, in the education section of its Sept. 27 issue, quoted 17 presidents who had "discussed the strains–and satisfactions–of their jobs."

Chancellor Tolley, who is beginning his 27th year as head of Syracuse University, was quoted as saying: "If I did it again, I would be a professor, not a college president. Professors have the best of both worlds–they can do what they want and they don't have to do what they don't want."

Following are Dr. Tolley's unpublished answers to 10 other questions asked by Time's correspondent.

1. Do you feel a more acute pressure now than when you were newer in the job? "Yes–because the longer you stay as president the more obligations you have. You make more appearences before faculty and student groups. You make fewer important speeches but more off the cuff. You cut down on state and national meetings only to be more deeply involved on the campus. You continue to see the people you have seen as well as new ones. The pressure to find time for fund raising is greater than ever."

2. How much time do you spend away from campus? "Perhaps a day or a day and a half a week. It is less now as campus problems demand more and more attention. I spend much more time with students and faculty groups than I formerly did."

3. How do you meet demands from society to solve society's problems? "These are jobs for specialists. I have a deeper personal interest in community problems than I once did. But I learned long ago that the president is not the best person to solve them. I find it more sensible now to steer the problems to those on the campus who can solve them--the members of the faculty who have the knowledge--the specialists."

4. Are you feeling a squeeze for more facilities and how are you meeting them? "We are feeling a real squeeze for facutly offices, classrooms, library facilities and art museum facilities. We have improvised as far as possible with frame houses. Our building program should ease the situation within the next three years. But we still need gifts for buildings."

5. How do you feel about campus dependence on government? "The question really should be: 'Have you been hurt by the government's cutback on educational programs?' The federal slowdown in payments, the cutbacks in loan funds and other economic retrenchments on the federal scene have created serious budget problems on all campuses."

6. Do you find a growing trend to independence on the part of faculty? "No. A professor has always been 'one who thinks otherwise.'"

7. How do you get and keep good professors? "The real competition is for exceptional professors and it is keener than ever. But good universities have no trouble getting good people."

8. What compensating moments do you find in being a college president? "One of the renewing experiences a president has is the hours he is able to spend informally with students. Last night I came back from a pep rally restored–I had been dead tired when I went. The enthusiasm and affection I encountered had a tonic effect on me."

9. How do you relax? "I stop reading and take off my glasses. Fishing is perfect. So is tennis–I can lose myself in an hour on the tennis court and come back restored. Any kind of vigorous exercise is good."

10. How do you shed a presidency? "I'm not sure I've thought about that as much as I should. I've really enjoyed it. The secret, however, is to have intellectual interests."

Ice to speak at 3 p. m. today

By DIANE WEATHERS

Solon J. Ice, previously a worker with the Blackstone Rangers and the Disciples, two youth groups in Chicago, will be in Syracuse this weekend and will deliver a speech on campus today at 3 p.m. in Gifford Auditorium. Invited by the School of Social Work and the graduate students' organization of that school, Ice will speak on "The Community Organization: Problems and Prospects." Following his talk, a reception will be given by the Student Afro-American Society, at the Chapel House.

Solon Ice's past includes a long list of active work with various community organizations and youth groups, primarily located in the ghetto areas of Chicago. During the presidential campaign of John F. Kennedy, he functioned as campaign coordinator in Chicago's South Side. He actively worked with the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King in bringing together community groups in Chicago and he organized the first neighborhood health center in that area. Currently, Ice is supervising community participants in the Woodlawn Organization, a pilot project in Chicago which is trying to bring about more school decentralization and greater community control.

During his stay in Syracuse this weekend, Ice will meet with various community organizations and serve as a technical consultant to youth of the inner city.

Professionalism at Grumman
...is personal development programs

As a graduating engineer, how can you position yourself so that your career chances are constantly optimized? Answer–get with an aerospace company where the optimum conditions are . . . Grumman. Here we take a keen interest in seeing that our engineers and scientists develop personally. We are sincerely interested in their personal progress within the company . . . that they keep abreast of the sweeping advances in technology, not because they can contribute more (although this is true), but more because it makes for greater individual progress and well-being. Job satisfaction, if you will. Let's look at these personal development programs.

Tuition Reimbursement Program
Directly applicable to their work, these programs offer engineers and scientists financial assistance for graduate studies at the many institutions in the Long Island-New York area.

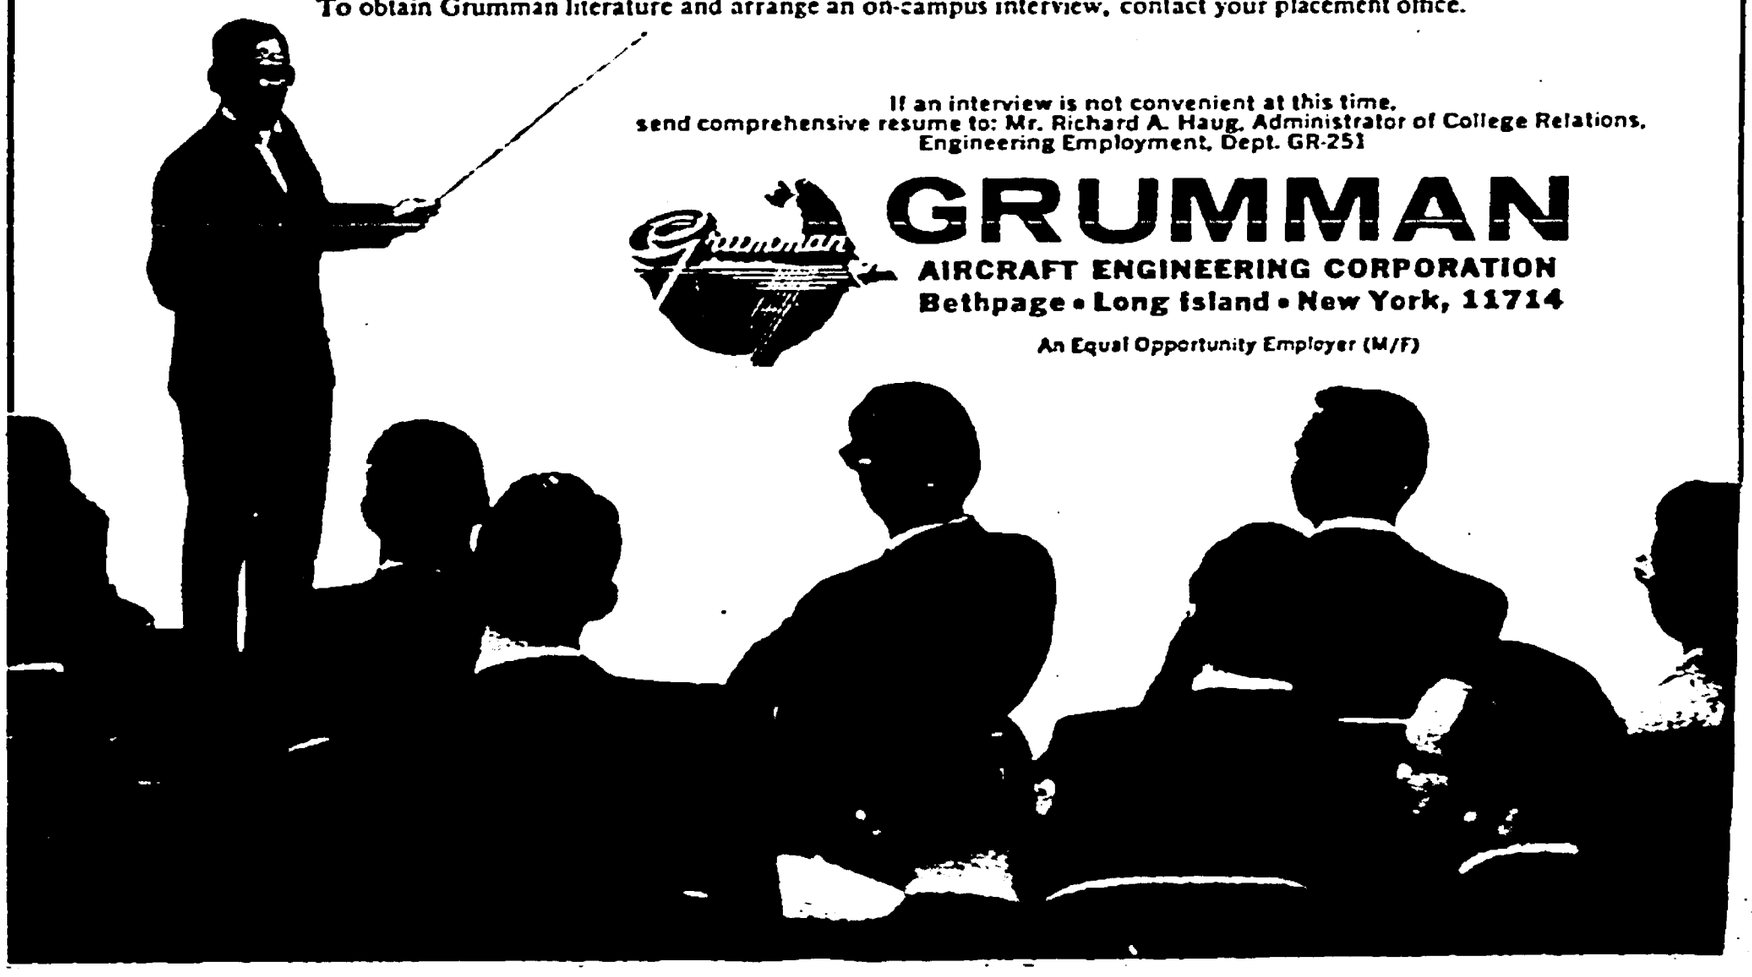
In-Plant Courses
Engineering courses, particularly those not available at neighboring institutions, to deepen technical knowledge to the specific needs of the engineering sections.

College-Industry Courses
Selective attendance for rapid technical updating on fundamentals, theoretical methods and design information. (One to two weeks' duration.)

Engineering Masters Fellowship Program
To enhance creative design capability, one-year fellowships, renewable for a second year, are awarded to new engineering Bachelor of Science graduates and engineers with a year or more company service. The program combines two days of graduate school study with three days of in-plant engineering (in fixed or rotating assignments) and covers payment of full tuition, books, fees, a stipend, and a salary at engineering hourly rates for the hours worked.

Professional Development Programs
Lasting for 2 years, participants are given, in 4 six-months' terms, an exposure to Grumman operations which broadens their technical knowledge, sharpens ability to make sound decisions, and raises their career potential. Separate programs serve individuals in Business Systems, Engineering and Manufacturing.

Senior Engineers' Program
Intended to overcome the threat of technological obsolescence, individual disciplines are updated with regard to new scientific discoveries, new or expanded applications of long existing knowledge, and computer applications to problem solving.



Senior Management Development
Selected individuals within Grumman junior and middle management groups are nominated to attend management development programs such as the MIT Executive Development Program, the Program for Management Development or the Advanced Management Program at Harvard University.

Basic Principles of Supervisory Management
A series of discussion sessions provide a course in management principles to group leaders who show technical management ability.

Here then is a real opportunity for PhD candidates in AE, CE, EE, ME, IE, Physics and Chemical Engineering . . . to take their place in the continuum of technology that is Grumman. Grumman representatives will be SU senior Gail von Hahmann, majoring in Liberal Arts, attended this dedication of a clinic built in Lesotho, South Africa, by Crossroads volunteers in 1967.

Operation Crossroads Africa: a journey to understanding

This fall, as for the past four years, three SU students have returned to campus after spending the summer in Africa.

Barbara Lundquist, a graduate student in Social Work, Joey Edwardh and David Rubin, both seniors in Liberal Arts, are Syracuse's three most recent participants in Operation Crossroads Africa. They have already begun to share their experiences with the campus community, and as part of the Syracuse Cross Committee they will begin work this week to raise the $3600 necessary to send next year's participants.

Operation Crossroads Africa is a private, non-profit organization founded in 1958 by Dr. James Robinson on the premise that first-hand experience is the best way to learn. During the past 11 years, more than 3,000 American, Canadian and African students have proven this to be true.

Crossroaders have helped build clinics, schools, roads, etc., and have had an opportunity to see Africa as it really is rather than as historians and newsmen have "seen" it. These students have had experiences that may help them begin to understand basic human differences, whether political, religious or racial, that make it difficult to accept "foreigners." John F. Kennedy adapted the Operation Crossroads concept to the Peace Corps.

Syracuse University plays a role in this endeavor through its Syracuse Crossroads Committee. The committee's first task this year is to raise funds for next summer's Crossroaders, starting with the annual Crossroads Week at the end of October. Applications will be distributed at that time.

In an effort to share their experiences with the campus and community, the three Africa "alums" hope to sponsor a series of films, slide-talks, discussions and other fund-raising activities.

A meeting of the OCA committee is scheduled this Sunday, Oct. 6, at 2:30 p.m. in the International Student Corner, 230 Euclid Ave. Interested students who are unable to attend should call Gail at 476-7033.

Recruiters begin campaign next week for students interested in Peace Corps

SU senior Mohamad Zamater, of Somalia, will be working here with a team of Peace Corps recruiters next week to gain volunteers. Somalia was one of the first nations to request and receive Peace Corps aid.

One-hundred fifty Syracuse graduates have served two years or more as volunteers, with nine more now in training. The University ranks thirtieth in the nation for the total number of volunteers. SU ranks fourth in New York after Columbia, Cornell, and N.Y.U. Harvard University is the highest ranking Eastern school with a total of 375 volunteers.

Until 1967, the University and its faculty was involved with a number of training programs. SU students have always shown a high level of interest in the Peace Corps.

Recruiters on campus served in Korea, Brazil, and Niger. Judy Musik was a volunteer in a Brazilian public health program. Fred Cookson was working in a forestry project in Niger and Newell Bacon was an English teacher in a Korean girls' high school. All of them returned this past summer.

According to a spokesman the group is also concerned with what students think of the Peace Corps. For example, can its existence be justified in light of the fact that so many young Americans are needed to work with this country's domestic ills?

There will be a booth set up in the visitor's parking lot behind the Administration Building. Any student with interest in the Peace Corps should drop by next week.

A short movie illustrating Peace Corps projects in Brazil will be featured at 7 p.m. Wednesday in 102 Maxwell.

Peace Corps placement tests will be administered Wednesday and Thursday at 11 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Dynamic Janis Joplin featured

Holding Company to rock SU next week

The true Underground music of San Francisco is finally coming to Syracuse next Friday night, October 11. Big Brother and the Holding Company, featuring the pulsating voice of Janis Joplin, will be headlining the Homecoming Weekend concert which also includes the Paul Butterfield Blues Band.

With their current smash, "Down On Me," riding high on the charts, Big Brother has finally been recognized as one of America's top groups.

The group's initial album, simply entitled "Big Brother and the Holding Company," was not even meant for release. It consisted mostly of poor studio cuts, and highly misrepresented the real group. Personal appearances, though, kept Big Brother popular on the West Coast, although to a limited number of people.

Once they signed a recording contract with Columbia records, the group's fortunes took a large leap. Their current album, "Cheap Thrills", is one of the top LP's in the country. Among their most popular songs are "Piece of My Heart," "Ball and Chain," and of course, "Down On Me."

The group formed about a year and a half ago in San Fransico. They attracted great attention at last summer's Monterey International Pop Festival.

Most of Big Brother's success must be attributed to a 25 year-old Texan, Janis Joplin. New York Times critic, Robert Shelton, has said of Miss Joplin:

"There are few voices of such power, flexibility and virtuosity in pop music anywhere. Occasionally she appeared to be hitting two harmonizing notes at once."

Elvin Bishop, former guitarist for the Paul Butterfield Blues Band said of Janis:

"She sings the blues, not just with her voice. She's very feminine."

Femininity aside, Miss Joplin sings with almost reckless abandon. She has said that she would rather be a great singer for five years than an average one for 10. Another thing that has made her popular with the college crowd is her unquenchable thirst for Southern Comfort, a beverage she always keeps near her in a flask at every performance.

Even when she isn't singing Janis is attacking something - a tambourine, maracas - and the emotional involvement she makes with the audience must be experienced.

It is doubtful that even the usually serene Syracuse University Concert crowd will be able to keep still when Big Brother and the Holding Company with Janis Joplin hit the stage next Friday night.

Spanish ballads to be presented

On Monday at 8:30 p.m. in Crouse Auditorium, Miss Sofia Noel, soprano, will present a varied program of authentic Spanish traditional ballads, including Hispanic-Judeo songs of the late medieval period, as well as several contemporary Spanish artistic renditions of folk melodies. She will be accompanied by Jesus Tutor, guitarist, who is an accomplished soloist in his own right.

Miss Noel, although born in Belgium, has lived for many years in Spain where she has continued to develop a life-long interest in ethnic folk music. She has given performances in many countries of the world and only last year sang to enthusiastic audiences in the United States.

Her concert at Syracuse University is sponsored by the School of Music, the Department of Fine Arts, and Romance Languages, and is open to the public.

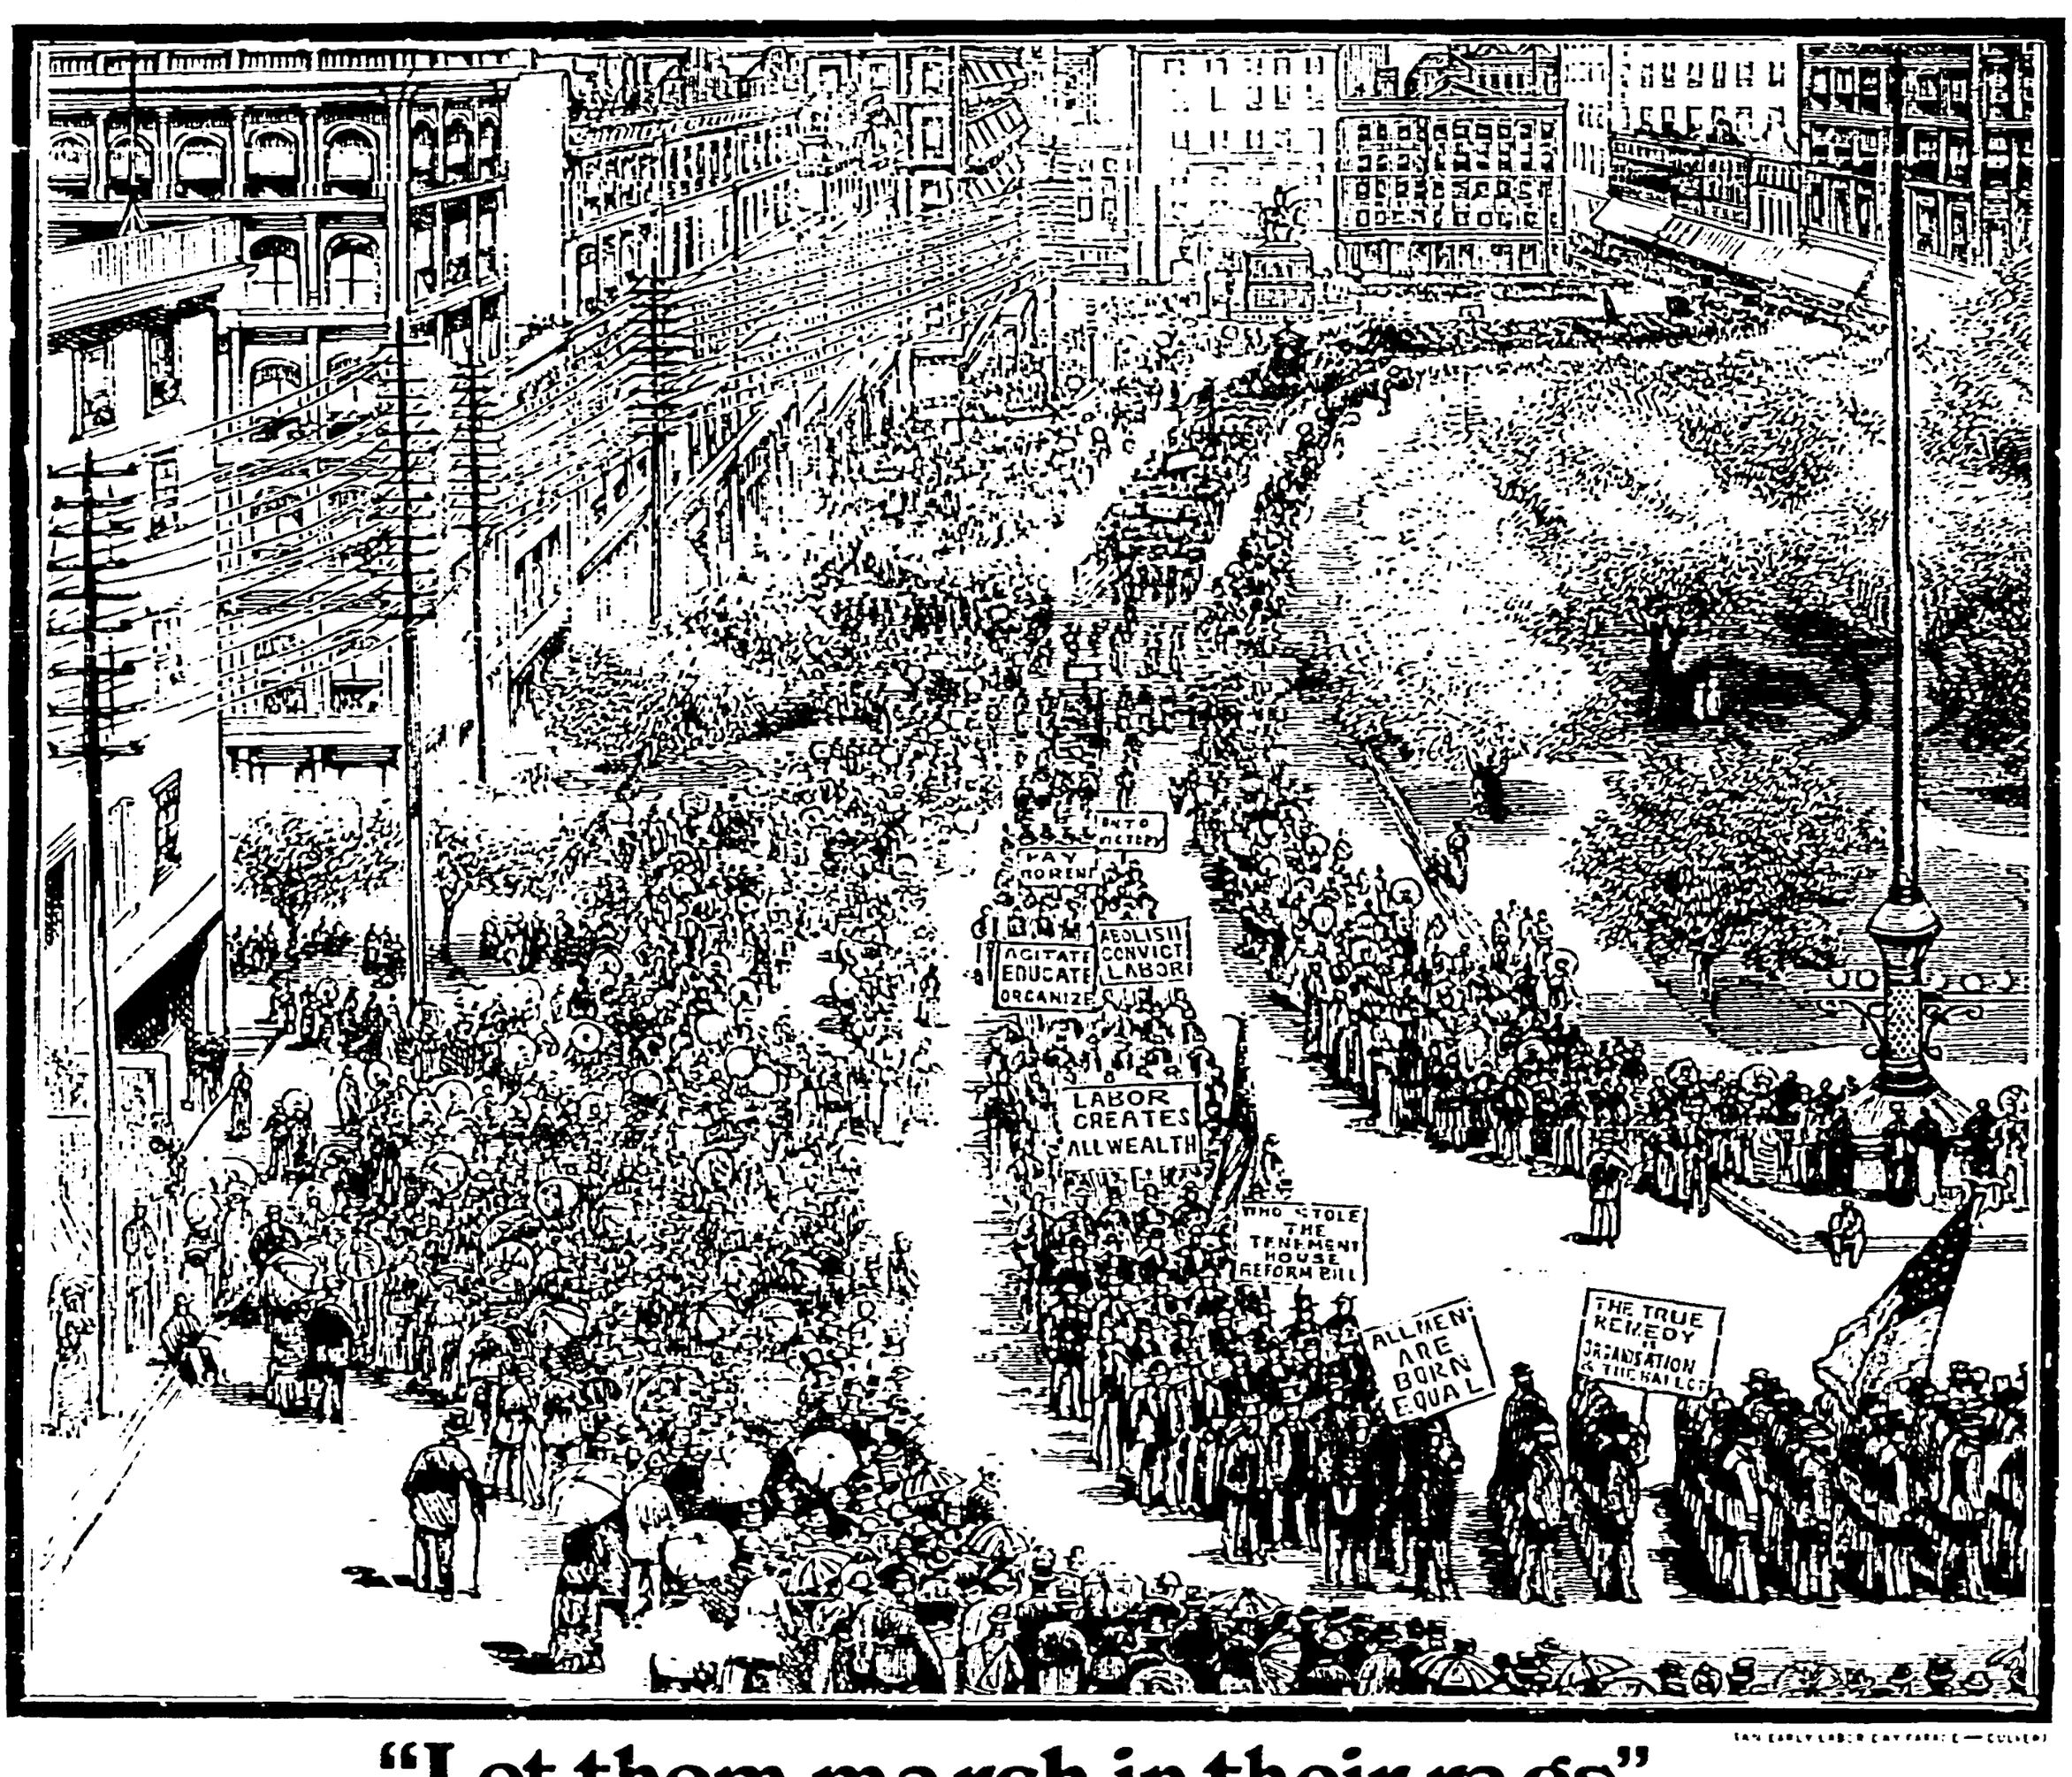
Campus Chest plans a wild week-end

Campus Chest promises a wild weekend of parties and open fraternity houses for only $1.50. Tickets are being sold in HBC everyday and also will be sold at the door of each fraternity house sponsoring a party. If a substantial number of tickets are bought together, the cost is only $1.25 each. This one ticket entitles a person to go to every fraternity party for Campus Chest. A date is unnecessary. Also, the one ticket provides a whole weekend of entertainment.

Campus Chest is a completely non-profit, student run organization. The money that is collected is given to assist such campus organizations as Leadership Through Education (L.T.E.), Crossroads Africa, Projection '70, and Footprints.



To receive assistance, an organization must submit a petition to the Executive Committee of Campus Chest. Each petition will be evaluated by the committee and the money will be dispersed where deemed necessary. Such a petition must include the groups' name, its purpose, its reason for requesting the money, and programs for which the money will be used.

"Let them march in their rags"

And they did.

On the morning of Monday, September 3, 1894, the first national Labor Day Parade in American history started up Fourth Avenue in New York City. About "one-half of the city" turned out to see the 12,000 march.

Just before the parade began, a delegation of women garment workers appeared before the New York Central Labor Union.

The women were embarrassed. "They have very poor clothes," explained a delegate, "many of them are little better than rags."

"So much the better," another delegate responded. "Let them march in their rags."

And they did, taking their place alongside the cigarmakers, iron workers, wood carvers, typographical workers, beer drivers, electrical workers, carpenters, and horse shoers.

Not until the coming of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union were working people in the garment trade able to enjoy Saturdays, Sundays and holidays—such as Labor Day—with family and friends.

Today, we 450,000 members of the ILGWU (80% women) are proud of our union and the benefits we have won: fair wages, decent working conditions, security on the job.

Our signature is the union label sewn into women's and children's garments. It is the symbol of progress made; and more to come.

Look for it when you shop.

If you'd like some interesting (and brief) reading plus many fascinating historic pictures, send for our 64 page publication entitled "Signature of 450,000." GPO, Box 1491, N.Y., N.Y. 10001, Dept. CC-30.

By Lew Howell

The 'system' fails to uphold the image

Perhaps our secondary school system just doesn't convey information well. Even in elementary school in America the student begins to be indoctrinated in the American political process. By the time the student reaches the secondary school he has supposedly been well informed about how our democracy works. He continues on to study a history of the system and perhaps even takes a political science course in his last year.

Unfortunately, however, even when he arrives at college he knows little of how the system really works and, moreover, seldom cares. It might even be said that the average American turned out of our school system is built to be naive concerning American politics. He is well versed in the principles of "democracy," but then only democracy as Americans define it. He knows some of the values of constitutional government but despite whatever efforts are made in schools to this end, the student is still not aware of the difficulties and the agony of maintaining a constitutional system.

Students are usually schooled in American idealism, not in the facts concerned with grinding out a functioning compromise known as democracy. Our past is idealized and all the 'dirty facts' of economic interests are left out. Our present is idealized and students aren't informed of the need to spend years of effort to pass one amendment to one bill among thousands before a state legislature. Our future is idealized and students are overly conscious of "America's role in the world" as other idealistic Americans see it.

Many of these students have learned a valuable lesson from this year's presidential campaign.

The lesson involved not only work in the campaigns of Senators Kennedy and McCarthy and seeing the process in action, but also coming to a realization that one year of effort does not make a presidential nominee. In reality the actual decisions were made years ago when this year's convention delegate made his first move for political power. The students who came to understand this know that now, in effect, the delegates to the conventions of 1972 and 1976 are being chosen. These students are still out working to make sure that they do have a choice in the allotment of power and nomination for those future years.

Other students were too well schooled in the traditional American idealism and expected instant democracy, just like it was described in some high school text. When Rockefeller and McCarthy lost their respective presidential bids, these students were disillusioned by the fact that the functioning of the system did not fit their idealistic image. They felt that the system had failed and they have now moved to reject it.

But the system is too intricate to be destroyed or even effectively changed by such a minority. Their protests may not even be heard when the middle-age protest vote for George Wallace comes in. All they have done by rejecting the system is to deny themselves the opportunity of having a say in American leadership for another four, and probably eight, years. And the changes that they, and many others, so deeply desire will not vote themselves into law.

Huntington as an example I hope to organize the program throughout the city with other service organizations," said Miss Erickson.

Any male on campus can volunteer to help initiate Venture '69 by contacting Robin Erickson at 705 Walnut Ave., ext. 2480, ext. 3451 or 478-9004.

The idea of Venture '69 was initiated last spring by Robin Erickson when campaigning for vice president of the senior class. The full program, however, is not restricted to men, but also includes a big sister program.

If Venture '69 is successfully initiated with Huntington Family Center, it will be expanded to other family centers in the city. "With

"TEDDY BEARS"

Phi Ep has new member: Winning Tricks, a horse

By BETH HILLSON

Has "horse-play" gotten out of hand at SU?

Six horse enthusiasts on campus don't think so. These students became the owners of a race horse, Winning Tricks, September 20.

The students explained that they had followed horse racing with great interest for several years and wanted to become part of the popular hobby.

The 3-year-old bay filly belongs to Lance Stelzer, Mike Weiss, Bob Angleton, Bob Edwards, Gary Jacobson, and Jimmy Silber, all brothers of Phi Epsilon Pi fraternity.

"I've driven horses before. I bought the horse because I'm interested in learning to race as a hobby, myself," explained Edwards.

"It's a great psych," added Weiss. "I have something to look forward to when I'm depressed; I just think about my horse."

The horse, a standard bred pacer-trotter, has been trained and timed but never raced. The group estimates the horse will cost them $1500 before it is even placed in competition.

"It was a pure risk," admits Edwards. But the owners have hope for Winning Tricks' success. After a full year's investigation, a trainer-driver was settled upon by the men. Much more research was involved before the horse was bought.

Both their trainer and a veterinarian checked the animal thoroughly. "Our driver knows the person who owned him. We were told that the horse was in good condition, that his owner just didn't have time for him," Edwards explained.

"We don't expect to get rich with the horse," he pointed out. "We just want to have a good time."

Jacobson called the investment a "joint venture for keeping up future relationships." All of the partners are juniors or seniors and they wanted something in common after graduation, he explained.

Winning Tricks was purchased at the Cashman-Magee Standard Breed Auction at the Syracuse State Fair grounds and is being trained at the Saratoga Raceway.

The horse is tentatively scheduled to run at Vernon and Saratoga race tracks this spring.

Asked what their highest goal is, the unanimous cry was to "enter and run (Winning Tricks) at Yonkers or Roosevelt."

Changes made in Pass-fail ruling

By ANDRIJ BILYK
Associate Editor

Student complaints and a 100 percent increase in student enrollment have compelled the Registrar's office into making two changes in the Pass-Fail ruling.

Registrar Edwin D. Smith disclosed that as of now anything to do with practice teaching for the School of Education is on Pass-Fail. He also said that this year students will have until midsemester to declare whether or not they intend to opt a course.

"I personally think that midsemester is too late," said Smith, "but we'll try it for a year and see."

Smith warned students that once they "get it on the record" to opt a course, then that decision is "irrevocable."

Pass-Fail is entering its second year at SU. Last Fall there were 619 students using this option and in the Spring 1261 students were opting courses.

Nationally, Pass-Fail is five years young. Registrat Smith noted that Pass-Fail is becoming popular with students, citing Stanford, Princeton, and the University of Pennsylvania as places where student enrollment regarding option have doubled.

Pass-Fail does not record grades. A "P" is given when the course is completed successfully. Credit hours are counted but the "P" is disregarded in determining a student's grade point average.

Students discuss Biafra

SU's Pan-African Students Association is sponsoring a panel discussion on the Nigerian-Biafran civil war at 8 p.m. this Sunday, Oct. 6, in Maxwell Auditorium.

Panelists will include two Nigerian students, E. Anise and M.Omosule; an SU graduate student who worked in Higeria this summer, Barbara Lundquist; and an American professor.

IFC's second meeting unfolds new frat, plans

At the second meeting of the Interfraternity Council Wednesday, Robert Brandon, a brother of Tau Delta Phi, was elected vice-president of the Council. Bob defeated Jeff Bragman, a brother of Sigma Alpha Mu.

Omega Psi Phi was unanimously accepted into the IFC. This is a new fraternity on campus and their formal acceptance must still be reviewed by the Alumni IFC and the Dean of Men's office.

The status of the Orange Club, formerly Sigma Alpha Epsilon, was also approved by the IFC. Their name has been changed to Sigma Delta Phi.

The 1968-69 budget of $15,000 was presented by Gery Yoh, treasurer of the IFC, and passed. He also announced that all upper class pledges must pay a $3.00 rush registration fee at the Dean of Men's office by Friday, October 4.

Robert Kelly, president, announced the plans for the second annual IFC Minnowbrook Conference. This conference will be held on the weekend of October 25, 26, and 27.

Robert Massey, the Fraternity Administrator, announced that an IFC office has been secured for the 1968-69 year. This office, presently being renovated to fit the needs of the IFC, had been the Sadler dormitory hobby room.

The next meeting will be held October 16.

Students upset by ruling cutting Fulbright funds

NANCY KLINKENSTEIN

Fulbright scholarship funds will be slashed 72 per cent (on the average) for the 1969-70 academic year. According to an article in the Sept. 27 New York Times, "programs of international exchanges in higher education" in 18 countries will be crippled.

Contrary to a previous statement made in this newspaper, Congress didn't vote to cut the funds. The action results from the State Department's 31 per cent budget cut. The bi-national commissions in each country have been notified by the State Department. Discussions are underway concerning their future operations.

Approximately five or six students at SU will be hit by this cutback. Dave Haddock, coordinator for the program at Syracuse, has not yet been informed of the definite outcome of the State Department's actions.

One glorious SU cottage

Cottage closings . . .

Under the terms of the federal loans and grants which subsidized the construction of the large dorms, these buildings must be nearly completly occupied. Thus the vacancies left by these people must be filled. The amount of unexpected vacancies was said to be much greater this year than usual. Dean Rade said that this fact was not known until the students actually moved in.

While regretting the loss of the cottages, Miss Crawford explained that today the value of the land and the cost of electricity, plumbing and heating made housing for less than 75 to 100 people economically unfeasible. While meeting health, fire and safety standards, the cottages still need work. The University is unwilling to put money into buildings which will be torn down.

The students were discontented with this response to their protest. "It all seems so impersonal, and cottages are personal," one complained. They felt that the University put too much emphasis on the economic situation.

In order to institute an organized protest, the cottage reps formed the Ad Hoc Committee to Save the Cottages. The chairmen are Toney Merritt and Jeffrey Jakiel. A group was also assigned to prepare an organized statement of their reasons for wanting to maintain the cottages.

While emphasizing the need for peaceful protest, Merritt and Jakiel hope that other students would lend their support. This could be done, they said, by writing letters and postcards to Dean Carleton pleading that the cottages remain open.

more than convey the general thrust of their Vietnam beliefs to prevent the North Vietnamese from "picking and choosing" a war settlement.

In Muskie's opinion, the Eisenhower-Nixon administration is responsible for our involvement in the war because in 1954, "it decided not to implement the agreement of the Geneva Accords to hold free elections."

Senator Muskie comes to Syracuse by his own request and against the advice of his demonstration-wary Washington office. According to Ed Humberger, chairman of the pro-Humphrey Coalition for the Best Alternative, Muskie "wants to talk and he wants to listen."

Humberger sees Muskie as far superior to Maryland Gov. Spiro Agnew, Muskie's Republican counterpart. "We are of the opinion that Muskie will make the difference."

Sen. Muskie, a 22-year veteran of Maine and national politics, will arrive in Syracuse at 11:00 a.m. on Monday and is expected at Hendricks Chapel by 11:15. His speech and question and answer session are expected to last less than an hour. He will spend the rest of his time at a press conference and a luncheon in downtown Syracuse.

35 SU seniors to be chosen 'Who's Who'

HELENE MACDONALD

About 35 outstanding Syracuse University seniors will be nominated within the next month to be included in this year's edition of "Who's Who among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

AWS Service Commission has distributed a letter to schools, departments and organizations asking them for names of possible nominees.

Students who have been suggested will fill out applications asking average, honors, activities and offices, work experience and works published.

A committee composed of two representatives from AWS, two from Student Government, one from Inter-fraternity Council, one from Panhellenic, one from University Union and one from Senior Exec will review applications and submit them to a faculty committee for final decision.

The names of those selected by the faculty committee will be forwarded to the publisher of "Who's Who" for final approval and then the names will be released.

Paxton...

$1200 and went to England," said Paxton. "If we hadn't had that much independence and nerve, we wouldn't have the money to be independent today."

Taking his house for an example, Paxton commented, "It's a real groove. But the best thing is that both my wife and I would be perfectly willing to leave any time." According to Paxton, the good thing about material possessions is their ability to help achieve independence. "Sure, I enjoy good clothes, but that's because buying a good jacket just delays the day when you have to get hung-up about trying to pick out another one."

Originally a drama major at the University of Oklahoma, Paxton tried to write songs throughout his college career and decided that he preferred music to drama. If he had a chance to do some acting now Paxton said he would regard it as an interesting experience but that he would not go around to producers day after day looking for work.

Commenting on how he liked traveling around making one-stop appearances, Paxton said the only good things he could hope for are a good two-hour performance and some interesting people to talk to. "The only city I like in the U.S.," commented Paxton, "is San Francisco. Every other city is a cold business place where people don't really care to think."

Noticing that Simon and Garfunkel are to be in Syracuse this Sunday, Paxton said, "If you're interested in folk singing at all, you can't miss them. Paul Simon is the greatest song writer of the age."

Paxton considers his greatest achievement the actual writing of a song. He feels complimented when another artist appreciates his work enough to do it on his own, although he has never been "exactly happy with the way other people do my songs."

Face Manlius Prep

Tangerines open campaign at home today

By ADAM DAWSON

The freshman football team, better known as the Tangerines, opens up its 1968 season today at Manley Field. The team's opposition comes from neighboring Manlius Prep.

Coach Jim Shreve says he expected a battle, because Manlius will be up for the game. A reason for this is the 38-14 shellacking the Tangerines applied to them last year.

Unlike the varsity, Shreve has no way to know what to expect in the way of personnel and plays. This is because there is no scouting of the opposition.

On offense, Shreve promises a balanced attack similar to that employed by the varsity. For the defense, he says, "We will be ready for anything they throw at us."

As far as attitude goes, Shreve says the team will be ready and its outlook is excellent. In fact, except for Larry Giewont, the entire team will be in top condition. Giewont developed hepatitis last week, which caused everyone on the team to get an immunization shot.

Shreve's starting offensive line averages 220 pounds. It consists of ends, Ray Jarosz (83) and Dave Boyer (82). Stacked in between Jarosz and Boyer are left guard Doug Auld (54), center John Lobon (53), right guard Joe Ehrmann (61), inside tackle Ross Sposato (73) and outside tackle Stan Walters (75).

In the backfield Larry Hatalsky (21) will direct the club at quarterback, with Marty Januszkiewicz (32) at fullback, Greg Allen (10) at right halfback and either Stan Mock (46) or Rich Phillips (41) at left half.

On the defensive line, Shreve has Dan Yochum (85) and George Bodine (67) at the ends. Howie Goodman (80), Len Campolieta (76) and Ted Lachowitz (63) will form the middle of the defensive line.

At the linebacking spots Ed Berry (42), Dennis Coupe (66) and Clark Yingst (33) hold forth with starting berths.

In the deep secondary Dennis Finnegan (23) and Steve Sanson (47) are the halfbacks, with Tom Myers (26) at safety.

Bolden holdin' golden key to SU 'ruin Bruin' hopes

By ED AGRANOWITZ

The Syracuse Orangemen will be trying to force themselves back into the national spotlight when Tommy Prothro's undefeated UCLA Bruins invade Archbold Stadium tomorrow at 1:30.

The Orange, coming off a big win over Maryland, will be looking to make it two in a row against their West Coast rivals, but will be hard pressed to do so. UCLA, ranked 4th by UPI and 9th by AP, has demonstrated an explosive offense in its wins over Pittsburgh (63-7) and Washington State (31-21).

Just how explosive the Bruins' offense will be tomorrow will depend heavily on the condition of junior quarterback Bill Bolden. Bolden missed last week's game after suffering a right shoulder separation against Pitt. He has been working out lightly and doing some throwing for the past couple of days, but is still a doubtful performer.

Vic Kelly, UCLA's Sports Information Director, said last week that "it will be an utter miracle if Bolden plays against Syracuse." Frank Stewart, the Bruins' assistant SID, who is in Syracuse for the game, feels differently, however. "Knowing coach Prothro," says Stewart, "he would never bring a player along without intending to use him."

Starting at quarterback for the Uclans will be sophomore Jim Nader. A strong passer, Nader has made good on 16 of 30 tosses thus far for four touchdowns. Also available for qb duty is regular tailback Greg Jones, who led the squad in rushing last year. Jones got his first look at the quarterback spot last week.

Sophomore tailback Mickey Cureton looks like UCLA's top ground threat this year. The compact rookie (5' 9", 185 lb.) paces Bruin ball carriers thus far with 27 carries for 158 yards. Wingback George Farmer, dangerous as both a runner and receiver, and fullback Rick Purday, a strong inside runner and excellent blocker, should also see plenty of action in the backfield.

Split ends Ron Copeland and Harold Busby both have sprinter speed and are old friends of the Orange. Busby scored on a Gary Beban bomb at Archbold two years ago, and Copeland combined with Bolden on a 92 yard TD pass last year against SU.

Thus far in '68, the Bruin defense has allowed just 2.0 yards per rush, has allowed no touchdown passes and has chalked up seven interceptions. Another boon to the UCLA defense in kicker Zenon Andrusyshyn (Bruins' answer to Panczyszyn) who was the nations leading punter last year as a soph.

UCLA will have last year's crushing upset (32-12) at the hands of Syracuse on their minds when they take the field tomorrow. The Orange know they can afford no mistakes with one loss already to their name. Safety Cliff Ensely, named AP Eastern Defensive Back of the Week, summed it up after the Maryland game: "Our whole season is on Saturday."

ED'S ITORIALS: Ron Trask, who missed last week's game with a bad ankle, will be back in uniform for Orange....Game will be replayed Sunday noon on "College Football '68" TV show....Crowd of better than 35,000 is anticipated....Orangemen lead in all-time UCLA series, 5-2....Andrusyshyn holds UCLA field goal record with 52 yarder last year.

GLUE HANDED Tony Gabriel displays the form that has made him Syracuse's leading pass receiver this year. Gabe has caught five passes in each of the Orange's first two games, for a total of 132 yards. (Photo by Biggar)

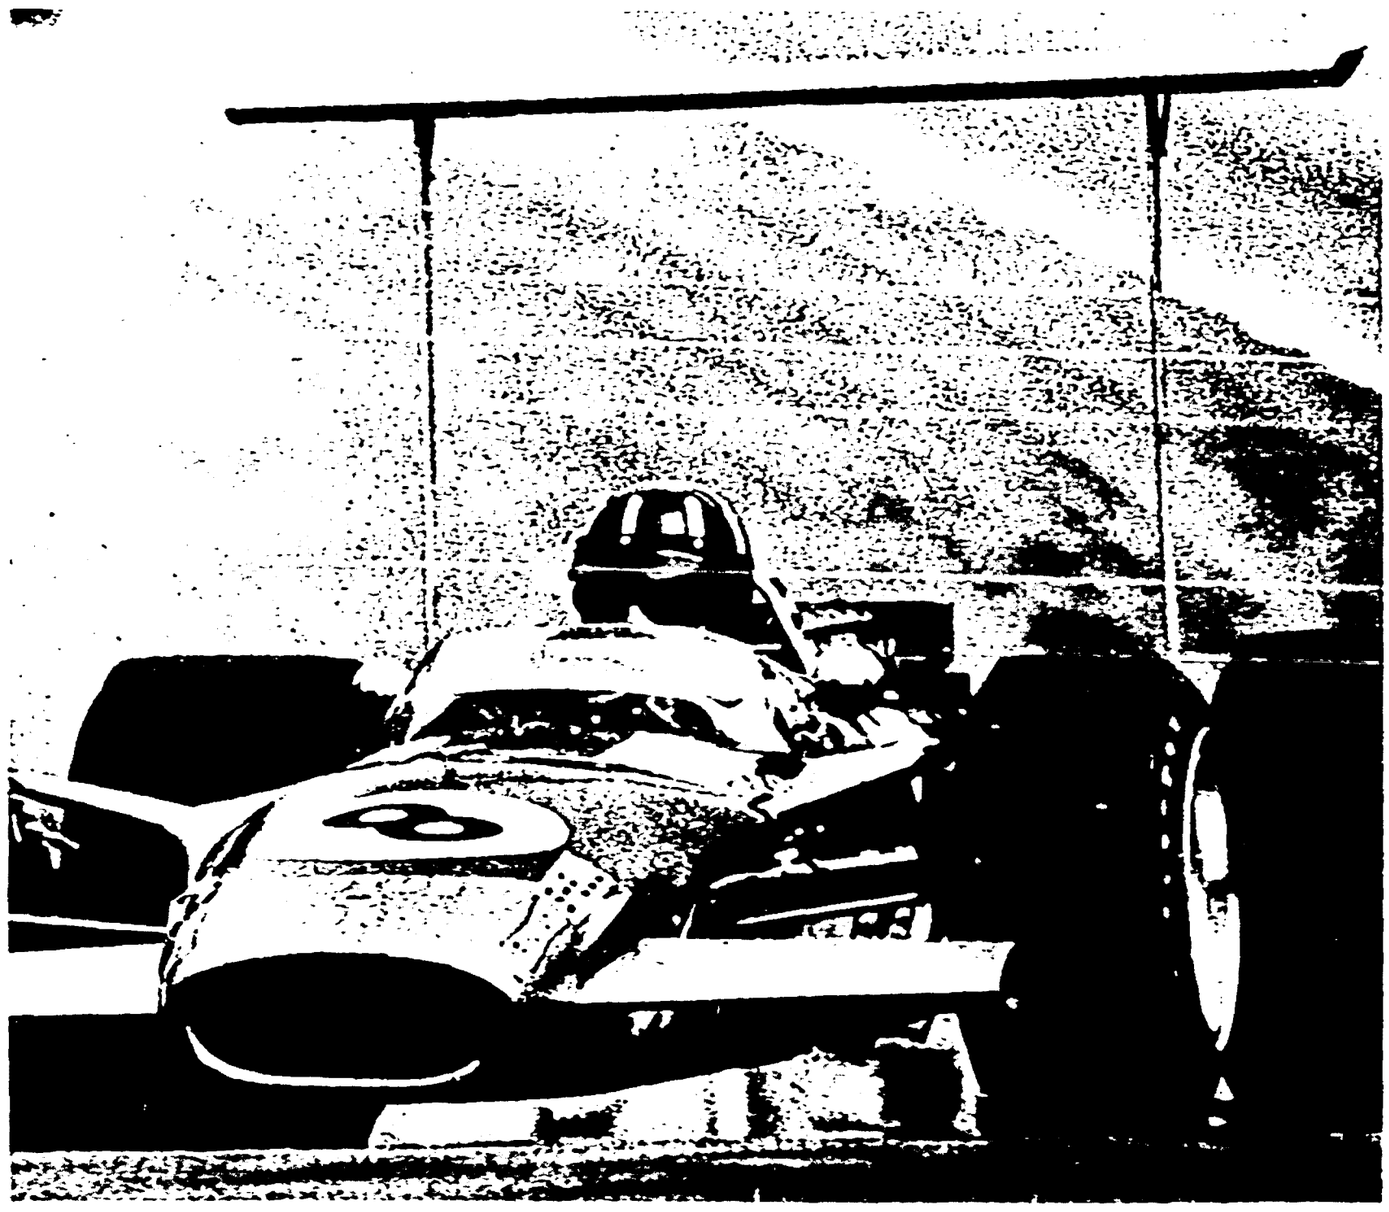
Top Drivers to race at Glen Sunday

By DOUG GARR

This Sunday the world's best Formula 1 racing drivers will compete in America's 10th United States Grand Prix at Watkins Glen, N.Y. This is the 11th Grand Prix of the 1968 season, with only the Mexican classic to follow.

The 12 annual Formula 1 races ultimately decide the world driver championship. Points are awarded to the first six finishers of each race on a 9-6-4-3-2-1 basis. Going into this race, Englishman Graham Hill and last year's world champion, Denis Hulme of New Zealand are tied for the lead with 33 points each. Jackie Stewart and Jacky Ickx are tied for third place with 27 points each. Out of reach for the championship are Bruce McLaren and Pedro Rodriguez with 16 points.

Jimmy Clark of Scotland had won the South African Grand Prix on January 1, but his career ended shortly after when he was killed in a crash in a Formula II race in Germany.



Clark had set the record of most career Grand Prix victories with 25 and was considered by most drivers as the best in the world. Only Stirling Moss and five-times world champion Juan Manuel Fangio of Argentina were considered his peers. Clark won last year's Watkins Glen classic.

This year's event will see stiff competition between Graham Hill and Denis Hulme, 2nd and 3rd last year, respectively. They will be competing for the $20,000 first prize, which is twice the amount of any Grand Prix this season. The total purse of $102,400 is the largest purse in the history of world road racing.

The Watkins Glen Grand Prix course is a 2.3 mile circuit. The lap record was set last year at 125.45 MPH by Graham Hill in his Lotus-Ford V-8. Grand Prix cars are expected to hit speeds of up to 200 MPH on the straightaways in this 248 mile endurance test.

The three US entries for the event are Bobby Unser, Mario Andretti and veteran Dan Gurney. Indianapolis stars Unser and Andretti will be making their Formula I debuts in a BRM and Lotus, respectively. Gurney, who has four career Grand Prix victories, will be driving a McLaren-Ford V-8. In all, 22 drivers will be competing for prize money.

It is estimated that over 90,000 spectators will be on hand to see this spectacle that represents drivers from 12 countries. The week-long event started yesterday and will include dances, parades and an antique automobile show. After the parade of drivers, the race will begin at 2 p.m. on Sunday.

GRAHAM HILL of England will drive this a Grand Prix of the United States at Watkins Glen, Lotus-Ford V-8 in attempting to capture his N.Y., on October 6.

SU has six new Lettermen

An Olympic gold medal winner, one of the nation's top TV producer-directors, and the president of the largest insurance company in the United States are among the six newly elected Lettermen of Distinction of Syracuse University.

Tapped for membership are Raymond J. Barbuti, Chatham, N.Y.; Preston D. Fogg, Syracuse; Sheldon Leonard, Hollywood, Calif.; Donald S. McNaughton, Chatham, N.J.; Harry Marley, Syracuse; and the late Lewis C. Ryan.

The new members will be inducted during Varsity Club Weekend on Oct. 4-5. The Lettermen of Distinction dinner is scheduled for Hotel Syracuse on Oct. 4 at 7 p.m. with a ball following at 10. The weekend continues on Saturday with a brunch for the reunion teams of 1918, 1928, 1938 and 1942 (SU did not field a team in 1943.) The six new Lettermen will be introduced in special halftime ceremonies of the SU-UCLA game.

Varisty Club members vote for candidates who graduated at least 25 years ago, who lettered as undergraduates, and who have gained distinction in their community or profession and brought honor to themselves and the University.

Announcement of the election was made by Clint Loucks, chairman of this year's weekend, and by Charlie Lee, executive secretary of the Varsity Club.

Barbuti earned three letters each in football and track and was captain of the 1927 gridders and the 1928 cindermen. He was NCAA champion in the 220 and 440 yard races and was a member of SU's IC4A and Penn Relay mile relay championship teams.

But his greatest glory was to come in the '28 Olympics where he won two gold medals (400-meter run and as a member of the 1600-meter relay team), the only American to cop two in track and field.

He entered the Army in World War II as a private and emerged as a major, serving in the European and China-Burma-India theaters, receiving the Air Medal, Bronze Star and a Presidential Unit Citation.

Barbuti is presently deputy director of the N.Y.S. Civil Defense Commission. He officiated at more than 500 varsity and bowl football games and in 1963 was elected to the Helms Foundation Hall of Fame.

Fogg also earned three letters each in track and football and was captain of the latter in 1911. He ran on two SU teams that won the IC4A mile relay title.

Following graduation, he was an assistant football coach at his alma mater for two years. He served in World War I and commanded in infantry company in the Battle of the Argonne. His outstanding service earned him the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix deGuerre from France.

He was active in fire insurance ratings in New York and Ohio. He is now retired.

A member of the varsity water polo and swimming team, Leonard appeared in nearly 150

Campus Chest

Fraternity parties mark the advent of Campus Chest Weekend. Campus Chest, originally known as the War Chest Fund, began in 1942.

Success for Chest or bust

Perspective on Campus Chest

By KAREN WIEDIGER
Campus News Editor

What is this weekend called Campus Chest? Like all other major weekends at Syracuse University, its purpose is to provide entertainment and fun for students. However, the main purpose of Campus Chest is to raise money which is given to various organizations that would not otherwise be able to operate effectively.

The concept of Campus Chest began in 1942 when the war conditions brought increased pleas for money. By contributing to Campus Chest, funds were raised separately from any city or county drive. It was a completely autonomous organization which students could support with the knowledge that their money would be going to a specific cause instead of being spread over several areas.

During the first years, it was called the War Chest Fund and the student donations were given to the World Student Fund Service and the Syracuse Community Chest.

In recent years, the money has gone to such organizations as Leadership Through Education, Florence Flood Relief and Operation Crossroads Africa.

In 1966, a new idea for the weekend was begun. Various dormitory floors and Greek houses held parties or sponsored some type of activity both Friday and Saturday nights. One ticket for the entire weekend enabled students to attend as many of these parties as they wanted.

The idea is being continued this year. The money collected from the sale of tickets goes directly to Campus Chest, while the houses and floors hold parties and pay for the entire cost themselves. This serves as their donation to Campus Chest and to the weekend.

A queen contest is also run as part of the activities. Students pay to vote for a contestant and the profits from this also go

'Greatest benefactor'

Archbold: not just the name of a stadium

By BILL ROBINSON

The Syracuse Orange meets the UCLA Bruins today in Archbold Stadium. Of course, everyone knows this. Anyone who attends the game will probably comment on the stadium's age; and, possibly, quite a few Syracuse football fans will offer as a condolence the fact that when the stadium was officially dedicated in 1907 it was the first concrete grid theater in the country. But how many people know anything about Syracuse's "greatest benefactor."

John D. Archbold, millionaire, philanthropist and "Oil King," contributed during his lifetime around $3 million to Syracuse University. He also served the university during its early development as a member of its Board of Trustees for 30 years— holding the post of president from 1893 until his death.

A close personal friend of Chancellor James R. Day (1873-1922), Archbold gave the university $375,000 in 1909 to remove the mortgage on the campus necessitated by the building of a gymnasium. Through the following years, he presented Sims Hall as a men's dorm, donated the old oval-now the quandrangle-and was known to have made up deficits in the university's budget

Archbold Stadium, begun in 1906 and finished in 1908, was officially dedicated in 1907 when the Orange played host to Hobart College. At its dedication, it was—in sports circles—a source of intense discussion. Although it must seem humorous to those who find themselves tightly packed into the stands at today's game, when the stadium was first built, university officials were worried about filling its 40,000 seats.

Born in Leesburg, Ohio in 1848, Archbold soon found that any success he would achieve in life had to be gained by hard work, drive and big ideas. At 16, he decided to seek his fortune in the newly discovered oil fields of Pennsylvania.

Traveling to Titisville, the metropolis of the oil boom at that period, he started work as a clerk for one of the largest oil dealing houses and in three years, at age 19, was taken into a partnership. His superors recognized him as a man who knew the oil industry from every angle.

Becoming acquainted with John D. Rockefeller, Archbold became a director of the Standard Oil Corp. in 1875. After the national corporation was disbanded in 1911, he became president of the New Jersey Standard Oil Co.

When Archbold died in 1916, at the age of 68. Chancellor Day, before he left to officiate at the funeral, suspended classes for the day. A Memorial Service was held at Crouse College, where he was eulogized as SU's "greatest benefactor."

Archbold and Lawrinson

Lawrinson looms above the southwest corner of Archbold Stadium as spectators watch Syracuse beat Maryland last week. For a story on Lawrinson, please turn to page 7.

Sportsmanship for suburb and slum

Athletics at Syracuse University have a long and distinguished history. Hill coaches have produced many outstanding teams in the minor sports while basketball and football teams have been consistently challenging and victorious.

But it was not always so. In the 1870's, informal scrub games made up the University's athletic program. Then, following a slashing editorial in the "University Herald" entitled "Shall We Boat?," two enterprising students stepped forward to found the SU crew team.

The chronicler of SU history, Professor Galpin, tells us "While no official veto came from the Chancellor's office, it was common gossip Dr. Winchell frowned upon the proposed regatta and generally questioned the value and expediency of all 'muscular sports.'"

Despite the doubts of Chancellor Winchell, the students persisted. With great labor seven hundred dollars was raised to build a boat house. Another obstacle was simply reaching the boat house site, three miles from the University. Streetcars and the old Liverpool Stage carried the prospective crew team to what is now Hiawatha Boulevard. From there they walked through the salt works, then Syracuse's chief industry. The final leg of the journey was made by rowboat since the area of the boat house site was under water during the spring.

For some reason the rumored race between Syracuse and Cornell never materialized.

Since those destitute times athletics at SU have prospered. So has SU. It has grown to assets approaching $170 million. Its graduate and undergraduate enrollment may reach 20,000 in a few years.

Perhaps those students who most enjoy a football game on a Saturday afternoon or a basketball game on a Saturday evening belong to the "silent majority" that both presidential candidates seem so concerned about.

The majority of students never demonstrate. They never seize an administration building or capture a DOW recruiter.

Like the silent majority in the suburbs, we too are concerned about law and order. But we are also concerned about justice. While we resent the emotional extremism of the cult of the demonstrators, we realize the "silent majority" is better off than ever before. And we would like to see the principles of sprotsmanship extended after Saturday to the slums as well as the suburbs.

Coming up

Frosh elections

Thus far, freshmen have undergone three weeks of confusion at Syracuse, adjusting to the new environment, making the transition from high school student to "college man." One can expect this period of settling in to be difficult because the freshman is changing his entire way of life.

In about one week, another period of confusion will begin — freshmen elections.

The process of electing class officers is regarded by many as a joke, and often the result of the voting is a joke. In recent years, several of the Freshman Class presidents have flunked out of school during their terms of office.

These elections need not be exercises in humor. They can be meaningful. Responsible people must run and responsible people must be elected. Admittedly, this is not easy. 2400 freshmen are being asked to choose one leader among several candidates, most of whom are completely unknown. Students will therefore probably vote in blocks, casting ballots for candidates who live in their dorms, not for those who would make good leaders.

The solution to this problem lies in the candidates themselves. They will set the tempo of the campaign and determine whether it will be serious and mature or fraudulent and childish.

The candidates, therefore, must address themselves to the issues. They must discuss their goals, and reason, not hysteria should dominate their discussions. Those seeking office should not confuse the already muddled election with fantastic promises to eliminate curfews and beer regulations. Rather, let them propose constructive programs, such as organizing discussion groups and tutoring programs. Let them demonstrate they want to get involved with their class, rather than attempt to fool it with unrealistic promises and goals.

Perhaps soon those unrealistic promises will be met, but any degree of realism would dictate that a freshman president cannot do it. He can unify his class. He can give it constructive direction by organizing such tutoring and discussion activities. He can lead it into becoming the most concerned, involved class in this institution, or he can do nothing.

The students must choose their president, and in so doing they choose the kind of class they want to be at Syracuse.

Bailey speech

To the Editor,

There has been a disturbing tendency of late to draw historical analogies between acts of intolerance in contemporary America and the pattern of state-sponsored terror and suppression under the Third Reich. Historical analogies, when carefully made, may be utilized to stimulate responsible thought by pointing out broad similarities between recent and past events or trends within a reasonable context. It is doubtful whether the analogy made by Dean Stephen K. Bailey in his Maxwell Convocation speech of September 30, likening hecklers and oppressors of academic freedom to "Nazi book-burners," was either carefully drawn or has initiated a significant degree of responsible thought.

Such comparisons have been traditionally used by the Marxian "old left," and have been employed more recently by the militant new left and even the revived right. Their effect often has been to create polarization based on emotion rather than enlightenment based on the sound use of history. It should be noted with regret that respected liberals have also begun to employ the symbol of the swastika, even though it be in a negative attempt to discredit those who Dean Bailey believes would "replace traditional tyrannies with the proximate tyrannies of (their) own passionate willfulness."

Certainly free speech, whether in the form of a formal presentation by George Wallace or Hubert Humphrey, or demonstrations by the new left, must be protected as our most preferred freedom. The key problem is to evaluate at what point the right to dissent becomes an unreasonable obstacle to the open exchange of ideas, or indeed, if a "rule of reason" should even be applied to an area such as free speech in political campaigning.

In comparing the alienated hecklers of presidential candidates to book-buring Nazis, Dean Bailey has failed to utilize history in a responsible manner and has shed little light on the issue of the limits of free speech and dissent. Indeed, it is possible that through a distorted analogy of intolerant and impolite youths in contemporary America and Nazi totalitarians, the polarization of American political attitudes has been increased rather than diminished.

To the editor:

I was returning from class today and passed a boy, obviously a student, talking casually to a friend. This boy wasn't particularly outstanding except for the fact that he had a strip of the American flag tied around his neck like a scarf and trailing down his back.

I hope this boy realizes how many of his peers are defending that flag all over the world so that he can walk around freely exhibiting such poor taste. And exhibiting is all that he's doing, probably because he has no better way to draw attention to himself.

As I follow Czechoslavakia, her young people so united, so determined, I can't help but wonder if in the same situation this boy wouldn't just let his country die.

I realize how corny patriotism is today but as an American citizen, I was both repulsed and insulted by his display.

I am embarrassed to admit that this boy lives in my country much less attends my school as his actions make such a terrible impression on our foreign students. I only hope this boy is proud of his flag.

Middle-East

To the Editor:

Having just read Rami Khouri's letter, I can envision the flood of letters descending upon your office with the next mail. Lamentably, most of it will be pro-Arab letters from Arabs and pro-Israeli from Jews.

Yes, Americans are subject to a barrage of Zionist propaganda; as are Israelis; and as Arabs are bombarded by their own.

Dissent in print, by a Jew to the Jewish position, or an Arab to the Arab position is an essential first step towards the education and eventual rapprochement of the two.

And Amos Canaan in Yediot Aharanot of Tel Aviv, "...there are two sides, both of which are right...both have rights in it."

In the stands

Scenes of the spectators

By JOAN TULLY

"And a crowd of 35,000 filled Archbold today as the Orangemen..."

One of the 35,000, a grey-haired women, sitting on a cushion, wrapped in a fur coat, and clutching an umbrella in one hand is biting her fingernails on the other. "Look at that guy run, will ya, Helen?" her husband jumps up beside her. But she can't take her eyes off the guy in front of her taking two swigs from a flask for every one he gives his girlfriend. He's wearing bluejeans, blue socks, blue jacket, weejuns, and sideburns—just like the boy her little Mary-Anne is sitting with in the end zone. She takes her fingers out of her mouth long enought to say, "Yes, dear."

"It'll be over soon, dear," Mr. Atkinson assures his wife. She pulls her gloves up, glances at Mrs. Barrs, and stares attentively at the dirt on the fullback's left leg. Mr. Barrs, her husband's senior partner, and Mr. Atkinson stand up roaring and cracking each other on the back as that leg crosses the goal line. Mrs. Atkinson smiles enthusiastically at Mrs. Barrs. The men sit down again and Mr. Barrs leans over to whisper, "It's almost over, dear."

A few sections over in student seating a freshman taps a fellow classmate on the shoulder: "Ah, er, I believe you're in our seats."

"Cool it, frosh, we're not."

"Oh, sorry."

"Right."

Most of the freshmen sit in placard cheering seats. They pin laundry slips to and into each other, shift and drop placards, number them for their color-blind classmates, and somehow manage to flip the right one at the right time. Even they wonder how.

But it's a great way to watch the game—best seats in the stadium. Paul, a forestry student unaccustomed to sitting next to girls, spends the first half worrying how he'll flip the card without bumping elbows with the girl on his left and without poking the ribs of the girl on his right, while keeping a stern eye on his trick knee so it won't jump into the back of the girl in front of him.

"Excuse me, but I think our seats are in placard cheering, and I believe you are in them."

"We're not, frosh," the group of beanied upperclassmen assure him and turn back to spelling out their own cheers:

"For an S, let's all hold up our orange cards."

"But we have to hold them up in an S shape."

"Okay, so Joe, Art, Rick, and you two hold 'em up."

"How about the I?"

"Well, flip the S down, and you four hold up an I."

"Wouldn't it be easier if the same guys did all the letters and just switch seats real quick so it'll come out right? We get confused."

Closer to the end zone:

"Er, exuse me but..." the freshman reluctantly taps a guy with binoculars sticking out of his eyes.

"Can't you see I'm looking for her. I'm telling you, I can't find her anywhere. And she's gotta be here; she hasn't missed a game in two years. She loves football. I'm gonna check every inch of this stadium 'til I find her, she's got some nerve..."

Meanwhile, in the next section, a group of enthusiastic fraternity men raise their flasks to a new cheer they've composed, as one carried out a bluejeaned, blue jacketed, sideburned brother:

"Little more to go, little more to go, yer!

"Get it down, get it down, there,

"We know you can, we know you can,

"Little Mary-Anne, dear!"

"And a crowd of 35,000 filled Archbold today as the Orangemen..."

New Left politics

By ALAN STAMM
News Editor

Perhaps it is more fabrication than spontaneity, but Presidential campaigns seem to generate a quadrennial excitement and re-evaluation of priorities. This fever has not spared campus protestors, who are realizing what can be accomplished by working within "the system."

Instead of belaboring the futility of politics, two of SU's New Left groups are in the midst of active campaign efforts.

People for Freedom and Peace (PFP) are backing Dick Gregory's Presidential drive, which is recognized in New York and ten other states. Closer to home, however, PFP is boosting Dale Tussing's congressional bid on the Liberal Party ticket. Tussing, 33, is associate professor economics at SU. He has endorsed Gregory, and both will be appearing here Oct. 13.

The Peace and Freedom Party, also active here, is pushing for the election of Eldridge Cleaver, minister of information for the Black Panther Party.

This political preoccupation is best illustrated by the radicals' disregard of Dow Chemical's impending visit. Dow, the nation's only producer of napalm, will recruit here Oct. 18.

Last term's demonstration against Dow recruiters caused early closing of the Placement Center and was one root of an Administration Building sit-in.

This time, however, it appears likely that no sizable demonstration will be mobilized. Besides being too busy with other projects, PFP leader Dave Morton conceeds that "Dow is far from the only firm with Vietnam contracts. We can't picket them all."

PFP and SDS, however, will find time to picket Monday night's appearance here by Sen. Edmund Muskie, Democratic candidate for vice president. Plans for that protest will be formulated at a 2 p.m. meeting tomorrow in PFP headquarters, 171 Marshall St.

Distinguished historian Henry Steele Commager has observed, "The answer to student protest and revolt is not hysteria or suppression. Students have something to say — something important for all of us, and we should not deny ourselves the benefit of their protest or advice because we do not approve of their manners."

Sometimes sloppy or silly, often idealistic and irrational, this movement still may represent the true voice of 1968.

Danforth fellowships

College seniors or recent graduates interested in a career in college teaching and in earning a Ph.D. may be eligible for Danforth Graduate Fellowships, according to Arthur J. Fritz, Syracuse University director of financial aid.

The applicants must be under 30 and not have done graduate work or professional study beyond the bachelor's degree. About 120 fellowships will be awarded in March 1969, Fritz said. All nominations must come to the Danforth Foundation from a University liaison officer such as Fritz.

Fellows chosen are eligible for four years of financial assistance with a maximum annual living stipend of $2,400 for single persons and $2,950 for married students, plus tuition and fees. Financial need is not a condition for consideration, Fritz said.

Fritz will make his nominations to the Danforth Foundation by Nov. 1.

Traditions of Syracuse Distinguish it from others

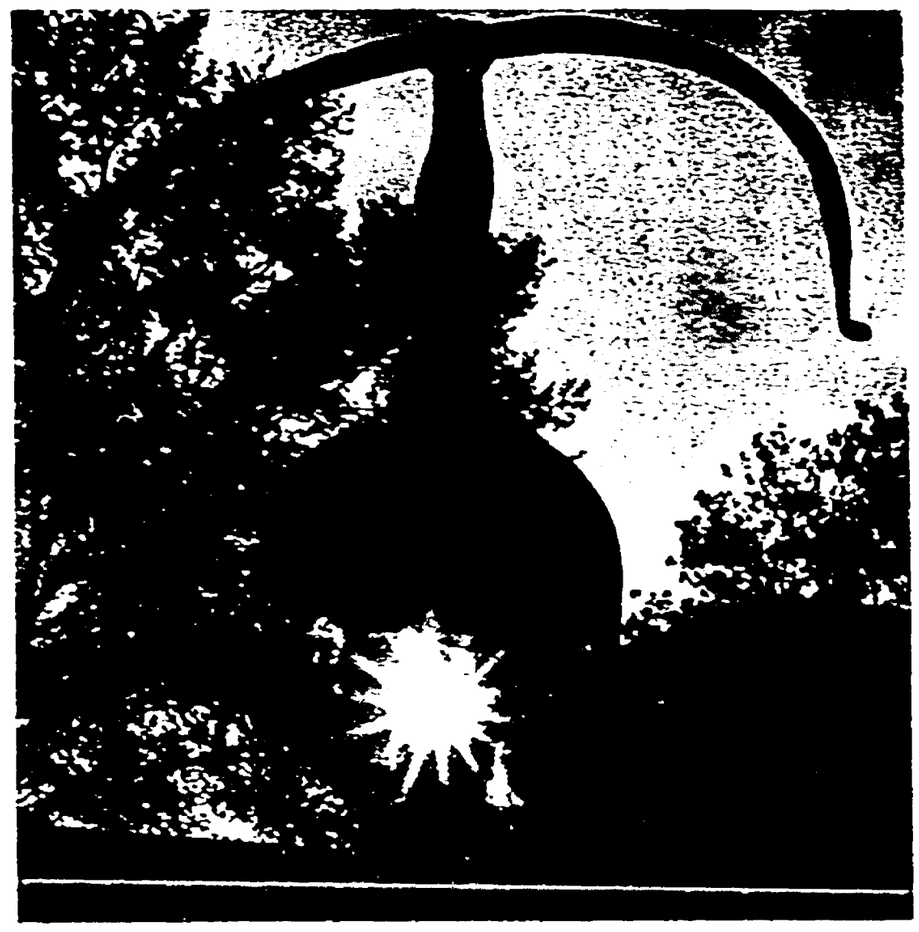
Syracuse, like many other universites, has a quadrangle. It has a chapel, cheerleaders and a Chancellor. Yet Syracuse is like no other university in the world.

For what makes Syracuse different from all other universities is the tradition that has become an integral and meaningful part of its existence.

As the university grows, so does the collection of memories that we call tradition. The first Syracuse custom that you will participate in as freshmen is the wearing of the beanie that will distinguish you from the "lofty" upperclassmen. For seventy years the beanie has been the badge of the freshmen.

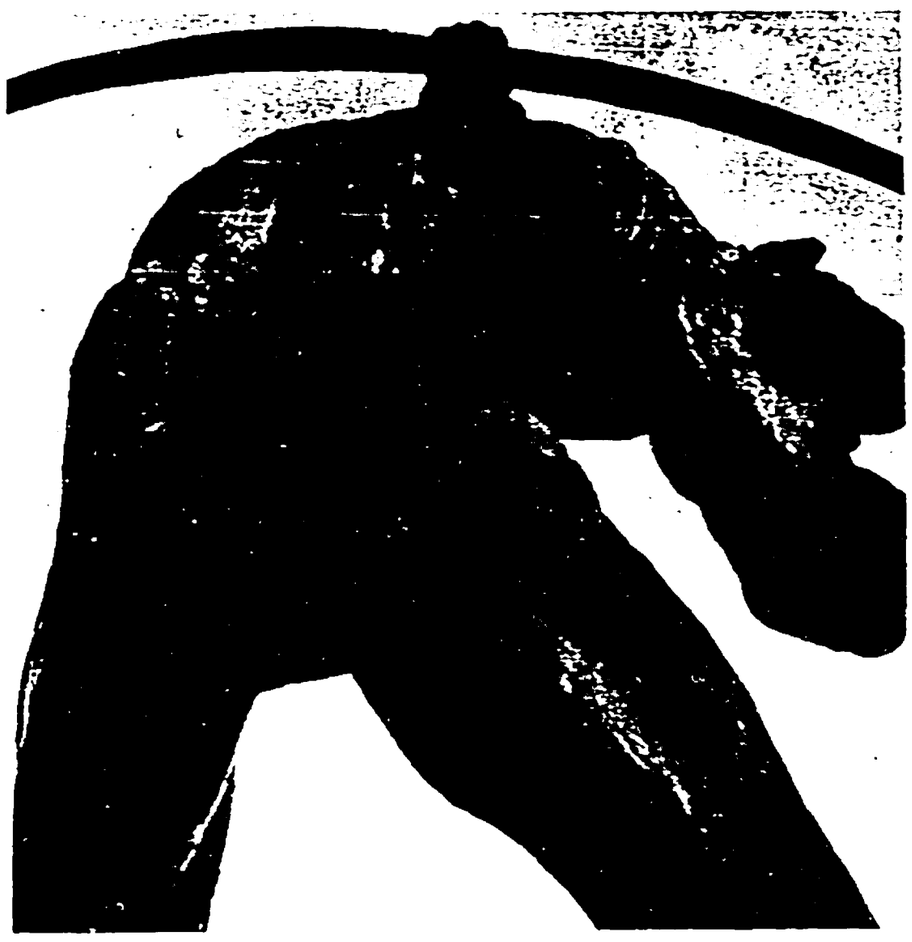
The orange of the beanie is itself one of Syracuse's oldest traditions. In 1872, the alumni association adopted rose pink and pea green as the school colors. The next year azure was chosen to replace the "dainty" green. These colors gradually became plain pink and blue, representing the "blue of heaven" and the "rose of sunset." But in 1890 still another change was made. The first and as of today the only major college to adopt one single official color, Syracuse took over the orange as it own. It was chosen to represent the gold apples of Hesperia, the glory of the sunrise and the hope for a golden future. Blue is used as an unofficial complenentary color whenever necessary.

Originally known as "Bill Orange," the Syracuse University mascot is now referred to as the "Saltine Warrior." This warrior stands guard over the Quad in the form of a bronze statue. This statue was a gift to the university by the Class of 1951. His live counterpart provides part of the color at Hill football games and has followed Syracuse teams across the country to urge them on to victory.



Walking on campus at noon, you will hear the chimes ringing from old Crouse tower. This tradition is as old as its home. The bells have been rung daily since 1899, the year that John Crouse Memorial College was built. A concert follows every home football game played in Archbold Stadium. As the fans surge out of the stadium and across campus, the Saturday concert ends with the tolling of the score. This custom began in 1928 after the Colgate game and has become the traditional finale to a football afternoon.

At five o'clock each afternoon the Alma Mater issues forth from the Tower. The Syracuse University school song dates back to 1893 when it was written by Junios W. Stevens. He received his inspiration from the effect the setting sun shining on the walls of Crouse College "long after dusk had fallen over the city and the valley."



Much of the tradition of the university can be located geographically. A brass sculpture of the Greek goddess Diana in the front foyer of the Main Library has been a good luck symbol for hundreds of Hill students. By rubbing the paw of Diana's dog and reciting a short prayer, students are supposedly assured of success on any examination. This sculpture was a gift to the university in 1932.

The stone bench next to the Hall of Languages is the source of one of the University's most romantic traditions. It is said that any girl who is kissed while sitting there will be assured of marriage.

There are many more traditions that you will come to know and recognize as uniquely "Syracusan." It is this wealth of tradition that sets this university apart from all others.

Campus Chest . . .

directly to Campus Chest.

In 1951, the idea of a carnival was conceived. Rides and booths were set up on the quad and it served to create an aura for meeting people. The following year the Campus Chest committee strung a rope which began at the main library. The purpose of this was to paste a dime donation on it and see how much could be collected. When the weekend ended, the rope stretched from Archbold Stadium to Sims Hall.

Marshall Street merchants helped with the next weekend in the Wet Noodle Contest. A jar was filled with wet noodles and the idea was to guess how many were in it. Coupons were given to the winners and could be cashed on Marshall Street after the weekend.

1955 saw yet another addition to the carnival. A booth was set up and faculty members were sold at auction to the highest bidder. The winners were then given their very own professor for an evening, to do with as they wished. The outcome of this was that professors cleaned fraternity houses, typed English papers and one even served as a waiter in Sims Dining Hall.

In recent years, some other additions to the carnival were a fashion show, and various jazz groups performed. One year a poster contest was held. Students could contribute as much as they wanted, and in return, their names were placed on posters on campus. The more a student gave, the larger his name appeared on a poster.

That same year also saw wishing wells set up during the carnival, and Campus Chest sponsored 10 different activities throughout the year.

For several years after that, a type of Monte Carlo Night was held. The Greek houses opened their doors to everyone and showed movies and set up games of skill.

In 1966 the idea of a carnival was abandoned because of the rising costs in renting rides and other activities. Some houses are still using the idea of a casino this year, while others have come up with different types of parties and mixers.

Although the format for Campus Chest weekend has changed, the idea behind it is still the same. Campus Chest has survived for 26 years because of many hard working people who are willing to give of their time to benefit others.

Because Campus Chest does not get a budget from the Social Committee, the success of the organizations depends entirely on the endeavors and support of the student body.

No definite goal has been set this year, according to co-chairman Joey Edwards. However, she believes that about $2,000 will be made on the weekend and close to $300 will be received from the queen contest. Also, it has not been decided which organizations will benefit from Campus Chest this year.

Operation volunteer

Aid for agencies

Operation Volunteer has a problem. It is continually telling people Operation Volunteer is a standing committee of the University Religious Council. It recruits students to work for two to three hours per week in one of a number of city service agencies.

But many students say, "I still don't understand the program. Be more specific." It is hard for the staff to be specific, however, "because the program is associated with various city agencies that have asked the Volunteer Center of downtown Syracuse for more volunteer workers. Naturally the program varies from agency to agency," according to a spokesman.

Operation Volunteer has two aims. One is to better the community through the work of community service agencies. The other is to aid the student by providing him with the chance to work in service agencies and to bring the agencies together so the student can find an agency in the area of his interest.

These aims are accomplished through an on-campus drive, to be held Tuesday and Wednesday.

Interested students may go to Chapel House, 711 Comstock Ave. where they will be interviewed by people from the Volunteer Center. Students' questions will be answered in these interviews, and they will be able to sign up for a particular agency at this time.

General areas of service include: nursery and child care, youth and adult programs (including tutoring), United Campaign assistance, senior citizens' programs, help for the handicapped, health services, motor services for clinic patients and meal delivery, office and project aides, and U.S.O. hostesses.

Monument to parents

Lawrinson Hall: landmark in Syracuse

By MARK MASTERSON

Lawrinson, Hall, twenty-one layers of luxury, is the monument to the emigrant parents of Ronald K. Lawrinson visible over the southwest corner of Archbold stadium.

The dormitory, built between May and December 1964, became the city's second tallest skyscraper. It can be seen from almost any point in Syracuse where there is a break in the landscape. It is the first part of the Syracuse skyline a visitor sees on his approach from the south. At night the glow from its hundreds of bronze-tinted windows makes it a brilliant landmark to the passing traveler on Route 81.

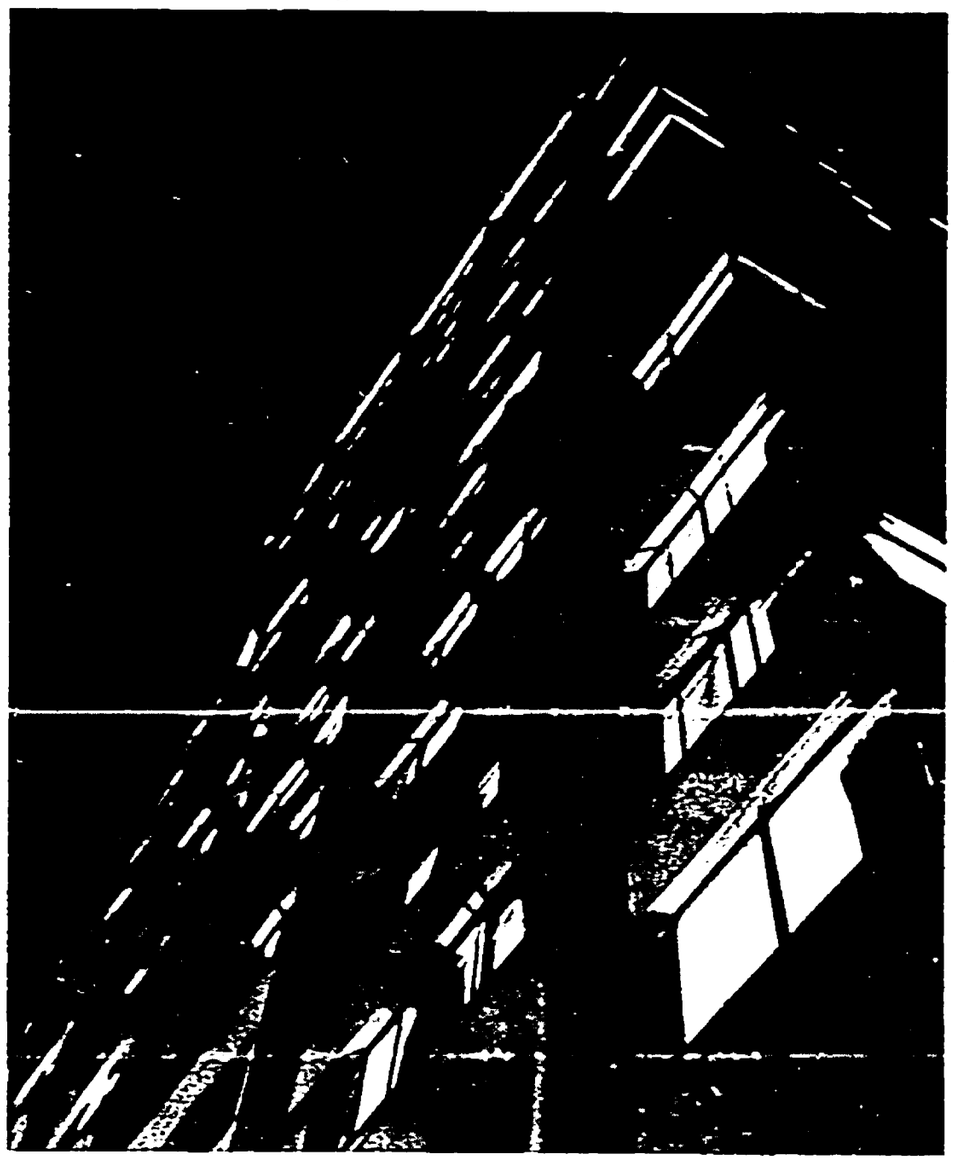
The second floor lounge where movies are sometimes shown to residents on weekends has the library with the second largest book capacity of any dorm library on campus. The new St. Mary's site contains a dorm library with a larger capacity.

Designed by Syracuse University architects, King and King, the 208-foot tall building is the home of 548 men including 65 freshmen and a majority of sophomores, Each floor houses 31 to 32 beds, a floor lounge, study room, bath area and kitchenette.

Designers sought a small dorm atmosphere with about 30 students on a floor. The rectangular layout of each floor was intended to create smaller, more personal living conditions.

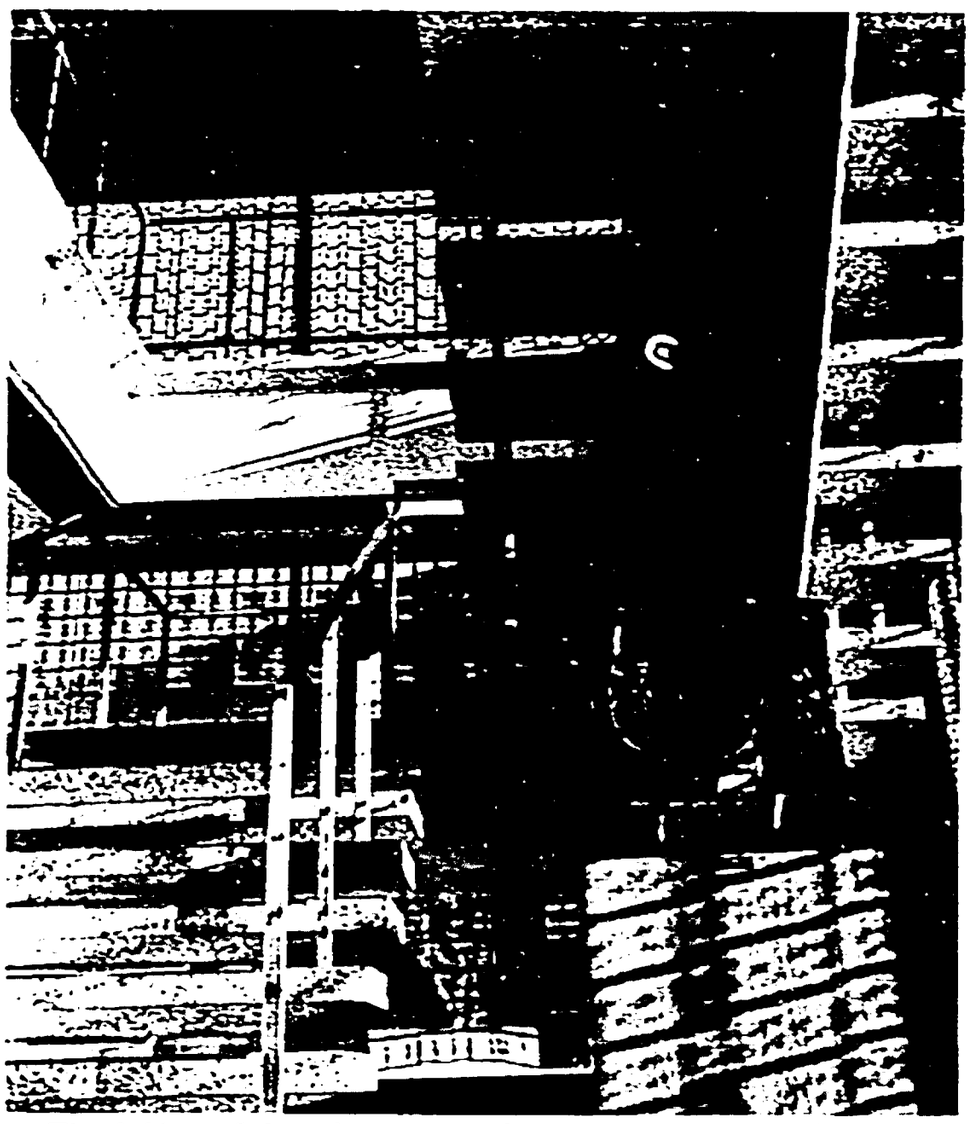
The top floor of the dorm is a penthouse lounge offering a commanding view of the city, especially striking at night.

There are two floors of underground parking for 164 cars. An underground tunnel connects Lawrinson with Sadler Hall where residents of Lawrinson eat meals.



Construction of the "tower dorm" cost $4.4 million. It was dedicated at a brief ceremony presided over by Chancellor William P. Tolley November 6, 1965.

Ronald K. Lawrinson, chief benefactor of the building, died March 7, 1965 at the age of 73, four months after the dedication of the building. He visited Lawrinson Hall only once.



The Chancellor described Lawrinson as a friend and benefactor of the University "who is particularly interested in higher education because he had to go to work as a boy of 17 and never had the opportunity to attend a university."

The building was dedicated to his parents, William Henry and Elizabeth Morris Lawrinson, British emigrants.

Born in Camden, N.J., Ronald Lawrinson was one of five children. He graduated from Camden Commercial College and in 1910, joined the Turner and Westcott Dairies of Philadelphia, Pa. as a bookkeeper. By 1922 he was secretary-treasurer and later acquired a controlling interest in the company. In 1957 he retired as company president.

The "tower dorm" rises 208 feet into the night. Its hundreds of bronze-tinted windows make it a prominent landmark in the city at night.

The lobby of Lawrinson contains a modern piece of sculpture beneath the stairway leading to the second floor lounge.

Orange, Bruins to tangle again

By LARRY CENTER

Last year Syracuse finished off its 8-2 season by upsetting Gary Beban and the UCLA Bruins, 32-14, in what Ben Schwartzwalder calls "the best game Syracuse has ever played, based on what we had and what we got out of them."

The Orange will be hoping for a repeat performance this afternoon when the speedy Bruins invade Archbold as a slim favorite.

Although UCLA lost 13 of 22 starters, they are still a powerful team. They opened the season by trouncing Pitt, 63-7, and then topped Washington State, 31-21. This week the Uclans were ranked fourth in the AP poll and ninth by the UPI.

The Bruin defense, according to end coach and scout Joe Szombathy, "is very solid with excellent strength at linebacker. They're touting Mike (Cat) Ballou for All-America and he's worthy of all the praise he's been getting. Mark Gustafson is a great defensive half and he can run back punts, too."

Ben also complimented the UCLA defense. "Its big and quick. The front four are big and strong, and shed blocks very well. The whole defense has great shot power," he said.

Along with Ballou, the leaders of this unit are end Larry Agajanian (6'4", 249), senior tackle Hal Griffin and last year's great soph, Floyd Reese (6'2", 219). Szombathy said SU won't meet "any other team so quick, with such great pursuit."

The big questionmark for UCLA in today's game is quarterback Bill Bolden, who injured his shoulder in the win over Pitt. Ben says of Bolden, "He's a big fast boy with 9.5 speed who scrambles and throws the ball extremely well. He threw a 92-yd. pass against us last year." Coach Tommy Prothro doesn't think his qb will play, but Ben said earlier this week that "Bolden is coming on the trip, and Prothro doesn't bring any deadheads."

If Bolden can't go, the likely starter will be Jim Nader, a transfer student who was red-shirted last year. Szombathy said that Nader "is a fine quarterback. He's about 6'3", 190 lbs. He threw for 4 tds against Pitt, and he can run, too. For a sub, he was great, but they're a different team without Bolden."

UCLA has speed to spare on offense with halfback Greg Jones and Rick Purdy the leading rushers. Other speedboys include ends Hal Busby (9.4), 6'5" Ron Copeland (9.6) and halfback George Farmer (9.6).

Commenting on the Bruins' favorite play, Ben said, "Their bread-and-butter play is the off-tackle. Purdy is a teriffic blocker, very strong, probably the best fullback we'll see all year."

Behind Jones is heralded soph Mickey Cureton, who scored 76 tds in high school. Szombathy calls him "the next Floyd Little. He can stop on a dime and accelerate immediately."

An added weapon is kicker Zenon Andrusyshyn, who led the country in punting last year and can hit from the 45.

Syracuse has its own inury problem for today's clash. Ben said earlier, "Our biggest problem is at tailback. Trask is capable of doing the job, but he hasn't practiced because of that sore foot." If Trask can't play, soph Jon Godbolt, who averaged five yards a carry last week, will replace him.

Paul Paolisso was hurt last Saturday, and although he didn't start passing till late in the week, will probably start at quarterback. Al Newton and John Bulicz, who each played well against Maryland, will again open at fullback and wingback.

It will be up to the SU line to move the big Bruin defense and open up the holes. Ben says, "The line is coming along. Their learning and techniques are both improving. Last week they blocked and kicked out better."

On defense, Bill Smith, who had a good game against the Terps, will start at linebacker with Jerry Ruccio and Bob Bancroft. The line will remain intact, as will the deep three of Tony Ky, Tom Hermanowski and last week's star, Cliff Ensley.

UCLA is still a great team. As Ben said, "They have great speed, are beautifully-coached and execute very well. You name it and they've got it."

"We can't beat them on speed. They have 22 boys under 10 in the hundred to our one. Either we make no mistakes at all, which isn't possible, or we outhustle and outhit them."

The Orangemen played a super game in Los Angeles last year, and Ben feels "everybody has got to play up to the hilt again." The biggest crowd of the season, about 36,000, will be on hand to see if the Orange can do it and prove that last year's win was only a preview of things to come.

"CAN YOU PLAY?" Coach Ben Schwartzwalder asks his starting quarterback, Paul Paolisso. SU's leading passer was sidelined earlier in the week with shoulder and neck injuries, and did little throwing in preparation for UCLA. The Bruins also have a questionable quaterback, Bill Bolden.

SU frosh and Manlius washed out

For the first time in anyone's memory, a football game was called off on the Hill yesterday.

The scheduled game between the SU frosh and the Red Knights of Manlius Prep was cancelled long before its 2 p.m. kickoff. A deluge of rain hit Manley Field, where the game was to have been played, shortly after 11 a.m.

Tangerine coach Jim Shreve now has another week to ready his charges for what will now be their opening game, against the Navy Plebes next Saturday. The game will be played in Annapolis.

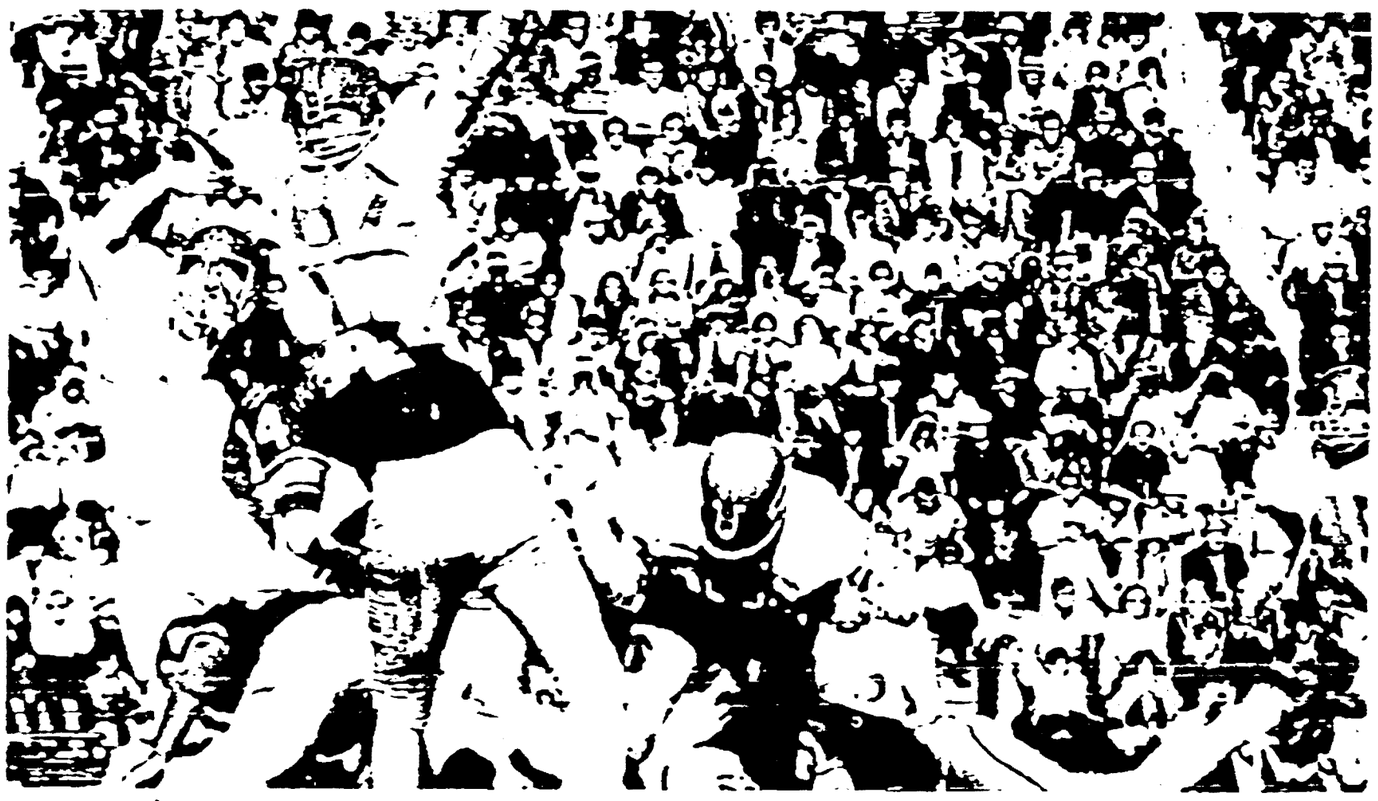
The washed out game has been rescheduled for Nov. 15, making it the last game of the season for both clubs.

The Manlius-SU game has always been the traditional rivalry for the Tangerines, who won last year, 38-14. Joe Ehrmann, a starter for the frosh, started for Whitey Anderson's Red Knights last season.

Grieve's harriers face Cornell today

By DOUG GARR

The cross-country team travels to Ithaca for a dual meet against Cornell today at the Ithaca Country Club course. This is the first dual for the Cornell harriers, while the Orangemen will be looking for their second straight win.



Last year Cornell nipped SU 26-29 in the last 200 yards. The Orange frosh won 28-29, however, so coach Bob Grieve figures this year's encounter to be another close one.

The varsity lineup will be the same one that defeated Buffalo in the opener. The sophomore-studded team will include Larry Zuller, Dave Crans, Dale Parfitt, Phil Riposo, Don Kunz, Bill Swift and Ken Frankel.

Grieve said that the Cornell course was not really a tough one. "It's pretty flat for the most part, but the last half mile goes into a steep gully and ends with a long hill."

The Big Red and the Orangemen have most of last year's team returning. Since last year's meet was close, it's safe to assume that this year's will go right down to the tape. Grieve said, "I don't think it will be a runaway either way. On paper the two teams look pretty equal." Declining to make any prediction, Grieve said that "it could go either way."

The frosh meet is scheduled for 11:30 a.m.

Bruins beaten, 20-7

Orange does it all in UCLA upset win

By ED AGRANOWITZ
And MIKE GREENSTEIN

Syracuse University's Hill normally does not have a great elevation, but its inhabitants were walking in the clouds on Saturday night, following the Orangemen's 20-7 upset win over fourth ranked UCLA.

The Orange overwelmed the Bruins in every facet of the game in posting its greatest home triumph since the Florida State win of 1966. In that game, Floyd Little led an inspired Syracuse team into the Gator Bowl. This time, the Orange accomplished its tremendous upset with a great team performance in which every player made a supreme effort.

Coach Ben Schwartzwalder had said before the game that it would take near-perfect execution on the part of his team to duplicate SU's victory over the Bruins in last season's finale. He got what he hoped for, and this time a crowd of over 37,000 loyal supporters was on hand to savor the victory.

No player will be singled out in the UCLA game for player-of-the-week honors, because the heroes were just too numerous.

The entire defensive unit played superb ball and stopped the Bruins' comeback tries when the Orange offense slowed down in the second half. All told, the Uclans had three drives in each half which carried them deep into Orange territory, yet they managed only one touchdown.

George Jakowenko, whose size equals the inverse of that of UCLA kicker Zenon Andrusyshyn's name, showed his highly touted counterpart a thing or two. Jakowenko got the Orange rolling with two first half field goals of 26 and 40 yards. The second, which carried over the goal post with a final sprint, gave the Orange a visible lift and a 6-0 halftime lead.

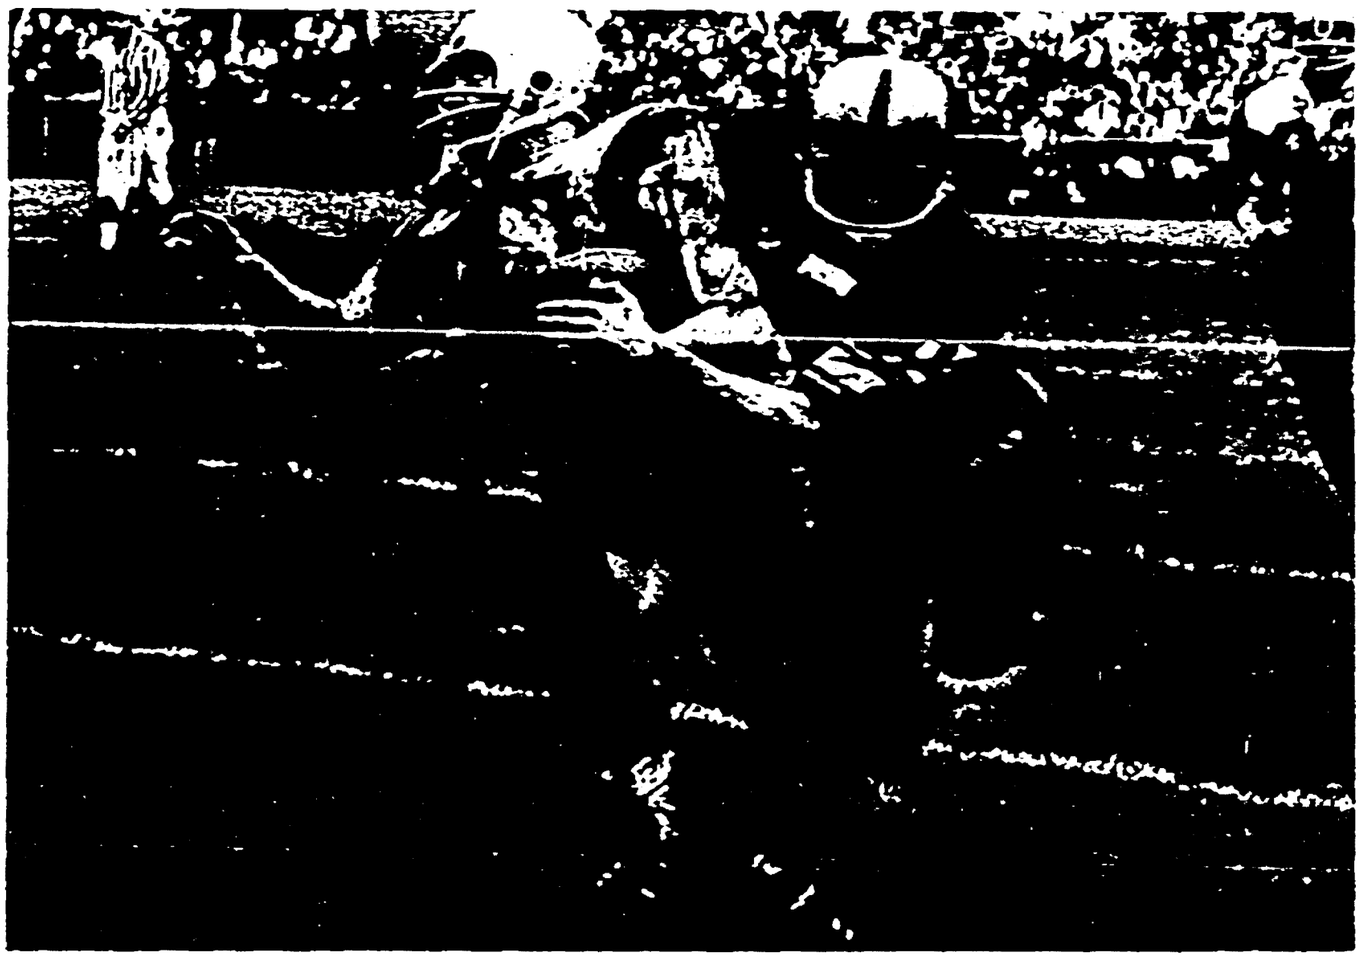
Fullback Al Newton enjoyed his most productive day of the season with 20 carries for 121 yards. Newton streaked for 26 yards on the second play of the game to get the team into good field position, and was instrumental in setting up both field goals.

Tailback John Godbolt showed UCLA some of his speed and finished with 89 yards in 15 tries. The "Lightning Bolt" tore for 32 yards at the end of the first quarter to get the Orange out of a hole and set up the first field goal. His twisting, off balance four yard touchdown run in the third period put SU ahead by 13-0.

Wingback John Bulicz ran the scissors play to perfection, as he gained 60 yards in only eight rushes.

And Bill Maddox had a big part in the drama. The burly end was the man of the hour when he fielded a UCLA onside kick and left the stunned Bruins in a cloud of dust with a 49 yard touchdown run. The Uclans had just closed to within 13-7, and the better part of seven minutes remained in the game.

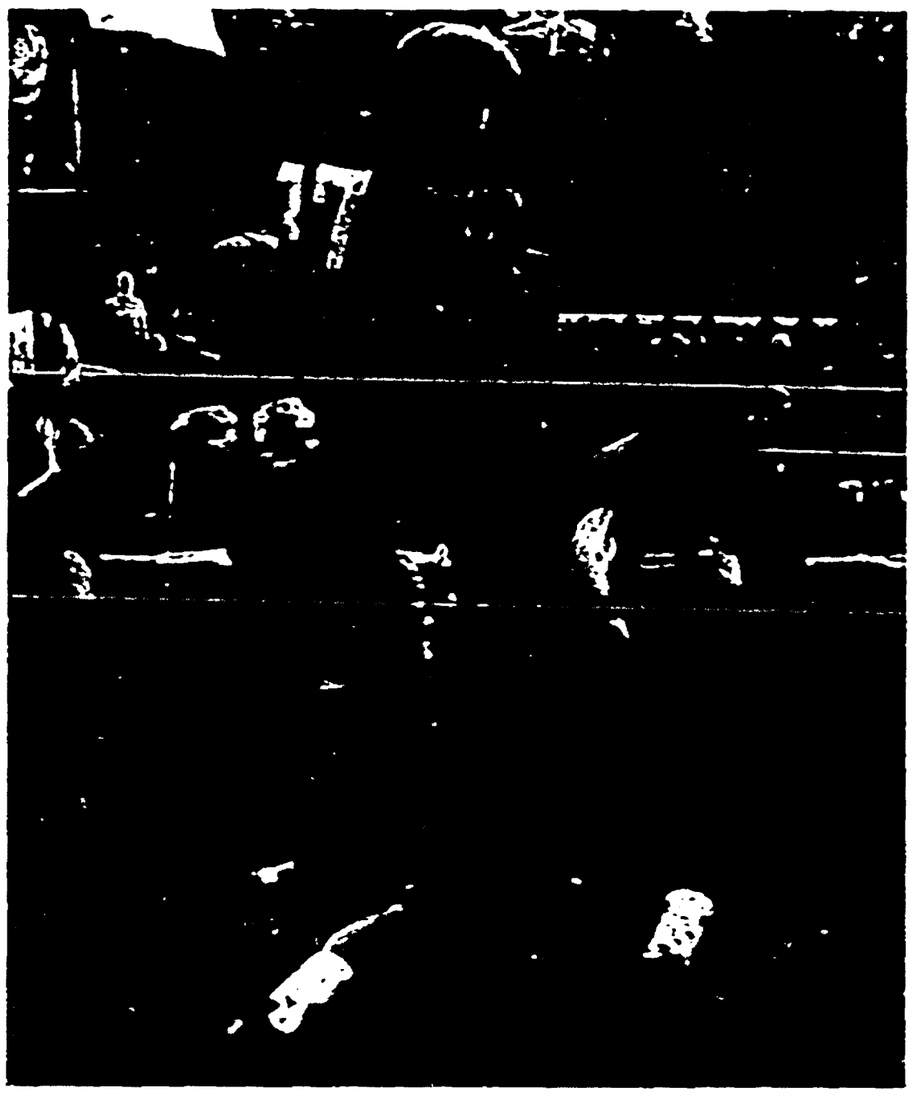
The offensive line, a questionmark at the season's start, played well against the rugged UCLA defense. The final total of 251 yards rushing for Syracuse was indicative of their performance. Quarterback Paul Paolisso praised his forward wall for its job. "The weather made us hold back with the passing (he hit 5 of 9 for 39 yds.)," said Paolisso, "but the line played its best game of the year and really made our ground game go."



The defense continually rose to the occasion to throw back Bruin scoring attempts. The line gang tackled well and helped hold UCLA to a mere 56 yards rushing.

Art Thoms took home the game ball and received help from his linemates Lou Gubitosa, Ray White, Gerry Beach, Steve Zegalia and Ron Womack.

Tony Kyasky played one-on-one against UCLA's two speed boys, Ron Copeland and Harold Busby. The Puma held this pair to a combined total of one reception for 11 yards.



Cliff Ensley chalked up two more interceptions, the first one being an end zone catch to halt a Bruin drive on the seven. The Gipper also helped Tom Hermanowski break up a pass in the end zone on a Bruin fake field goal late in the game. Hermanowski hawked his man all afternoon and had his best game.

UCLA, it must be said, played without the services of its first string quarterback, Bill Bolden. The speedy Bruins were also handicapped by the slippery Archbold turf, which had been soaked by a 24 hour rain that continued intermittently throughout the afternoon. But the sun came out just after the final gun had sounded, and no one could deny the Orange their place under it. The sophomores who made costly mistakes against Michigan State two weeks ago are fast maturing, and now have those two intangibles, confidence and momentum on their side.

Muskie arrives: stands reviewed

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, the man Vice President Hubert Humphrey hopes will "bridge many a gap and many a gulf here in the (Democratic) party," and thus boost a sputtering presidential campaign, is scheduled to speak at 11:15 this morning at Hendricks Chapel. Following are excerpts from speeches, interviews and statements by Muskie on domestic and national issues:

Vietnam: "I think it is appropriate for us to call for (NLF) participation in the second stage of negotiations and in elections following the end of the conflict;" The President "ought to be prepared to take some risks" on the question of halting the bombing, providing intelligence sources indicated such a move "could advance us one step further toward the negotiating table on substantive issues." Muskie supported the majority plank on Vietnam at the Democratic Convention.

Law and Order: "I think that the use of force, obviously in the police work, at times is essential, but I think it ought to be held in reserve and that more humane policies ought to be applied . . . there ought to be a policy of restraint."

Civil Rights: "It is my impression a substantial majority of the white people in this country recognize the injustice the Negro is suffering . . . and that they will support public policies and programs that are directed toward (correcting these injustices) . . . "

Kerner Commission . . . "basically it is correct in saying that we have out of our policies over the period of our occupation of this continent, developed policies toward the Negro people that have built a divided society."

Open Housing: "The time is now for Congress to pass a law insuring all Americans an equal choice in the selection of housing . . . We have at hand the means to make an immediate demonstration of faith to the Negro."

Supreme Court: "The decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court during the past decade on equal opportunity, on the protection of the accused, on the right to speak out, and more recently on reapportionment, stand out as a monument to the preservation of freedom." (A 1967 speech)

East-West Trade: "On the balance, it seems to me that it is in the national interest to have private traders sell wheat and wheat flour to the Soviet bloc . . . Yankee traders have always recognized that trade is a two-way proposition. We do not make one unless there is an advantage for us."

SDS demonstrations are reportedly planned for Muskie's appearance. Cliff Ensley, Orangemen safety, will present Muskie a football signed by the team. Those whising transportation to Humphrey's speech in Utica should call Cathy Finnelly at X2197 or visit the table at HBC today.

Muskie battles with opposition

SEN. EDMUND S. MUSKIE

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

A small group of hecklers disrupted a harried but firm Edmund S. Muskie yesterday as he brought his vice presidential campaign and its heavy security to the steps of Hendricks Chapel. Though interrupted several times by shouts, bullhorns and chanting, Sen. Muskie was able to deliver a somewhat abbreviated campaign address to the several thousand students gathered on the quad.

The center of attention for the few hecklers was a woman identifying herself as Mrs. Judy Mage. She claimed to be one of several regional candidates for vice president on the Peace and Freedom Party ticket headed by Eldridge Cleaver.

Addressing the crowd with a bullhorn before Muskie's arrival, Mrs Mage said she had come to challenge the Senator to a "formal structured debate." If he refused, she asked the crowd to chant "debate" until he agreed.

As soon as Muskie was introduced by Maxwell School Dean Stephen Bailey, chanting, boos and cheering simultaneously erupted. Several exchanges took place between Muskie, who was shouting over the microphones at the top of the stairs, and Mrs. Mage who shouted through a bullhorn from below.

While Mrs. Mage argued that she wanted a chance to debate right away, Sen. Muskie replied that he was "invited by the students of Syracuse University" and he intended to "speak to them and listen to them." He claimed that Mrs. Mage would have her chance to speak at the Peace and Freedom Party meeting scheduled for tonight. He said if she really wanted to debate with him, she should "write me a letter." The crowd roared its approval.

Sen. Muskie then began his speech, but was soon interrupted and engaged in another shouting match with Mrs. Mage. He again assaulted her tactics and her demands, and with the crowd's support, began once more.

Looking to the problems facing Americans in 1968, Sen. Muskie said we are a "bewildered society" that is "troubled, restless and insecure." In speaking of our nation's minorities, he said: "Those who do not have, want to share the fruits of freedom."

"Americans want to be free – free of meaningless restrictions, free from discrimination and free from fear." "There," he continued, "is the essence of the 1968 campaign."

Muskie dismissed Republican candidate Richard Nixon as a man interested in "political power, not social reform." He said George Wallace was also interested in power with his "emphasis on repression."

In looking to a chance for political reform, Muskie saw a "choice in 1968, but only the voters can make it." He thought that the political system could be improved and said today's problems were "results of apathy in the past."

Muskie's proposed political reforms included the following: 1) Lowering the voting age to 18, 2) providing for popular election of the president, 3) establishing a 1-man 1-vote regulation for the selection of delegates to state and national conventions, 4) and broadening the bases of participation in political parties to more directly

Students evaluate Nigerian question

By BOB STRUGATZ

Few civil wars have been as devestating to a nation, a people and civilians than the Nigerian-Bifran conflict. But the battle rages, the Biafrans convinced that to surrender would be suicidal, the Nigerians determined to thwart the Biafran secession attempt.

The Pan-African Student Association took up the question, which has aroused world-wide consternation, and sponsored a panel discussion on the Nigerian crisis Sunday. The panel was moderated by Edward Moyo, a radio-television student, and included Professor Julian Friedman from the political science department, Emmanuel Anise, a political science student from Nigeria, Monone Omosule, a history student also from Nigeria, and Barbara Lundquist, who spent the past summer in Nigeria.

Friedman, discussing the background leading to the present situation in Nigeria, said the Ibos, the inhabitants of the rebellious Biafra, had been the pioneers of Nigerian nationalism in a time when Nigeria was being "put together" for the economic advantage of Great Britain, and that it seemed ironic that they should now be seceding. He felt that neither the Biafran nor the Nigerian government was indeed legitimate, but that intervention from outside could have the effect either of a cease-fire, or of a needless increase in the crisis.

Anise spoke of the lack of democratic principles in Nigeria. He argued that since its independence, Nigeria has stressed no principle of unification, and that the Ibos have maintained a sort of exclusiveness. He declared, "No

Mage raps

Judith Mage, vice-presidential candidate for the Peace and Freedom Party, is scheduled to speak at 7:30 tonight on Hendricks Chapel's step s. An interview with Mrs. Mage will be broadcast at 6:30 p.m. over WAER.

Cottage hold-outs win compromise, secure voice in housing decisions

Meeting with Director of Men's Housing Jack Rade, three residents of Parson's Cottage yesterday worked out an "equitable solution" to the problem of being re-assigned to larger dorms.

The compromise entails a change in the existing Department of Housing structure to include students, in exchange for the departure of The Parsons residents on Wednesday.

Rade emphasized that he was in complete sympathy with students' desire to increase their participation in decision making, or at least voice opinions with the certainty that they will be considered.

The three representatives from Parsons, Martin Lieber, Doug Snelson and Bob Tembeckjian, conferred with Rade for an hour yesterday before it was determined that they would draw up a proposal to change the existing structure. The three indicated they would consult appropriate groups, such as the Inter-Dorm Council, before submitting their proposition. Rade promised to work for approval of the new system, if the plan presented is reasonable.

A rally in front of the cottage last night demonstrated student support for the men from Parsons.

Four cottage residents spoke to the crowd, informing them of events to date. After Charles Marshall read an original poem about the cottage, Steve Pimsler described the fight as one for human rights.

He said residents were not consulted about the decision to close Parsons prior to its having been made. Pimsler said the group petitioned Student Senate, which unanimously passed a resolution to investigate the situation and let members of the cottage remain until the investigation was complete.

Administrators, however, would not allow residents to remain. When a moving van arrived at 104 Walnut Place to evacuate them, the Parsonians refused. Rade met with the entire cottage that morning and said all of them could be expelled if they did not move.

After the cottage senator, Don Wolfson, spoke with the Speaker of the Student Senate and Dean of Student Services, the group again refused. They would remain, they said, "until their basic procedural rights could be guaranteed." Those rights were outlined in a sheet distributed around campus:

"1. Students have a right to lodge a complaint against administration policy.

"2. A formal board of students should decide whether the complaints are legitimate.

"3. If it is legitimate, it should then go to the Council on Student Life, and until a decision is made, no other administrative agency can act on the matter.

"The meeting with Mr. Rade accomplished our basic objectives," said Snelson at the rally. "We fought for procedural rights, and we are close to achieving them."

Tembeckjian was the concluding speaker, saying that

'Nightmare'

Grad hits Daley 'Gestapo'

By GREGORY SMITH

"The Democratic convention was a farcical exercise in futility that turned into a nightmare," declared LaVerne Newton, SU history graduate assistant, at a Young Citizens for O'Dwyer meeting last Thursday night.

Mentioning that he was speaking only for himself, Newton continued, "I can testify to the fact that things were as bad as you saw, if not worse. It was completely rigged."

Newton, discussing his political experiences during the summer, endorsed Connecticut Senator Abraham Ribicoff's statement that the Chicago police had used "Gestapo tactics" to quell demonstrators.

Hecklers mar Muskie's visit

Those who wish to win popular support to end the war saw yesterday the way not to do it.

The crowd of students gathered to hear Senator Edmund Muskie speak did not want an exhibition of political pleasantries, as their "don't put us on" reaction to the football presentation testified. The students assembled to hear him wanted to listen to his words and sample his themes.

The opportunity to do so was limited by the injections of hysteria by a handful of SU students and several non-students. Undoubtably there will be those who claim "heckling" is an accepted part of the democratic process. But what occurred yesterday, similar to what occurred during George Wallace's appearance here in 1967, was disruption rather than occasional barbed taunts or questions. Disruption of a candidate's right to speak cannot be defended as part of the democratic process or as part of any constructive process.

On the other hand, if Senator Muskie after the first few exchanges had decided to ignore his detractors, he could have delivered his message with a steady voice and even flow of rhetoric. He could have overcome the hysterical fringe through the sheer superiority of the amplification of his voice. Instead, he attempted to deal with them each time they disrupted him. In symbolic terms, it was not comforting to see a potential vice-president asserting the power at his command in an almost overbearing manner.

The main point remains. Senator Muskie's speech was disrupted and we regret this. Moreover, a fringe portion of those who oppose the war succeeded in inducing the opposite extreme, a backlash to their hysteria.

Jack and the library

Seed plot

By Abe Wagner

By now the sight of a drilling truck and the few pieces of equipment that surround it on the first block of Walnut Park are commonplace. So tight has the security been on this secret venture that even the most skeptic have come to regard this as routine soil testing.

In fact, it was not untill last week when the ground in the park began to swell, and an almost imperceptable change in the color of the grass led anyone to suspect the true nature of the work. In an exclusive interview with ex-workman Melvin Furbish, the following information has been gleaned.

The drilling that has been going on is not to test the soil at all. What the workmen are actually doing are planting special seeds deep beneath the ground. These seeds, according to Furbish, "are from selected concrete plants, and should grow into a full grown library within the next couple years."

Furbish continued, "we planted the first batch a year ago, to get the basement started, and they've just about finished their work." This should explain the swelling in the ground that is becoming visable now, and the change in the color of the grass. As the basement pushes up through the ground, it cuts off some of the room for the grass roots causing the change.

The crew that is over there now is planting another batch of the seeds that will grow into the upper stories of the building. If the rain keeps up for a good part of the Fall, as we think it might, the upper stories should be well on their way by Spring.

High Administrative sources initially declined comment on the entire library matter, but latter issued the following statement: "Since student anxiety over the construction of the New Library has grown to such an extent, we were naturally reluctant to announce such a radical and risky method of construction."

"Actually, this form of construction is quite old dating back to a man named Jack who was the first to use it. The plans for the new Library were done in the late beanstalk style, and at the predicted rate of anticipated growth the Bird-Seed Library will be completed in Spring of 1971."

With this plot now exposed, rumors are now growing that there is a plan to purchase a student union plant in the near future. As of now these reports are still unconfirmed..

Letters to the editor

Heckling I

To the Editor:

Again a vocal minority has caused embarrasment to come to Syracuse University. While hundreds of students stood by awaiting to hear from the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, a few incredibly rude and thoughtless people disrupted the entire proceedings.

The tragedy of Monday however, is not so much in the embarassment felt for Syracuse as it is in the harm done to the namesake of Mrs. Mage's organization.

Indeed, such heckling can only arouse reactionary feelings among all who witnessed the debacle. Such a minority is not helping the Peace and Freedom Party. It is pushing the American voter to the right, to the Nixon-Wallace political camp. In doing so, this party is stamping out the only practical hope for peace and freedom: Humphrey-Muskie.

David M. Rubin

Heckling II

To the Editor:

Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Muskie, being in command of the machinery of one of the most powerful political organizations in the world, the Democratic Party, also have the most extensive communications media in the world at their disposal. Every one of their public statements and actions receive virtually automatic widespread coverage. Their point of view, repeated daily in the mass media, is well known.

This is not the case with the millions in our society who are without power, but who have grave objections about the way their lives and futures are being determined by these men of power. The Peace and Freedom Party is being organized to represent the powerless. When an opportunity arises when we can confront those in power and demand an open two-way debate of the real issues, we should not be expected to remain content with being the one-way recipients of the same old dish of tired, worn platitudes. Not when our fates, and those of millions of others, hang in the balance. Not when we're constantly told by Humphrey and Muskie that they are ready to debate the other candidates "any tine, anywhere."

Hypocrisy in the service of power must be exposed. "Card games" in which peoples' lives are the "trump card" must be broken up! This is why we, and our candidate, Judy Mage, were so "strident" in our demands for a free and open debate. If we had had such a debate, there would have been no "heckling" on our part. But, if people don't have the recourse of democratic exchange with those who govern them, their angered response, even if "disruptive," is understandable.

The smooth and efficient operation of war and oppression must be "disrupted," and sometimes this means "disrupting" the trite attempts to rationalize it. True, "heckling" is not "nice," but then neither is the refusal to debate real alternatives openly. Least "nice" of all is the continuation of the completely senseless slaughter of 30,000 American men and hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese men, women and children and the continued oppression of Blacks and other people in America.

Beebe

To the Editor:

What makes up the moral backbone of this country? The American family. What keeps alive the last flickering light of love, warmth, and understanding? The American family. What makes a family? Usually but not necessarily a mother, a father, their children, and close relatives. A "family" exists on Syracuse University's campus—at Beebe Cottage.

Fifteen girls make up the family of this charming, antiguate "castle." Girls of various backgrounds, races, nationalities, and interests live together in an unique society. They don't just exist, they live, sharing their ideas, abilities, and experiences in perfect harmony. They live and learn together as a unit, but at the same time branch out into the community around them. They sit down together at the dinner table as a family, gather together and solve a problem as a family, and they respect, love, and depend upon each other as a family. In the three weeks these girls have lived together they have developed close relationships that will last forever.

This family will be disolved in a matter of a few days. It will be scattered to the far ends of the campus, and the relationships will wither into various activities. Beebe Cottage will be torn down soon to be replaced by a parking lot. This parking lot will not be constructed until next year, but Beebe will be demolished now.

It will be more than the destruction of a building, it will be the destruction of a model society, a living memorial to Brotherhood, a way of life, a family.

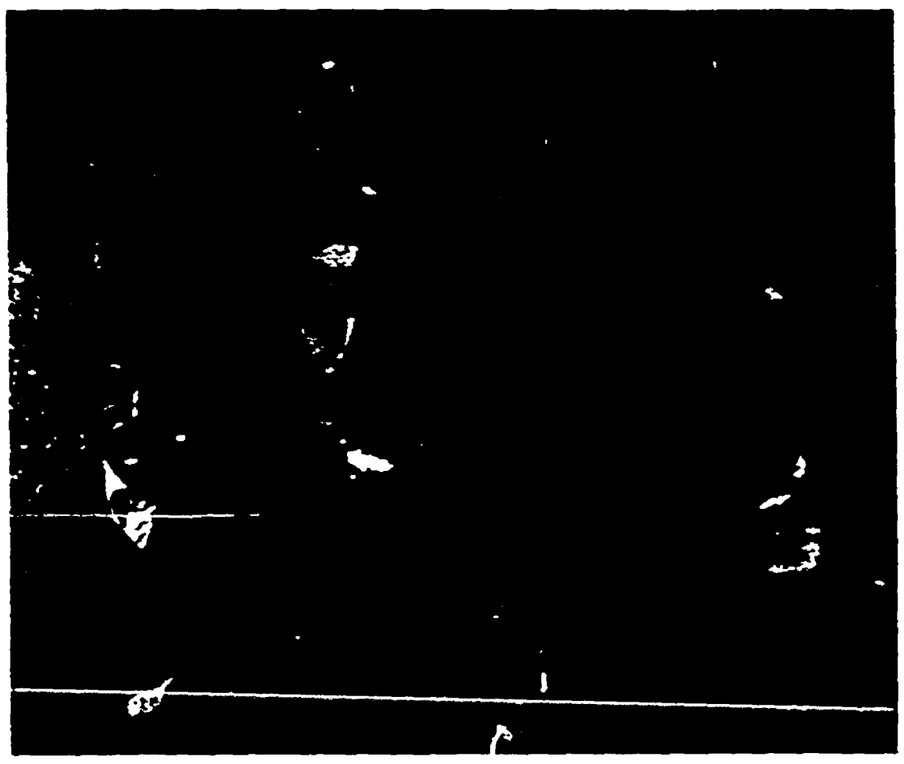
Band combines jazz-blues music and soulful voice to create varied moods

By IRA SIVERMAN
and BRIAN SAXE

The Paul Butterfield Blues Band, currently with seven members, will share the spotlight at the War Memorial Friday night with Big Brother and the Holding Company.

Butterfield's music has seemed to only improve as band members have been added and replaced. The present seven which played last month to enthusiastic crowds at New York City's Cafe Au Go Go was described by Fred Kirby of Billboard Magazine as "as fine a blues unit as exists today."



The Paul Butterfield Band's first real national exposure came in 1965 at the Newport Folk Festival, an unprecedented invasion by electronic instruments.

Changes in personnel have occurred in the subsequent years since that historic performance. Three horns have been added at times, for instance, making the band more versatile. They are no longer tied down as they were in the beginning.

"Before we had two guitars and we were using too much volume," claims Butterfield, "which is a drag. The whole thing is much more musical now."

Paul plays one of the finest blues harmonicas around today, and also is considered one of the top white blues singers anywhere.

Among the group's top performances from early albums are "One More Heatache," "I Got A Mind To Give Up Living," and "Get Out Of My Life Woman." Butterfield sings lead in all of them, and the live performances are said to generate immeasurably more excitement than the recordings could ever hope to do.

The Paul Butterfield Blues Band will appear this Friday night, Oct. 11, at the War Memorial with Big Brother and the Holding Company. Tickets are on sale at HBC cloak room for $3.50 and $3.00.

Other members of the group are Keith Johnson on organ, Gene Dinwiddie on Tenor sax and mandolin, bass guitarist Bugsy Maugh, Dave Sanborne on alto sax, Phil Wilson on drums, and lead guitar Buzzy Feiten. The horns are also worked into the act, and Butterfield even plays the guitar on certain numbers.

The gorup's latest Elektra L.P., "In My Own Dream," seems to be their finest. The combination of jazz-blues oriented music, Butterfield's soulful voice, and the total sound of the band bring out the group's full potential.

"Underground Music" will finally come upstairs Friday night when Big Brother and the Holding Company with Janis Joplin and the Paul Butterfield Blues Band perform for Homecoming Weekend 1968.

nation could prosper under these circumstances," and went on to question how Ibos would be treated if attempts were made to re-assimilate them into Nigerian society.

Omosule, in his talk, stressed again that Nigeria has not existed as one political entity since its beginnings as an independent state. He blamed Ibo leaders for the coup of 1966, and said that the present situation might almost be called a religious war, an attempt to exterminate Christian Ibos.

Miss Lundquist, besides adding other small details of background, expounded on the horrors of the war, such as starvation and genocide, but stated that she could see no really legitimate methods of warfare. She felt that Ojukwu, leader of the Biafran state, was using the plight of his starving people as propaganda to win sympathy for his side.

Questions from the floor concentrated on genocide, the worth of the war in comparison to the lives being lost for it, and proposed solutions for it. Miss Lundquist, in answering the latter question, said that she was in no position to determine any solutions for the Nigerian problem, but she stressed the eventual predicament in re-orientating the Ibo people socially and economically if Biafra should again become part of Nigeria.

But most of the questions asked resulted in debate, and, as in Nigerian-Biafran talks, no concrete answers were reached.

Chicago 'nightmare' . . .

Newton was involved in the nomination rights of both Eugene McCarthy and George McGovern. He spent time last spring following Sen. McCarthy along the campaign route from New Hampshire to Indiana. He was Syracuse campaign manager for McCarthy's slate in the New York State primary. He then went to Chicago and worked with Allard Lowenstein on the Coalition for an Open Convention and was instrumental in forging the Southern Challenges, insurgent attempts to unseat regular party delegates, which he termed, "my most fruitful work."

He said there was an "overpowering sense of helplessness" and a realization that there was "never any chance" for Vice-President Humphrey's defeat. "As you talked with people it became apparent that everything had been predetermined," he commented. "The only candidate and organization that could have stopped Humphrey was that of Robert Kennedy, and later his brother Ted. Despite that, my first impulse after the convention ended was to leave the country.

"If I learned anything at the convention, it was how stupid the political pros really are. We thought that Mayor Daley, although crude and not the most literate person in the world, was a cunning politician. We found out how stupid he was. How could he be so dumb as to support Humphrey after seeing the polls and realizing his party's situation in Illinois?"

In conclusion, Newton remarked, "The most effective protest would be for O'Dwyer to get 1.5-2 million more votes than Humphrey in New York. An O'Dwyer 'win' would really mean something." Newton called on the students to disclaim fourth parties and radicalism and to work hard for O'Dwyer. He urged that if they "go down to New York on weekends," they should work for Allard Lowenstein who is having a "tough time" in his Long Island district.

"If you had any devotion to McCarthy, support O'Dwyer or Lowenstein," Newton added.

After Newton finished, Jay Abrams, co-student campus coordinator of Young Citizens for O'Dwyer, introduced Jack Varney Onondaga County coordinator for O'Dwyer.

Said Varney, "The future of the party doesn't belong to the Daleys and the Baileys, it belongs to us."

Plans for voter registration, telephone canvassing, literature distribution and election day voter participation checks were discussed.

include youth, minority groups and women.

In an appeal to the frustrated young people, the Senator said that these reforms won't come if those who became involved this year prove they are capable of the same apathy exhibited in the past.

It wasn't until the question and answer session after his speech that the Senator dictated his views on the Vietnam war. He said his commitments to the war included opposition to escalation, support for a negotiated settlement and the taking of "calculated risks" to move to a settlement.

Muskie said he had been a proponent of a bombing halt last winter, but after the March 31 bombing restrictions, "all we got were talks in Paris." "There is no evidence to my knowledge that a bombing halt would help now."

While not being specific, Muskie continued on that subject saying that to halt the bombing would be in order only after an extensive analysis of information indicated that it would be advantageous to do so.

Other risks to be involved in the Vietnam negotiations would include questions of re-unification. "It will be a hard bargain."

Another question fielded by Muskie involved the prevention of a recurrence of the violence in Chicago during the Democratic convention. He found work in three areas needed. First, those with authority in parties and government "will have to take the initiative" to set up a line of communication to the dissatisfied. He saw it a mistake for leaders to try to maintain the status quo.

Second, he recommended the "upgrading of law enforcement" in the areas of training, equipment and salary.

Third, we must "get at the causes of social unrest in our society."

At an afternoon press conference following his speech, Muskie commented on the heckling he had encounted yesterday morning. He said it was "not fair to attribute the disruption to students. She (Mrs. Mage) was not a student."

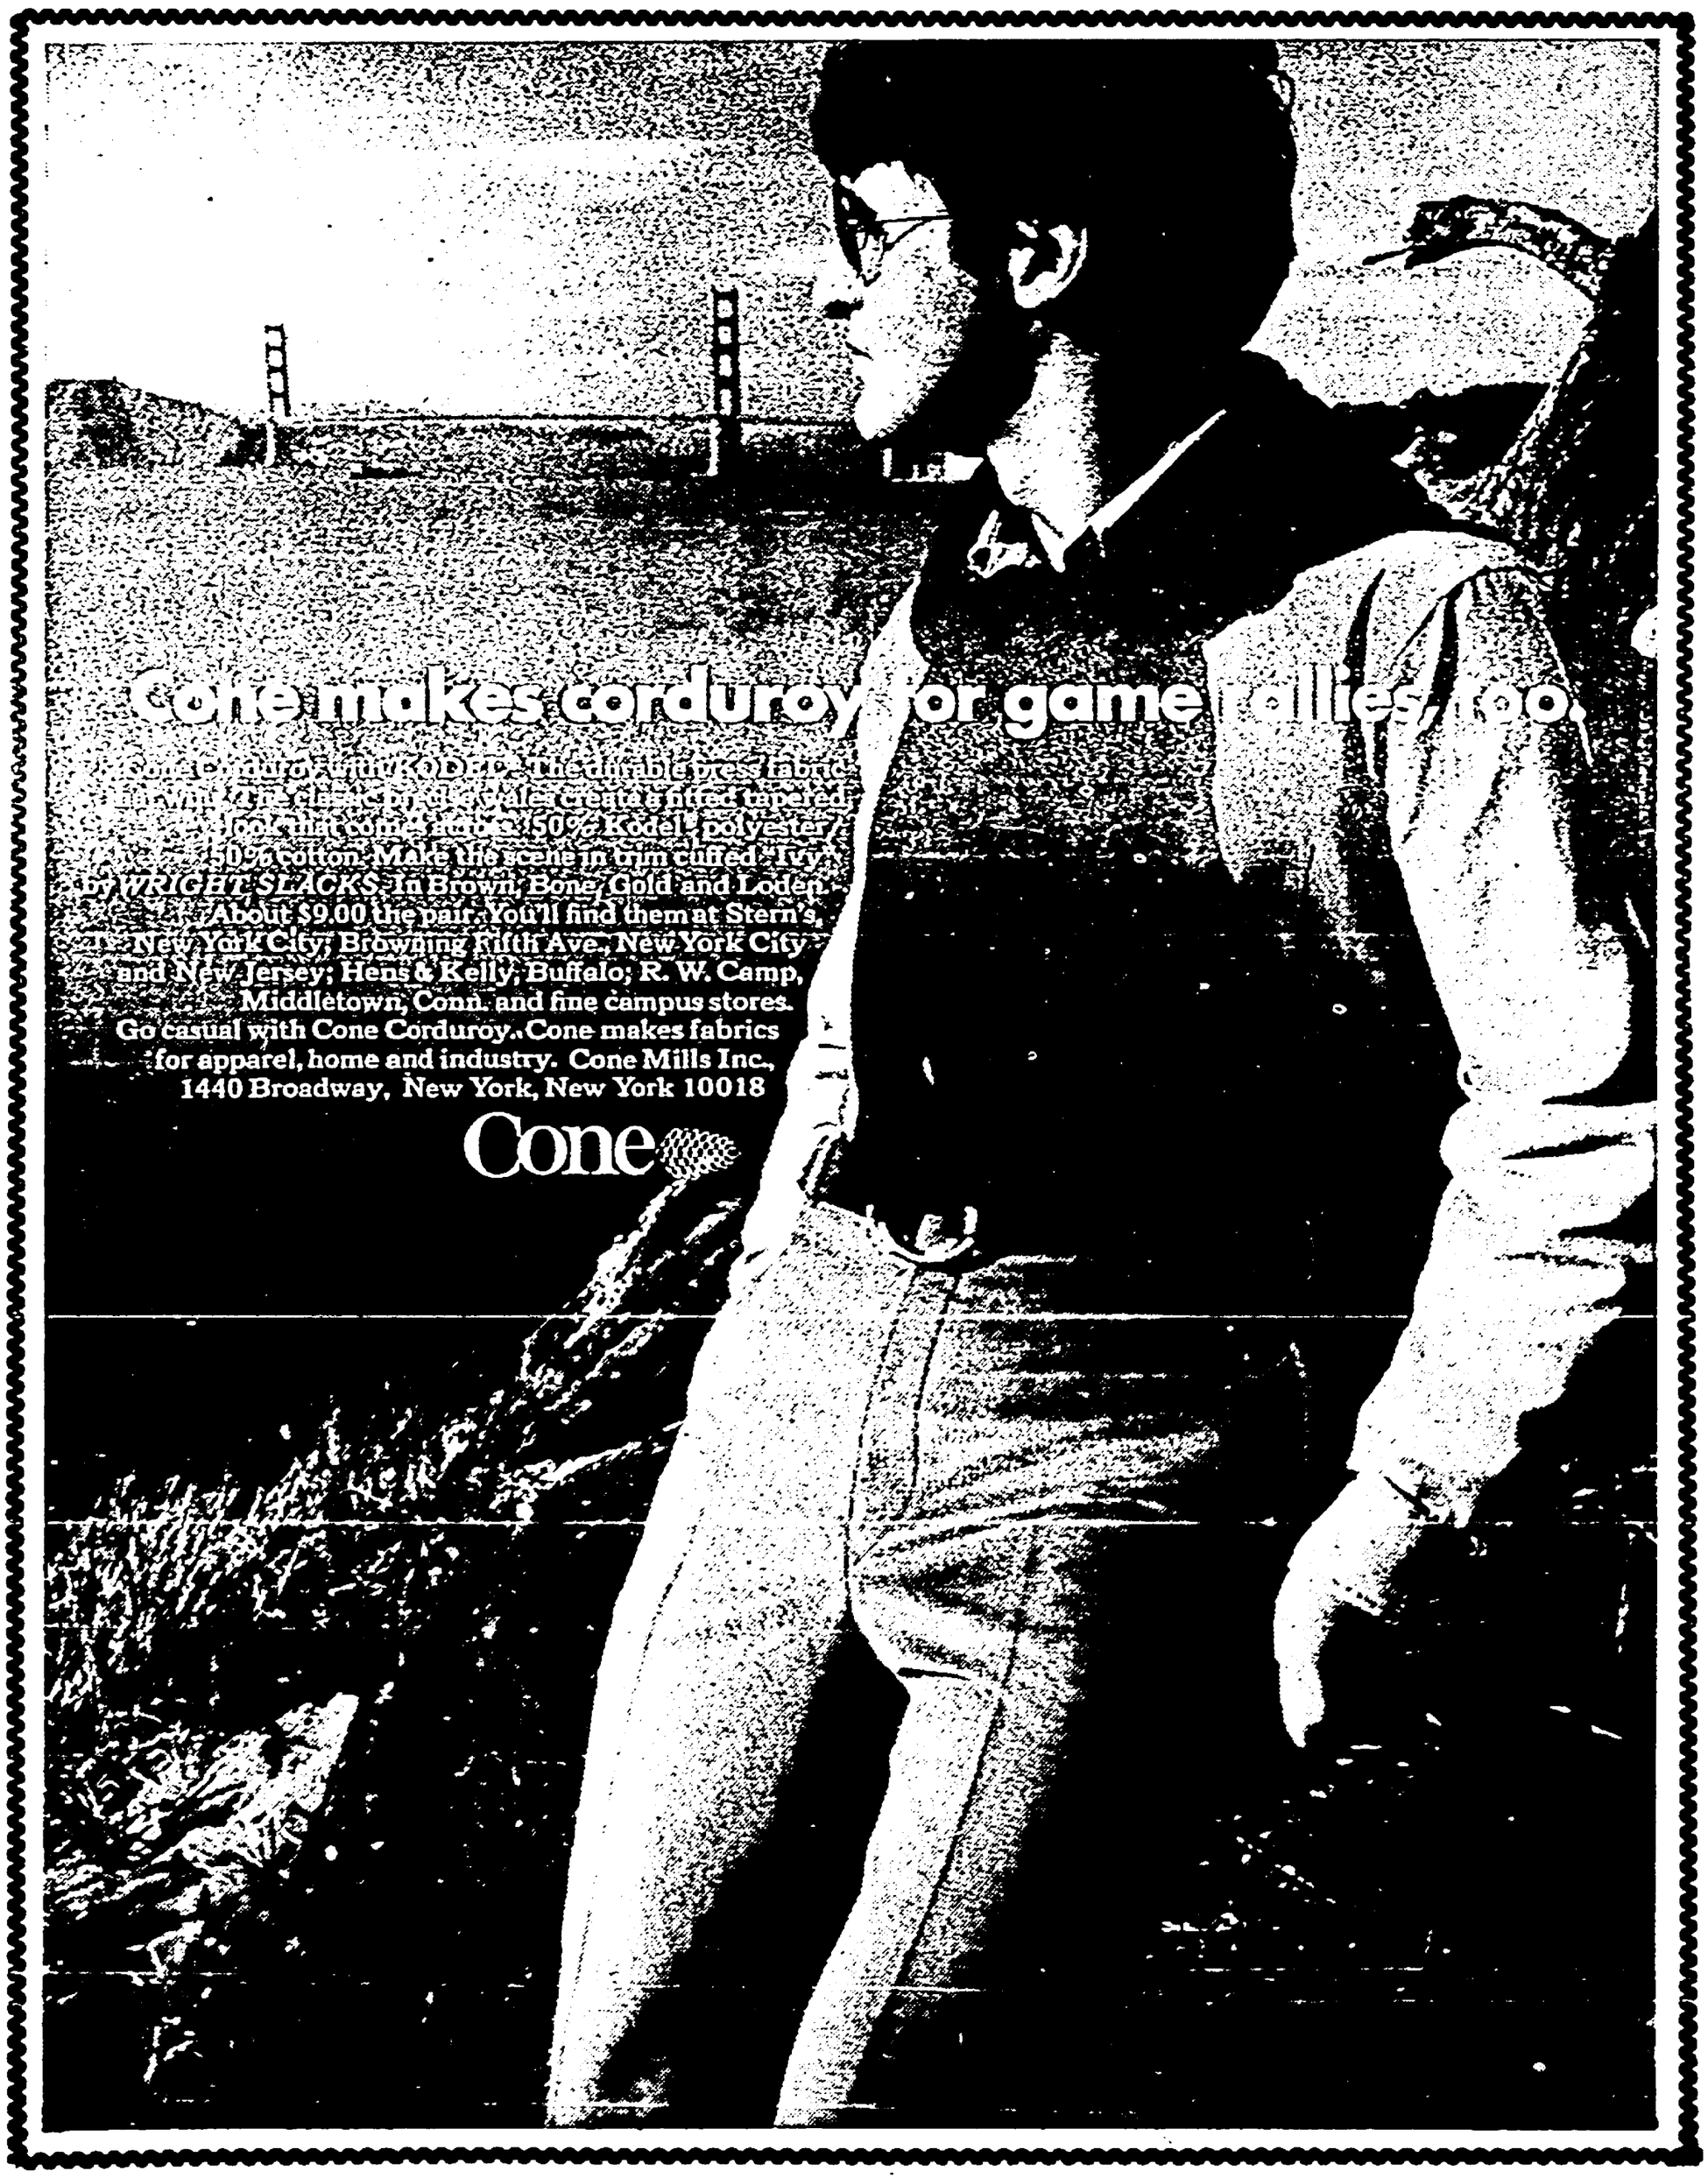
Freshmen name class nominees

Candidates for offices in the Freshman Class and their respective delegates assembled Sunday afternoon in Lyman Hall for the annual Freshman Convention. Nominees for president of the Class of '72 are Lee Danielian, Larry Kramer and Robert Tembeckjian.

Vice-presidential candidates are Cherie Griffith and Ian Mateus. Francine Pinto is running for secretary, unopposed, and Richard Garfein, unopposed for treasurer.

Eleven candidates are vying for six available posts of Senator-at-large: Esther Friedgood, Gary Goldstein, Richard Kane, Howie Lippman, John O'Brien, David Prutting, Neil Rose, Joel Schwartz, David Segal, Barbara Sonnenschein and Herb von Schilling.

Active campaigning began Sunday afternoon with the closing of the convention and will extend until Wednesday at midnight. Elections will be conducted Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.



The three presidential candidates will participate in an open debate today, at 7:30 p.m. in 407 HL.

Topic of the debate is Resolved: that freshman class government is worth the trouble.

Freshmen are reminded that although formal candidates have already been selected to run for offices, write-in candidates will be accepted at the polls Thursday.

"the students have an obligation to try to change the unjust rules in this university." He charged that Student Government was not as effective in handling the matter as had been hoped. Therefore, the residents sought a direct dialogue with members of the administration and "have been successful."

Hist. majors will nominate student reps

A meeting, open to all junior and senior history majors, is scheduled Thursday, Oct. 10, at 7 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium, for the purpose of nominating candidates for undergraduate student representation at History Department faculty meetings.

These representatives will have one vote each and will join two graduate student representatives already elected.

In authorizing these four voting students, the History Department is the first department in a Maxwell School division to attempt such a plan.

Three students are currently participating in the Mechanical Aerospace Engineering Department's faculty meetings.

History Professor Peter Marsh said, "This time, at least in the history department, the initiative for student representation has come from the administration."

Candidates nominated at the meeting will be elected by paper ballot during the coming week in the History Department office, unless a majority of the history majors at the meeting decide otherwise.

Reveals schedule

Ifshin outlines NSA activities, services

David Ifshin, SU's NSA Commissioner, yesterday revealed his organization's plans for the coming year.

The schedule includes an all-student film festival, scheduled sometime near intersession. Although plans are still sketchy, Pete Case was named chairman.

Ifshin outlined other programs scheduled by the Services Section of the commission, after explaining the distinction between NSA's two sections.

"The Services Section," according to Ifshin, "will provide the students with all the services which the National Student Association makes available to its members."

Eileen Lerman, chairman of the Services Section, indicated that, in addition to such traditional services as student insurance, European travel discounts and car rental services and the available research programs, her section will provide innovations this year in the form of the film festival and Miss Lerman added that an intercollegiate talent agency would also be available to assist in Syracuse weekend planning. Because NSA is a nonprofit organization, all of these services can be offered at cost, she said.

The other section, Ifshin went on to explain, is the Student Activism Section. Ifshin will head this group.

"We are concerned with such concepts as students' legal rights, the Rule One clause, voting laws and institutionalized racism. We will experiment with exercises in student power."

This power, according to Ifshin, rests in NSA's new position as a registered lobby in Albany. "Our organization," Ifshin added, "is almost a political one. That is, we are forming a sort of student union which will work with the administration here, and with similar organizations in Rochester and Colgate, as a student voice."

Ifshin emphasized his desire to cooperate with other power groups, such as the administration. "We are not radicals," he said, and added that the incidents at Columbia University were "unfortunate and undesirable, although not necessarily unjustified."

NSA has a need for committee chairmen and members. Each program in the Services Section needs a chairman and a staff, as well the Activism programs when they are formulated.

In addition, Ifshin would like to have a political science major to chair his Legal Rights Committee, which will be staffed by senior law students if current plans materialize.

Ben happy with Orange play and spirit

By DOUG GARR

"I've never seen a game where you don't make mistakes. If you did, there would be a touchdown on every play from scrimmage," coach Ben Schwartzwalder said after SU's stunning 20-7 upset of a fourth-ranked UCLA team.

Ben said that his team made mistakes this past Saturday, but they were a lot fewer, and came at times when they couldn't hurt us. As in the Maryland game, he was pleased with the performance of the running backs, but they tired towards the end of the game and began missing blocks.

Schwartzwalder was especially pleased with tailback John Godbolt's game, although "he's only a sophomore and doesn't know the tailback spot real well yet." The speedy back carried 15 times for 89 yards.

One of the major changes Ben will make this week against Pitt will be the use of alternate running backs. He said that the weather (especially the mud) tired his backs and "when they're tired, they're more apt to get hurt." Because he has good depth in the backfield, he is not going to use his starting backfield all game. It looks as though Bill Knox, Dick Bidlack, Ron Trask and Lee Castner will see plenty of action along with Newton, Godbolt and Bulicz.

Schwartzwalder felt that the weather was a big factor in the format of the game. He said it hurt both teams, and definitely affected UCLA's alternating split ends (Copeland and Busby). With a muddy field, both teams were forced to keep the game on the ground. He commented, "You don't throw a wet football when you're ahead." UCLA was forced to throw in the last quarter when they were behind by 13 points, and safety Cliff Ensley pick·d off his second pass of the afternoon to put the game out of reach.

Ben had very high praise for sophomore placekicker George Jakowenko. He kicked two field goals (26 and 40 yards) and added two extra points to currently lead the Orange scoring with 14 points for three games. His kicking was even more impressive when the muddy field is considered. Ben said, "He's a wonderful little guy and has a lot of talent. This is the first time in years that we've had a good kicker."

Schwartzwalder also lauded the offensive line. He said they are getting better with every game. "The line opens the holes for the running backs, and if they don't block, rushing yardage will be held to a minimum."

The Orange coach said that the members of the offensive line have to do more thinking than anyone except the quarterback. "After they think, then they have to execute," he said.

Thinking ahead, Ben said that "we can't take Pitt lightly." They beat William and Mary 14-3 this past weekend and will be hungry for a big upset.

He went on to say, however, that this team has lots of "spirit and togetherness." The attitude of this year's team is better than any other Syracuse team he has coached. "They're all for one and one for all."

Syracuse coaches preview Pittsburgh at press luncheon

By MIKE GREENSTEIN
Sports Editor

Sandwiched between the speed and finesse of Syracuse's two West Coast opponents is a homecoming date with the Pittsburgh Panthers, featuring the return of hard-nosed football to the Hill.

Pitt won nine games during the 1963 season, but has won only nine others since then. One of them came last week, as they topped William and Mary, 14-3, for their first victory of this season.

"Their offense noticeably improved last week," scout Jim Shreve told the weekly press luncheon yesterday. "Their execution and blocking improved also. They've changed their style to get more aggressive."

Dave Havern, Pitt's pint-sized sophomore quarterback, has thrown 79 passes already this year, but has six interceptions. Coach Dave Hart is going back to the three yards and a cloud of dust football that brought about the downfall of his predecessor, John Michelosen.

"Hart wants more hard-nosed football," said Shreve. "This is what he feels they can do best."

Hart has a very young team on his hands, mainly because of the heavy rebuilding program he instituted. "Our sophomores are still making a lot of mistakes," he admitted yesterday over the phone. "They are greener perhaps than we thought they were. Our greenness is hurting us on defense."

Pitt is having trouble in the defensive secondary, because of inexperience, and at linebacking, because of injury. "The pass defense is weak," Shreve said. "When they get behind, they don't get straightened out." Fullback Jeff Brown has been shifted to linebacker to give the Panthers some strength there until two injured sophomores are able to step in.

"In their first two games, they were not hitting," commented Shreve, "but against William and Mary, they were rushing four to eight men." The standouts on the Panther defense are linebackers John Wozniak, Ed Gallin and Lloyd Weston.

The Pitt offense, although lining up in a pro set, will nonetheless run a lot to the inside. Their big man is sophomore tailback Dennis Ferris, who was redshirted last year with an eye injury. He is a steady runner who picked up well over 100 yards against W&M.

Havern, 5-foot 9 inches and 160 lbs., directs the Pitt pro-I. He was a third stringer as a frosh, but injuries and what Hart calls "dedication to football all the way" have brought him to the top spot.

Havern likes to scramble, a la Fran Tarkenton. "He has to scramble, because his offensive line hasn't been doing a good job," explained Hart. He scored a touchdown against William and Mary on what Hart called a broken play. Although both Hart and Shreve praised the little sophomore for his leadership capabilities, he could be something of a showboat as well. Like that other New York pro quarterback, Joe Namath, he wears easily recognizable white shoes on the field.

Hart was impressed with the strength that the Syracuse team displayed last Saturday. "I'm not so sure that they (SU) are not better than the past two years. Ben is utilizing his personnel one hundred per cent. They have the most impressive defense I've looked at. Havern will have a fight on his hands this weekend," he said.

SU coach Ben Schwartzwalder was wary about Pitt. "We have to root for a dry day, so we can pass and open things up," he said. "If they give us anything, it will be the long pass. They never play us like they play everybody else."

Sports sidelights

Freshman basketball tryouts will begin on Tues., Oct. 15. Candidates should be on the Manley Field House court between 3:30 and 4 p.m., and must furnish their own equipment.

Harriers tie Big Red, Frosh beaten at Cornell

The Syracuse Varsity cross country team remained undefeated as they tied Cornell, 28-28, in a dual meet on Saturday.

Cornell's Little Red easily handled the Orange yearlings, 16-45, in the freshman preliminary.

Although Cornell's Anderson finished first in the varsity race, SU took the next three places in line, as well as eighth and 11th places.

Larry Quller again was the Orange pacemaker, finishing second, 13 seconds behind Anderson. Dale Parfitt fook third and Dave Crans was fourth for the Orange. Phil Ripsoso (eighth) and Don Kunz (11th) also scored for Syracuse.

Bob Quinlan's fifth place finish was the best performance by a Tangerine over the Ithaca course. Mark Sandberg (eighth) and Andy Huray (ninth) were the other Orange frosh in the top ten in their race.

Coach Bob Grieve's varisty team will host Army this Saturday at Drumlins. The frosh get back into action on Oct. 19, when they face the Alfred yearlings, also at home.

Ode to a fallen Bruin

It was no normal cold and crummy
Syracuse rainy day.
Coming to town for a gridiron date
Were the Bruins of UCLA.

The Orangemen were underdogs,
Their chances were slim at best
To make it two consecutive wins
Over the speed boys from the West.

But the Orange were not to be denied,
And Newton and Bulicz rolled.
Jakowenko lined up a twenty-six yarder
His boot was as good as gold.

John Godbolt brought the Orange right back
As he rambled for thirty-two.
Six plays later George tried again,
His forty yard placement was true.

The Bruins now were fighting mad,
Their offense came alive.
Jim Nader mixed his plays up well
And they drove down to the five.

The Orange defense dug in tight,
Their backs were to the wall.
Nader threw one, pay-dirt bound,
But Cliff Ensley snatched the ball.

Paolisso and Newton carried the Orange
On a sixty yard third quarter trip.
Lightning Bolt streaked for the final four yards,
And the Orange led thirteen to zip.

But the Uclans weren't quitters,
They came back tough and scored.
Jones' mid-fourth quarter three yard plunge
Put seven Bruin points on the board.

Big trouble was brewin' for SU
With but a six point lead.
But Maddox scooped up Zenon's kick
And flashed his blinding speed.

Forty thousand roaring fans
Drowned out the Orange band.
Bill flung the ball down to the turf
As he reached the promised land.

Burly Bill had turned the tide
With his electrifying run.
The Archbold faithful jumped with glee
And shouted "WE'RE NUMBER ONE!"

The Uclans now had lost their fight,
The Bruins had turned to mice.
The Gipper stole a Nader bomb
To put the game on ice.

And then the sun pushed through the clouds
The last seconds ticked away.
The crowd began to shout and cheer,
Nowhere was there shed a tear -- for UCLA.

Tussing speaks to students

Liberal candidate gives support to Gregory

By CELESTE LACY

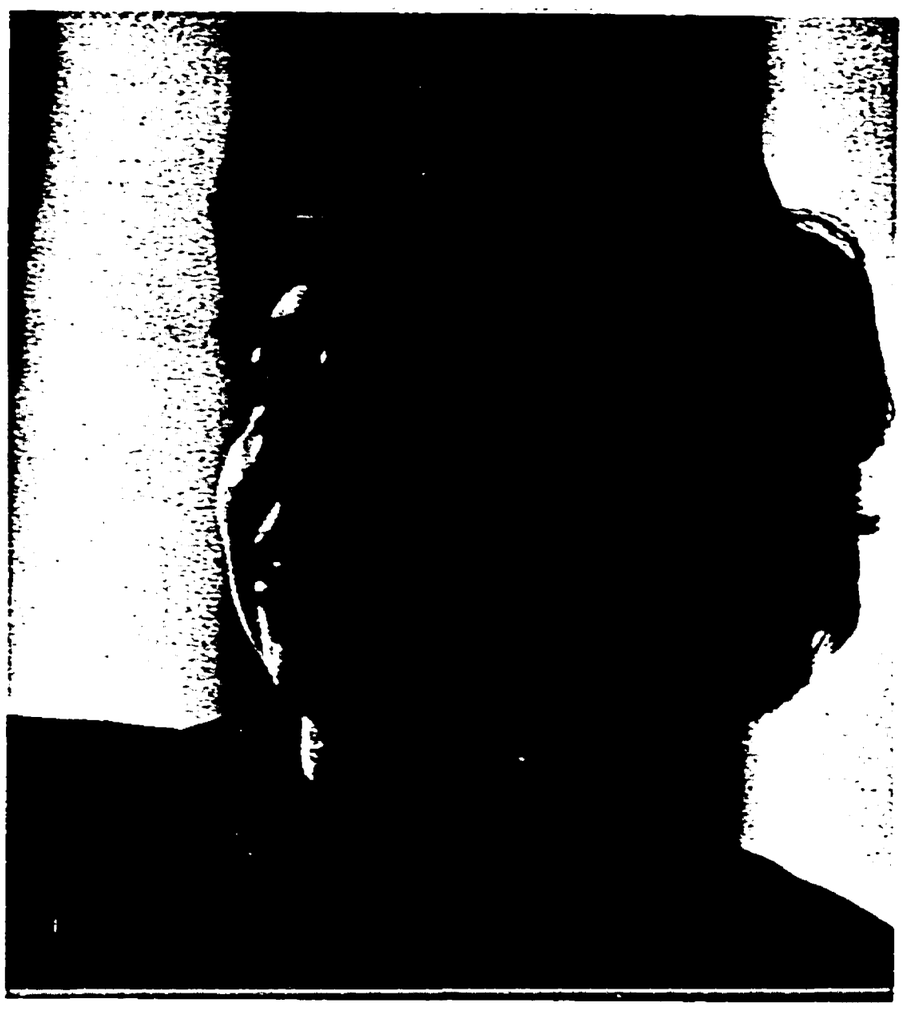
About 40 students assembled in Watson lounge last night to hear Liberal party candidate for Congress Dale Tussing, give his views on the Paris peace talks, US foreign policy and the approaching presidential election.

Tussing is Associate Professor of Economics in the Maxwell school and is supporting Dick Gregory for president on the Peace and Freedom Party slate.

In reference to the Paris talks, Tussing stated that the United States was not really there to negotiate but rather to make people believe that some attempt was being made to bring about peace.

As evidence of this theory, Tussing said that every time the North Vietnamese make concessions we re-define our terms for our bombing halt. He also asserted that the confusion and delay in Washington that took place when Hanoi agreed to the talks was largely because no one had actually planned on the Vietnamese agreeing to come to the conference table.

"Johnson's policy could be termed as escalation rather than de-escalation," Tussing said in reference to President Johnson's March 31 speech. "Although bombing has been stopped north of the 19th parallel, Johnson didn't tell the people that the bombing would be increased in the south of North Vietnam to the point of saturation."



Tussing feels that, in truth, the US will continue to talk about peace and make false moves towards negotiation, while simultaneously escalating the effort for a military victory in Vietnam.

He says that out of the three major political candidates there is really no choice.

"I'm giving up all hope for now," he said. "No administration could be good at this time." Out of the three, however, he feels that Richard Nixon has the best chance of ending the war. He claims that Humphrey's main problem lies with trying to justify the administration's policies.

In supporting Dick Gregory ne ruled out Eugene McCarthy because he is not an active candidate and Eldridge Cleaver

The 'opposition'

Judy Mage, a vice presidential candidate on the Peace and Freedom ticket and chief heckler at Sen. Edmund Muskie's speech Monday, 'had her chance' last night in Hendrick's Chapel.

Mage gets chance to speak; chants and boos greet her

By RONA KAVEE
Associate Editor

Mrs. Judy Mage, candidate for US vice-president on the Peace and Freedom ticket, made a twofold attempt to inform SU students of her platform last night.

The first and more successful of the attempts was an interview presented on WAER. Following this, Mrs. Mage faced an audience in Hendricks Chapel composed mainly of male students who were verbal and unreserved in expressing opposition to her views.

Chanting, booing and cheering interrupted Mrs. Mage's first attempts to begin her speech. Students held up Muskie signs, while a red and blue poster reading "Draft Mage" bobbed up and down periodically.
periodically.

Essentially, Mrs. Mage repeated much of what she had previously said in the WAER interview. Frequently interrupted by a bullhorn, an instrument she herself used in heckling Sen. Edmund Muskie yesterday, she went on to outline a platform that stressed troop withdrawal from Vietnam and the use of present military expenditures for a program of social action.

Neil Wallace, a freshman and member of the Young Republicans, challenged Mrs. Mage to a debate. Accepting the challenge, she reminded her audience that had Senator Muskie agreed to debate with her yesterday, "we would have had a confrontation of ideas."

Wallace, a supporter of Richard Nixon, upheld the validity of the war in Vietnam and declared that it would be immoral for us to withdraw our troops at this time. He referred to Mrs. Mage as the "distinguished representative of Hanoi."

A large portion of the audience made a mass exit during Mrs. Mage's rebuttal.

The Peace and Freedom Party is in coalition with the militant Black Panther organization. Lieutenant Jorge Aponte, a Black Panther leader, spoke over the air with Mrs. Mage last night.

A portion of the party's platform is devoted to what Aponte described as the "self-determination" of black people. Other points in the Black Panther program range from fair housing, education, and employment of blacks, to such extremes as draft exemption for black males and release of black criminals from prison.

Mrs. Mage commented on how the "worthlessness of human life is bored into us every day" through the "football

Frosh candidates debate

Nominees present platforms

By CHARLES SHAPIRO

Resolved: That freshman class government is worth the trouble. This was the debate topic last evening sponsored by the Debate Union. For the government the scheduled speakers were Lee Danielian, Larry Kramer and Robert Tembeckjian, nominees for office of president for the Class of 1972. The opposition included C. Chuck Ducikin, Robert J. Vitello and Arthur Nacht.

Danielian was not present but was represented by his campaign manager, Tod Bayer. Bayer told the audience of about 40 students that his candidate did not feel he could reach his constituents through the debate, and that Danielian preferred to bring the issues directly to those he hoped to represent, and therefore was campaigning at that moment.

Neither of the other freshman presidential candidates used his prepared speech when addressing the audience. A copy of each speech was released, however, so that the students could learn the platforms of the candidates.

Kramer thinks that this can be a year of "change and a year that the freshmen class will take direction." He feels that revision of the social rule is needed, including looser restrictions concerning the use of liquor, the establishment of parietal hours in all mens dormitories and provisions made for optional hours for all coeds.

He also feels that more students are needed on administration decision-making committees, and that upperclassmen should serve as academic advisers to freshmen in addition to their present faculty advisers. He would like to see the initiation of optional summer preregistration and the establishment of a freshman bank. Understanding that not all of these programs

Hanley to speak at dedication

James M. Hanley, U.S. Congressman from New York's 34th district, will be the key speaker at the dedication Friday at 10:15 a.m. of two new buildings at the State University College of Forestry. The buildings are the F. Franklin Moon Library and Joseph S. Illick Hall, which houses biological sciences and soils.

Others on the program to be held in the new forestry quadrangle, are Chancellor William P. Tolley; W. Mason Lawrence, deputy commissioner, State Conservation Department; Roger J. Sinnott, State University trustee (from Utica); Frank C. Ash, president, College of Forestry trustees (from Fulton); and Edwin C. Jahn, dean of the College of Forestry.

Harry W. Porter, provost of State University, will serve as master of ceremonies, and as the representative of Samuel B. Gould, chancellor of State University. The invocation and benediction will be delivered by the Rev. John M. McCombe, dean of Hendricks Chapel.

Platform guests will include a number of local and state dignitaries: Sen. John H. Hughes; Sen. Tarki Lombardi, Jr.; Mayor William F. Walsh; County Executive John H. Mulroy; and Assemblyman Kenneth G. Bartlett.

Also, Anthony Adinolfi, general manager, SUNY Construction Fund; Mort Grant, director, SUNY Research Foundation; Royal O'Day, president, Syracuse University

The high cost of trash

Trash. It's ugly and it's everywhere. Look around you sometime. Papers in front of buildings, cans and broken bottles along sidewalks, and always bits of litter in the grass.

And after a football game, the departing spectators cast overboard enough newspapers, programs, food wrappers, and containers of liquid refreshment to make the SU campus look like the scene of the battle of Waterloo.

University Vice President and Treasurer Francis A. Wingate estimates the money spent for the Physical Plant staff to pick up trash is $20,000 a year. They aren't keeping up with the job at this point.

He will consider accepting the services of any group seeking to earn money for their organizations by helping clean-up the campus.

Such proposals will help but it is obvious they will be inadequate to the momentus task. The only real solution is for an order to emanate from the Being on High that all litterers shall cease and desist their nefarious activity. Barring such an order, we urge everyone to assume a small responsibility for the beauty of the campus and shall not ourselves be above picking up a stray copy of the Daily Orange the wind is carrying across the quad.

Muskie's speech

Beyond the heckling

By Paul Finkelman

Aside from the obnoxious behavior of the Peace and Freedom Party, Senator Muskie's speech was a dull afair. In the time that he spoke, Muskie said virtually nothing. His entire speech was a collertion of platitudes, banalities, and contradictions.

In the speech he called for broad participation of the young and minorities in politics, and a one man one vote selection of convention delegates. Had this been implemented before this year, it is unlikely that Humphrey and Muskie would be the party's nominees.

He blamed the nation's ills on apathy "not the products of evil men and women." Yet he condemned the unapethetic Americans who won't support the results of Daley's convention. He said that change in the system will "come through those who are willing to work in the face of opposition." Yet, he refused to share his podium and debate with those who are doing just that. While the tactics of Mrs. Mage were unfair to the audience, Muskie's refusal to accept her challenge put him in the class with the opposition that the reformers must face. Certainly Muskie did not come to Syracuse to debate Miss Mage, but since he has stated he will debate the Vice-Presidential candidates, he shouldn't have ignored an opportunity to do so.

Muskie told Mage he had some here with the express purpose of speaking to SU students. If he had indeed done this, he should have come with a speech that said something, and not meerly a campaign-type oration. Both Javits and O'Dwyer said something when they were here. They were forthright and honest, and weren't afraid to speak out on the issues of importance. At least if Muskie had debated Mrs. Mage he might have been pinned down to answering pertainent questions and really saying something.

Muskie did say that he would like to lower the voting age to 18, along with convention reforms. However, one can only wonder if, as Vice-President Muskie would push for the reforms that would give power to those who are against him.

In much of his speech, MUskie tried to show how terrible the opposition was, and that he and Humphrey were better. Yet, in answering questions Muskie supported Mayor Daley's actions during the convention, called for stronger police forces on all levels, and said those who won't serve in the Army on grounds that Vietnam is immoral should be jailed. In other words, Muskie's law and order stance makes him an echo of Nixon and Wallace.

Possibly the Humphrey-Muskie ticket is the best alternative this year, but possibly there is no alternative this year. Muskie's judgement that many reject the political system is accurate. And why not? The system has rejected many. This is certainly the year when American search for a choice, and find only an echo.

Letters to the editor

O'Dwyer

To the Editor:

Despite my satisfaction with Mr. O'Dwyer's victory over a couple of party hacks in last June's Democratic primary, I cannot see how one of his supporters can make the anti-Javits charges that Mr. Finkelman made in Tuesday's "Opinion."

Senator Javits fought long and hard at Miami Beach for Gov. Rockefeller, just as he fought for a liberal platform and national ticket at his party's 1964 convention. If Mr. Finkelman were to take a closer look at the Vietnam section of this year's GOP Platform, he might realize that it actually reflects in large part the liberal influence of the party's Rockefeller-Javits-Lindsay wing.

The Senator refused to support Goldwater four years ago, and anyone who heard him speak his mind in Hendricks Chapel Monday evening knows that he would never have supported his party's choice this year if he did not believe that the platform and candidates were good for the people, that Richard Nixon was the best-qualified candidate for President (and not just because he's "better than Hubert"), and that Nixon would not wish to erase all the accomplishments that liberal legislators like Javits have made throughout the last three administrations.

Election year or not, Jacob Javits is a man, like Paul O'Dwyer, who would never compromise his principles just for the sake of expediency and party harmony.

Flint Hills

To the Editor:

I would like to invite you to Flint Hills Country Club next Thursday night for a mid-week party. I'm sorry you didn't make it last Thursday night. You were probably the only male within a hundred miles who missed the excitement. The SU cheerleaders and the "Page One" Band entertained while the country Club Set danced in their usual carefree manner.

The noise was so loud that the residents of Flint Hall who had to study migrated down the Mount to the library. These "kill-joys" discovered after less than thirty minutes of quiet study that the library closes at 10:00. They climbed back up the Mount to find the band leaving. However, the party complete with group screaming continued up to curfew. Many lonesome males finding themselves stranded in the lobby passed their time calling up floors on Flint to find a girl to come down.

Through all the noise the Flint Hall still managed to enforce "quiet hours" so the residents could keep those grades up.

Food Service?

To the Editor:

Since the middle of September, the DO has printed a number of articles and/or remarks about that great institution, namely Food Service.

The first was on September 19. We were introduced to "General" Pettengill. To the General: 1) it's enemy, not opposition. The way you and your army has shafted us, it's a wonder there has not been an attempt on your life. 2) You have failed miserably in the two big jobs that challenge you. You have failed to serve us well and therefore we are not happy.

To qualify my statement, I cite Kimmel Dining Hall. Last year, Kimmel was a delight. The food was better than usual, and service was rather good. This year, the whole stinking place rots! Lines stretch down the stairs, thru the lounge, past the control office, out the door and into the courtyard between Kimmel and Marion. While not always this long, there is usually a substantial wait (unless you go at 12:30 or 6:00). But by that time, there is no food left. Because the mug shot system enables FS to know exactly how many students eat there, it is a simple matter to make sure that there is not enough food. Or silverware, or glasses, or milk. About half of the people FS hires outside the university are morons. It takes them five minutes to dish out one plate (consisting of one tomato slice, scrap of lettuce, one slice each of bologna and cheese; when you ask for a little more, they laugh at you). Therefore, the "seconds" line is immense and the girl for the second "firsts" line has to wait on them.

However, Dean Carleton (DO, Sept. 26) says the dining halls are only at capacity. Bull, I say. A very reliable source has said that Kimmel is 350 people over capacity. A friend (who went to the Dean of Men to see about changing dining halls) was told by that office that dining halls are 130 over capacity. Better get together on that fellas.

Mrs. Geiger (who is FS personnel director, I believe) tells students that there are no job openings in FS now. Kimmel is so poorly understaffed, that I've gone into the back for glasses because there was no one else to do it.

I would strongly suggest that FS and the administration get some fresh ideas into their obviously stale minds. I dare Chancellor Tolley to come to Kimmel any night of the week and sample what he calls "first quality food" (DO, Oct. 3). The only reason this university never has enough money is because the alumni won't give. And they won't give because SU shafted them every chance it got for four years. Maybe Food Service should improve its service and think of it as a long-term investment.

Case of private enters Moot Court

The fictitious case of an Army private who contends that the Vietnam war is unconstitutional will be argued in Moot Court Oct. 14 and 15 in a senior competition of the Syracuse University College of Law.

The public is invited to the two nights of arguments in Grant Auditorium beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Eight law school seniors will take part in the competition, which will be judged by Syracuse attorneys and jurists. From the eight will be chosen three students who will compete in November in the regional Moot Court competition at Buffalo. National finals are in New York in December.

The mythical private in the case has been ordered to Vietnam and is seeking an injunction against the Defense Department. The soldier's case is based on the fact that after World War II, at the Nuremberg Trials, a number of Germans were found guilty of war crimes; he doesn't want to fight in a war he believes to be immoral.

The private further contends that U.S. involvement in Vietnam is illegal, the Gulf of Tonkin resolution notwithstanding. He is asking the U.S. Supreme Court to declare the war unconstitutional.

Scholarships for study in England now offered

Applications are now being received for Rhodes and Marshall Scholarships, for study in Great Britain. The Rhodes Scholarships, founded by the will of Cecil Rhodes, carry a stipend of $1728 a year and are to be used for two years of study toward a degree at Oxford. Candidates must be male citizens of the United States, unmarried, between the ages of 18 and 24 who have at least Junior standing at the time of application.

The Marshall Scholarships were established by the British Government as an expression of appreciation for American aid to Britain advanced under the Marshall plan. The Marshall scholarships are open to both men and women and may be used at any British University for two years study leading toward a degree. The stipend is approximately $2160 a year. A candidate must be under 25-years-old and have graduated from an American college before beginning the tenure of his fellowship.

Further information on these scholarships as well as on other graduate opportunities may be obtained from the office of the Honors Program, 108 Hall of Languages. Applications for Rhodes and Marshall Scholarships should be made through the Honors Program office as soon as possible. The local screening committee for these awards is comprised of Professor Clyde L. Hardin of the Philosophy Department, Director of the Honors Program; Dean Stephen K. Bailey, Dean of the Maxwell School and Professor of Political Science, a former Rhodes scholar; Dean Jim G. Carlton, Dean of Student Services; Professor Joseph A. Bryant, Jr., chairman of the English Department; and Professor Peter Marsh of the History Department, a fellow of All Souls.

Lowe receives medal for service to society

Joe Lowe, donor of the Joe and Emily Lowe Art Center, has been awarded the Syracuse Centennial Medal in recognition of his service to higher education and society. Chancellor William P. Tolley made the presentation at Lowe's New York City apartment last month.

The citation describes Lowe as an "outstanding business leader, generous friend of all good causes, donor of university art centers at Syracuse, Miami and Hofstra, patron of art students, discriminating collector of art."

"You have endeared yourself to all who know you," it states. "Modest, unselfish, gentle, warm-hearted, unspoiled by wealth and power, you are an example to youth and to your host of friends."

Lowe grew up on Cedar Street in Syracuse. He graduated from Putnam School and attended Syracuse High School, but his mother's death prevented his finishing there. Shortly afterward he moved to New York City. He is president of the Joe Lowe Company, a manufacturing and importing firm.

Besides his gift of the art center, built in 1952, Lowe has supported Syracuse University through scholarships and has provided funds for the maintenance of the building and art program there. At the University of Miami he donated the Lowe Art Gallery and, at Hofstra University, the Emily Lowe Hall.

The centennial medal was created in 1967 by the University's board of Trustees. Syracuse will celebrate its centennial in 1970.

Faced with problems

Grads discuss constitution and committee formation

By MARTY BLOCK

Last night the Graduate Student Organization still beset with problems inherent in a new organization, began to make some headway toward the formation of a viable foundation. A constitution, calling for representation from each degree-granting program and an unspecified number of at-large representatives, was discussed and, at length, adopted.

All at-large delegates should bring their petitions, bearing at least 50 signatures, and a three-minute speech to the next GSO meeting on October 15 at 7:30 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium. The validity of each at-large representative will be decided by a vote of the Senate at that meeting.

With constitutional problems behind it, the GSO now faces the election of officers and the formation of standing committees. All those running for office should submit their applications to Dwight Emerson by October 15 at 151 Hinds Hall. Speeches and nominations will be held at that time. Firmly established, the GSO will be able to represent graduate students in matters such as married student housing, graduate student commuter facilities, and the selection of a successor to Chancellor Tolley.

scores" of the Vietnamese war, and by police violence. Holding that gun control is "a fine thing if applied consistently," Mrs. Mage believes it unfair to have "unlimited military might on one side (that of the police) and not on the other."

The Peace and Freedom Party was formed because "it was felt that the two major parties were not representing the true interests of the people," according to Mrs. Mage. "Who voted in a primary for Hubert Humphrey?" she commented.

Why Nixon?

"Why Nixon?" will be the subject of an address by Dr. Frank Munger, Maxwell political science professor at a meeting of the SU Young Republicans tonight. The meeting will be at 8 p.m. in Maxwell auditorium.

Also speaking will be public affaris lecturer Charles Umbanhower, a veteran of the Charles Percy senatorial campaign in Illinois.

The YRs role in the campaign of local congressional candidate David O'Brien will be discussed and plans will be made for future door-to-door canvassing.

All interested students are invited.

Feeling the blues

By M. JOHN ADELMASEH

A standard blues song is an interesting thing. Many artists attempt it. Some succeed. Many come across. Some fail.

"Born Under a Bad Sign" is a standard blues song. Many artists have attempted it. Some have heard close to thrity versions of the song and have got one comment: Albert King is incredible! He takes everything the song could possible mean to anyone and lets it all out at once in "Born Under a Bad Sign" in his new album of the same name. In each of the eleven songs on the album, Albert King cries, laughs, wonders just why he is where he's at. He can't tell. Hardly anyone can. The thing about Albert King, though, is that he is trying to visualize the nebulous world through the vehicle of old, dirty, earthy blues. Every syllable comes straight from his guts.

Another blues standard, "Kansas City," is converted from a top-ten-chart-type-buster-thing to a soul-churning experience. I cannot emphasize the feeling Albert King arouses (white though I am). If you have been into blues for the past five to ten years; then news on Albert King is irrevelant. But if you are beginning to scratch the surface of blues as a form of communication, then let it be known that Albert King is all there.

To mention the greatness of Aretha Franklin would be as pointless as saying she has been down and out. We realize this. It also would seem somewhat trite to mention the fact that her record sales are second only to the Beatles. People know this. Since Aretha Franklin broke her ties with promotional authorities and assumed more say in what she sings, her material has been phenomenal. Her latest is "Aretha Now." In "I Say a Little Prayer," Aretha is completely unpredictable. She is all over you, around you, inside you. Open your eyes and she is on the couch across the room, telling you what she is digging. Aretha also does a memory tune to Sam Cooke in "You Send Me."

Finally, in Aretha's own composition, "Think," you can see that she is going deeper than merely asking her man to think about what he is trying to do. Look beyond this and you will realize that she has a theme of love and its essence, freedom. . . .

Faster absorbency. Longer protection. That's the extra security you get with new Meds, the only tampon with this double-protection design: an outer layer of larger fibers that absorb instantly, with an inner layer of tiny fibers that store more, longer.

can be realized within the span of one year, Kramer feels that at least a beginning can be made on each of them.

Kramer also proposes a "long range meaningful program," which will give direction to the class of '72. This program is "Aspiration '72," a class project designed to bring the black ghetto community closer to the white establishment through the efforts of freshmen at SU, by bringing about an open relationship with the senior high school students in that area.

Tembeckjian's platform also stresses change. He hopes that the "freshmen can make changes before they become deluded, apathetic juniors and seniors." He feels that a reexamination is needed of the faculty and administration's attitudes towards the students, stressing that being an administrator is as much of a privilege as being a student.

He thinks that students are being displaced by computer sheets and social security numbers, and would like to see this changed. Tembeckjian views education as more than just going to classes. He seeks an involvement with each other in society, and so he proposes the organization of discussion groups to air grievances and get something done about them.

Tembeckjian also proposes the "establishment of tutoring committees and the creation of groups to go into the ghetto in this city and help clean it up; to organize recreational activities for the ghetto children; and to talk to the residents and show them that we care about them."

In this way, through racial, economic and chronological integration, he feels the student will receive an education which amounts to more than "a hand shake and a diploma."

The elections will be held on Thursday, Oct. 10.

F. F. Schilder

Political cartoonist

Campus library obtains large collection of editorial cartoons by 'Steve' Schilder

SU's Library has acquired a collection of several hundred editorial cartoons by Edgar F. ("Steve") Schilder, who for 45 years was cartoonist and rotogravure editor of The Syracuse Post-Standard.

The Saturday Evening Post, Fortune and other magazines have published Schilder's work. Through the International Syndicate, his cartoons also appeared in papers throughout the world.

Schilder was cited by the War Fund during World War II for his patriotic cartoons, many of which were circulated throughout the country as part of the war effort. The Treasury Department used one of his designs for a poster promoting the sale of war bonds.

Schilder drew more than 7,000 cartoons during his lifetime. A self-taught artist, he began cartooning in 1909 and worked for several Midwestern newspapers and for the International Syndicate in Baltimore. He came to Syracuse in 1917. His cartoon trademark and editorial mouthpiece was "Steve," a tiny black cat whose name eventually became his creator's nickname and signature.

Schilder retired from The Post-Standard in July 1962. He died Aug. 25, 1963.

The Syracuse Museum of Fine Arts in 1943 presented an exhibit of 150 Schilder cartoons. At the time, Hibbard V. B. Kline, head of the illustration department in the College of Fine Arts at Syracuse University, said of Schilder's work: "His line is strongly individual and forceful; his humor and philosophy are invariably kindly; his contributions in...The Post-Standard have been of exceptional quality."

"The Steve Schilder Papers" are the gift of Schilder's daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Wright of Trenton, N.J. Wright is executive director of the Delaware River Basin Commission. Both are Syracuse University alumni.

NSA applications due

Applications are now being accepted for chairmanships of various NSA, (National Student Association) committees. Included under the Student Service committees are:

1. Travel - Coordinated with the New York office, handles domestic charter flights, international flights and European rent-a-car,
2. Record Club - Records will be offered at the lowest prices on campus.
3. ACT - The Alliance for Campus Talent will serve as a central clearing house for booking concert talent, etc.
4. Publications
5. Lectures and workshops - Will bring speakers to the campus and sponsor student workships on various issues.
6. Film Festival - Student film making will be encouraged and programs of student films will be shown on campus.

The Student Rights committees will be concerned with: 1) lowering the voting age, 2) drugs, 3) white and institutionalized racism and 4) legal rights.

Applications should include name, extension, class, experience and position desired. Both committee workers and chairmen are needed. Applications should be presented to Dave Ifshin, 801 Walnut Ave., 475-4869.

WARNING TO

SENIORS

Seniors who have not already made an appointment to sit for a photographic portrait will NOT appear in the Senior Section of the yearbook unless they sign up IMMEDIATELY.

So make your appointment at once by telephoning the Onondagan Student Staff at Extension 2131 or 2132, or by coming to 406 University Place (opposite Watson Dormitory).

The second and final series of portrait sessions is now under way and will soon be completed. This is your LAST chance to have your portrait appear in the 1969 ONONDAGAN with those of the other graduating seniors.

If you have made an appointment, make certain you keep it. Come at least ten minutes early and be sure to bring your two-dollar sitting fee. It must be paid before you sit for the portrait photographer.

The final day of portrait taking is just around the corner and only a limited number of open appointment times are still available. Your picture will not appear in the 1969 ONONDAGAN unless you act immediately.

Play Hide and Seek in SU's main library

By SHARON IORIO

This article is dedicated to the countless thousands of students who, like me, have climbed the steps of Carnegie Library this summer with warm courage and high hope and, also like me have gone back down those steps to enter the library through the basement cubby-hole.

My experience is really no different from that of other Syracusians who daily play the game of "hide and seek" with the books, periodicals, and librarians. But it will serve as an example to those new students who are not familiar with the library's reorganization program, and will warn other students that research in our library has temporarily degenerated to merely search.

The basement entry led me to the mis-information desk. I was looking for a periodical. The girl at the desk directed me to a reference table at which I was to locate the call letters. Lucky for me the magazine title started with an S not an A since the book looked as though someone in a frustrated frenzy had eaten his way through to the B's.

Locating "Senior Scholastic," I found not one but, what appeared to be, two sets of call letters. A sympathethic, but just as confused, friend to my left failed to be of any assistance. He had problems of his own.

Right Track?

A librarian put me back on the right track. "To the third level," said she, gesturing upward, but not telling me the third level was located on the second floor.

Following her directions I arrived on the third level through a door marked "emergency exit only--alarm will sound." It didn't.

At the desk under the sign marked "periodicals" I learned that the periodicals had just moved directly to the opposite side of the floor. Once there I learned the elusive periodicals were really located in the area marked by the sign reading "art and music."

In the art and music department, rather, the periodical department, a very helpful librarian told me that all the magazines were located alphabetically in the stacks and the letters on the end of the stacks "generally but not always" denoted the titles included in a particular stack. Not to be discouraged, I diligently searched. Not there.

I approached a different librarian. " 'Senior Scholastic,' that's in the S's," she said. "Brilliant deduction," I thought. "They haven't been moved yet," she added.

So it was back to the other side of the library. " 'Senior Scholastic' ", began this Scholastic'," began this librarian, "all the magazines are located alphabetically in the stacks but--." "Don't bother," I said, "I've been through all this before."

Foiled Again

I had just spotted the S's but before I could reach them the world's fastest library cart whizzed by me and two librarians began scooping magazines off the shelves and into the cart. "Stop," I pleaded, "just let me have the 'Senior Scholastic'."

" 'Senior Scholastic'," said the red-haired librarian; "we file it under 'Parents'." No, no," said the shorter one, "we file it under 'Scholastic Teacher' and that's over on the other side! Go down the hall, turn left, then turn left again and you'll be right there."

I've always been one to follow directions explicitly, but this woman would have walked me into a brick wall. I decided to go back to "art and music." But this time I was shrewd. "Do you have 'Senior Scholastic' filed under 'Scholastic Teacher'?"

"Yes, but it was out of sequence so I put it on the radiator," was the reply. "No, that's the 'NYU Bulletin'," I said. "Under the radiator? No, that's just dust. You mean try the dusty shelf?" I couldn't believe my eyes. There it was.

It was like winning the Irish Sweepstakes or climbing Mt. Everest or having a dream come true--until I found that the 1965 copies are bound and the bound copies are located---

Cramped for space and anxiously awaiting the planned new library, the old Carnegie library is often a source for confusion and frustration. Research is often reduced to just plain search for the student in quest of information.

Alumni Assn.; Charles E. Palm, dean, State College of Agriculture at Cornell; Frank P. Piskor, vice president, Syracuse University; and Marvin Rapp, president, Onondaga Community College.

Tours of the buildings which will contain educational and research facilities for more than 2,000 students, will start at 11:30, and will run continuously until 5:30 p.m., and from 7:30 to 10 p.m. An exhibition of 123 watercolors of wildflowers by the noted painter Geraldine King Tam will be held in the lobby of Illick Hall until November 12, as part of the dedication ceremony.

Additional exhibits and demonstrations will include motion pictures; two new processes for treating wood that were displayed at the International Furniture Fair in Louisville, Ken., two weeks ago; an X-ray series on the life of carpenter bees; research on other forest and wood pests; limnology, population ecology, forest wildlife biology, and animal behavior exhibits; and botanical displays including growth chambers, herbaxia, and greenhouses. The public and school classes are cordially invited to attend these events.

The new School of Forestry quadrangle is outlined by the F. Franklin Moon Library, which is "especially strong in coverage of American forestry" (left), and Joseph S. Illick Hall, which houses the expanding programs in biology, soils and public education. Both will be dedicated Friday.

Moon Library, containing 60,000 catalogued items, is one of the top two or three forestry libraries in the U.S. Holdings are especially strong in forest botany and pathology, forest chemistry, forest economics, forest management, forest zoology, landscape architecture, paper science and engineering, silviculture, soil science, and wood products engineering. The new building will permit the collection to double in the years ahead.

The library, containing 32,000 square feet of space, was built and equipped at a cost of $1.5 million. It provides a current periodicals room, a bibliographic center, a reserve book room, rooms for microforms, special collections, and archives. Special education facilities, including typing and audio rooms are also provided. The Robin Hood Collection and a large conference room for general college use, complete the building.

Illick Hall is the largest building on the College of Forestry campus, and houses educational and research programs in biology, soils, and public service and continuing education. Within the Division of Biological Sciences are three departments offering an undergraduate program in forest biology, and specialized graduate programs in forest botany and pathology, forest entomology, forest zoology, and forest wildlife biology.

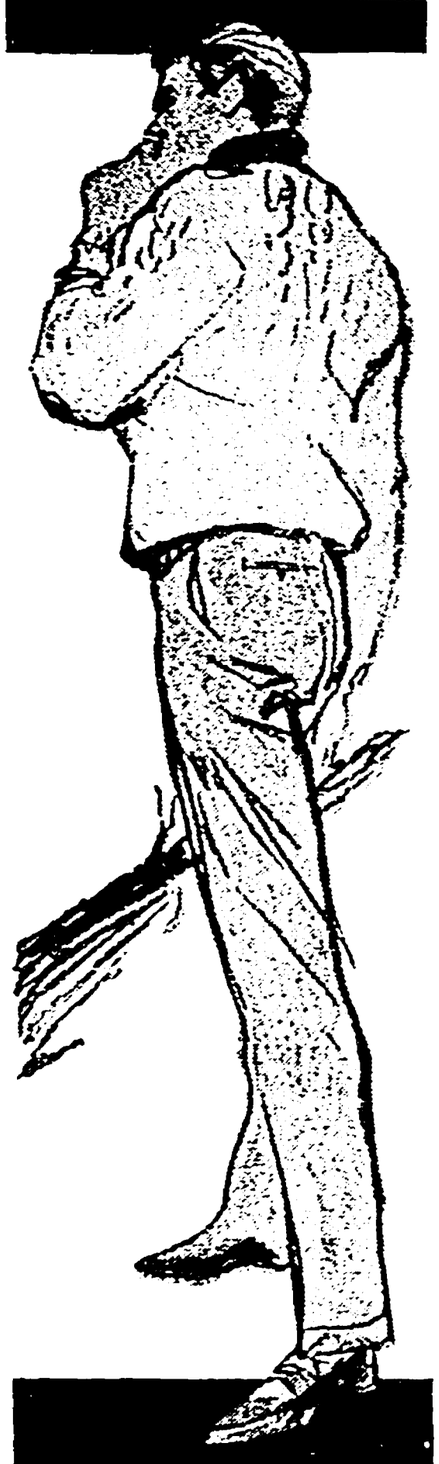
Research efforts in Illick Hall will be directed to biological problems with special focus on those areas basic to managing forest resources. Both students and faculty now have the opportunity to carry out studies using to full advantage the College's analytical tools in chemistry, physics and computer services which have developed in recent years. Some of these study areas are: fundamentals of life, the nature and control of heritability, morphogenesis, growth, resistance to pathogenic organisms, population dynamics, the nature of memory and learning behavior, and ecology.

Opportunities for interdisciplinary research indlude: tree genetics, tree nutrition and physiology, environmental tree diseases, and ecology.

Forest Botany and Pathology spaces occupy the third and fourth floors, including instructional and research laboratories. There are herbaria for fungi and higher plants, tissue culture facilities, genetics laboratory, constant temperature rooms and growth chambers. A complex of rooms is designed for growing plant materials used in detection and bioassay of plant growth regulators.

Also located on the third floor are research and instructional facilities for forest soils, including atomic absorption spectro-photometer and nitrogen assay equipment; and offices for the Educational Communications Section which operated the TV studio on the ground floor.

The fifth floor, or roof of Illick Hall, contains glasshouses and insectaries for the use of the various departments.



Illick Hall contains 85,000 square feet of net instructional and research floor space, and was constructed and equipped at a cost of $6.5 million. The building qualified for two federal grants from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare totaling $2,522,000, which reimbursed the State University. The building will house 62 faculty and staff, and 90 graduate students. From 50 to 60 biology courses will be taught in Illick each year.

Moon Library and the Division of Biological Sciences moved into the new buildings from Marshall Hall, which is largely vacated at the present time preparatory to extensive renovation. The College's School of Landscape Architecture will occupy two floors of one wing during the construction period.

Moon Library was named for Dean F. Franklin Moon, whose tenure at the College began in 1912 when he was appointed Professor of Forest Engineering and ended at his untimely death in 1929.

Illick Hall is a memorial to Dean Joseph S. Illick, who served the college for 21 years after joining the faculty as Professor and Chairman of the Department of Forest Management in 1931.

SUSKI begins its planning for winter skiing enjoyment

Since Syracuse's infamous winters are not too far away, Syracuse University's Ski Club (SUSKI) is formulating plans for an early start before the first flakes begin to fall.

The executive committee's tentative plans feature an expanded schedule of trips. The itinerary includes four day trips to local areas, one weekend visit to Vermont and three local night treks.

Club officers are seeking students to help serve on various committees, including instructors for a new ski school venture. Publicity and activities committees also need workers. A few positions on the executive committee are also open.

Officers are meeting at 4:30 p.m. today in 207 HL to evaluate and select new committee members. All interested students are invited to attend. SUSKI's first general membership meeting is scheduled for the first week in November.

of the Peace and Freedom Party because his name will most likely not appear on the ballot. Gregory is on the ballot in 11 states, including New York.

Tussing acknowledged the fact that the Freedom and Peace party, which supports Gregory, and Peace and Freedom Party, which supports Cleaver, are actually causing a split among those who have anti-war sentiments.

This Sunday, Dick Gregory and Tussing will speak at the University Methodist Church, 1085 E. Genessee St., at 3:30 p.m.

UU Bull

Dr. David N. Johnson, university organist, will discuss and demonstrate the Crouse organ at today's University Union Bull Session.

Dr. Johnson, director of music in Hendricks Chapel, has composed more than 100 published musical works. The Texas native, who came to Syracuse in 1967, was previously a professor of music at Alfred University and St. Olaf College.

The Crouse organ, installed in 1950, was built by the Holtkamp Organ Co. in Cleveland. The free-standing organ with exposed pipes was designed to be an integral part of Crouse Auditorium, rather than an unseen instrument concealed by a partition.

The Bull Session will be held at 4:00 in Crouse College Auditorium.

Conference

Four members of the College of Home Economics staff, will attend the annual conference of the National Council on Family Relations in New Orleans, La., Oct. 14 to 19. They are Mrs. Ramona Morgner, Miss Camilla Westfall, Mrs. Sarah Nanney and Edward Wilson.

The conference theme is "The Man and His Worlds."

Prof aids O'Dwyer

The formation of a Citizens' Committee for the election of Paul O'Dwyer to the United States Senate was announced today by John R. Varney, local co-ordinator for the O'Dwyer campaign.

The Committee includes Alan K. Campbell, soon to be dean of the Maxwell School, and Michael Reagen, assistant dean of Maria Regina College. Campbell and Reagen are co-chairmen in charge of colleges and universities.

POSTER CONTEST

Get out your paint brushes because the judging of the Homecoming Poster Contest will take place at midnight, October 10. The theme of the contest is Homecoming — Beat Pittsburgh. Posters will be judged according to originality, appearance and theme.

There will be six trophies awarded: 1st and 2nd place for small residences, 1st and 2nd place for large residences, permanent overall winner, and a circulating trophy. Large residences are considered 30 or over, small residences 30 or under. The trophies for the Poster Contest have been donated by the ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

Two houses or dorm floors may combine forces to make one poster. All posters must be identified from the street by the name of the house. All residences that wish to be eligible for trophy competition or recognition must fill out this application and turn it in.

Turn these applications in to Tony Massaro at Phi Sigma Delta 206 Walnut Place, by Thursday, Oct. 10

Outside tackle Cherundolo is only attending to his job

By IRA SILVERMAN

It has often been said that the offensive backs get all the praise while it is the linemen who do all the work. This axiom applies to John Cherundolo.

"Lumpy," as he is known to his teammates, is the Orangemen's starting outside-tackle, a position he has played for almost every offensive play this season. Cherundolo, a junior who stands 6-3 and weighs 240, is a aeronautical engineering major, minoring in knocking over opposing linemen.

Outside-tackle is a postion unusual in itself in this day of the balanced line. Instead of the usual two guards, two tackles, and two ends divided equally on either side of the center, SU uses an "un-balanced" line. This system puts only the left guard and left end on one side of the center. On the opposite side are the right guard, the inside-tackle, and outside-tackle, John Cherundolo.

"The difference between the two tackles," explains Cherundolo, "is that the inside-tackle acts more like a pulling guard, while the outside tackle hits straight up."

Cherundolo acquired his nickname while wrestling in high school. During a match in which he was getting "killed," his coach jumped up and shouted, "Come on, you look like a lump on the mat." The name has stuck since then.

While everyone from Ben Schwartzwalder on down was fretting at the beginning of the season about our inexperienced offensive line, the players themselves knew the worrying was for nothing.

"Most of the players on the line this year have played together for three years," remarks Cherundolo. "We all played a little last year, too. In fact, our offensive line was more experienced that Michigan State's."

The team has come a long way since that opening day loss to the Spartans, gaining both experience and confidence. The UCLA game will probably be considered the turning point of the season.

"We were really up for UCLA," observed Cherundolo. "People said that last year's win was a fluke, and we wanted to prove them wrong. The players all felt that there would be nothing left for the season if we lost this one."

Looking ahead, "Lumpy" does not feel that the team will have any let down against Pitt this Saturday. "This year's team is different from last year's," he said. "We'll be playing hard against everyone."

While most of Cherundolo's blocking is "straight on," there is much more to what is expected of him than the average fan realizes. He must open the holes for the runners, and keep them open until the player gets through. On pass plays, he is expected to keep an oncoming linemen out of the Orange backfield for what may seem like an eternity.

In the first two games, against Michigan State and Maryland, Cherundolo was matched head-to-head with the opposing left tackle. In the case of the Spartans, he faced Chuck Bailey, whom Cherundolo feels has been his toughest opponent thus far. "Bailey was quick, big, and strong; about 240 pounds," said Cherundolo. Against UCLA, however, he was assigned to the left linebacker, and managed to keep him out of the Orange backfield all day.

Still, Lumpy gets little notice. His uniform, however, is usually among the dirtiest on the team late Saturday afternoon. And when he puts away that Number 73, at least his teammates know he did his job.

Although the fans may not know he's there, John Cherundolo never lets an opposing linemen forget. All he may do, as he puts it, is "block," but that seems to be more than enough so far this season.

Orange centers don't mind not being attention center

By FRED KRAVER

The most overlooked man on the football field is the center. Even the referee gets cheered when he trips over his own feet and comes up with a face full of mud. But when was the last time a center did a shaving commercial?

Lack of recognition does not bother Orange centers Gerry Vogt and Jim Raymond. They are driven by desire, not by the glory of publicity.

At 6-1, 206, Gerry Vogt is the smallest starting lineman. He makes up for his size with remarkable speed and quickness. When Vogt's gob is to take out a much heavier defensive tackle, he hits low, trying to knock him off his feet. More often than not, the job is accomplished.

Being overlooked does not affect Vogt. "You learn to accept it. I play for self-satisfaction. Playing and winning are important, recognition doesn't matter," he says.

Vogt chose Syracuse through the influence of former Orange quarterback Wally Mahle, and, he says, "I'm very pleased with Syracuse."

The junior from Erie, Pa., moved in as starting center last year when Jim Murphy hurt his ankle on a punt return. Although it was a tough way to break in as a starter, Vogt said, "I was pleased with the chance to play."

The hardest play for the center is the snap, as in field goals and punts. "Games are lost on bad snaps," says Vogt. "It's better to keep them low where they can be fielded. High snaps are dangerous."

Vogt is married and has two children, a son and a daughter. Naturally, he would like his son to follow in his footsteps and play football.

Like Vogt, Jim Raymond is driven by desire. Raymond, 6-5, 230, is hindered by a psychological block caused by injury he received last year to his left knee. The injury is much like the ones which almost ended the careers of Tucker Frederickson and Elgin Baylor: torn ligaments, pulled tendons, and, in Raymond's case, a chip off his kneecap. The injury hampers his lateral motion. "If you think about it, it will hinder you," he points out.

The publicity factor is not a problem for Raymond. "Backs naturally get more publicity because they're the ones who score the touchdowns."

Raymond, who hails from Stamford, Conn., did not get nervous in the Michigan State game, despite the huge television audience. "I was most concerned with letting the team down," he recalls. "I didn't want to let the team down by making a mistake."

Raymond has become acquainted with the styles of such pros as Jim Ringo and Greg Larsen. However, he states "you must master it yourself. Game experience is the most valuable teacher."

Jim agrees with Gerry that the center's toughest play is the snap. "It's just a matter of concentration and follow-through."

Offensive line coach Rocky Pirro said last week, "It's a young line that is constantly improving." Saturday's triumph over UCLA is a feather in coach Pirro's hat. The Uclan's highly-touted defense was deftly handled by the Orange line.

In this Saturday's game against Pittsburgh, the play of the offensive line is worth watching, particularly centers Gerry Vogt and Jim Raymond. There is a lot more to watch on a football field than merely the ball.

Sports sidelights

Syracuse has jumped into the second 10 in the national ratings after its upset win over UCLA Saturday.

The Orange is ranked 15th in the Associated Press poll and 16th by UPI. UCLA dropped out of the top 20 in both surveys.

Among SU opponents, unbeaten Penn State is ranked third, and undefeated California and Michigan State are in the second 10.

Freshman basketball tryouts will begin on Tuesday, Oct. 15, between 3:30 and 4 p.m. on the Manley Field House court. Candidates must furnish their own equipment.

Those interested should call coach Bill Vesp in the Field House by Oct. 11, so he can set up physicals.

SU defensive tackle Art Thoms was named to the ECAC weekly team for the second time this year. Thoms was recognized for his play on Saturday against UCLA.

First balloting for the all important Lambert Trophy shows eepected results. Penn State, undefeated through three games and ranked in the top five nationally, received all first place votes and a perfect score of 80. Syracuse got all the second place votes and a total of 72.

Trailing the two leaders were undefeated Boston College in third place and Ivy League power Yale in fourth.

Penn State will be put to the test on Saturday, when they journey to UCLA for a TV game that will start locally at 4:30 EDT.

A really sweet 16 rowing now for old Billy Orange

By GINA BELL

Everyone knows that crew is a gentlemen's sport. Right? It involves brutal training, and lots of guts, and, unless she is one of the musclebound Amazons who rows for the women's clubs in Philadelphia, it's no sport for a girl. Right? Girls are best suited to cheering enthusiastically when the boats cross the finish line on Onondaga Lake. Still right?

There are 16 coeds who would politely but firmly disagree on these points, and they represent the latest victory in the battle for feminine quality--the Syracuse University Girls' Crew.

These girls aren't Amazons; they're pretty and feminine, and, for the most part, rather fragile looking. With the exception of the coxswain, who is 4 feet 10 inches, they are all 5 feet 8 inches or taller. Sherry Guest, who, along with Belle Jauchen, is co-captain, is the only girl who has ever been in a shell; several of the others have never even paddles a canoe.

Inexperience doesn't bother them, though. They are all sold on the idea of rowing. Their reasons for wanting to row vary ("It's a good way to get in shape." "Builds you up in the right places, you know,"), but their interest is sincere, and they are determined to have at least one boatload on the lake by spring.

The girls have more help than they can handle. So many oarsmen volunteered for the coaching honors that it was finally decided that Gary MacLachlan, the freshman coach, would have the privilege. Varsity coach Bill Sanford has offered the use of a fiberglass shell. He will also let the girls use the tanks when the crew is not rowing in them. He said his main problem will involve scheduling the girls' practices for times when the guys aren't around. "Can you imagine how much work I'll get out of them with those girls paddling around out there?" he asks. He is optimistic, however, about finding a workable schedule.

In true feminine fashion, the girls are super-organized. They've decided on weekly practices, scheduled for lazy Sunday afternoons. If they can fill two boats, they plan to compete against each other in exhibitions before the varsity races in the spring.

SEveral problems have presented themselves, caused by the nature of the new team. For example, there is the dilemma of how to gracefully handle that proud rowing tradidion which demands that the losing boatload peel off their rowing jerseys and hand them to the victors. Then, there is the question of whether to wear crew hats or colored scarves with their new orange jerseys, and whether short cut-offs are better than short-short ones. None of these problems is insurmountable, however, for girls who really want to row.

The reactions to having a girls' crew have been extremely favorable, although one oarsman, possibly disgruntled with the crew's unscheduled weekend off, remarked that "We already have a girls' crew."

Sanford is enthusiastic. He said that if the girls' crew can create spirit and support for the regular crew, it will more than justify its existence. He added that women's crew is becoming a recognized event in the sporting world, and the formation of a girls' crew at Syracuse, even if it is noncompetitive, is a foresighted step.

Ask any oarsman how he likes the idea of 16 pretty girls splashing around in the lake with him, you're likely to get a uniform reaction: "ALL RIGHT!"

SG leaders and mayor discuss drug use here

A new bridge in University-city relations was constructed yesterday as three SU representatives visited Mayor William Walsh's office for a discussion of illicit drug traffic here.

Police spokesmen informed two student leaders and David Tatham, dean of men, of their desire to arrest pushers rather than just any campus drug users.

Chuck Hicks and Jeff Portnoy represented SU students at yesterday's conference, the first in a monthly series. Hicks is president of Student Government, while Portnoy serves as vice-president.

Also attending the discussion were Mayor Walsh, Ray Owens, his research director, Capt. Donald E. Sheridan, commander of the Police Department's organized crime division, and Lt. Harold Seib, of the same division.

"We will pursue pushers and suppliers with whatever means necessary," stressed Capt. Sheridan.

Syracuse Police are quite concerned with non-students frequenting Marshall Street, whom they view as prime targets in the war against drugs. Mayor Walsh also criticized these "hippies" as a nuisance to pedestrians and merchants and as a health problem.

Hicks, however, strongly disagrees with this position. "They are just doing their own thing," he explained. "Several other groups on campus may be viewed as more obnoxious, but no one is trying to suppress them."

According to police statistics, 171 persons have been charged with violating drug laws in Syracuse this year. Twelve of these were Syracuse University students.

Drug traffic has risen markedly here, as illustrated by a consideration of the 1967 arrest figures. During that year, only 32 drug charges were lodged in Syracuse, including four against SU students.

Answering a question from Hicks, the mayor's representatives and Dean Tatham strongly denied that any paid informers are used on campus. Any student or Resident Advisor who delivers information does so voluntarily and without pay, they emphasized.

Dean Tatham added that Syracuse Police need court warrants to enter University dormitories or Greek houses.

Capt. Sheridan and Lt. Seib also ventured that while acid usage at SU is declining, speed and grass traffic is flying high.

Hicks and Portnoy both view this new communications channel as very useful and rewarding. "Opening this dialog gets rid of mistrust and misunderstanding between the University community and downtown officials," explained Portnoy.

The two SG leaders feel that future sessions may be more productive. While yesterday's meeting was just to discuss limits of the penal law, other prospective topics may result in formulation of actual guidelines regarding campus-city problems.

Future agendas include discussion of parking problems, water fights and the use of city parks bordering University property.

Prof. Munger sees Richard Nixon as 'best gamble' for the presidency

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

Vietnam and Richard Nixon were an important combination last night as SU Young Republicans were treated to hearing why a democrat was voting for Nixon for president. That democrat was Prof. Frank Munger of the Maxwell School.

About 90 Young Republicans and interested students gathered in Maxwell Auditorium as Dr. Munger and Charles Umbanhowar, a public affairs lecturer, offered detailed appraisals of the 1968 presidential race. Much of their reasoning stemmed from the War in Vietnam.

Dr. Munger, speaking first, described the war as "immoral and destructive. "I feel extremely touched by the plight of the people," he said as he described the religious minorities in the South Vietnamese hamlets struggling to survive. He felt that as the war continues, it raises "little popular support," and he wants to vote for a candidate that will "end the war quickly."

Munger said several candidates would have been "appropriate," but now Nixon is the "best gamble," because his commitment to the war is "less onerous than that of Hubert Humphrey." Minger reasoned that Nixon has less to lose politically by attempting peace.

By 1972, when Nixon presumably would be running for reelection, he could disavow the settlement in Vietnam if it were unsuccessful, because he "inherited" the war situation from the Johnson administration. On the other hand, if the settlement were successful, he could claim it as his own.

Mr. Umbanhowar, in supporting the Nixon approach to the war, said that Nixon "proposes the only sensible solution." He said Nixon suggested going to the "locus of the conflict," which is not "the rice paddies of South Vietnam or Hanoi.

"The locus is in Moscow." He said the present administration has failed because it has seen only the military side of the war and not the political, but "Nixon says we must go to Moscow in strength."

Another motivation for Dr. Munger's support of Nixon was his belief that the Democratic party "needs to be defeated." He sees the party as seriously divided and thinks it would be "disastrous" if Humphrey were elected to "prolong the agony of the present struggle." Humphrey's election would perpetuate "control of the party by Southern democrats and machine democrats from the city."

He added that "if Robert F. Kennedy had lived, he would have been the overwhelming choice of the Democratic party."

Munger's third reason for supporting Nixon involved the matter of the candidate's integrity," for which Dr. Munger claimed to have "considerable respect. Not only is there a new Nixon, but he changed a good deal a long time ago."

PROF. FRANK MUNGER

Mr. Umbanhowar, in citing other reasons for supporting Nixon, mentioned the Nixon approach which he characterized as an "appeal not directed at emotion, but at reason." He praised the Nixon domestic program of "reopening channels of opportunity," and giving the underprivileged a "piece of the action." He also cited Nixon's plan for government stimulation of private business to help create housing, and stimulation of Negro business as vital to a new domestic program."

Sorority chapter buckles under national pressure

By ALAN STAMM
News Editor

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was written after extensive conversations with several individuals involved in the recolonization of Alpha Delta Pi's SU chapter. While officers of the sorority and Panhellenic were reluctant to discuss the issue, this represents the most complete account that could be assembled by the Daily Orange.

The fierce competition of SU's extensive Greek system may have claimed another victim. The inability of Alpha Delta Pi sorority to maintain a full sisterhood has prompted its national council to order an immediate recolonization of the local chapter.

The news came as a shock to the 13 members currently living in, most of whom will have to find new homes by January.

National officers feel that the declining SU chapter can be revitalized best by starting from scratch with a new cadre of pledges. Current members will be given alumnae status and the new pledges will assume all offices and live in the house. After recolonization has been completed these alumnae will be given the option of petitioning for reinstatement in the active chapter.

Nationally, Alpha Delta Pi is a prestigeous sorority with strong Southern traditions and selective membership procedures. No girls are accepted without recommendation from an alumna. No Negroes are members of SU's chapter.

Locally, the chapter has decined rapidly during the past year. Last May, for example, more than 40 girls were active members. Now, however, only 15 hold that status.

Eight girls deactivated to avoid moving in the house this fall. According to chapter rules, all active members must live in unless the house is overcrowded. The house, at 304 Walnut Pl., has a capacity of 23 girls.

There is some doubt regarding the legality of evicting girls who have signed year-long contracts. Dean Carolyn Jones, Panhel advisor, admitted last night that these contracts might be binding in

GIA head

Treple succeeds Weiner

Scott Weiner, last year's president of the Class of '71, has resigned as president of the Greek Independent Alliance (GIA), the fledgling campus political party. He has been succeeded by Joe Treple, former GIA vice president and head campaign manager.

Weiner's resignation came as a surprise move at a GIA executive council meeting last night at Alpha Xi Delta Sorority. He gave reasons of "academic and personal problems." Weiner was elected to the post after the general campus elections last spring in which GIA candidate Chuck Hicks captured the student government presidency.

Part one: All volunteer services

"Many prominent figures in both political parties have suggested that the United States employ a wholly Volunteer Army after the conclusion of the Vietnam War. Such a decision must be weighed with care and with regard for the historic consequences." Senator Jacob Javits, September 30, Syracuse University.

Let us assume the only justification for the government of a free society to compel its citizens to serve in its armed forces is the national security of that society. The war in Vietnam, in our opinion, does not present a threat to the security of our society. Consequently, the United States government should initiate a changeover from the irrational and inequitable Selective Service to all volunteer armed forces.

We take issue with Senator Javits, who said during his visit here: "While I have reached no final conclusion...I cannot help but wonder whether an army of mercenaries is in the best tradition of a free republic. Up to now, at least, free men have been willing to bear the burden of fighting for their own freedoms."

America's tradition is not an army of conscripts, but an army of volunteers. Only during the major wars——the Civil War, the First World War, the Second World War, and Korea——has the United States required a draft. In times of peace our tradition has been all volunteer armed forces. Only during the past two decades have we drafted in time of peace.

Clearly America's men are still willing to fight for their freedoms. What Senator Javits overlooks, dedicated dove though he is, may be that many men do not consider their freedom at stake in Vietnam or the immediate future.

"Surely, the results of professional armies throughout history should give us long pause before we risk that course....Let's be careful not only of the nature of our cause, but of those we choose as our champions."

It is difficult to find the lesson in history from the results of professional armies. Britain and the US have traditions of professional (or paid volunteer) armies and neither system has been threatened by its armies. Sweden and Switzerland use conscripts and are stable. On the other hand, the military junta that currently rules Greece, the birthplace of democracy, accomplished its coup with an army of conscripts. Argentina was taken over by an army of conscripts. Napoleon and Franco rose to power on the backs of armies of conscripts.

Hence, we conclude that Senator Javits' objections to all volunteer armed services are invalid. We believe an all volunteer armed service would be a continuation of our democratic tradition, not a break from it.

Psychology Dept.

On Autonomy

By Bill Leo Grande

Editor's Note: An organizational meeting of all interested undergraduate Psychology majors will be held at 7:30 today in 107 H.L.

A very extraordinary meeting took place Monday night at which time a department of this university laid the foundations for an attmept at autonomy. The Department of Psychology convened an open meeting of all interested department members, including faculty, graduate and undergraduate students. The expressed purpose of the proposed organization, for which Monday's meeting was a catalyst, is to give the faculty and students, particularly the students, a significant if not deciding voice in those matters which vitally concern them. Included in a discussion of the issues at hand were admission procedures of the graduate school as well as of the major requirements of the undergraduates, curriculum formulation and reform, evaluation of both instruction and material, and faculty promotion.

The hope was voiced that this type of organization might well serve as a microcosm for the university as a whole, and that this method of faculty-student-administration communication would make more physical methods of confrontation unnecessary. The co-operation of the faculty has been extremely appreciated and if the university is any where near as receptive to such progress as the active participants to the learning experience have been, Syracuse may well be on its way to a new position of academic stature. As the temporary chairman of Monday's meeting expressed it, "We are out to make this department the best department possible."

Johnny Richards

Johnny Richards, the noted jazz composer and band leader, and a student at Syracuse University in the early '30's died Monday in New York City. He was 56 years old.

Richards was a formative influence in the "progressive jazz" wave which swept the nation in the late '40's: He was probably best known for his compositions and arrangements for the Stan Kenton Orchestra. He also wrote for Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Barnet. He frequently fronted his own orchestra; his band of 1956-60 was especially well regarded. He made numerous recordings.

Richards began his career as a composer for film scores in 1932. He was always highly regarded by other musicians as an important creator of new styles of expression in jazz.

'The true Muskie'

Needs right to be heard

By Ed Humberger

Editor's note: The writer is the chairman of the SU Coalition for the Best Alternative which sponsored Senator Muskie's visit.

Essentially Mage and the P.F.P. should not be given the attention they have been accorded, but this would not be given had it not been for Mr. Finkelman's inaccurate assessment of Senator Muskie's positions in this campaign and his appearances in Syracuse.

Was the Senator heard in full by the students? Though the majority could hear him speak due to amplification, the minority denied him the right to be heard in full in spite of the system at his disposal. It was not that he had nothing to say, Mr. Finkelman, but rather that he was not given the opportunity to say it.

Had Paul Finkelman heard the Senator speak his mind, extemporaneously and undisrupted at a speech in Hotel Syracuse, after he left the University, he would have heard an appeal for an open society where men, including the P.f.P., are not repressed by police for their speech, but rather given an even greater opportunity to express and in a more meaningful way. Even though disrupted by this most strident group, he would have heard Muskie praise the youth of America for prodding the System and the status quo elder generation to new heights of political achievement. Mr. Finkelman would have heard the Senator speak of this nation's inception as the result of such prodding, disruption and revolution. But he would have also heard Muskie communicate that this nation exists solely because of an idea, not because of institutions which some wish to overturn. This idea, which has persisted through 200 years of turmoil and disruption, is that all men have the right to be heard in full, and to be represented.

Had Mr. Finkelman heard the Senator, he would have heard Muskie speak of the need for more communication and representation, but not of disruption and chaos, and for more reformation of outdated political institutions and a status quo society, but not for revolution and anarchy. I have heard the PFP talk of overthrowing the System with a minority, destroying the nation they would hope to "save" or at least control, but what would be put in its place? How would you, Mage and the PFP, treat the dissident guerrilla bands roaming throughout your system if you succeeded? Herein lies the essence of political philosophy and organization—herein lies the nature of man and his approaches to satisfying his needs through government.

Mage is a candidate for Vice President, yet her running mate is ineligible for office. How then, can she demand the podium as a candidate? Mage stands for Peace and Freedom, yet is it peace and is it freedom that 4,000 people be denied the right to hear an eligible candidate? I would surmise, Mage, that your disruption was motivated by your inability to represent that 4,000 majority will.

Some say that disruption is justified when a minority feels the majority is not being represented. It appears that on Monday, Muskie represented the majority and that the obscenitous, strident and hypocritical disruption led by an ineligible candidate was unjustified and undemocratic.

Stronger voice

SU students become more involved in school policies

By DAVE ROBINS

As part of a growing national trend, several schools at Syracuse University have recently instituted programs whereby students may have a voice in the academic subjects and social rules which concern them.

One of the dominating forces in paving the way towards a student voice came from Columbia University last spring. In an attempt to find the cause for the student disturbances, the Cox Commission made known the fact that, "The faculty became more and more remote from problems of student life and general university policy not related to formal instruction.

"At a time when the spirit of self-determination is running strongly, the administration of Columbia's affairs too often conveyed an attitude of authoritarianism and invited distrust...The president was unwilling to surrender absolute disciplinary powers."

In an effort to avert such a situation at SU, the Council on Student Life was conceived in 1967 and the University Senate has recently issued a progress report on their programs.

"The Council had representatives from the student body, the faculty, the administration, and the trustees," said the report.

"Despite its relative youth the council has made dramatic strides in its reexamination of matters of concern to the student community. Most notable, among its achievements, are modifications in the prohibition against the consumption of alchoholic beverages, relaxation of the rules concerning dormatory visitation and dormitory hours, and, most recently a revision of Rule I, which previously purported to allow the University the right to expel a student without stated cause."

"Pending final reorganization of the Senate, several important concerns were deemed in immediate need of direct student participation. Three ad hoc committees created by the Senate on the selection of a new Chancellor, the reorganization of the Senate and a study of the goals of the University were established by the Senate with the understanding that students would participate on them."

"None of the committees has been in existence long enough to report on progress," said the report, but their organization "guarantees that the students will actively participate in making decisions about three of the most pressing University concerns."

The student's voice also has grown stronger in departmental meetings. The department of mechanical-aerospace engineering was the first to initiate such a plan.

On Sept. 15 last year, the faculty of this school asked Prof. Salamon Eskinazi to contact students and offer them participation in departmental meetings. Lack of student interest, however, canceled the plan.

The program was suggested again this year, by Phi Tau Sigma, the department's honorary society. Sufficient interest was generated, and two grad students, Tim Schenk and Jim Lesiuk (temporary chairman), and two undergrads, Eric Schrumm and Jim Short, were selected as representatives.

Each will have a vote in choosing new curriculum and teachers. Schrumm said there were no "pressing issues," but that "certain changes should be made in the curriculum."

Eskinazi urged that "communications be the key word between the faculty and students."

In the Maxwell School, balloting will name two graduate students and two undergraduate history majors to serve a term of probably a semester in the department's faculty meetings. They will have a voice in the choosing of the curriculum and lecturers, but will have no vote.

The English department, too, appears to be inviting a student voice. Prof. Joseph Bryant, head of the executive department's committee, is "extremely pleased" that EGG, the English Graduate Group, is interested in changing the curriculum, particularly that of the Ph.D. program.

On the undergraduate level, he feels that a student curriculum board would best meet the needs for the College of Liberal Arts. The board would act as an advisory council to all the departments in the college.

Reflecting the trend toward greater influence of student opinion, the Journalism School has announced plans for a Committee on Student Relations.

It appears that the Columbia disorder and those like it across the country have acted as a sort of realization: those active in securing a stronger voice for the student believe communication among faculty, administration and students can be achieved in other ways.

Some men think the only way to get a good, close shave is with a blade.

If that's what you think, we'd like to tell you something about the Norelco Tripleheader Speedshaver®.

In a very independent laboratory, we had some very independent men shave one side of their faces with a leading stainless steel blade, and the other side with a new Norelco Tripleheader.

The results showed the Tripleheader shaved as close or closer than the blade in 2 out of 3 shaves.

The Tripleheader has three rotary blades inside new, thin, Microgroove™ heads that 'float,' so it follows your face, to shave you closer.

The Tripleheader has a pop-up sideburn trimmer. A handy, coiled cord. And a 110/220 voltage selector.

court. "However," she stressed "I don't think anyone is going to force them out if it comes to that."

Despite its falling membership, Alpha Delta Pi managed to earn several distinctions in sorority circles. Last spring, it ranked second in for the best pledge class and step singing. Kappa Alpha Theta was first in both categories.

Scholastically, the house boasted a 2.96 average after last semester.

Despite some suppressed feelings of resentment within the house, current members are anxious to avoid damaging recolonization prospects. "Recolonization may very well be in the best interest of keeping our house alive on this campus," conceded president Janet Koening. She otherwise refused to discuss the move or her reaction to it.

Mrs. James McDonald, the sorority's national membership director, was contacted by the Daily Orange last night. She refused to discuss the matter of recolonization.

Panhellenic president Sally Clonninger also refused to comment, besides saying that her organization "wants to provide a very strong Greek system and is strongly behind this recolonization."

Representatives of Panhel and Alpha Delta Pi's national council will speak to interested sophomores, juniors and seniors in their living areas this Monday. The sorority's national president and vice president are expected to be on campus then.

Alpha Delta Pi was founded in 1851 at Wesleyan, a female college in Macon, Ga. Syracuse's chapter was started in 1924. It went off campus in 1935 and returned in 1946.

IFC has indicated that it supports "wholeheartedly" the recolonization of Alpha Delta Pi.

A tea for rushees by invitation is planned for next Wednesday, and a mixer also will be scheduled.

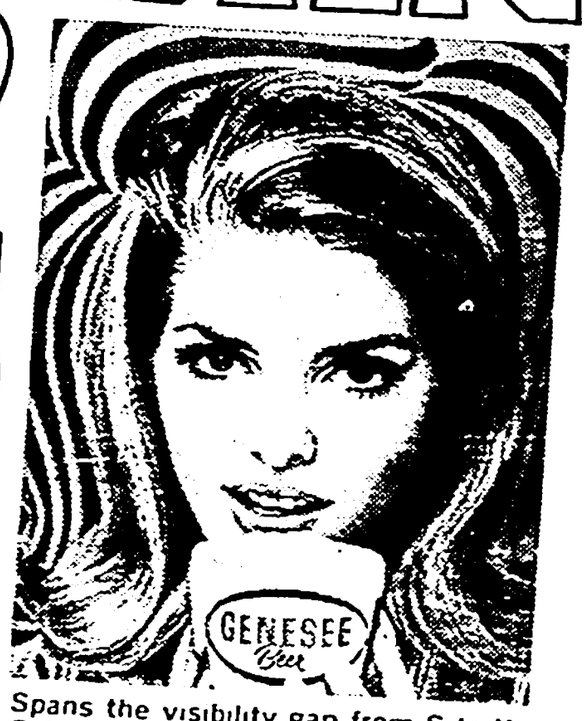
The pledge date is Saturday, Oct. 19.

Bill Orange

Competition for the Bill Orange trophy has gotten off to a fast start this year, and already the floors to beat are making themselves known. Day 2, Flint 2A, DellPlain Hall (top), and Watson E1 and E2 are leading the contest so far, but half a dozen other floors are coming up fast. The posters are judged on originality, neatness, and overall attractiveness; they are due at 113 College Pl. at midnight on the Wednesday before each home game.

Bill Orange is also working with other organizations on campus. Frosh entries in Homecoming Poster Competition, sponsored by the sophomore class, will be given points toward Bill Orange. Freshman living centers participating in intramural sports will be looked upon favorably, and semifinalists or higher will get Bill Orange jock points (men's floors only).

Nor does Bill Orange overlook the scholastic and extracurricular activities of the individuals on each floor. Participation in SG, interscholastic sports, Projection '70, Venture '69, and LTE all help the floor's effort toward the Bill Orange trophy. Scholastic averages are also important.



More important than all these, however, is the floor's initiative in organizing and running their own mixers, social events, charitable events and drives, and other activities requiring a unified floor.

Each floor should submit an application at the end of February describing the floor's activities and psych throughout the year. Details on the applications will be given later in the year.

Please notify Roy Sykes (x2828) or Tom Marshall (x2638) at least 24 hours in advance of any floor activities.

So remember frosh, you can't escape B.O. — Big Bill is watching you!

2. What happened to your Viper Mark IV?

I just couldn't identify with that car.

3. That's what you said about the Sidewinder Eight.

But a Python is something else. Four-on-the-floor, six-barrel carb, console tach . . . and what a steal!

4. Don't you think you ought to hold onto a car more than a month, Chet?

When you see a great buy coming your way, you have to grab it.

5. That's what I did yesterday—signed up for Living Insurance from Equitable. At my age the cost is low, and I get solid protection now that will continue to cover my family later when I get married. Plus a nice nest egg when I retire.

With the right set of wheels, you'll go a long way.

Student Senate

Balloting for frosh officers set for today

By COLETTE STALLINGS

The Student Senate last night arranged for voting booths to be open in the lobby of the physics building today from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. for freshman elections.

Speaker Ed Feldman noted that paper ballots will be used. "If anybody is thinking of stuffing the ballot boxes," said Feldman, "a system of checking to assure that no one has voted twice has been organized. "Anyone found voting twice will be subject to suspension."

Considering the elections, student senator Bill Weigand reported that the candidate running on the aspiration '72 platform is alleged to have spent more than the permitted $75 on campaign material and is being supported by the Greek Independent Alliance Party. The charge was denied by the candidate.

An amendment proposed by John Ross, chairman of the government structures committee, that "involvement in the election by any party or its officers" be punished by one of the seven punishments listed in the judicial code was passed by the senate.

A motion to send a letter of apology to Sen. Edmund S. Muskie for his reception on this campus with speaker pro tempore John Diamond termed "rude and crude", was unanamiously accepted.

Athletic commissioner Dan Baum reported that the "present student seating arrangements were approved at the Athletic board meeting." Any complaints about seating should be directed to Mr. Geiger, assistant director of athletics.

Baum noted that some students have been using ID cards other than their own to pick up football tickets. In the future, anyone found doing this will have their ID taken and it will be returned only after payment of a fine to the University.

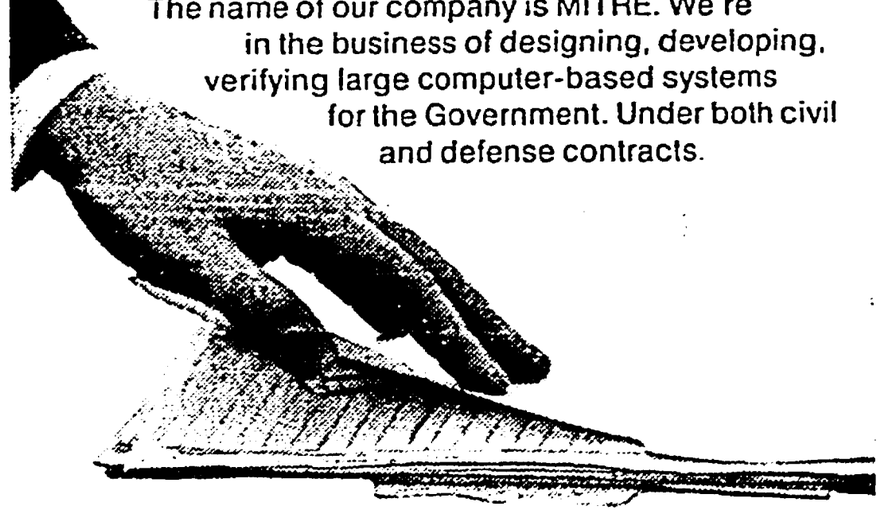
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Political Equity Fred Tucillo said that if both the campus political parties, Campus Alliance for Progress (CAP), and Greek Independent Alliance (GIA), submit plans for party reform before Monday, Oct. 14, the planned investigation of the political parties will be off.

Chairman John Ross announced that the government structures committee will hold open hearings on the new student government constitution Oct. 14 and Oct. 17 at 7 p.m. in 307 HL. The executive branch and the preamble will be discussed on Monday, Oct. 14; the Judicial branch and campus organizations will be discussed on Thursday, Oct. 17.

Dave Moore, representative from Scott Cottage, told the senate that the residents are to be moved unless they can find "5 or 6" residents who "were shut out of Vincent" last year when it was closed to undergraduates.

The University apparently does not want to subject these students to the necessity of rearranging their living assignments twice, through no fault of their own. Only four such residents can be found, and these are not enough to exempt the cottage from eviction. The senate approved a motion to support the petition of Scott Cottage.

To the residents of Parsons Cottage who were moved last week John Diamond said, "I wish to salute these gentlemen for putting up a damn good fight."



The annual student, faculty, administration Pinebrook retreat will be Oct. 18. Any suggestions for topics of discussion should be submitted to Ed Feldman.

All future student senate meetings will be held in Maxwell Auditorium on Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m.

Lou Gubitosa: end justifies his means

By LARRY CENTER

A criterion of a good football team is that it forces the other team to make mistakes. One of the most important parts of pass defense is the rush, which, if fast enough, will not give the quarterback enough time to throw, or force him into an interception.

Ask Lou Gubitosa. Last year, his first on the varsity, Lou was really attracted to the football. His tackle caused Gary Beban to fumble on the Syracuse three-yard line when SU led the UCLA Bruins by only 13-0. His tackles also caused Holy Cross and California fumbles which led to the first Orange touchdown in each game.

On a unit that ranked fourth in the country in total defense and second in rushing defense, Gubitosa was first in tackling the opposing quarterbacks for losses, totaling over 50 yards.

Lou was recruited for Syracuse by end coach Joe Szombathy. At Orange, N.J. High School, he was all- county and all-city as a tight end and defensive end. He was also a one-man field team, throwing the discus and javelin and putting the shot.

Last year Gub saw his first action in the Maryland game, when Steve Zegalia got hurt. He started the next game against California and was never budged from that end position for the rest of the season.

The junior end admits that he liked offense better in high school, but now likes defense because "you have more fun, more freedom. You can do a lot more,use your hands. On offense you're more inhibited and they call more penalties."

Contrasting the two jobs of a defensive end, Lou feels pass rushing is harder than playing the run, "especially when you have to hit the backs and go through. On runs, they're coming at you. You can bounce off a man and still make the tackle. On a pass rush, you have to get to them."

He thinks that pass rushing is mainly using the hands to push off and get around the opposing lineman. "We charge outside or inside, depending on the defense we're in," says Lou. "We use about six defenses with stunts, where the linebackers jump in and out of the defensive line.

"We key the backs. If he sets up to block, we know its a pass. If he hooks, the play usually goes to the outside." By concentrating on just one back, the defensive linemen can thus "read" the flow of most plays.

Lou is a fine defensive end for Syracuse, but knows his present size (6'2", 196) would be too small for that position in professional football. He says, "In the pros they're more like tackles, bigger and stronger, and there's more infighting. Here we play mostly outside."

Although this year's defense is missing Dave Casmay, Billy Zanieski and Jim Cheyunski, Gub says, "The guys we have now on defense are just as good as last year, but before UCLA we were not hitting like we could. Saturday we finally got together. The whole team was hitting, really firing out. It was a real team effort."

He also made it a point to mention Rick Kokosky and Pete Pietryka, the backup men for Lou and Steve Zegalia. Says Lou, "They're good enough to step into any game at any time."

Lou also commended sophomore tackle Ray White, as "tough as Coghill, whom he replaced, and real strong."

Gubitosa has continued his track career here, but has given up the discus and javelin to concentrate on the shotput. "Football keeps me in shape for the indoor track season and I lift weights during the track season, which helps me get into good condition for spring practice," Lo explains.

Frosh tryouts

Freshman basketball tryouts will begin on Tues., Oct. 15. Candidates should be on the Manley Field House court between 3:30 and 4 p.m., and must furnish their own equipment.

Manley Field House built as a monument to football

By DOUG GARR

Manley Field House was officially opened on December 15, 1962, at a cost of over two million dollars. The money to build the circular structure was raised from donations by trustees and alumni. Much of the money was donated by Dr. George Leroy Manley.

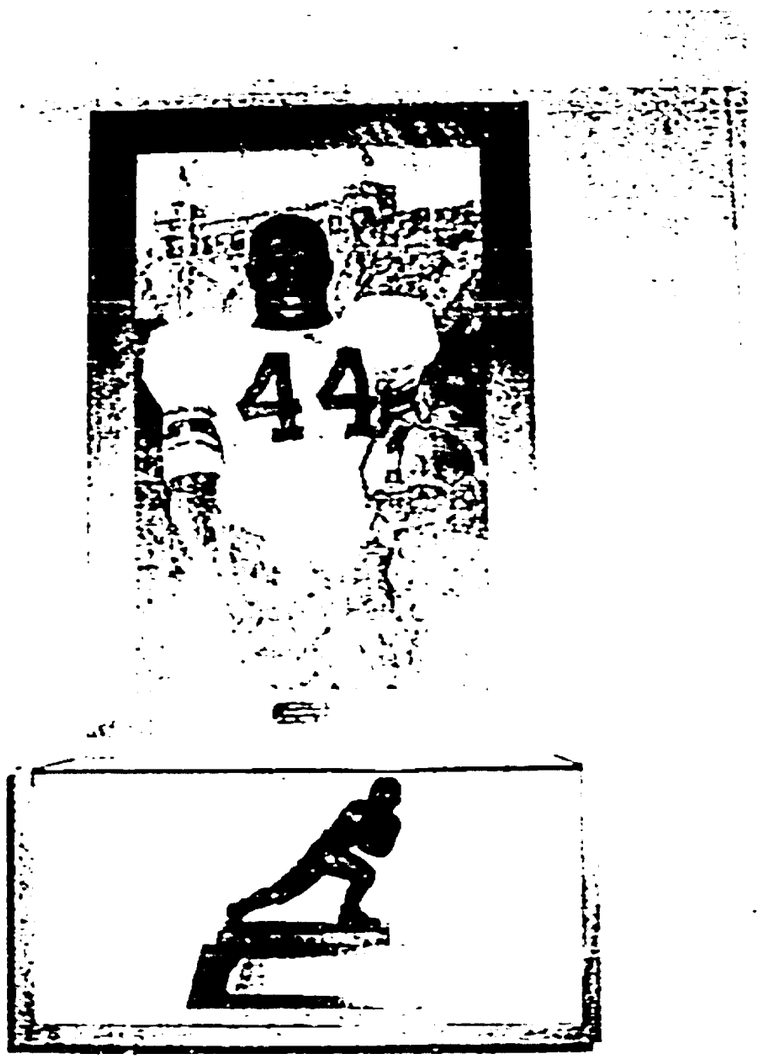
The field house is divided into three main parts: the circular athletic field, the office wing (facing Comstock Ave.) and the locker and team rooms (Colvin St). The athletic area covers 71,631 square feet on the 1.6 acre site.

The major reason for the erection of the building was the need for an indoor football practice field. Syracuse weather being what it is, the football team lost many practices before the field house was built. In 1960, football coach Ben Schwartzwalder said, 'Construction of a field house is a matter of life and death as far as football is concerned. It's that simple." Since Ben's 1959 football team had an 11-0 record and a national championship, his opinion carried some weight.

The main building was constructed with a dirt floor base for football practice, with the option of a wooden floor for basketball games. The wrestling team holds dual meets there, along with the indoor track team. The lacrosse and baseball teams also use it for indoor practices.

The permanent seating in the field house holds 4,500 people. With bleachers added for basketball games the capacity is 5,800 and for special occasions with large audiences, such as Chancellor Tolley's speech, 12,000.

The outstanding tourist attraction of the field house is the main wing. Facing Comstock Ave. is the glass casing with Ernie Davis's Heisman Trophy for the "outstanding college football player in the United States" for 1961. Above the trophy is a portrait of Davis in Archbold Stadium.



In the lobby are numerous trophy cases housing awards from all of Syracuse's athletic teams. A separate case hold the 1959 football team's awards, including the game ball from their 23-14 Cotton Bowl win over Texas.

In this section of the building are also the football ticket office and the coaches' offices. It is here that Ben Schwartzwalder and his 9-man coaching staff map out the week's strategy. The publicity office, along with other sports offices, is also located here.

In the back end of the field house is the locker and team room section. The medical room has the most up-to-date equipment where physicians and trainers attempt to tape the team back together on Mondays.

The walls of the locker room boast two large photographs, of Floyd Little and Ernie Davis, that were used in Kodak color advertisements. The medical room has an enlarged greeting card autographed by the 1959 football team.

If you have heard the adage that "Syracuse is football," and you are skeptical about it, the pictures and trophies at the field house will clear any doubts.

Basketball

Freshman basketball tryouts will begin on Tues., Oct. 15, between 3:30 and 4 p.m. on the Manley Field House court. Candidates must furnish their own equipment.

Those interested should contact coach Bill Vesp at the Field House by today, so he can arrange physical exams.

Covers areas of student life

Survey to give profile of SU students

By MELODY HOWARD

The results of a survey covering all aspects of student life at Syracuse University have been released this week. The survey, conducted by George Dolch, a doctoral candidate in higher education at Syracuse, was distributed to 2500 randomly selected students last spring, and will be used by the administration as well as many student organizations in future policy making.

Covering all areas of student life at Syracuse, the answers have been compiled by Mr. Dolch and compared to those received in response to a survey by Dr. Daniel Katz and Dr. Floyd Allport 40 years ago.

Commenting on this Mr. Dolch stated, "It showed me that the present generation of students at Syracuse University have a high degree of integrity and are in considerable agreement with the attitudes and purposes of students 40 years ago. The difference is the opportunities for, and styles used by, the students to express these standards and ideals."

According to their responses, today's students, like their predecessors, rejected traditional froms of religion and certain aspects of public life, but held to concepts of God, the values of honesty and personal worth and integrity and of mutual responsibility.

As for the supervision of morals, the survey indicated that most students do not want the responsibility of supervising student behavior: 36% want supervision of morals at Syracuse in the hands of a student committee or council in cooperation with representatives of the administration, while 32% want the supervision to be shared equally. Less than 25% wanted it to be entirely in the hands of the students, and only 7% wanted it to be largely, or entirely, controlled by the administration.

There appeared to be a significant reduction in the amount of cheating that goes on, but students expressed agreement with those of the former generation in giving reasons for cheating.

Another area of agreement was the basis for marking. In 1926, 80.5% of the students felt they were graded on the teacher's academic requirements without due regard for what they had actually gotten out of the course, with 79.7% of today's in agreement. Eighty per cent of the students in the late twenties agreed that university professors can, and should, have freedom of expression for their opinions as long as they use tact and do not destructively attack accepted beliefs and standards, with 82% of those interviewed in the spring in concurrence.

The students interviewed were from all walks of student life and home backgrounds. They were given an hour and twenty minutes to answer the 173 questions on the survey, but because of an error in the mailing addresses of about 40% of them, it is impossible to determine how many of the students actually responded. Mr. Dolch approximated that about 56% of the surveys were returned,

If these results substantiate their early findings, Mr. Dolch stated that he will then have an excellent profile of the Syracuse student, relating to every area of academic life.

Group meets to outline parietal hours procedure

By LYNN ECKSTEIN

The Parietal Hours Committee of the Council on Student Life (CSL) met last night to discuss plans for parietal hours in all living centers wishing them. Chuck Hicks, president of Student Government, told the group of representatives from each living center: "We are not here to legislate morality, nor are we here to play parent. We are here to prove students are responsible enough to handle parietal hours correctly."

Parietal hours can be obtained by any living center submitting a petition that thoroughly outlines their plan for handling these hours. The reviewing committee includes Marjorie Smith, dean of women; David Tatham, dean of men; Dr. Burke; John H. McCombe, dean of Hendricks Chapel; representatives from IFC, Panhellenic, Inter-dorm Council and AWS.

Last year, the CSL explored how parietal hours worked on campus. They recommended that Syracuse University have a trial period. Two dorms, DellPlain and Lawrinson, petitioned and received parietal hours during the spring semester.

However, many other living centers are working on petitions to receive optional hours, Cindy Bailey, president of AWS and chairman of the Parietal Hours Committee, said last night.

Hicks emphasized that "The beautiful thing about parietal hours is that you don't have to take them." The individual living center decides at which times they wish to have visiting hours. No alcoholic beverages are allowed during visiting hours as there is a distinct difference between a registered social event and daily visiting hours.

Hicks feels that parietal hours will extend the rights of the independants on campus: "Greeks have always had these rights; independants are a minority group in view of the privileges they receive."

When asked if she thought the University was becoming too liberal, Cindy Bailey said: "When I came here four years ago there were no optional hours for girls. We had a 10:00 curfew during the week and a 12:00 curfew on Friday nights. After my freshman year, I had my own apartment during the summer. After having complete freedom I had to return to a 10:00 curfew. In this sense, the University does not prepare you for the real world."

Hicks added, "Everyone should have no curfew and parietal hours should be in effect at all times, as college students are old enough to take care of themselves."

Any living center wishing to pick up the guide line containing parietal hours can do so at the SG building, located at 125 Stadium Place. A living center wishing parietal hours must submit nine copies of the petition. Cindy Bailey and Chuck Hicks will meet with

Gregory comes to Syracuse as candidate of Peace party

By DENISE O'MEARA

Dick Gregory is going to be in Syracuse on Sunday, Oct. 13. Gregory, a write-in presidential candidate, will appear at the University Methodist Church, 1085 East Genesee St., at 3:30 p.m.

Gregory is the candidate of the Freedom and Peace party, which favors immediate end to the war in Vietnam, and which once declined to support Eugene McCarthy because he said that there might be some justificaton for American presence there.

The famous comedian wanted to speak on the Syracuse campus, but because of his entertainment contracts, he would have to charge admission.

The candidate's activities in the civil rights causes began early in his career. During the Columbia student strike, he addressed students at the College of Education, offering them his support by raising money from benefits. Early this year he sent a letter to President Johnson, warning that the racial tension in Chicago would make it impossible for the Democrats to hold their convention there. At another time he said that the Democratic convention would be held in Chicago, "Over my dead body," adding that this did not mean he intended to sacrifice his life in the struggle.

Two years ago Gregory was arrested in the state of Washington for violating the fishing laws. He had been taking part in a protest by American Indians, who said that the laws interfered with their rights. He was sentenced to 90 days in jail; on July 16 he was released after his weight dropped from 157 to 135 pounds.

Gregory feels that the major assassinations which have taken place in the U.S. are part of a "Nazi-Fascist conspiracy" which is evident in this country.

Dale Tussing, a candidate for Congress on the Liberal Party ticket, will speak with Gregory. Mark Lane, who is Gregory's running-mate, will come to Syracuse on Oct. 21.

Freshmen elect Tembeckjian in improved voter turn-out

By BOB STRUGATZ

"Aspiration '72" will not be aspiring after all, at least not in its original form, as Bob Tembeckjian grabbed the presidency from the hands of Larry Kramer and Lee Danielian in yesterday's upset freshman election. Also gaining office were Sherie Griffith, vice-president; Francine Pinto, secretary: and Richard Garfein, treasurer. Senators elected were Gary Goldstein, Richard Kane, Howie Lippman, John O'Brien, Joel Schwartz and Neil Rose.

Of the almost 700 votes cast, an improvement over last year's 300, Tembeckjian captured 218, Danielian 195 and Kramer 158. Considering that both Tembeckjian and Kramer played heavily upon the issues of ghetto improvement and closer student-faculty relationships, the margin between them is suprisingly wide. Miss Griffith just scraped through a win by 15 votes, defeating Ian Mateus, 262 to 247. Richard Garfein soundly trounced the write-in candidate Stephen Bittman, 333-94.

Part two Inequities of the draft

"The Selective Service is a system whereby poor boys are selected to go to Vietnam and rich boys are selected to go to college." James Reston, New York Times.

The Selective Service system perpetuates unnecessary inequities that a system of all volunteer armed forces would eliminate.

Despite attempts at national uniformity, policies of classifying, deferring, and granting physical exemption are still left up to the 4,000 local boards.

"I have more confidence in the local boards, and I am willing to put up with their mistakes, than I have in a computer," General Lewis B. Hershey once said.

The draft, although it rarely has been, can be used to limit freedom of speech, assembly and protest. Two examples are the General Hershey edict that those who impede recruiting should be reclassified, and the trial of William Sloan Coffin Jr. and Dr. Benjamin Spock.

The draft causes uncertainty among men between 18 and 26 years old. They do not know whether they should continue their education, establish themselves in a career, or begin a family as long as they are draftable. An all volunteer armed service would obviously correct these faults.

One intended result of the pressure of the draft is the Selective Service's policy of channeling. A statement from the Selective Service National Headquarters admits "the club of induction has been used to drive out of areas considered to be less important to the areas of greater importance. . . . the individuals who did not or could not participate in activities which were considered to be essential to the defense of the national." Channeling is the least democratic and least justified aspect of the draft.

The inequities of the draft are well known. All volunteer armed forces would obviously eliminate the inequities.

Opinion

Briefly noted

By Abe Wagner

Sims . . .

Still Sims Dining Hall remains empty. In the center of the University, which by latest reports is running on an extremely close budget, stands the campus' largest food service facility unused.

Last spring, plans were announced for the conversion of Sims into a reading room to ease crowding at Carnegie Library. As of now, no work has been done in this direction.

A second proposal for Sims has been put forth by many including this author. Instead of wasting the food service equipment presently installed in Sims, it should be reopened as the "Commons." With a capacity far above that of the present Commons, Sims would be the answer to the prayers of faculty, staff, and commuters who presently crowd the basement of Slocum and Marshall Street.

Vice-President Wingate estimates that $50,000 could renovate Sims into a first class public eating facility. This amount is minimal compared to what a new Commons would earn.

In spite of the fact additional reading room is needed, there are several points Chancellor Tolley and those who decide Sim's fate should keep in mind. First, a large investment in food equipment already exists in Sims, and would essentially be lost if it were turned into a reading room. Second, the present situation of campus eating facilities are currently overcrowded. Finally, a large on-campus cafeteria where both students and faculty alike may eat is a major part of a student union, and until a union building is built, a re-opened Sims could be another step in filling the void that now exists.

Notice to all students:

With reference to the recent fires in University dormitories, specifically Lawrinson, the following will serve as firm notification.

Any form of high intensity or heat emitting electrical equipment is forbidden in all University Housing. This includes: heating coils, spot lamps, toasters, transformers, sun lamps, heat lamps or any equipment of similiar nature.

Any student in possession of such materials must remove it immediately. Failure to do so is cause for Disciplinary Action.

Letters to the editor

Muskie

To the Editor;

I am truly appalled by the conduct of hecklers who obstinately impaired the freedom of listeners to hear Senator Muskie's address on Monday. In a democratic society listening is an indispensable form of participation. In an election period the right to listen, which is to say the right to learn about public issues, is inalienable, as is the right to campaign. Those persons who trample these rights seriously menace the very freedoms they profess to defend.

Correction

To the Editor

I have to direct your attention to the story "Students Evaluate Nigerian Question" which appeared in the Daily Orange of Tuesday, October 8 and point out to you the unexpected and unnecessary embarassment which your paper has caused me through the publication of what was virtually a complete opposite of part of what I said during the panel discussion on Nigeria at the Maxwell School auditorium on Sunday, the 6th of October.

You reported that I said..."the present situation (in Nigeria) might almost be called a religious war, an attempt to exterminate Christian Ibos." Contrary to this, I, in fact, did explain that although there are people who interpret the conflict in Nigeria in terms of a "religious war" in which Muslims are trying to exterminate Christians, that this is far from the truth because such a view, besides erroneously holding that there are only two types of religious beliefs in Nigeria, also either uninformedly, or deliberately to confuse issues, regards all the people of the East Central State (where you have the Ibos, even though there are Ibos outside this state and in the other parts of Nigeria) as Christians, and the peoples of all other parts of Nigeria–Yoruba, Edo, Urhobo, Ijaw, Anang, Ibibio, Hausa, Fulani, Kanuri, Tiv, Nupe, to mention just a few–as Muslims. Moreover, it should be pointed out that the present Head of the Nigerian Military Government and Commander of the Armed Forces, Major-General Yakubu Gowon, is a Christian, whose father has been a Christian missionary in parts of the former northern Nigeria for a number of years. Is it then not doubtful that such a man, who has not only had a Christian upbringing, but is also a practising Christian, could be at the head of a Muslim army waging a "jihad" against his Christian brothers?

Food?

To the Editor:

Since the beginning of the fall semester, the Daily Orange has printed many articles about Food Service. Therefore, I believe I have a right to put my two-cents worth in.

Food Service stinks. This is a fact of life which we, the students, must face up to. The reasons why it stinks are known to everyone: rotten planning of meals and understaffed kitchens. But something has to be done. Students at this University pay over $500 for board each year. And this is the kind of food we get?

If Food Service needs more help, let it get more help. I know a number of students who would like a job in FS. But Mrs. Geiger, who is FS personnel director, I believe, tells students that there are no job openings in FS now (DO, Oct. 9). From all that I have read in the past few weeks on this subject, I can conclude only one thing: that Food Service and the administration are pulling a fast one on the students.

Traditions

An appeal to freshmen

Remember those psychological tests sent to you this summer that took endless time to answer? The results are hot off the presses. Under the topic, "Freshman Expectations of Syracuse University," you felt that "self expression" runs abnormally amuck here. That pleases Traditions no end. After spending months planning Orientation Week, we would like very much for you to express to us what you liked/disliked (choose one) about your Orientation Week. Our questions come to you in the form of the Fresham Orientation Week Survey. We hope you all received one from your dorm rep goons last week.

Figuring you to be a specially self-expressive class, we have been waiting for your reflections with baited breath. And so we've waited.

We admit we're taking advantage of you. We would like to probe you before you decide that because nobody seems to love a freshman's opinions, you won't let anybody have them. As advisor of Traditions Commission, Mrs. Margaret Stafford explains the value of that opinion:

"The Freshman O—week Survey is a direct approach to influence the University program for next year's O—week. We can't plan the type of programs freshman want without a reaction from them.

Because programs for O—week take months to plan, faculty and student leaders will soon meet to begin next year's plans. They will evaluate and perhaps revise such programs as the approach to the advising system and the summer reading list. The results to the Freshman Survey in their hands will be an influential decision maker.

We hope you'll muster all your controversial self-expression and feel your responsibility to return these survey answer sheets to us.

If you are lacking either answer sheet or survey, they are available at the following dorm control offices: Flint Hall, Winchell Hall, St. Mary's women's side, Watson dorm, Sadler dorm, and the Women's Bldg. main desk. Please return all survey answer sheets to your own dorm control office. The latest date at which we can accept completed surveys is Fri., Oct. 17.

To those of you who have completed your survey, thank you for letting us tune into you.

Thanks a lot

Queen will be chosen

Homecoming to be exciting weekend

"Sounds of '68" is the theme of SU's Homecoming Weekend, which opened last night and continues through Sunday. The highlight is the Syracuse-Pittsburg football game tomorrow, when the Homecoming Queen will be crowned at halftime.

A week of interviews and judging has narrowed the choice down to five girls – three seniors, a sophomore and a freshman.

Ellie Roberts, a shopomore, is sponsored by her sorority, Sigma Delta Tau. A resident of Rydal, Pa., she is majoring in Home Economics and Journalism. Her activities include Sophomore Executive Council, Goon Show, Haven Hall officer and campus fashion shows.

Joan Robbins, a freshman in Home Economics, is sponsored by Kappa Sigma. She plans to major in Early Childhood Education. A resident of Larchmont, N.Y., she loves skiing, both on snow and water, playing the piano and working with children.

Carol A. Valmy, a senior, is a sister of Gamma Phi Beta sorority. A Contemporary History-Newspaper major, she lives in East Orange, N.J. Her activities include serving as captain of SU's Varsity Cheerleaders, Student Government Commissioner of Research, Copy Editor of the 1969 "Onondagan," Senior Executive Council, Campus Chest Executive Council and Student Senate.

Gail Morrison, another senior, is a Spanish major from Cape Cod, Mass. She spent last year studying in Spain and is sponsored by her sorority, Kappa Alpha Theta. Gail has been a four-year member of both the International Students Organization and Spanish Club. She has also participated in Campus Chest, United Campus Christian Fellowship and has done volunteer work in Syracuse.

Robin Erickson, the third senior, is a Child Development and Child Psychology major from South Bend, Indiana. Robin is sponsored by her house, Alpha Chi Omega. She is vice president of the Senior Class and Traditions Commission. She is also an active member of Eta Pi Upsilon, the senior women's honorary, the Campus Chest Publicity Chairman and coordinator of Venture '69.

Homecoming, of course, also involves SU alumni. Today, alumni club presidents and representatives from 29 chapters throughout the country will return to campus. An afternoon meeting in Lawrinson Hall will be followed at 7 p.m. by the ninth annual Alumni Awards dinner at the Hotel Syracuse. The 1968 Alumni Award winners are Mrs. Mary McInroy Sheffer of Harrisburg, Pa., class of '29; John Emery of Rochester, N.Y., class of '40, and Joseph Schwartz of New Haven, Conn., class of '29.

Also scheduled for Friday night is a concert by Big Brother and the Holding Company at the War Memorial. Before tomorrow's football game, the musical group, Page One, will provide live music from the steps of Hendricks Chapel. A crowd of 30,000 is expected for the game, which matches the nationally-ranked Orangemen against arch-rival Pittsburg.

On Saturday night a dance will be held at the Women's Building, starting at 8:30 p.m.

SU, NASA link to study management

By GREGORY SMITH

An association between SU and the National Space Administration (NASA), to permit the University to use NASA as a "learning laboratory" in successful management experiences, without obligation, is now into its third year.

Approximately 45 Syracusans, both faculty and students, are involved with four major research projects underway at this time. They are entitled "Role of the Project Manager," directed by Professor Richard Hopeman of the College of Business Administration and Professor Martin Barzelay of the College of Engineering; "NASA-Business Relations," directed by Professor Peter Franck, Business Administration; "Regulations in Space," headed by Professor George Alexander, College of Law; and "Case Studies," piloted by Professor Edwin Bock, the Maxwell School.

"This is one of the most important external projects that Syracuse is involved in," declared Dr. John Honey, program director and professor of political science in the Maxwell School, who cited the interdisciplinary nature of the plan. "We have people from the Maxwell School and the Colleges of Engineering, Law and Business participating." The School of Education, originally involved, is not now, but may be in the future.

Professor Nathan Schwartz of the College of Engineering is the project's associate director.

The SU-NASA relationship began in 1966 when James E. Webb, former NASA administrator, approached Maxwell Dean Stephen Bailey and suggested that Syracuse might benefit from the opportunity to do research and practical work in a major government agency. States the First Semi-Annual Report, - Syracuse/NASA program, Grant No. 33-022-090, "The engagement of the university with practices and problems in the real world might lead to reevaluation of curricula and to the development of educational endeavors, more relevant to contemporary society's needs.

"In subsequent discussions and, in a formal period of exploration between January 1 and June 30, 1967, University faculty considered with NASA officials their own interests and ideas and the opportunities which exist to pursue some of these within the NASA context. The result of the exploration was a report and proposals to NASA submitted on June 30, 1967."

"Large and successful government programs are carrying on a lot of innovative activities, especially in the management and policy-making area," commented Dr. Honey. "We thought it suggested a proto-type of how universities can work with large agencies and industry. Syracuse is really pioneering in this. There is no other program like it in the country."

SU received a three-year $750,000 grant effective last Jan. 1. NASA is interested in continuing the liaison and has asked SU to lay plans for a fourth year of activities.

There are five graduate fellowships, separately funded by SU, offered in this field. Five more will be presented next year, five more the year after, and in 1971 the original five fellows will be finished and five more will be chosen from both within and without SU. The fellowships involve public administration and political science, as well as other subjects.

Dr. Honey emphasized that SU has free access to NASA with no restrictions, "We have sent people to NASA installations in Houston; Huntsville, Ala.; and Cape Kennedy, as well as others." Dr. Honey himself has been invited down to Cape Kennedy to witness today's 11:00 Saturn rocket Apollo launch of three astronauts who will make an 11-day orbital voyage around the earth.

William Davis, who along with David Fouri is graduate research assistant to Dr. Honey, remarked, "Students are afraid of the university being sucked in by government. That is understandable."

Dr. Honey concluded by explaining, "If universities are to be 'relevant,' a favorite student worry, it is absolutely essential that they cooperate with the major institutional forces of the country. Government alone, the university alone, and certainly not business alone can solve the problems that confront the nation. We must present a concerted effort."

Blanket no curfew proposed by AWS

HELENE MACDONALD

A proposal that would establish a "Blanket" no curfew system for second-semester freshmen, sophomores, juniors and seniors was introduced at an assembly meeting of the Association of Women Students in Newhouse Wednesday night.

The proposal also would make living centers almost totally independent from AWS.

Second-semester freshmen were included because AWS has passed resolutions supporting the freshman campaign for optional hours. AWS president Cindy Bailey feels the proposal will "put everything back on an equilibrium because optional hours has not been a smoothly working system since it began."

Blanket optional hours system would eliminate the confusion that results at the beginning of each school year when living centers go back on the system.

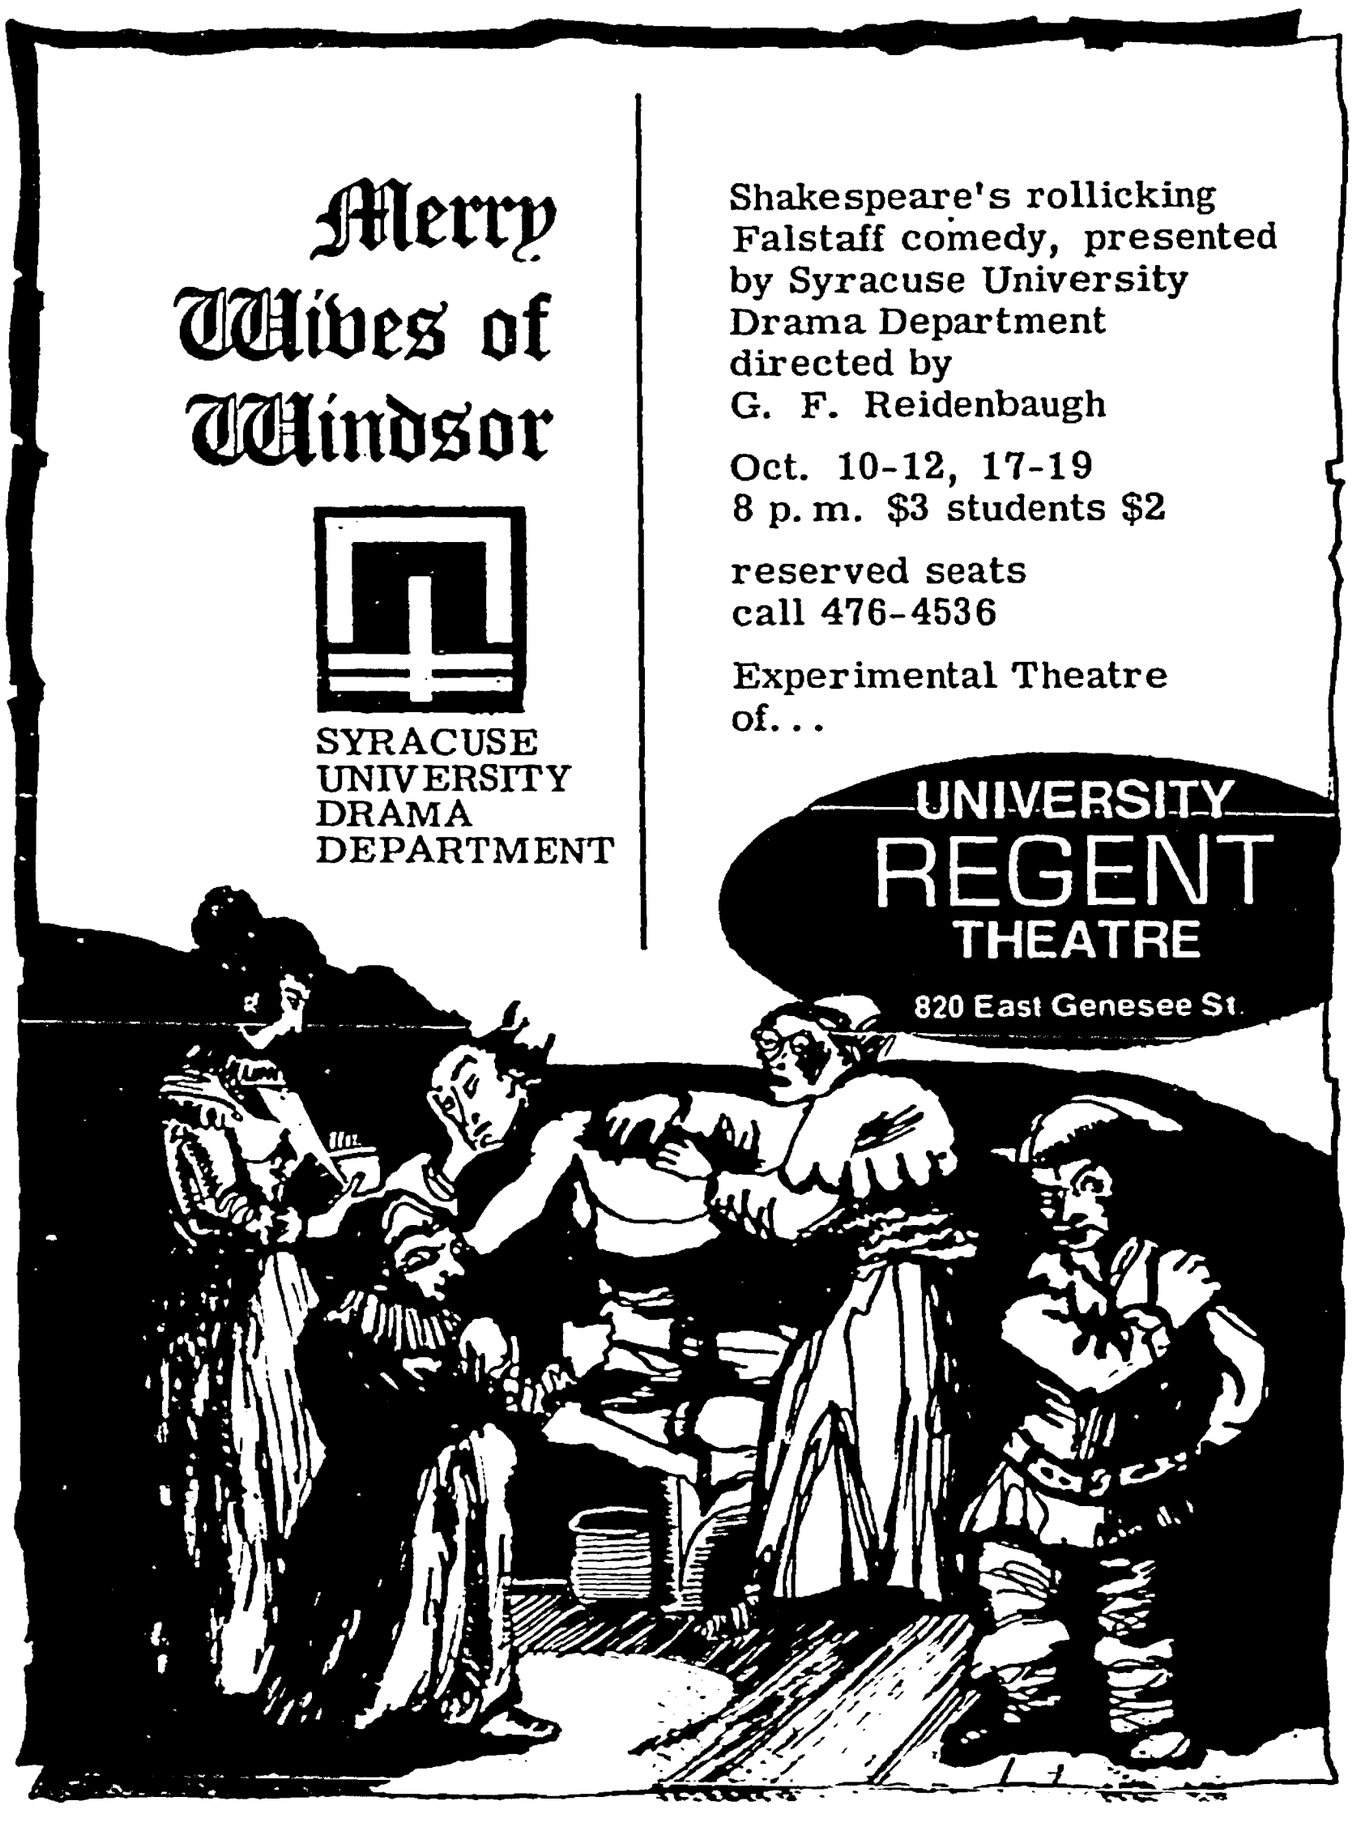
Miss Bailey called the present procedure "illogical." Before any living center could return to optional hours, its residents had to sign a list reporting whether they had had optional hours the previous year.

The introduction to the proposal states that co-operation in a living center is achieved "through the participation of each individual in the formulation and acceptance of the standards which are most appropriate for her living center situation."

This is compatible with the AWS philosophy adopted last spring which calls for each living center resident to take responsibility for herself and the group. This attitude replaced the "I am my brother's keeper" philosophy introduced when optional hours began several years ago.

The proposal allows each living center to set up its own operating procedures, especially in regard to optional hours, with the exception of the following:

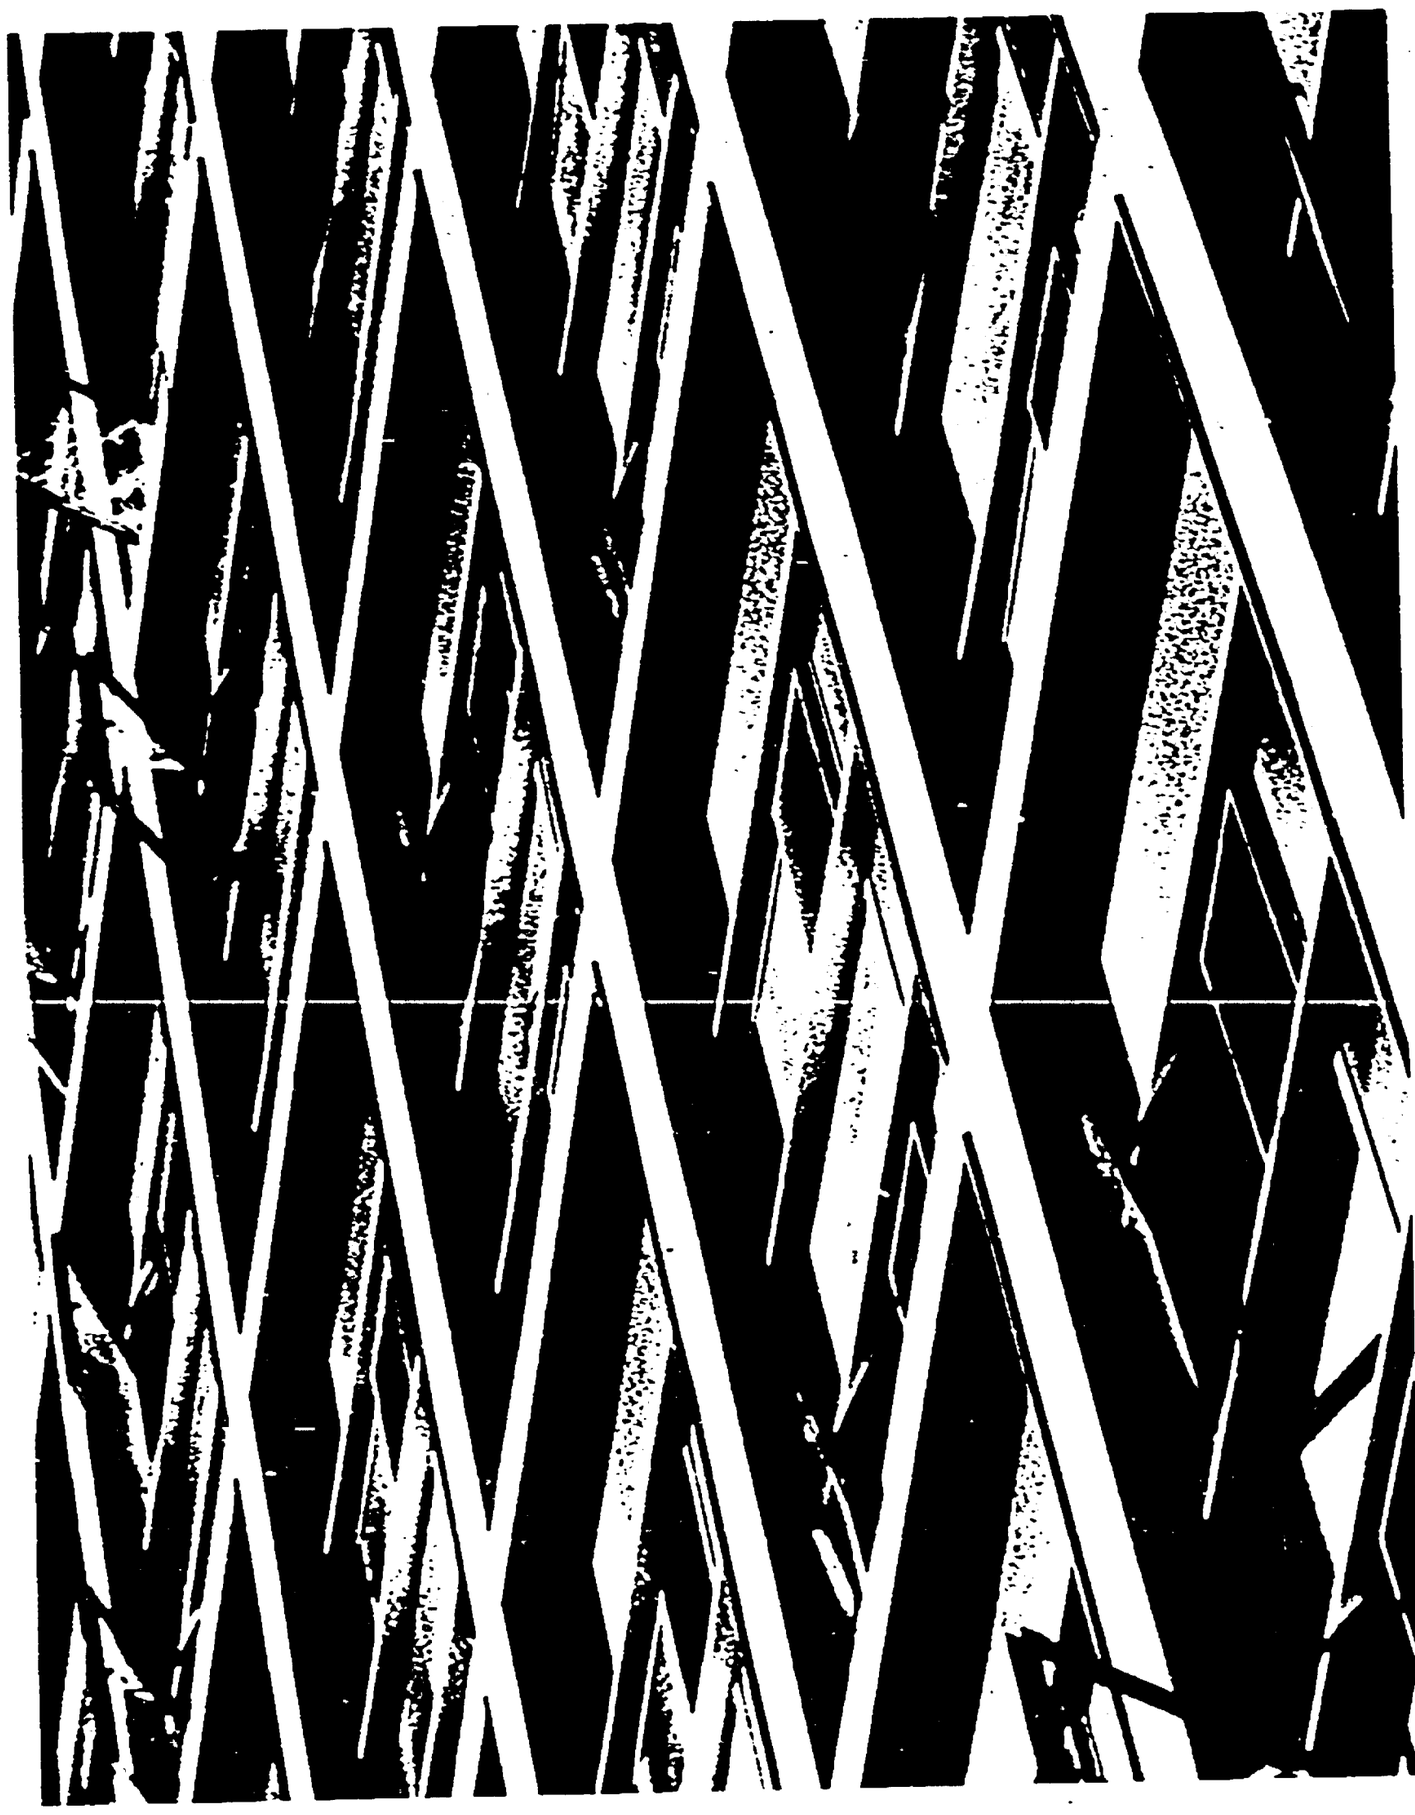
1. All residents of the living center will be considered participants in administering the center's program.



2. All residents over 21 in good standing with the University, and with notification of parents will be eligible for no curfew.

3. All residents under 21 in good standing with the University, who have completed 15 or more credit hours and have parental permission shall be eligible for no curfew.

4. The operating procedures of the center must be documented and filed with AWS.



Living center presidents were urged to discuss the proposal at house meetings and be prepared to vote on it at the next assembly meeting.

If passed, the proposal would be acted on by Student Senate and the Committee on Student Life.

Progress report

SCSC moves ahead with elections

At his announcement of retirement, the chancellor proposed that a student committee be conceived to act in conjunction with the trustee and faculty committees to consider nominations for his successor. The Committee on Student Life and the Graduate Student Organization selected an 11 member Student Committee for the Selection of a Chancellor (SCSC).

The six undergraduates are Jim Richard, Amy White, Saundra Haynes, Mary Lou Leary, Tom Whitlow, Ray Rafalik. An additional undergraduate member will soon be chosen. Student Government President, Chuck Hicks, will act as an ex officio member. The four graduates are Kevin O'Connor (Maxwell School - Economics), Peter Sanford (Education Administration), Kenneth Ritzenberg (Sociology) and Dwight Emerson (Civil Engineering).

The committee, now a consolidated, active group, has defined its first organizational perspective by choosing Ray Rafalik as chairman, Kevin O'Connor as vice-chairman and Amy White as secretary.

At the moment, SCSC is conferring with the faculty and trustee comittees to organize the mechanism of communication between the groups and the method of screening to be followed in selecting candidates from nominees.

It should be reported that the final power of selection, as prescribed by the charter of Syracuse University, is situated at the trustee level. However, selection of candidates will proceed so as to realize a consensus of the three committees on the final slate. Trustee and faculty committees have extended their full co-operation toward the student committee.

Nominations will be accepted from the three groups – trustees, faculty and students. Each nominee will be given equal consideration. The student committee will make available to the student body forms of nomination to facilitate the task of compiling a vita sheet on the nominee. These names will then be appraised by SCSC before submittal to the screening committee.

Within the boundaries of its responsibilities to the student group, SCSC has established three immediate goals: the compiling of a criteria sheet for the chancellorship, a report on the present and projected atmosphere of Syracuse University, and the organization of an open forum at which a dialogue between SCSC and student body can be propagated in a most demonstrative and reasonable manner.

Any student group wishing to speak at the forum should contact the chairman of SCSC, so the committee can formalize an agenda. Details on the forum will be shortly forthcoming. Students who have questions about SCSC may contact the chairman or vice-chairman by sending their queries via campus mail to Kevin O'Connor, Maxwell School, Department of Economics.

American values: what do they mean?

Recently, the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate was quoted by Newsweek magazine in a reflection on the problems in modern America. Gov. Agnew states: "The disease of our times is an artificial and masochistic sophistication--the vague uneasiness that our values are false--that there is something wrong with being patriotic, honest, moral, and hardworking." If one looks closely into these words, one finds that Gov. Agnew has unquestionably found the sore point--but his interpretation is a reflected image of the problem itself.

For as the words are stated here, they denote exactly the extent of difference and perhaps of misunderstanding that exists in America today. The standards which he puts forth--patriotism, honesty, morality, and work--are abstract and have in themselves nothing to do with the differences. Instead, it is the mental translation of those words and the real concepts which underlie them.

Let us look for a moment at each of the words. "Patriotism" means many things. To some it means "my country, right or wrong." To many others, most likely those criticized by implication in the Governor's statement, patriotism means having to accept our entire foreign and domestic policy without open criticism, particularly when the situation is desperate and no matter how desperate it gets. If this is patriotism, these Americans reject it.

"Honesty" to some means not stealing or committing murder. To others it indicates the acceptance of superficial moral values as well; while one continues to cheat on income tax, to accept political and financial favors in business and government and to make campaign promises that can never be kept. If this is American honesty, they reject it.

"Morality" to some means spending an hour in church once a week and expousing the traditional Judeo-Christian value system. To others, the word morality appears to be something to hide behind while one practices racial prejudice, national bigotry and superiority, corruption in business, adultery, and various types of hypocrisy. Those who view "morality" this way have no need for such a concept and they reject it.

"Hardworking" can indicate to some the need to hold a steady job, provide an income and home for wife and children, and to "get ahead" and "succeed" in business. To others, it conveys the feeling that there must be some inherent desire in men to walk on the backs of others to get to the top; so one can have a bigger house, two cars (three?), a color TV, a backyard pool and an electric toothbrush. While these are being obtained one must conveniently forget about the problems of the migrant workers, the blacks, the American Indians and the Indian Indians. If this is what is meant by "hardworking," they reject it.

Unquestionably, there is something wrong with these values. Not necessarily the way that Gov. Agnew sees them, but he only sees one side. He speaks of these traditional American values as they exist in concept, in theory. Others see them as they are utilized in practice. And as they are used they provide no relationship to the conceptual values and thus are "false" in at least that sense. It is not as Gov. Agnew fears "a vague uneasiness" that they are false; it is a sound assurance that they are false.

This is the "disease of our times," this growing differentiation between concept and practice in the American value system. It is this difference and the refusal to acknowledge that it exists that fills and perpetuates the cleavage existing between Americans.

Where have all the heroes gone?

A young woman cries out her agony to
The Brooklyn sky
As good citizens dim their lights
So they may watch unseen
The late show in the streets.
A pregnant mother is harassed by hoodlums
While spectators stand mutely by.
And the young men?
The young men stand aside
Too smart to get involved.
In the current lingo they "keep their cool".
Well, listen here
No great civilizations have been built
By men who kept their cool . . .
No frontiers conquered
No revolutions waged
No brave new societies forged
By men who kept their cool.
All of mankind's shining achievements
Have been propelled into being
By hot-blooded young men, fired by an idea.
When the heroes take to the sidelines
Civilizations decline and disappear.
Right now this country needs heroes
To stick out their necks
For better schools
Better housing
Better jobs
Better government.
It's up to you to take it on.
You are our life insurance.

J-school to publish its paper shortly

The long-awaited School of Journalism newsletter, "Newhouse News," is expected to put out its first issue within a month.

J—School faculty voted unanimously Sept. 30 to accept a proposal to start the monthly mimeographed newsletter, which would contain news of student and faculty activities, news of the two professional journalistic societies (Sigma Delta Chi and Theta Sigma Phi), job opportunities, J—School announcements.

The proposal was advanced to the faculty by Dan Schlossberg, President of SDX, which will produce the magazine in conjunction with Theta Sig.

Deadline for Vol. 1, No. 1 is Nov. 1. Students or faculty wishing to publicize their activities or make short literary contributions may submit them to Room 207 Newhouse before Nov. 1. They may be slipped under the door if no one is there. Unsigned articles will not be used, and students making contributions must sign their name and class.

Dan Schlossberg will edit the first several issues until a permanent editor is selected. Anyone wishing to help should leave their name and extension in Room 207.

Prominent Israeli to speak here

By IRA SILVERMAN

David Hacohen, one of Israel's foremost political figures, will speak at two Hillel functions this Sunday.

Hacohen, chairman of the Commuittee on Foreign Relations and Security in the Israeli Parliament, will speak at a Faculty-Graduate Brunch at noon in 10 HBC and at the Hillel Supper at 5:30 p.m. in Watson Dining Hall.

Hacohen has a long record of accomplishments in Israel. He has served as a Commander of Israeli Defense Forces, the Hagana, and as head of intelligence on the General Staff of Hagana.

During World War II, he acted in behalf of the British Army in Special Intelligence. Hacohen was Vice Mayor of Haifa and delegate to the United Nations Assembly meetings.

Also among Hacohen's past accomplishments was serving as the first minister to Burma and leading a government mission to China.

In his present position, Hacohen is privy to confidential information regarding Israel and its Arab neighbors. He is known to be outspoken.

Booth Dorm Council gains campus popularity

By MARGARET ALLEN

Enthusiastic moviegoers at Booth Dormitory lounge gave "King Kong" a standing ovation last Sunday night. A week earlier another film, "Tom Jones," packed viewers into the same lounge.

Both showings were planned and sponsored by Booth Dorm Council (BDC), which appears to be emerging as the most active organization of its type on campus. The council, on the initiative of President Steve Tober, originally proposed the movies as entertainment.

Large audiences composed of both residents and "outsiders" have motivated BDC to extend the Sunday night film program indefinitely, charging 25 cents admission. Profits will go towards the purchase and installation of a color television for residents to view when they are not listening to the stereo BDC bought with its allocated funds at the end of last year.

BDC is concerned with the welfare and unity of Booth residents, and its accomplishments have been the products of a new organization.

Last January, a feeble BDC was fortified by the appointment of ten men which Resident Advisors selected from each of the eight all-freshmen floors. The council drew up a brief constitution, working with the dorm officers and authorities. The appointed dorm council accepts new members by application only so that it is assured of interested participants.

Council activities incorporate all dorm members. "We are trying to make the dorm a more liveable place," noted Council Member Fred Tuccillo. Although the group's plans of plans reach outside the dorm, they will have the effect of unifying Booth inhabitants.

President Stephen L. Tober announced Tuesday night that the hopes for visitation hours now lie in the hands of the Council on Student Life's Standing Committee No. 3. This committee was recently created to investigate and act upon students' demands for campus-wide visitation privileges.

Tober reports that the committee is now accepting petitions from dorms requesting such privileges. The committee hopes to be active within two weeks. Predecessors of this committee have both proven to be rather ineffective. Tober expressed hope that student interest would make this committee accomplish the goals of dorm residents.

Tober also confirmed reports that Dean Tatham would be in favor of any proposal concerning visitation hours.

Booth Dorm Council, together with other dorms', hopes to present a proposal to the committee paralleling the act which gave visitation hours to Lawrinson and DellPlain.

Future activities of BDC include an Oct. 18 mixer at Flint Hall, featuring sounds of "The Salt" and six kegs of beer. The Council is also seeking to establish an examinations file for dorm residents.

Student Religious liberals host nonconformist minister

By CONNIE KOMAREK

A full-bearded man, dressed in beige corduroys, turtleneck, a sheep skin vest and tennis shoes talked with several members of Student Religious Liberals over dinner last Sunday night. He asked questions, listened to opinions, and gave his own, sprinkling mild profanity here and there for emphasis. He is the Reverend Ronald Clark, new assistant minister of the May Memorial Unitarian Church.

Ron, as he is generally called, owes much of his individualism, honesty, and sincerity to his unusual background. College prepared him to be an electrical engineer and he was one, working as a remote man on educational FM radio quite successfully, until he was 29 years old. Somehow he came to realize then that his life hitherto had had only one purpose: to make money with which to make more money; he had no clear-cut end toward which to direct his efforts. He, therefore, enrolled in Starr King School for the Ministry in Berkley to discover himself and his role in society.

Starr King is unique. It consists of about twenty students, male and female and eleven faculty members. It has no grading system and no exams. Students plan their own curriculum, hire and fire teachers, and serve on the board of trustees. The usual program takes three years to complete, but one graduates when teachers and students alike feel he is ready.

This atmosphere of complete freedom can be most difficult to cope with, contends Ron. Using himself as an example, he confessed that for the first part of his initial year, he did not exert himself. Not until he realized that he was his own boss could he comprehend what he and the community could do.

In his second year, Ron put into practice the two mottos of Starr King: "If you want to do it, do it," and "Waste time with people." Because his experience as an electrical engineer had limited the humanitarian aspect of his life, he joined a peace movement called the "World Without War Council" and spent his entire second year working for it.

Ron has now completed his third year and is about to be installed and ordained in the Unitarian Church. As a minister, he wants "to enjoy life and prove to other people that it is possible." He feels that one must try to find a place in the system where he can be reasonably happy. Dropping out is the very last resort. At the same time, one must work from within the framework of the system to make it more comfortable for himself.

Ron is now devoting many hours to working with the college Unitarian youth group, Student Religious LIberals. Together they are planning to make an experimental movie to be shown at church services and to SU students in general. This will be financed by a handicraft sale later in the year. SRL meets every Sunday night at 6:30. (Check DO listings for place). Dues are 75 cents per meeting. Supper is free, as is the exchange of ideas.

Bob Tembeckjian

Tembeckjian, a major figure in the Parsons Cottage dilemma, hails from Manhattan, N.Y. He attended the McBurney School, where he served as president of the student government, associate editor of the newspaper, vice-president of the Key Club, and was active in varsity baseball. Choosing Syracuse over New York, Boston and American Universities, Tembeckjian is a journalism-political science major, who is particularly impressed by the Maxwell School.

He was motivated to run by what he called "an obligation to change unjust rules." He stated that we need an active freshman class, whose by-word must be "involvement." The reason for his limited campaigning was that he felt he might be regarded as using the Parsons Cottage situation as a mere publicity vehicle, which he felt would be an unfair judgement.

As the election results were announced, an unnamed bystander commented, "Kramer just choked on his beer and walked out."

Yesterday before the election results were known, Tembeckjian said his first unofficial act, if he won, would be a victory party, and his first official act would be a conference with Chancellor Tolley.

In his campaign, he also stressed that it is as much "a privilege to be an administrator, as it is to be a student."

Esther Friedgood, David Prutting, David Segal, Barbara Sonnenschein, and Herb von Schilling were the defeated senatorial candidates.

Why Are You A Poor Talker?

A noted publisher in Chicago reports a simple technique of everyday conversation which can pay you real dividends in social and business advancement and works like magic to give you poise, self-confidence and greater popularity.

According to this publisher, many people do not realize how much they could influence others simply by what they say and how they say it. Whether in business, at social functions, or even in casual conversations with new acquaintances there are ways to make a good impression every time you talk.

To acquaint the readers of this paper with the easy-to-follow rules for developing skill in everyday conversation, the publishers have printed full details of their interesting self-training method in a new booklet, "Adventures in Conversation," which will be mailed free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Send your name, address, and zip code to: Conversation, 835 Diversey Pkwy., Dept. 173-419 Chicago, Ill. 60614. A postcard will do.

Playtex invents the first-day tampon™

Lutherans have new chaplain

The Rev. Jay M. Tichenor has been named acting Lutheran chaplain at Syracuse University. His appointment was announced by the National Lutheran Campus Ministry, a national agency supporting Lutheran ministries to university campuses in the United States.

Tichenor will serve during the absence of the Rev. Paul F. Bosch, who is on a sabbatical leave to study in Europe.

Tichenor formerly served in Liverpool, N.Y., where his ministry led to the organization of King of Kings Lutheran Church in 1965. He is a graduate of Upsala College in New Jersey and the Lutheran School of Theology in Chicago. He earned a master's degree at Yale University and was ordained in the Lutheran Church in America by the New York Synod. The Tichenors have two children.

The Lutheran Campus Ministry at Syracuse University serves undergraduates, graduate students, faculty and staff. Study, action, and worship groups meet weekly.

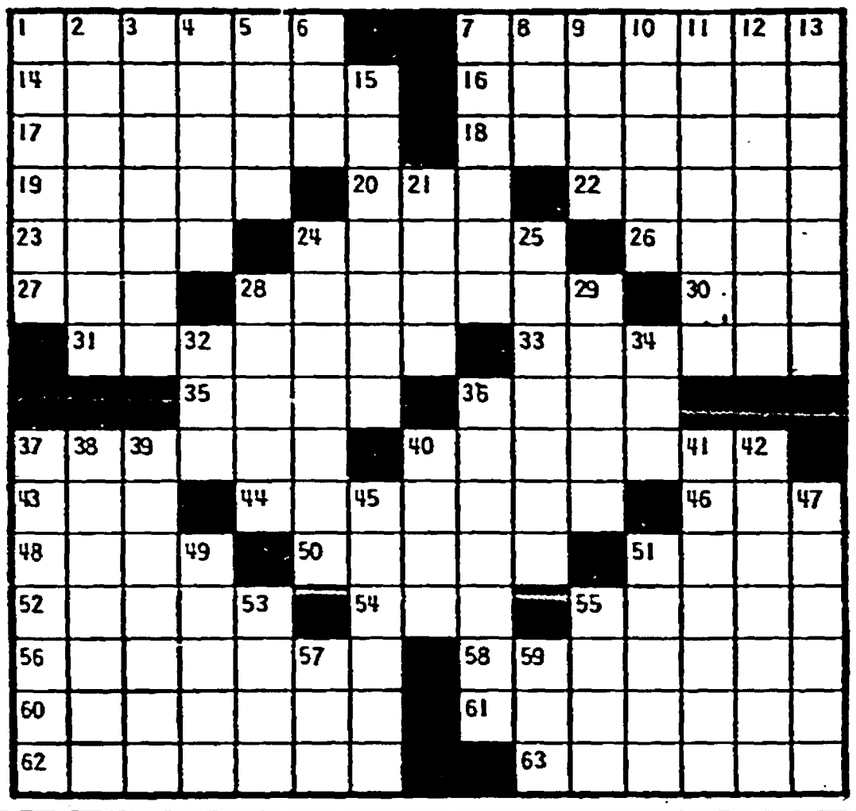
Footprints Lecture Series formulating program

The Footprints Lecture Series proposes to engage the academic community in a discourse scrutinizing specific dimensions of human activity and concern. The Series organizing committee is a disinterested and nonpartisan group of undergraduates drawn from every element of the campus population. It's only commitment is to the unconfined freedom and range of ideas that are the foundations of the liberal educational process. Hence an exchange of concepts and conceptualizations is basic to the Footprints operations.

Ayn Rand, Stokely Carmichael, Seymour Martin Lipset, and Timothy Leary have been among the Footprints lecturers in recent years. The Series has addressed itself to themes such as "Alienation in America," "The Modern American Outlook," and other areas worthy of intellectual probing.



All undergraduates are urged to submit possible topics and speakers for the 1968-1969 program that is now being formulated to the Footprints organizing committee. Suggestions should be dropped off at Dean Carleton's office before 4:30 on Wednesday, Oct. 16, or call Rick Peisinger - Ex. 2919.

Face Navy plebes

Tangerines try to open again

By FRED KRAVER

The freshman football team will travel to Annapolis for a game against the Navy plebes Saturday at 2 p.m.

Coach Jim Shreve expresses cautious optimism for his squad. This will be the first time the Tangerines appear on a football field as a team. "This game will be one of our important hurdles," he says. "I'm hopeful, but naturally worried."

Shreve cannot make an accurate evaluation of his squad's abilities, since they have not yet performed under game conditions. "We'll find out what we've got after this game" he states, referring to which players will see the most action. Rain postponed last week's scheduled opener against Manlius.

The game plan for Sautrday is rather basic, since no one can be sure of the team's capabilities. "We'll mix our offense up with a well-balanced attack," Shreve explains. The Tangerines will play conservatively at first, until they can find Navy's weaknesses. They will stay mainly with running plays, pounding out the yardage, but will not be afraid to put the ball in the air. "Our quarterbacks (Frank Ruggiero and Larry Hatalsky) throw well and we have fair speed and good hands in our receivers," he says.

Shreve is particularly pleased with left guard Doug Auld, who is the game offensive captain, tight end Ray Jarosz, center John Lobon, right guard Joe Ehrmann and fullback Marty Januszkiewicz.

The defense is a major question mark which will be tested Saturday. Tackle and middle linebacker appear solid. Strengths and weaknesses will be determined by how well Navy moves the ball.

The Navy frosh are 2-0, edging Bainbridge Naval Prep School and trouncing William and Mary. "They're always very tough," says Shreve. "They hustle and hit hard."

Navy will have an important edge with two games under their belts. There is no substitute for experience. But it is conceivable that the Syracuse frosh will be ready psychologically after the kickoff.

Star defensive end

Family man Zegalia is the meanest man on the field

By LARRY CENTER

The nickname "Ziggy" may not strike fear into the hearts of offensive linemen and ball-carriers, but anybody who thinks he's in for an easy time with "Ziggy" doesn't know Steve Zegalia, the tough, hard- hitting defensive end for the Orangemen.

Steve, who is in his third year as a starter, started out as a fullback and linebacker in high school. He came to Syracuse from Wind Gap, Pa. slated to play fullback, but was switched to defense during spring practice of his freshman year.

Steve doesn't miss the glory of offense because he can hit just as hard on defense. He says, "I'd play either way, it doesn't matter whether its offense or defense."

Although he is somewhat small for a defensive end, Steve compensates for his lack of size by the quality of his play: "The only way to make up for it is to outplay the other guy--to outhustle and outhit him."

Commenting on the qualities and responsibilities of a defensive end, Zegalia feels that "most importantly, a defensive end must have a lot of aggressiveness and have the ability to read plays well. He has to get a good rush on the passer and contain the running plays, keeping them to the inside. "He evidently does these things well. Lou Gubitosa calls Zegalia "the toughest defensive end I've seen, and the meanest."

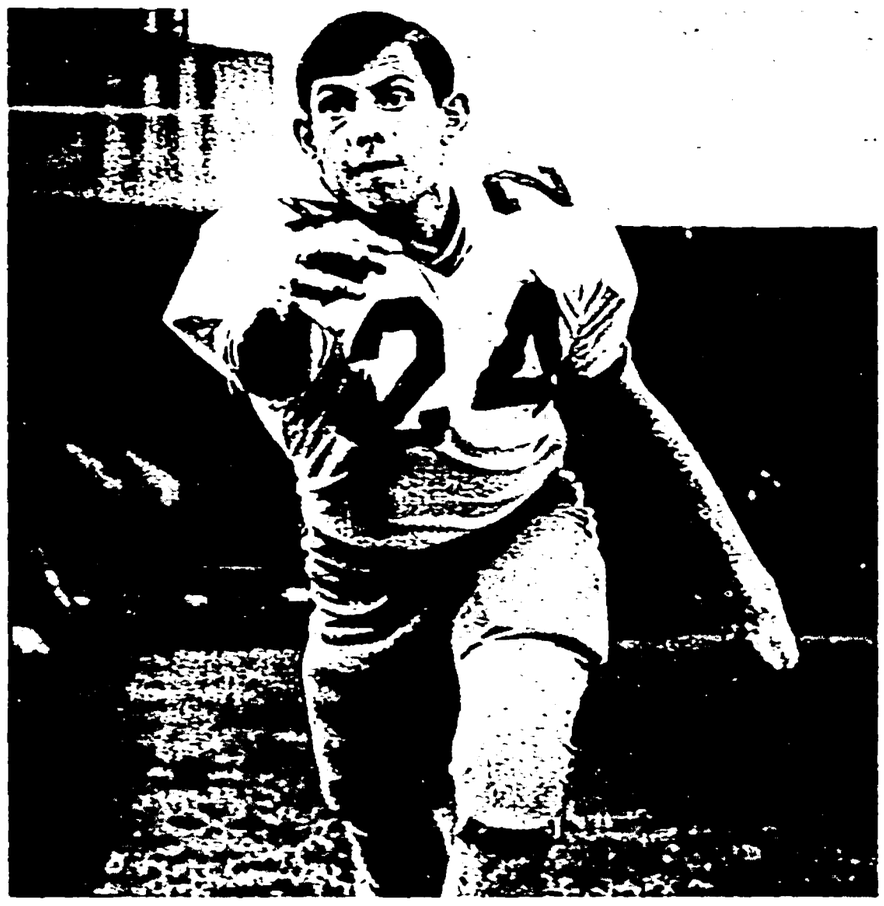
Some football players feel the only day they have to put out is Saturday, that practice is the time to take it easy. But Zegalia doesn't believe in ever going less than all-out, every day of the week, to get ready for a game. "The way you practice is the way you're going to play," he explains.

So far this season, Steve sees good signs, but is hoping for more progress. He said, "We're improving steadily from the Michigan State game, and with a few breaks, we'll do well.

"Defensivley, we're not showing as much as we did last year. I'm not saying we're not as good, but we just aren't up to last year's standard yet. Offensively, the all-around team effort is much better," he continued.

Zegalia says that a good offense helps its defense by giving it a physical and spiritual edge. "The defensive unit gets a big lift seeing the offense come through. It also gives us extra time to rest on the sidelines."

"This year's sophomores are a real good group and they work real hard," he says. "Ray White is coming along well on our line."



Asked to name the toughest runner he has faced in his career at Syracuse, Steve paid tribute to his ex-teammate, Larry Csonka, who ripped through the Green Bay Packer line in this summer's College All-Star game. "Larry, even in our scrimmages, is definitely the toughest player I've ever had to stop," he recalls.

Zegalia would like to follow No. 39 into the pros, but realizes that his size almost rules this out completely. After graduation, he hopes to coach or teach football to kids. He is married, and he and his wife Sharon have a son, Rocky, aged two.

Mrs. Zegalia is a big football fan and goes to all the games. Unlike some football wives, she has no fears about her husband's safety on the fridiron: "I'm not worried about Steve being injured--I want him to be aggressive."

She says that Steve's manner off the field is much different than on it. Although he's tough and mean when game time comes, "at home he doesn't talk about football unless I ask him. He's pretty quiet, especially the night before a game."

On Saturday, however, Steve Zegalia leaves all his reserve at home and does plenty of talking out on the football field, where actions speak louder than any words.

QUARTERBACK DENNIS HAVERN leads his Pitt Panthers against the Orange in a Homecoming Day encounter in Archbold tomorrow. Havern, only 5-8, 160 lbs., wears white shoes when in action.

Sports sidelights

Capt. Tony Kyasky was named to Sport Magazine's first team All-America squad, while defensive tackle Art Thoms was named on the second unit.

In addition, Sandy Pinn, a senior coed, was named a finalist in Sport's Campus Queen contest. Her picture appears in the October issue of the magazine.

Freshman basketball tryouts will begin Tuesday, between 3:30 and 4 p.m., on the Field House court.

Sports Editor's mailbox

Dear Sir:

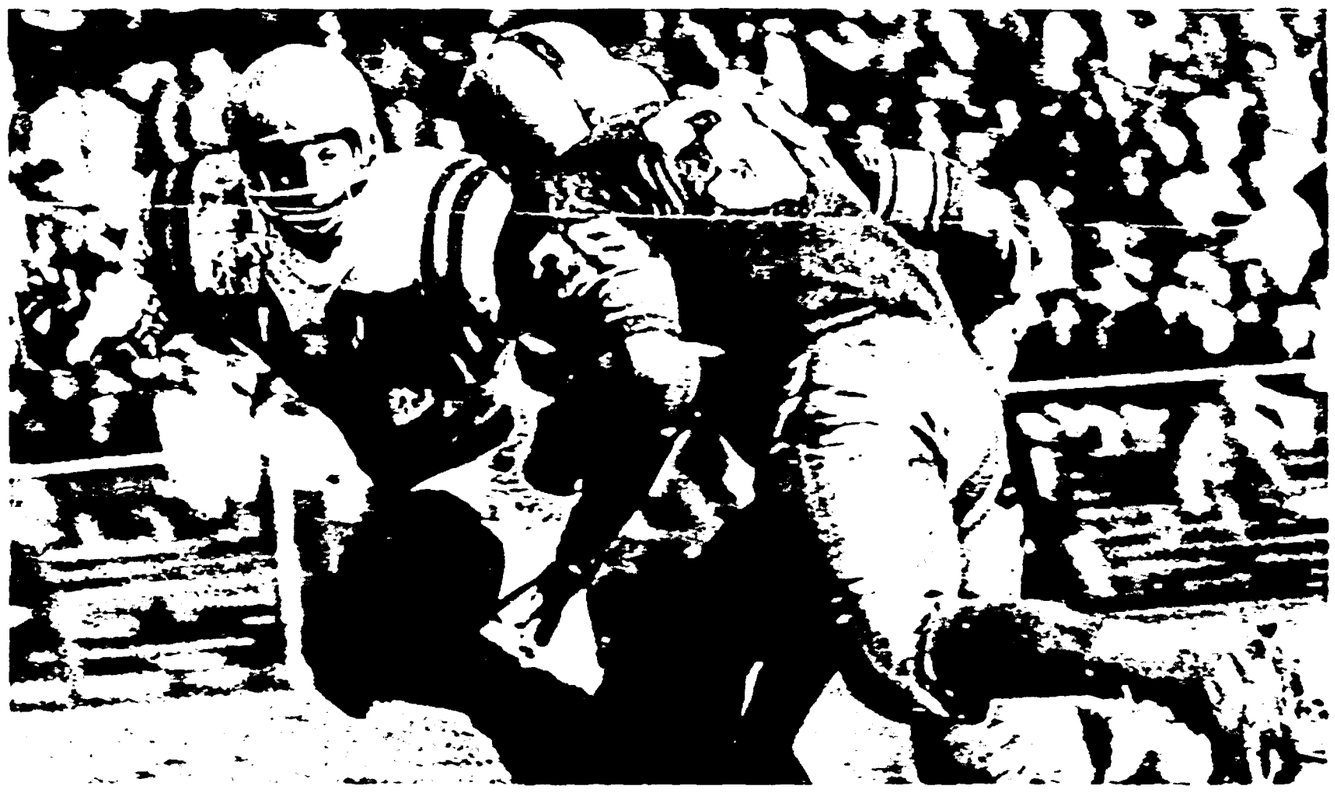
Just about every Syracuse quarterback has experienced it. It can come at any moment. Ask Rick Cassata, and more recently, Rich Panczyszyn.

I'm speaking of adverse crowd reaction to a player. It is one thing to cheer your players, it is quite another to boo them.

Coach Ben Schwartzwalder, in reference to last Saturday's booing, states, "I hope they were booing at me, and not my boys. I have been here for a while, and if the booing bothered me, I wouldn't be here now."

I hope the booing wasn't even meant for the Syracuse coach.

Coach Schwartzwalder continues, "Both Paul Paolisso and Rich need to gain confidence." Booing from the stands is not the way to increase their confidence.



Syracuse can not afford to go with just one quarterback. Paolisso was injured in both the Michigan State and Maryland games, and was unable to complete either one. A confident Panz is necessary for the team.

But the question of booing is not merely a question of quarterback preference. It should be related to the entire team. When that fan boos he is saying something to every player.

I should hope that in this Saturday's game those who prefer to boo would think twice. Syracuse gets plenty of booing when they travel to Michigan and California.

Let the home games build confidence for the 15th ranked team in the nation.

Alums, students—hail Homecoming

Syracuse-Colgate rivalry evolved into Homecoming

Homecoming Weekend with its concerts, antique car show, dances, and pep rallies is a newcomer to the Syracuse campus.

Beginning in 1962, it followed a close to 70 year reign of Colgate-Syracuse rivalry.

Most Syracuse students were saddened by the passing of this annual contest with its traditional scalpings (shearing your school's initials into the hair of opposing students, usually with the help of overwhelming numerical superiority), raids, pep rallies and bonfires. Others said it was a time for a tradition which had outlived its usefulness and meaning to give way to new traditions.

In 1891 when the annual Colgate-Syracuse football weekend began, legend also began. It was said that coach Chick Meehan's runner couldn't cut the corner on end sweeps and was always pushed out of bounds. Meehan supposedly widened the boundaries by five yards on either side the night before the game and the sun set orange. Illegal, yes, but Syracuse won another victory over the Raiders.

By 1907 the traditional scalpings between the two schools began and the Colgate C appeared on many unwilling Syracuse scalps.

Whenever Colgate weekend came the whole Syracuse campus, weeks ahead of time, began to practice cheering, and convocations were held just to whip up spirit for the approaching game.

Not even the faculty were immune from the excitement over the football weekend. In 1915 Professor C. H. Richardson addressed the convocation saying, "Lovers of football, lovers of victory, back the team to win, every mother's son of you, and no stone wall on earth can stop us."

A Daily Orange editorial writer in 1924 told of the march of 600 students through the business district. It was the last year that Syracuse was to win over Colgate for 12 years so the students with foresight marched in the rain. The writer was moved to eloquence over the subject as he told of the frosh dressed in pajamas and green lids, noting that "some didn't wear the new collegiate fashions, but clung to the old nightshirts."

Trophy stealing, scalping, and taking captives had reached such a point by 1947 that each school appointed patrols of students to guard entrances to the campuses. Several students were seriously hurt and many Syracuse buildings were painted with large white C's.

When Syracuse finally did break Colgate's 12 years of victory "the whole town went mad Hotels hid their furniture during the celebration after that one," recalled one SU alum.

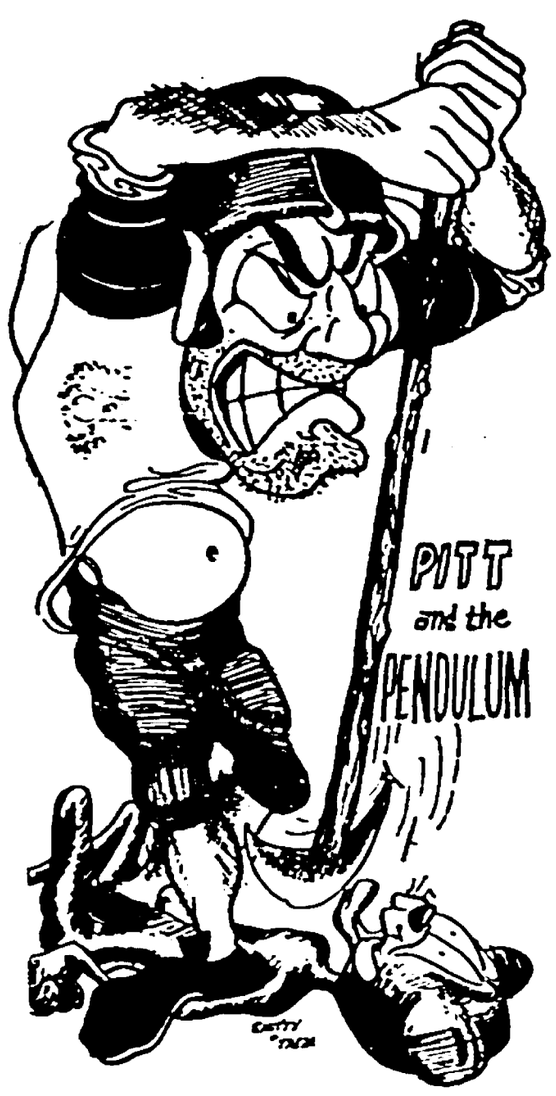
Administrators from both schools threatened to cut out all rivalries if the vandalism did not stop so in 1948 the Big Three Vandalism Code (later to be known as the Cazenovia Pact) was signed.

This code made the use of paint, damage to property, and physical violence illegal and punishable by the individual universities.

Meanwhile, the Colgate Weekend spirit kept up with cries for gathering wood for bonfires and the lids and scalpings continued since they were still legal.

"We used to try to infiltrate each other's bonfire sites and set fire to the wood stockpiled there," recalled an SU graduate, Gerry Hoffman, who currently works in the University News Bureau.

In 1949, the year after the Cazenovia Pact, Syracuse executed the biggest mass scalping in the history of Colgate Weekend. SU students learned that the Colgate band was to board buses in front of the New York Central Station on Erie Boulvard.



The students rented their own buses and bribed drives to bring the Colgate band to them. The unsuspecting band boarded the buses and was taken to the scissors and razors of waiting Syracuse students in Thornden Park.

In 1953 the Red Raiders retaliated as they sneaked into the basement of ATO fraternity and made away with hidden parts of the dismantled cannon that the fraternity always fired at home games. They also painted the Saltine Warrior red as they left the campus.

Three students in 1958 rented a plane and dropped orange dye into Taylor Lake and also showered the Colgate campus with leaflets proclaiming the superiority of the Orangemen.

In retaliation Colgate sent a plane to bomb

Weekend's events of Homecoming '68 exhibit variety

The theme of this year's Homecoming Weekend is "Sounds of '68." The highlight of the weekend is the Syracuse-Pittsburg football game today. The Homecoming Queen will be crowned at halftime The five candidates, selected after a week of interviews and judging, are: Ellie Roberts, a sophomore, sponsored by her sorority, Sigma Delta Tau; Joan Robbins, a freshman, sponsored by Kappa Sigma; Carol A. Valmy, a senior, sister of Gamme Phi Beta sorority; Gail Morrison, a senior, sponsored by her sorority, Kappa Alpha Theta; and Robin Erikson, a senior, sponsored by her house, Alpha Chi Omega.

Homecoming involves SU alumni of course. Alumni club presidents and representatives from 29 chapters throughout the country returned to campus yesterday. An afternoon in Lawrinson Hall was followed by the Alumni Awards dinner at the Hotel Syracuse. The 1968 winners are Mrs. Mary

Before the game the Page One will perform on the steps of Hendricks Chapel. Tonight a dance will be held at the Women's Building beginning at 8:30.

McInroy Sheffer of Harrisburg, Pa., class of '29; John Emery of Rochester, N.Y., class of '40, and Joseph Schwartz of New Haven, Conn.

Sen. Muskie's visit shortchanged SU

By ANGUS TWOMBLY

There was something impressive about the Edmund Muskie appearance on the quad last Monday. It wasn't really the speech, and certainly not the commotion from the Peace and Freedomites. More than the action, it was the gutsy "get down to business" attitude of the student audience.

Probably a lot of curious people joined that crowd just to see the disturbing sideshow that was inevitable. Some were attracted by the strains of Big Brother and the Holding Company blasting over the loudspeakers. But also several thousand others came to hear why the senator from Maine wanted to be vice president.

Syracuse University is known to many as a football school, but that seemed very unimportant to her "leal and loyal" sons on Monday. The introductory ceremonies for the senator included the presentation of an autographed football, team captain Kyasky doing the honors. One wonders if the senator noticed the groaning "don't put me on" reaction from the crowd.

At any rate, one of the Muskie aides quickly whisked the ball away. It was time for the speech.

But the speech was delayed. Instead, it was time for Judy Mage and her bullhorn to do their thing. Mrs. Mage, the Peace and Freedom candidate for vice president shouted at Sen. Muskie, the Democratic candidate. Sen. Muskie, perhaps

Goon squad guides frosh

Goons show spirit, determination, hats

According to Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary the term "goon" is partly derived from "Alice the Goon, subhuman comic-strip creature by E. C. Segar." Syracuse University has its own group of subhuman, comic-strip characters: the Goon Squad.

Each spring a new Goon Squad is chosen by Traditions Commission from over 900 freshman applications.

The number of goons this year is about 300.

The goons' main purpose is to promote spirit and traditions on campus through class moving-up ceremonies, Freshman Orientation Week, Goon Show, placard cheering at football games, and other activities throughout the year under the auspices of Traditions Commission.

The only real requirements for Goon Squad are a 2.0 accumulative average and a surplus of determination and spirit. The goons come back to school early and many times put in long hours in preparation for Orientation Week activities.

A goon is comic-strip-like in one area; that of the goon hat. Steeped in the tradition of straw skimmers with old political campaign buttons on them, the goon hat decorates every goon

Buttons, flowers, bottles, cans, and every other possible addition to a straw hat are attached and worn throughout Orientation Week and all goon functions. Another symbol of the Goon Squad is its button which features Jiminy Cricket.

The freshmen are supposed to be guided by the goons as the fictional Pinnochio was guided by Mr. Cricket.

Coming home to SU

Homecoming Weekend had its origins in the Syracuse-Colgate rivalry. It is not surprising that football should play such a determining role since Syracuse and football have been connected since 1889.

In its early days, however, Syracuse football did not enjoy its distinguished record of today. It was tough fighting against Cazenovia Academy, the Elmira local athletic association and the Carlisle Indian School. In seven games against Cornell, SU didn't score a single point.

Prospects began to brighten by 1915 when Syracuse defeated the University of Rochester, 82 to nothing. One reason for the success of the varsity was Chancellor Day who, unlike his predecessor Chancellor Sims, approved of the spirited contest.

Even Chancellor Day balked, however, when rowdy students celebrated a victory over West Point by building $538 worth of bonfires out of neighborhood picket fences.

At such a point Chancellor Day must have urged a return to the pursuit of knowledge.

There is an ill-defined revolt among college youth today, not because there aren't enough football games but because the knowledge we are pursuing lacks meaning in the context of our world.

We are trained for an occupation while we wonder what are the values of a society with such a history of discrimination at home and a war for freedom where freedom does not exist abroad.

The enjoyment we get from the football game on the day we come home to SU may depend on the meaning of our education right now.

Student Revolt?

By Joan Tully

The Marshall Street "hippies," in full regalia, will eat in Cosmos instead of Carrolls tonight; they've collected dimes all day for looking quaint and explaining that the old Savoy is now the Varsity.

Father Borgognoni will be able to pay his food bill next week; tomorrow's congregation will double in number and triple in wealth.

And students can come out of the corners of their dining halls for seconds tomorrow; lines will be shorter and moving in the right direction.

The parents and alumni beseiging Syracuse for Homecoming will have gone home, leaving money behind and taking good will along. Of course, both money and good will are dredged up each year, but that's part of the Syracuse tradition.

Parents and alums have strong feelings about changing traditions and rules at Syracuse. At least one mother visiting Flint this weekend will insist upon speaking to her daughter's head resident about the care and feeding of Ronni:

"Why can't my daughter have optional hours?"

"It's a University rule that she can't have them 'til she's a sophomore."

"But we never gave her a curfew at home. We always encouraged her to be independent and do what she wants."

"Yes, I've noticed that."

And a father seeing the new dorm for the first time is irate that his son is living in a mudhole:

"At least there are a lot of girls around down here."

"Yeah, they live here, Dad."

"On the same floor with you guys? Are you serious?"

"No, they live in a separate building."

"Well, what's the matter with you; you're supposed to be such an activist, why don't you get up a petition to have them move in? Why, it would be worth striking for. Haven't you read the "Harrad Experiment?" What's the matter with you kids — you're not what you're cracked up to be."

But one of Syracuse's earliest student activists has returned this weekend. One of the leaders of the late Christmas vacation rebellion of four years ago, he has looked forward to his return for over a year. But his visit is ruined — absolutely ruined — even before the game begins — because he couldn't find the statue of the Saltine Warrior. Finding it in its new place before the library, Dave is already calling the Chancellor to complain that Syracuse has no respect for tradition.

Sen. Muskie's visit . . .

a bit alarmed at first, tried calming Mrs. Mage, but ended up shouting too. That left the crowd to stand and wait.

At first, people strained to see. Some even shouted — a few with Peace and Freedom, most at it. The novelty of the situation wore off quickly though, and soon everyone got impatient.

People started applauding as Muskie gained the upper hand. "I never regarded debating as a shouting match," he shouted. He said if she wanted to debate, "write me a letter." The crowd stayed with him, applauding and irritated.

Mrs. Mage tried again. "We want to discuss the issues."

The senator called her a noisemaker, and continued: "Noisemakers have never been a constructive force in any society. "You'll have to listen. I'm not going to shout." The crowd agreed, more impatient and more irritated.

Muskie started again, making the usual observations about our troubled times. His term was "bewildered society." The crowd waited through the standard criticism of opponents, in this case, Nixon and Wallace, and the standard prophecies of greatness, in this case, Democratic greatness.

Then the senator got specific. He started listing his ideas for reform and improvement, and the crowd became alive. He suggested popular election of a president and applying one-man, one-vote to the selection of state and national convention delegates. He asked that party participation be broadened to make the young, the minorities and women "equal partners in the business of politics."

Muskie then had the momentum, but he left out Vietnam. Somebody had to ask. He said he was against escalation, for a negotiated settlement and for taking "calculated risks." What risks? He never said. He was for a bombing halt only under a set of very involved conditions, but gave no indication when it might happen.

And so it went. Edmund Muskie came to Syracuse, not really to tell us much, certainly nothing new. Judy Mage came to Syracuse and made it difficult for Muskie to even get that far. And that left several thousand of us not much more certain where Edmund Muskie or Judy Mage stood, and feeling a little shortchanged.

Chicago again?

To the Editor:

After witnessing Sen. Muskie's attempts to speak amid the disruption caused by the Peace and Freedom Party (P&F) it seems quite obvious that P&F is not the protest party they claim it to be.

Their "protests" employ the same tactics which they claim to decry, and their outcries of "What about Chicago?" seem slightly ironic as they practice the very tactics which silenced opposition and refused to recognize speakers at the Democratic Convention. P&F has demonstrated that they are just as intransigent and just as unwilling to listen to another point of view as the leaders they oppose. P&F doesn't want to reform the system and eliminate the abuses -- they just want to control it.

A vote for P&F will be not a protest vote but an endorsement of the very tactics and abuses we hope to see changed.

Yet to make the voice of protest heard in an election year involves getting sufficient votes to make your voice count. And here the tactics of the P&F party have visibly failed for, by their disruption of Sen. Muskie's appearance, they probably gained few if any votes, and certainly lost some.

While I would gladly endorse many of the things which P&F endorses and while I would like to protest some of the policies of the present administration, any hope that the P&F party would gain my vote was lost on the Quadrangle.

Booze hunts

To the Editor:

Although I am the type who usually remains silent under almost any circumstance, an incident which happened at the S.U.—U.C.L.A. game Saturday has prompted this letter. While entering the stadium through the students' gate, my date and I were stopped by one of the "gentlemen" representatives from the Dean of Men's office, for the purpose of checking our packages for booze.

My date was carrying a bag containing a thermos of coffee and some cookies and said bag was virtually ripped from her arms as this "gentleman" peered into its depths. With a mumbled thanks, the package was shoved back to her and we were allowed to proceed to our seats.

We all realize this weekly ritual of the "booze-hunt" is part of the "system" under which we live and which we have to put up with; but such boorishness as we meet every home game from the Dean of Men's reps is something which we don't need at all.

Alumni awards

Three get honors

Three Syracuse University alumni will be honored Friday night (Oct. 11) at the ninth annual Alumni Awards dinner at the Hotel Syracuse. The 1968 award winners are Mrs. Mary McInroy Sheffer of 2103 North Third Street, Harrisburg, Pa., class of 1929; John Emery of 59 North Country Club Drive, Rochester, class of 1940, and Joseph Schwartz of 250 Lake View Terrace, New Haven, Conn., class of 1929.

All three will be cited for service to their Alma Mater.

The dinner will be attended by about 300 persons including presidents of Syracuse University Alumni Clubs throughout the country, directors of the annual giving programs and University administrators and staff.

Mrs. Sheffer was president of the Syracuse University Alumni Association of Central Pennsylvania from 1958 to 1961 and from 1964 to 1967. She is vice chairman of the Harrisburg Public Housing Authority, chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations, president of the Art Association of Harrisburg and proprietor of a gift shop, "The Pyramid Gifts."

Emery was president of the Rochester Syracuse University Alumni Club in 1962, has been a chairman of the annual giving program in the Rochester area and is a pre-college counselor for high school seniors interested in attending Syracuse. He is secretary of the Rochester area United Nations Association and is assistant superintendent, field division, Eastman Kodak Company's Kodak Park Division.

Schwartz was president of the New Haven Syracuse University Alumni Club from 1956 to 1958 and from 1961 to 1964, and has been active in all alumni activities in the New Haven area. His wife, the former Hildegarde Snyder, is a 1935 graduate of Syracuse. When they were married their first apartment was decorated in orange and blue, Syracuse University's colors. One of their two sons, Gerald, is a 1962 graduate of Syracuse. The senior Schwartz is associated with Hamden Steel and Aluminum Corp. of Hamden, Conn.

Student station broadcasts hockey

WAER has rapidly become the most sports oriented station in central New York. It features Syracuse University frosh football, freshmen and varsity basketball, varsity baseball, plus Syracuse Blazer Hockey.

Nine Syracuse Blazer games will be heard exclusively on WAER this fall and winter. The WAER Blazer schedule includes the following games:

Oct. 15 ..... New Jersey
Nov. 4 ..... Charlotte
Nov. 14 ..... Jacksonville
Nov. 19 ..... Clinton
Nov. 24 ..... Johnstown
Dec. 3 ..... Long Island
Dec. 13 ..... Long Island
Dec. 19 ..... Nashville
Jan. 14 ..... Clinton

WAER also carries all Syracuse varsity games and most freshmen games. It is the most complete coverage offered on any station. In addition to the play by play, Syracuse players and coaches offer comment on past and future games. The complete schedule can be obtained by writing to WAER Sports, Syracuse University.

In addition to events coverage, the WAER sports department offers three sports shows.

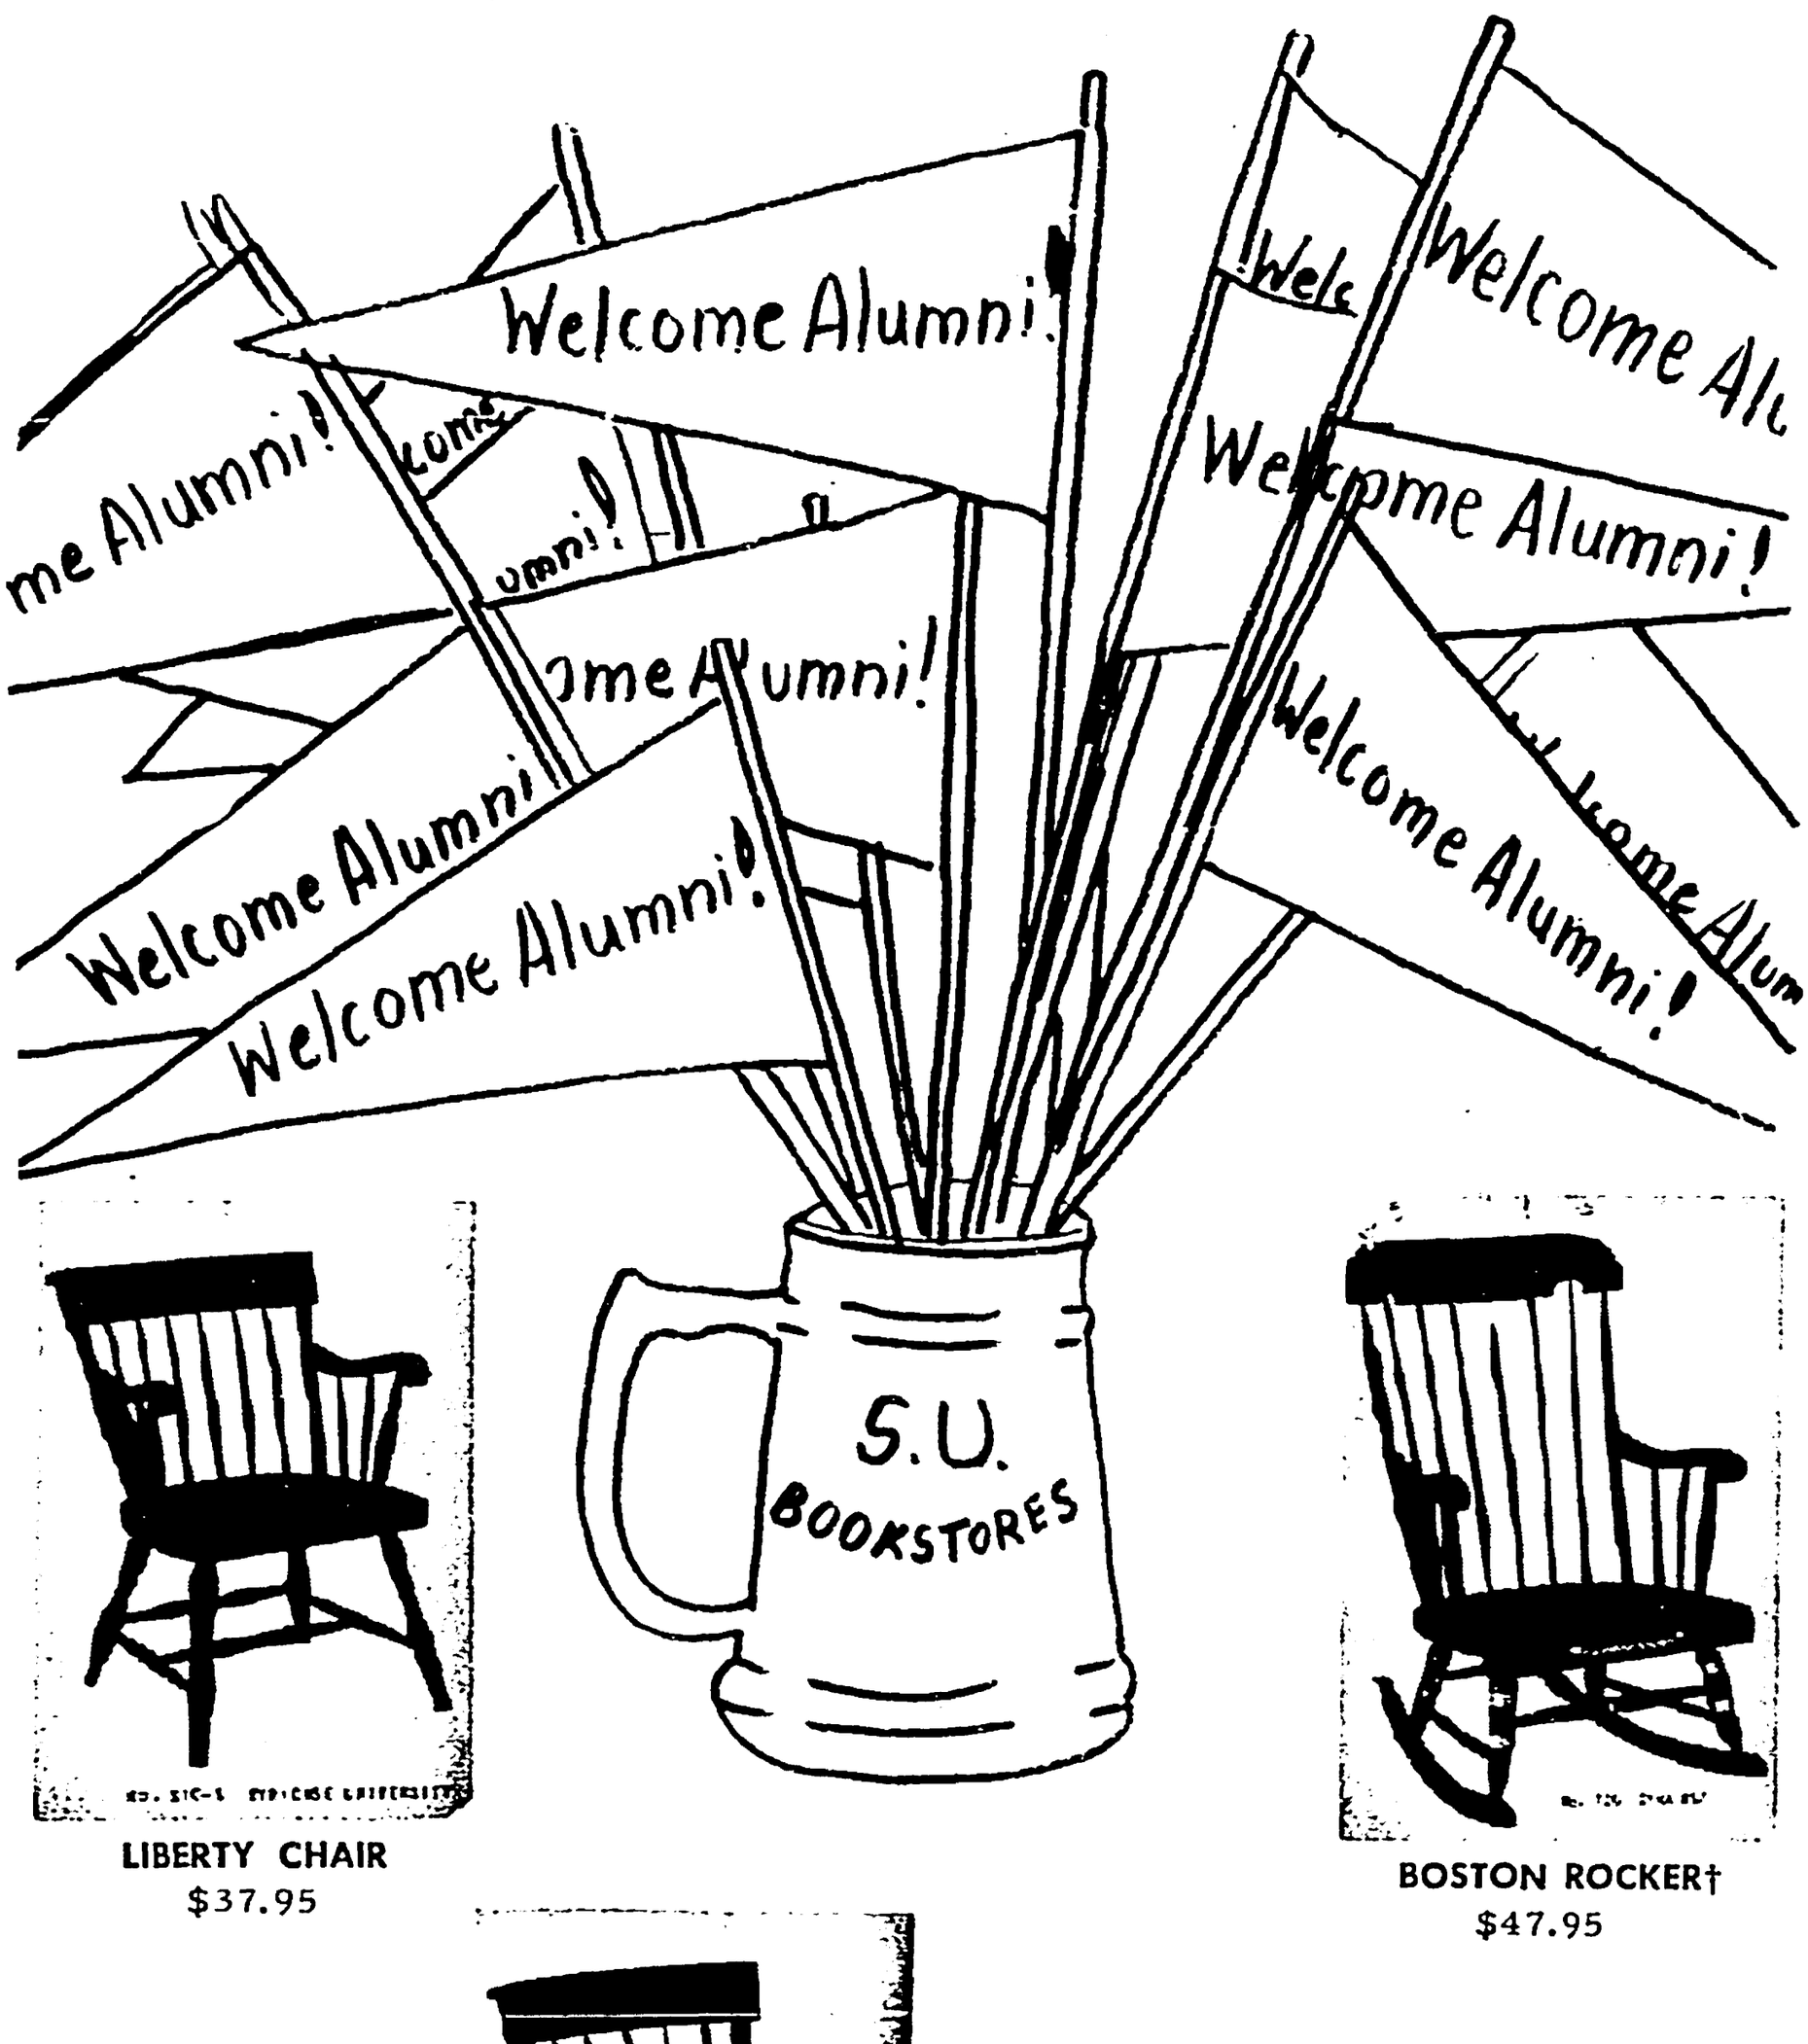
SU Harriers meet Army

The undefeated Syracuse cross country team faces stiff competition today when it takes on the Cadets of the United States Military Academy.

The SU varsity, paced thus far by Larry Zuller, Dale Parfitt and Dave Crans, has defeated Buffalo and tied Cornell. The West Pointers could be the toughest team the Orange will face this year.



The meet will start at 11 a.m. over the Drumlins course. There will be no freshman preliminary this week.

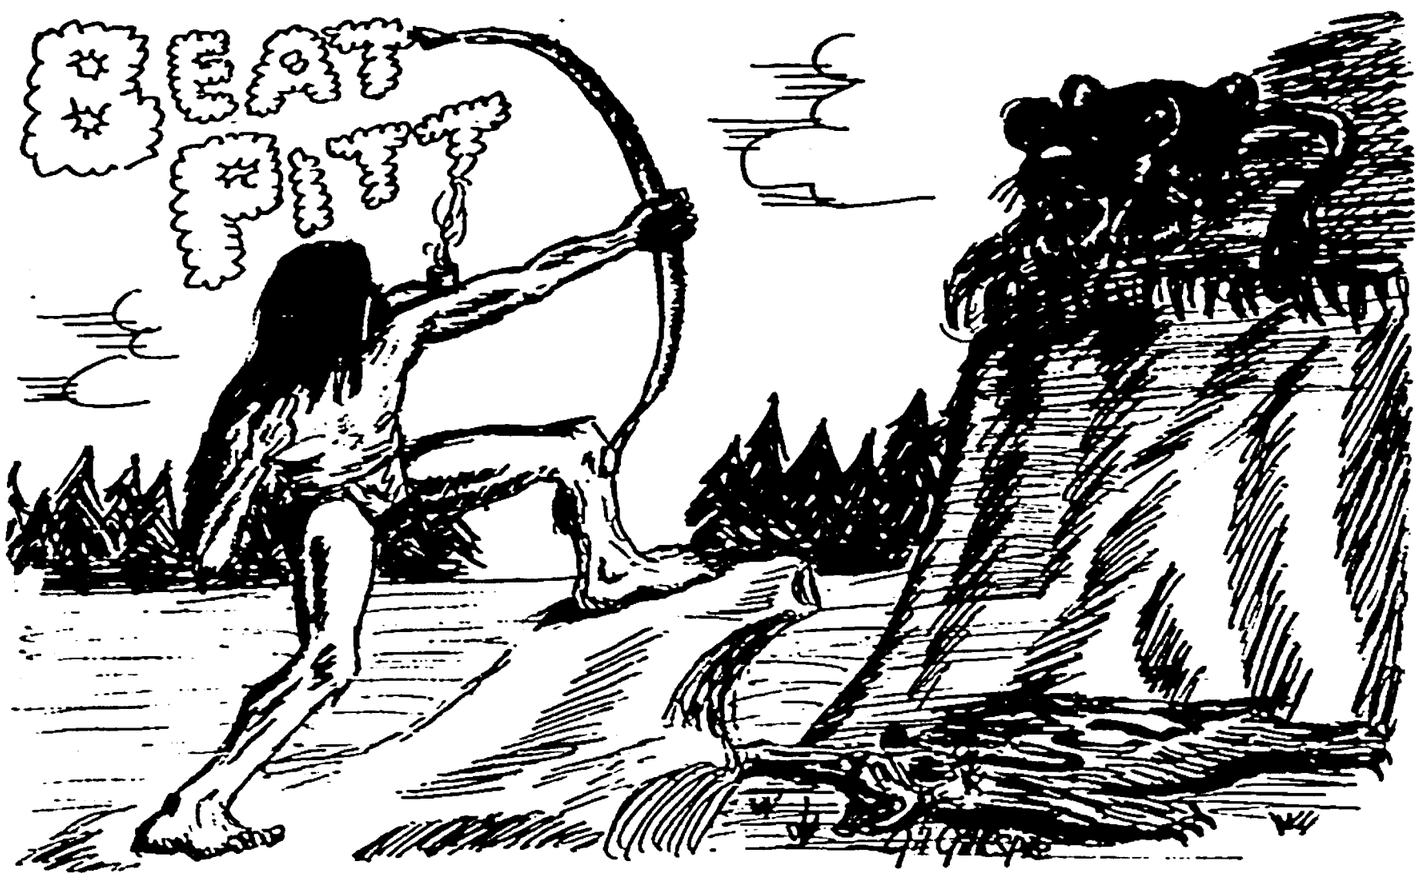
SU, Pitt in Homecoming Clash

By BOB GALLAGHER

The Panthers of Pittsburgh roar into Archbold for Homecoming this Saturday fresh from their mauling of William and Mary, 14-3, last week, and says Chuck Fogarty, SU assistant coach who scouted Pitt, "They will be ready to play football here."

The Panthers were 9-1 in 1963 but have managed only nine triumphs since then. The victory was their first at home in two years and brought their season's record to 1-2. Pitt coach Dave Hart commented after the game "there's no question the win was most gratifying to us. I think it gave our boys the lift they needed."



The Orangemen were also victorious last week as they defeated then fourth ranked UCLA, 20-7, for their second straight win of the year. They lost their opening game to Michigan State, 14-10.

"There's no question we're a much, much better football team than the past two years," said Hart after a strong Spring practice. "We simply have more football players, more size, better speed and more depth. Barring injuries and getting the expected improvement from our young players, we could have a non-losing season."

Although Hart thinks his team will improve he also anticipates that five or six opponents will improve. "We're a young team that will count heavily on sophomores, and sophomores make costly mistakes no matter how good they are. We have very few seniors who'll be playing, and that could hurt us," he said.

Syracuse has never led in this series, but can take a big step in the right direction with a win Saturday. That would deadlock the matter at 11-11. The Orange, however, have won the last four contests in a row. Syracuse defeated Pitt last year on a 53 yard punt return in the fourth quarter by Ed Mantie.

The Pitt style of play in the victory over William and Mary was a complete switch from what it had been in their two previous games-losses to UCLA, 63-7, and West Virginia, 38-15. "Formerly," said Forgarty, "they used a pro set with a flanker and split end and called pass plays 30-50 times a game. Against William and Mary they employed a strong running game." In a post game interview Panther coach Hart said, "We won with bread and butter football, and we intend to stay with that."

The major running threat is tailback Dennis Ferris (22), who ran for 137 yards on 33 carries last week. His performance was the best at Pitt since Gary Cramer (26), the fullback, gained 139 against Navy last year. Ferris, a sophomore, missed all of last season with an eye injury.

The signal caller for the Pitt offense is sophomore Dave Havern (17). "He's small (5'9" 160), elusive and throws well," according to Fogarty. He's completed 38 of 79 for 538 yards and one touchdown.

The Panthers have a trio of fine receivers. George Medich (85) a 6-5 220 pound tight end is their leading pass catcher with 11 receptions for 139 yards. Skip Orszulak (80), a 9.9 man in the hundred, is the split end with seven grabs good for 161 yards and one td. Joe McCain (13), who scored Pitt's only touchdown in last years 14-7 loss to SU, is the wingback with six catches worth 103 yards.

Hart is also high on Dave Garnett, another sophomore tailback. Playing in only the final quarter against William and Mary, he picked up 39 yards on nine carries. "Garnett is a 9.5 sprinter who can break away for a score anytime," said Fogarty.

Pitt has gotten tougher on defense and is now going after people, according to Jim Shreve, SU freshman coach who also scouted the Panthers. "Against William and Mary their pass rush nailed the quarterback 14 times for losses. In their two previous games they didn't drop the passer at all," Shreve said. For the first time since he has been at Pitt, Hart's defense held an opponent without a touchdown.

On defense, the Panther's use a 4-4 with three in the deep secondary. The line, led by tackle John Stevens (75) and Paul Naponick (88), held William and Mary to just 89 yards on 55 varries.

Shreve said, "The linebackers are the outstanding members of the defensive team." Their two best, Lloyd Weston (65) and Ralph Cindrich (50), will return to action after missing last week's game.

"They are weak on pass defense," said Shreve. "They blitz often, sometimes sending seven or eight men in. They will go after our quarterback." Their coverage on passes varies between man to man and zone. In their first three games Pitt's opponents completed 58 of 91 passes for 798 yards and seven scores.

The Orange defense, after an impressive showing last week in which they held the Bruins to 56 yards passing hopes to continue to improve. Tackle Art Thoms and linebacker Jerry Ruccio, injured slightly last week, are expected to play this week. If not, Gerry Beach would replace Thoms at tackle with Ron Womack taking Beach's place at middle guard, and Jack Protz taking over the linebacking duties.

On offense, Syracuse intends to substitute more freely in the backfield. "We have good boys deserving of playing and it's difficult for them to develop if they don't," said offensive back field coach Bill Bell.

In discussing the offensive strategy Bell said, "We will do whatever the defense seems to be giving us. What we do must be effective and help us achieve our objective, which is to win."

The SU running game has improved steadily and last week against UCLA they ran for 251 yards. "The offensive line is getting more experienced," said Bell, "and they are learning their blocking assignments better each game."

"Pitt will make an all out effort to continue winning," said Fogarty. "If we have a letdown, we'll be in for a long afternoon. Attitude is so important in football. It can equalize what a team lacks in talent."

With the right attitude and strategy the Orangemen hope to cause a pitfall and hope all that will be left of the roaring Panthers is purring kittens.

Syracuse at night

Daily Orange photographer Ham Biggar employed a little photographic trickery in catching the moon at its fullest over Syracuse one night last week. As any astronomer can tell you, the full moon didn't come close to MONY this month. Actually, Biggar found it hanging over Haven Hall, and from the roof of Phi Delta Theta fraternity shot a roll of film on it. He then did an about-face, rewound his film and snapped the city. "I cheated," he said, but it worked.

Sorority called 'bigoted'; board investigates charge

By ALAN STAMM
News Editor

In the midst of its recolonization drive, Alpha Delta Pi sorority has been charged with racism and anti-semitism by several ex-members.

Chuck Hicks, Student Government president, has called for an immediate meeting of SU's Anti-Discrimination Board for Fraternities and Sororities to investigate the charge.

Maxine Blake, the sorority's national president, is presnetly on campus to supervise recolonization efforts. Concerning discrimination charges, she views "a great deal of misinformation and misinterpretation" as the root.

Miss Blake cannot ascertain whether any Negro girls are members of ADPi chapters since Federal law prohibits national records from including race breakdowns.

"There is no clause in our by-laws or constitution excluding anyone from membership on a racial or religious basis," she emphasized.

However, in a March, 1963 directive to all chapters, Miss Blake ventured that "Fraternity is seeing its rights invaded through...movements to press for remodeling our membership standards, bordering on civil rights as opposed to social rights; and our right to hold to the religious principles for which we were founded, namely Christian as opposed to other creeds and ideologies."

Other national policy standards were explained several years ago by Mrs. Virginia F. Jacobsen, an ADPi delegate to the National Panhellenic Conference. She wrote: "...if we are to maintain this high standard of excellence, we must be eternally vigilant to any inroads being made by those who would destroy our freedoms.

"The attacks upon fraternities are not new. They started with demands to remove discriminatory clauses from constitutions. Alpha Delta Pi has no such clause. It is my opinion that we have the right to establish as a voluntary association whatever qualifications for membership we choose. But organizations such as ours have responded to the pressure in order to exist."

Locally, one of the ex-sisters raising bias allegations is Rhoda Dearman, president of Omicron Nu, a senior women's honorary. Miss Dearman, who deactivated form ADPi last spring, feels "the house curtailed my personal freedom by passing judgement on people I wanted to associate with."

She recounted two alleged "hash" sessions during which Negro rushees were favorably received. "However, she recalls, "we were informed -- in one case by an alum and in the other by upperclass officers -- that our chapter was too weak to attempt to establish a precedent by pledging Negroes." According to Miss Dearman and Carolyn Lanphear, also a senior and former-member, these Negro girls were never invited back.

Several other girls substantiated these charges by citing the same specific incidents. Although these girls asked that their names be withheld, they revealed them to the Daily Orange, which confirmed their status as former ADPi sisters.

Miss Dearman regards ADPi's "antique social code" as "a symbol of preserving bigotry and the separation of 'superior' women from others."

Although Miss Lanphear also recalls "some difficulty in getting alumna recommendations for Jewish girls," the

Gregory attacks capitalism and nation's political system

By BETH HILLSON

Dick Gregory, former comedian and write-in presidential candidate of the Freedom and Peace Party, greeted an enthusiastic crowd of 700 students and Syracusans Sunday night in the University Methodist Church. He spoke of corrupness in our two-party system and called America "the filthiest, most insane nation on the face of the earth." He proposed immediate and radical changes to the system which he says places "property rights in front of human rights."

In his attack on capitalism he referred to the Declaration of Independence which guarantees the rights of "life, liberty, and the persuit of happiness." It also recommends that if these rights are abused "it is their right, it is their duty to throw off such government and to provide new guards for their future security."

He proposed that the capitalist system be returned to its proper place, "behind the Constitution and not in front of it."

"We didn't go into Vietnam behind the Constitution," he explained. Regarding capitalism in the U.S. he said, "You can march till you're blue in the face to end the war, but say you won't smoke another cigarette until the war is over, and the cigarette industry will quickly put an end to the war.

"If I were elected President, I'd bring the troops home overnight and then let the old fools sit and wonder how honorable it was," Gregory said.

"People don't understand the youngsters of today. It's very simple; they will do anything to keep from identifying with this whole corrupt system," he feels. Older people resist the young people's movements because they fear changes in their system, Gregory speculated.

"Youth is no longer a chronological number, but an attitude," he said.

"The whole country got uptight because 15,000 young people came to Chicago. But 20,000 old men poured out on Wall Street to watch some broad and nothing happened to them."

Gregory sees the two party system fast approaching its end. "November 5 will be an important day," he predicts. "It will mark the death of the two-party system."

DICK GREGORY

The two-party system has outlived its usefulness, he feels. He called the Republican and Democrat parties corrupt. "Independent action will be the most important thing," Gregory says. He predicts that the country will have an independent president within the next eight years.

Gregory attacked the formal presidential candidates for their stand on law and order. The candidates presented policies to wipe out crimes in the streets, but none mentioned the crime syndicates, he pointed out.

"I don't care if you want to smoke a joint," Gregory said. But you'd better start growing your own, if I'm elected President, because the syndicate isn't going to supply your reefers. The syndicate will not push dope in my country if I'm elected."

Israeli leader praises nation's unification drive

By IRA SILVERMAN

"There may very well be another war in the Middle East. I don't expect it for two or three years, but it could come."

These were the words of David Hacohen, chairman on Foreign Relations and Security in the Israeli Parliament, as he spoke to about 150 people Sunday night at Hillel's dinner.

Hacohen, the Israeli government's equivalent of Sen. Fulbright, emphasized his country's continued efforts for survival amidst a dozen Arab nations. Beginning his talk, he assured his audience that the views he would take were his own.

"Whatever I say," Hacohen began, "I speak for myself. Maybe for my government, but always for me."

"The history of Israel has been an adventure," he continued. "It's always been uphill. Israel is the only state in the world where a person cannot cross a border without fearing getting a bullet in the head. It's the only state with enemies on all borders."

Hacohen claimed the Arab psychology was that "they want Israel to disappear out of the U.N. and out of existence. And they don't want anyone in their countries to speak differently."

Quickly getting into specifics, Hacohen spoke about the war of June 1967, and its effect on the Middle East and the world.

"The Israeli Army," commented Hacohen, "is the best Army in the world from a technical point of view. We have the most capable generals in the world. There is no draft-dodging--it is the code of your soul, of your children, of your family."

Israel is one of the few countries that has required military service for both males and females.

"Eleven years ago," Hacohen continued, "we had two junior partners in our dispute with the

Part Three
All volunteer services

We have explained why we think a system of all volunteer armed forces would be within our democratic tradition. We have pointed out what we consider to be the major weaknesses of the draft. But we haven't dealt with the question of whether the system of all volunteer armed forces is practical.

When the National Advisory Commisstion considered revising the Selective Service Act in 1967, they heard testimony from the US Youth Council that 61 per cent of its members favored all volunteer armed services. The council also acknowledged that 58 per cent of its members indicated they would not volunteer themselves. Doesn't this show that if enlistment in the armed services were voluntary, the armed services would be unable to find sufficient manpower?

Further more, of those who currently volunteer for the armed forces, we recognize 40 per cent do so out of fear of the draft. When a young man's chances of being drafted are high, he may enlist in order to obtain better opportunities and conditions for his term of service.

We believe, nevertheless, that the armed services could find sufficient manpower if operated on a volunteer basis.

First, pay would be improved. Starting salary, part of which must go for food, housing, clothing and other items, is only $45 a week. Milton Friedman, the University of Chicago economist, estimates to increase the starting pay to $4,000 a year would cost $3 to $4 billion. The official Pentagon figure is four times as much. If starting salaries were increased, the armed forces would be able to attract more men, and the armed services which are scorned as slave labor today would be able to claim a higher status in the eyes of society.

The armed forces currently employ many men in training of new recruits due to the high turnover rate. A man who volunteered for service would tend to stay in for a longer period of time. This tendency would free men engaged in training and cut costs of training. Also, more women wish to serve than the armed forces can currently accommodate. Women could be used in many of the desk and office jobs currently held by men, creating a larger pool of manpower for the volunteer forces to draw upon.

Manpower is the cheapest resource of the armed forces and they waste it brutally. Lawyers drive jeeps, accountants prepare meals, and Ph.Ds tramp to and fro on guard duty. Is it cheaper to draft such men under a system of compulsary service rather than using most efficiently those who wish to serve and allowing the rest to work in their jobs and communities to the best of their talents?

Under a system of volunteer armed forces a serviceman would be guaranteed better working conditions and more specialized training. The armed services would acquire more professional skills, pride and morale would improve, and the total effectiveness of the armed forces would be greater.

Father Barrigan
On Trial

"Our apoligies good fiends, for the fracture of good order, the burning of paper instead of children, the agnering of the in the front parlor of the charnel house. We could not, so help us God do otherwise. For we are sick at heart, our hearts give us no rest for thinking of the Land of Burning Children."

Daniel Berrigan; a meditation

Editor's Note: The following column was submitted and signed by several hundred LeMoyne students. Anyone wishing to aid in the protest of the Berrigan trial should contact LeMoyne College for those handling the demonstration.

Father Daniel Berrigan, a theology teacher at LeMoyne for six years, and now an advisor to the Cornell United Religious Workers in Ithaca, goes on trial Monday. He has been called a poet by many and a prophet by some. His life has been marked by conflicts with authority because of his outspoken partisanship with the poor and the oppressed of the world.

Father Berrigan, along with eight others is being tried in Baltimore for destroying 800 1-A draft files with napalm. The protest against the existence of draft records symbolizes a protest not only against our arbitrary draft system, but also against the destruction of human freedom and lives by napalm in Vietnam.

Right now, Dan Berrigan has reason to doubt whether the tradition and environment in which he lives supports or even understands him or Christianity. At LeMoyne this week we are going to try to show him that we DO support and understand him. We will try to make ourselves more aware of the dilemma in which both Father Berrigan and the entire American society find themselves. We are going to mourn this week for Father Berrigan's and for our own physical bondage. Among the events will be the wearing of green arm bands, a full day fast, and a ceremony around the flag. We are going to celebrate the moral freedom Father Berrigan has attained by his act and which we all hope to attain. There will also be Masses of hope and a "happening" for all concerned students later in the week.

"We have chosen to say, with the gift of our liberty, if necessary our lives: the violence stops here, the death stops here, the suppression of the truth stops here, this war stops here..."

Agnew 'state'

The following comes to us from Prof. J.R. Sharp. "In California, there exists an Agnew State Hospital (for the Mentally disturbed), between San Francisco and San Jose on route 101." Our guess is, that with additional funds they could expand and build a wing for patients with 'foot in mouth' disease.

Letters to the editor

ADPi–I

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify the position of Panhellenic regarding the recolonization of Alpha Delta Pi sorority. The absence of a policy statement in yesterday's article was the result of a communication gap between the reporter and myself during a nebulous phone conversation. As was stated, Panhellenic is firmly behind the recolonization movement. Our reasons are varied: 1) We feel that such a membership drive will strengthen the chapter and enhance the potential of the entire system, 2) the recolonization will provide the opportunity for upperclass women to experience the Greek system with the challenge of a fresh, individual approach, 3) the joint programs planned with IFC will exhibit that we are indeed capable of cooperation and unity in a system whose "competitive" aspects are too often over-exaggerated.

We are not afraid to admit our shortcomings and negative competition has been a problem. However, the fact remains that if we are striving to assist Alpha Delta Pi in the recolonization, we have transcended competition. Every sorority on this campus realizes their responsibility to the other twenty-two and are endeavoring to protect and augment each other. For example, representatives from Panhellenic recently aided two houses with their upperclass rush emphasizing each house within the context of the Greek system.

We regret that the DO's misinterpretation of the circumstances surrounding the recolonization could result in a distortion of this positive program for the woman student. We respect your right to seek out the news but we would hope in the future that a more specific attempt be made to objectively research all angles of a situation.

Sally Clonninger
President of Panhellenic

NOTE: The Daily Orange's attempt "to objectively research all angles of a situation" was hampered somewhat by Miss Clonninger's explanation that she could "not discuss Alpha Delta Pi's recolonization," except to say Panhel supports it.

–News Editor

ADPi–II

To the Editor:

Is it possible that the same Daily Orange that scrupulously avoids printing any articles with even a hint of an anti-Semitic, anti-Negro, anti-SDS, or anti-Anything slant could conceivably print such an obviously anti-Greek article as the one that appeared under the headline, "Sorority chapter buckles under national pressure" in last Thursday's DO?

Whatever ethics, if any, were used in the decision to print a totally derogatory article must be seriously questioned. Any article will affect the opinion of its readers. In this case the completely negative view point of the article could substantially affect the success of the recolonization of Alpha Delta Pi.

No responsible newspaper judges an individual before his trial nor does it jeopardize the success of a proposed activity by printing a biased article.

The fact is that Alpha Delta Pi is being recolonized. It is a national sorority and like all national sororities it has "selective membership procedures." For what reason did the article enumerate the sorority's "selective membership procedure" when it obviously tells nothing more about it? An article written in ignorance has adverse effects while the truth would not.

Colette Stallings

NOTE: Striving to attain objectivity in Thursday's article, the Daily Orange contacted a number of sources directly involved with the recolonization. As was their prerogative, several declined to discuss details of the move as "chapter business." Although the DO has no desire to jeopardize ADPi or "judge it before its trial," we did realize an obligation to illuminate reasons leading to the current situation.

Regarding an alleged "negative viewpoint," it should be indicated that this recolonization also involves a "decolonization" of the current chapter. In mentioning acceptance procedures and declining membership figures, we were trying to show what's on the other side of the wall.

Students allowed to teach new class in Black culture

By CONNIE KOMAREK

A student-originated and student-directed course, focusing on the relationship between Blacks and whites in America, was approved for Spring semester by the Liberal Arts faculty yesterday.

The decision was reached after a long discussion between faculty members on the merits of allowing students to teach other students an obtaining credit for doing so.

A motion to table the issue until the faculty's next meeting and an ammendment to the proposal were both defeated, and the course stands approved as reviewed by the curriculum committee. Only University Senate approval is still necessary.

The program was born last year as a proposal of Howard Zweier during his successful campaign for Junior Class President. Its primary purpose is to discuss and deal directly with inter- racial problems in America.

The historical background of Blacks, their growing awareness of inequities in society, expression of this through the Black Power movement and their fight in the ghetto will all be covered during the semester.

Specially trained students presently enrolled in Backgrounds in Public Policy will serve as instructors. Training of discussion leaders will consist of three parts: 1) a presentation of particular skills of value in teaching situations; 2) a weekend workshop on the development of skills for presenting and involving students in discussions; 3) a series of seminars at which presentation practice and the use of supplementary materials will be emphasized.

Instructors will receive three credit hours for their work, as will their students.

At present, seven students are taking preparatory courses in education to prepare themselves for spring jobs as discussion leaders. They are Craig Baumgarten, director; Craig Williams, director of lecture series; Stan Hunterton, director of public relations and finance; Larry Sampson, assistant director; Gene Kane, director of taining; Howard Zweier, director of research and evaluation; and Charles Paine, director of curriculum.

This new venture at SU is considered by students involved to be a new dimension in their education. They are "anxious to have their degrees represent more than just a piece of paper," according to Baumgarten.

Socialist party boosts platform that calls for immediate end to war

By CHARLES SHAPIRO

"The prospect that one of three hawks -- a liberal, a reactionary, and a racist -- will wind up as President of the United States this year, despite larte-scale public sentiment for ending the war in Vietnam, is bringing many people, especially young people, to break decisively with the lesser evil theory and support our socialist campaign," said Peter Buch last Thursday, Oct. 10, at an evening meeting in 110 HL. Buch is Socialist Workers Party candidate for U.S. Congress in the 19th Congressional District, located in lower Manhattan, and is on an upstate tour to publicize his party's Presidential campaing. The S.W.P. is on the ballot in New York as well as some 20 other states this year and is running Fred Halstead for President and Paul Boutelle for Vice-President. Peter Buch was a former staff member of the National Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam, which organized the April 15 and Oct. 21 antiwar demonstrations last year; he served as editor of the committee's bulletin, The Mobilizer.

Buch outlined the S.W.P. platform, first noting the findings of presidential candidate Fred Halstead on his recent trip to Saigon. Halstead, talking to many GI's there, claimed he learned that only a small number of them supported the war, that a larger group, though still a minority, wanted to come home, and that the majority were "confused and ill-informed about the war, and the antiwar movement." Buch noted that the S.W.P. platform includes a plank which both demands an immediate end to the war in Vietnam Nam, and demands that the GI's be brought home now.

The S.W.P. also supports the Black People's fight for freedom and justice; "equality through Black power." Another plank in the S.W.P. platform is the support of all struggles of the working people. The party wants a worker's government, a socialist system, in which an independent labor party would be based on the unions, to defend the rights of workers against the parties of big business.

Buch observed that the week of Oct. 21-27 had been designated by the Student Mobilization Committee as a week of International Protest. This and similar movements called by the Japanese, English, and Canadian antiwar groups, are to be the occasion for teach-ins, leafletting, and demonstrations focusing on the fact that GI's in Viet Nam and elsewhere, have the right as American citizens, to express their opinions on the war in or out of the Army. The need to reach GI's and their families with the "truth" about Viet Nam will be demonstrated during the protest, according to demonstration organizers.

Focus on Christianity

Fellowship strives for 'real meaning'

By MARK MASTERSON

"On a campus this size people have a problem getting to know one another.

"You can't get away from people using one another - it's just not meaningful."

These were reflections of Tom Phillips, president of Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship (IVDF), as he tried to describe the organization in an interview Friday evening at Chapel House.

The goal of IVCF, said Phillips, is to achieve the character of early Chrisitan Church by providing an atmosphere of friendship where persons focus on the real meaning of Christianity.

"IVCF strives for that equilibrium where self is denied and everyone is respected," he explained. "This is what really constitutes human relations."

IVCF is a student-run organization of about 50 persons who represent at least five of the Christian denominations on campus. Members meet Friday evenings at Chapel House for an informal session of discussion, prayer, song, pop corn and soda. Usually each week some missionary, theologian or evangelist is invited to share his knowledge with Inter-Varsity.

Asked whether he thought IVCF had accomplished its goal, Phillips said, "In terms of numbers it hasn't done much but by looking at those persons it has come in contact with, they are changed people."

Arabs--England and France. This time we were alone. We prayed that American wouldn't play the same game as before, joining with the Russians against us."

Before turning to the present, and discussing the problems currently facing Israel, Hacohen discussed how his country's budget is devised. "Our military budget," said Hacohen, "Is not decided by me, as head of the committee, or by the Prime Minister. Nasser dictates our budget."

With the Middle East still a very big subject in the U.N., Hacohen explained a little of Israel's desires in that part of the world.

"Winning the war is only half of it," he assured his audience. "We want ot win the peace. We don't want to fight anymore. We want to talk peace, but how can you when the other boy doesn't want to speak. They are prisoners of their own propaganda," Hacohen ventured.

There were, in fact, vague signs of a Middle East settlement last week, when in a nine-point program presented by Israel Foreign Minister Abba Eban announced that his government might talk to the Arabs through U.N. ambassador Gunnar V. Jarring, rather than insist on direct discussion with the Arab governments.

Of greatest interest to Arabs in the program was Eban's promise to carry out disposition of forces once the cease-fire lines are replaced by "secure and recognized" boundaries between the Arab states and Israel.

Still, however, it appears that Israel would refuse a four-power guarantee of any settlement.

In conclusion, Hacohen spoke of the youth in his country, of the "great bondage" among his people and of a peace "all my people want.

"We don't want to sign a sham peace. Hitler came after Versailles. It is hard. It is an uphill job. But the Arabs are being confronted by a race of Jewish youth that was born with the State of Israel."

Sorority . . .

sorority has several Jewish sisters here.

Some girls who asked the DO to withhold their names said they would be willing to testify at the Anti-Discrimination Board's hearings. The Board, which has not yet scheduled a date for its inquiry, includes Hicks, Sally Clonninger, Panhel president; Cindy Bailey, AWS president; David Tatham, dean of men; and Marjorie C. Smith, dean of women.

Miss Blake added that ADPi has not been involved in controversies over discrimination on any other campuses. She also noted that no other chapters have experienced such a rapid decline in membership as at SU's.

It should be noted that the 1964 Civil Rights Act, Title V, Sec. 104(6), affirms the right of fraternities and sororities to restrict membership as voluntary, private social social institutions.

Regarding the controversy here, Dean Carolyn Jones, Panhel advisor, noted that "It will be very difficult for Alpha Delta Pi to pledge Negro girls if none rush."

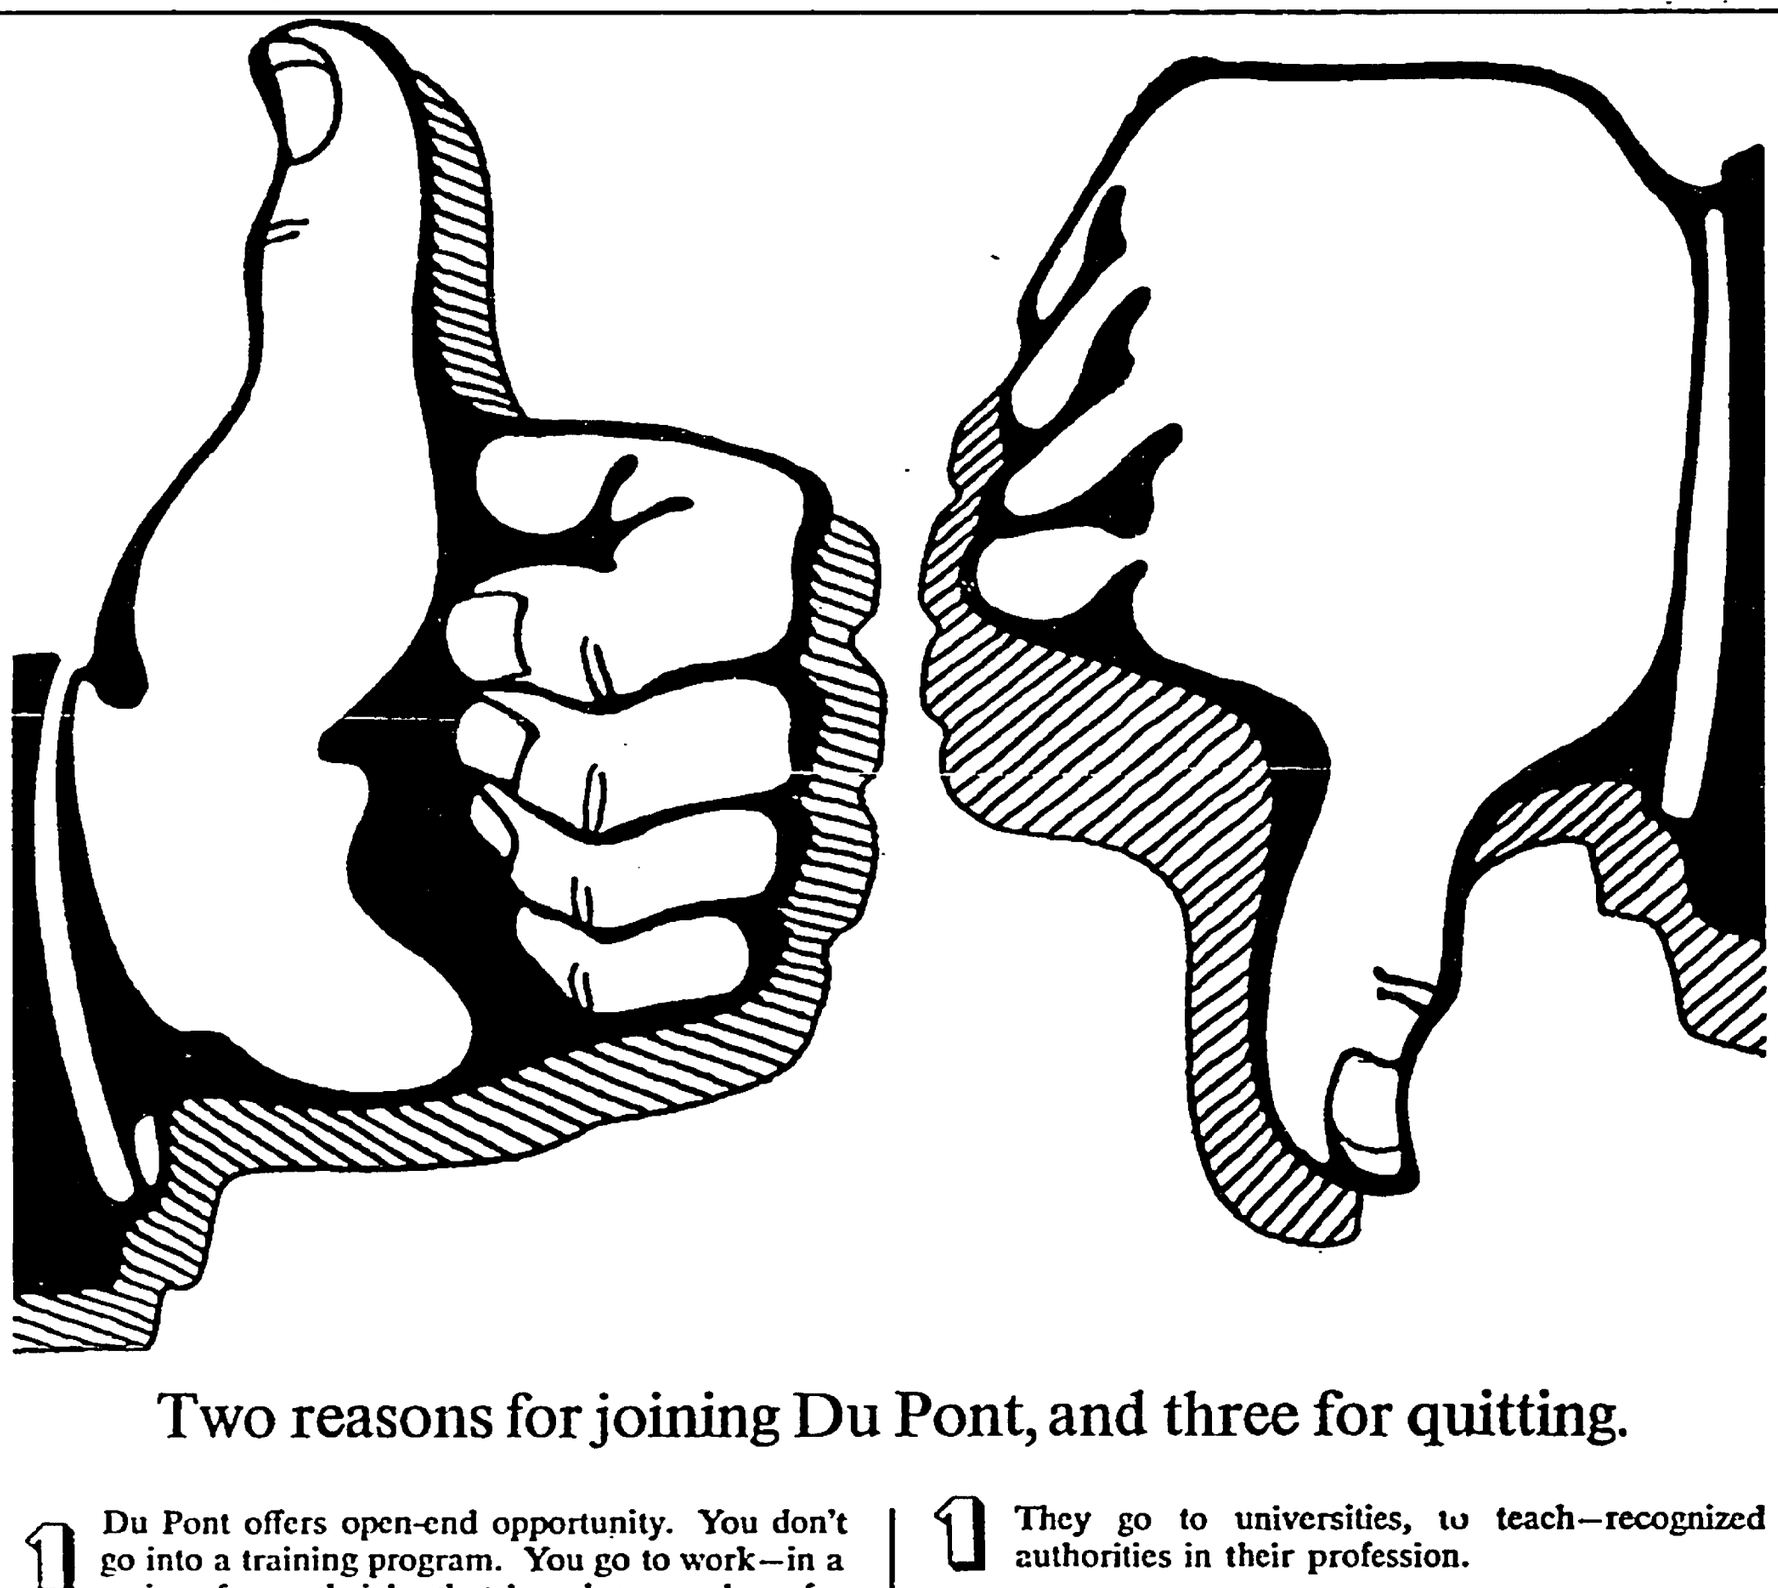
He wants to see human liberties enforced as strongly as the present administration enforces income tax collectors.

"Anyone will be able to walk wherever they want to without being molested because of who they are, even if I have to put a tank and a soldier on each corner."

Dale Tussing, associate professor of economics at Syracuse University, and congressional candidate for the Liberal Party from the 34th district, spoke at the same spot.



He called Johnson's three-point policy on the war a strategy. Johnson wants a place in history as a president of peace, explained Tussing.

Tussing suggested immediate withdrawl from Vietnam, first reunifying the Vietnamese under one government -- a communist government if that is what the people want.

DO SG HEARINGS

Student Senate's Government Structures Committee is rewriting the Student Government constitution, and has scheduled open hearings tomorrow and Thursday. Any students may testify.

Wednesday's hearings, dealing with the legislative portion, will be conducted during Senate's meeting at 7:30 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium. Thursday's session, at 7 p.m. in 307 HL, will examine the judicial division.

Two reasons for joining Du Pont, and three for quitting.

1 Du Pont offers open-end opportunity. You don't go into a training program. You go to work—in a series of growth jobs that broaden your base for professional progress and help you find the specific field you want to grow in. We call it "planned mobility."

2 Du Pont works at the outer limits. Sure, everybody claims they do the far-out research. But Du Pont is a world leader in research with the money and the engineering capability to translate ideas into commercial products. If you have a profitable idea, we have what it takes to make it work; and we have a special bonus plan to reward you for it. So Du Pont people grow, personally and professionally. Even men who leave Du Pont often do so because of the professional growth they experienced at Du Pont.

Threat of draft defers grad students

By MONTYE CHAFEY

"There's no question that the draft has had a significant effect on graduate students in our department," said Dr. Melvin Eggers, chairman of the Department of Economics. Like other departmental chairmen, however, Dr. Eggers indicated that the threat of the draft and not the draft itself was keeping students from going to graduate school.

Eggers said that his department was missing 8 or 10 students who had already completed one year or who had accepted financial aid and intended to enroll. But, he continued, he knew of only one student who was actually drafted. He said that most students had taken positions in teaching or VISTA which were likely to give more draft protection than graduate school.

"To my knowledge no one who we accepted did not come because they were drafted" was the reply of Dr. W. A. Baker, chairman of the Department of Chemistry. When asked what affect the draft had on his department, he said that some graduate students had left school to become public teachers, although students were found to replace them.

According to Col. Charles C. McIntosh, director of the Masters of Business Administration program, the draft per se had a slight but not a significant effect on the Graduate School of Business Administration. He felt that the impact of the draft was stronger in forcing people to make decisions than in actually pulling them out of graduate school.

Col. McIntosh mailed questionnaires to about 70 prospective graduate students who were accepted at Syracuse, but who had not come. Only half of the 70 answered the questionaire and of that only six said they had not come because they were drafted.

James Harrison, executive for graduate programs, said that the overall graduate school enrollment did not seem to be down, but that a "relatively high number of fellowships are vacant." These fellowships, he added, were left empty by students who were accepted but who never showed. Harrsion suggested that students may not have showed up because "an unwillingness to bide uncertainty" had caused them to decide to get the military obligation out of the way or to take another route to avoid it.

Dr, Eric gardner, chairman of the Psychology Department, cautioned that it was too early in the semester to gauge the effect the draft was having on his department's graduate students. He said that he realized that many students were anxious about the possibility of being drafted, but urged them to come to graduate school regardless of the threat. His department would do its best to get the student as far long as possible he said.

This seemed to be the policy of the entire graduate school. Harrison said that if a student's draft board will not allow him to finish the semester the student will receive a grade if it is at all possible. If not, he continued, the student will be given an incomplete grade or a complete refund.

The question of the effect of the draft on graduate students was raised last February when the National Security Council abolished deferments for all graduate students except those enrolled in medicine, osteopathy, dentistry and optometry.

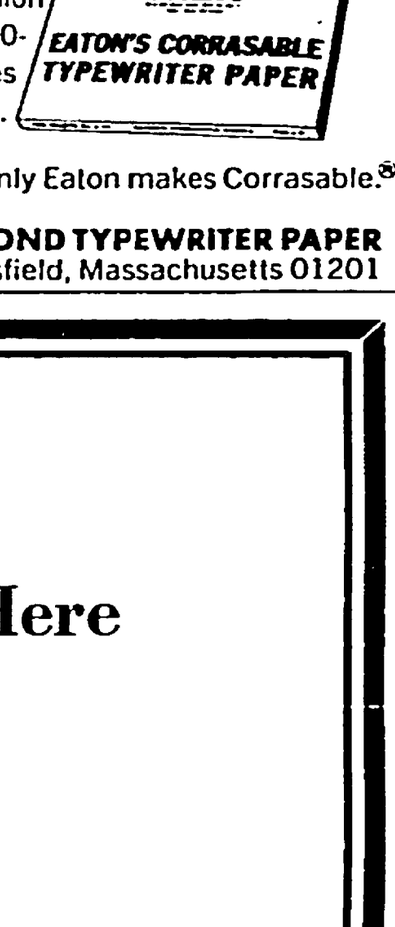
Excerpts from speech by Tolley at Le Moyne

Following are excerpts from Chancellor William P. Tolley's address prepared for LeMoyne College's Founder Day Dinner last night. Tolley received the first Simon LeMoyne medal for outstanding achievement, and was cited as an "outstanding educator."

Some 43 percent of the young people of college age in the United States now attend some institution of higher education. In Russia, our closest competitor as a nation, the figure is 24 percent. For France it is 16 percent. In Italy and Germany it is seven, in the British Isles less than five and in a South American country like Brazil about two percent.

Education has a place of importance in the United States unmatched by any other country. Unlike the gold drain, the brain drain is from other nations to the United States. There are now more than 6 million college and university students and more than 2,200 colleges and universities. But while some 1,417 of these are privately endowed, they account for only 32.1 percent of the enrollment. Each year, moreover, that percentage drops.

As yet few private colleges have closed their doors. Nonetheless, many were unable to fill their entering classes this past fall and all but the very strong are concerned about their future. Already there is a steady parade of private institutions asking to be taken over by the state.



It doesn't require a high order of wisdom to see that we need all the friends and all the help we can attract and that the privately endowed colleges and universities must stand together. This does not mean we are opposed to the growing importance of State supported college education. It means, rather, that we need to make clear to the public the critical importance of colleges that are not completely owned and operated by the State. Our country has been extraordinarily fortunate in keeping political influences at a minimum in education at all levels. I doubt, however, if we will be equally fortunate in the future. The current experience in the New York City Public Schools and the reaction of the Legislature to the drug scandal at Stony Brook this past spring suggest that public education is moving into a new day of political influence and action.

One important role of privately endowed higher education is to serve as the conscience of the State. The second role is to set standards of academic freedom that can be shared by the entire academic community. A third role is the exercise of imagination, innovation, pioneering, experimentation, and demonstration.

Art show

Faculty exhibits talent at Lowe

A custom-made Springfield rifle by Jerome J. Malinowski, a production model of a plastic sailing dinghy by Lawrence P. Feer and plastic pop art by Edward C. Fricke are part of Syracuse University's 1968 faculty art show, which opened this week at the Joe and Emily Lowe Art Center. Thirty-five faculty members have contributed to the exhibit, which contines to Nov. 11.

William A. Neumann, assistant professor of design, supervised the layout and installation of about 80 works of painting and sculpture, ceramics and silversmithing, costume, fabric, graphic and industrial design. Neumann finds particular appeal in the variety of media shown, especially in sculpture. Pieces in traditional materials, like cast bronze, stand near figures in new media like fiberglas, he pointed out.

Neumann's own work is represented in silver jewelry made with a chemical soldering process called granulation, which he began experimenting with last year. He has returned to S.U. after a three- year leave of absence.

John Marshall, whose work in gold and silver has been shown at the Museum of Contemporary Crafts in New York, and in 1967 in a one-man show at Lowe Art Center, has several pieces on exhibit.

Jack Nelson, whose one-man show is at the Krasner Gallery in New York until Oct. 19, shows sculpture in mixed media. Cast bronze sculptures are the work of new faculty member Roger Mack, whose 11-foot bronze was installed this summer in Market Plaza, Little Rock, Ark. The sculptural work of James A. Ridlon, former collegiate and professional football player, is also being shown.

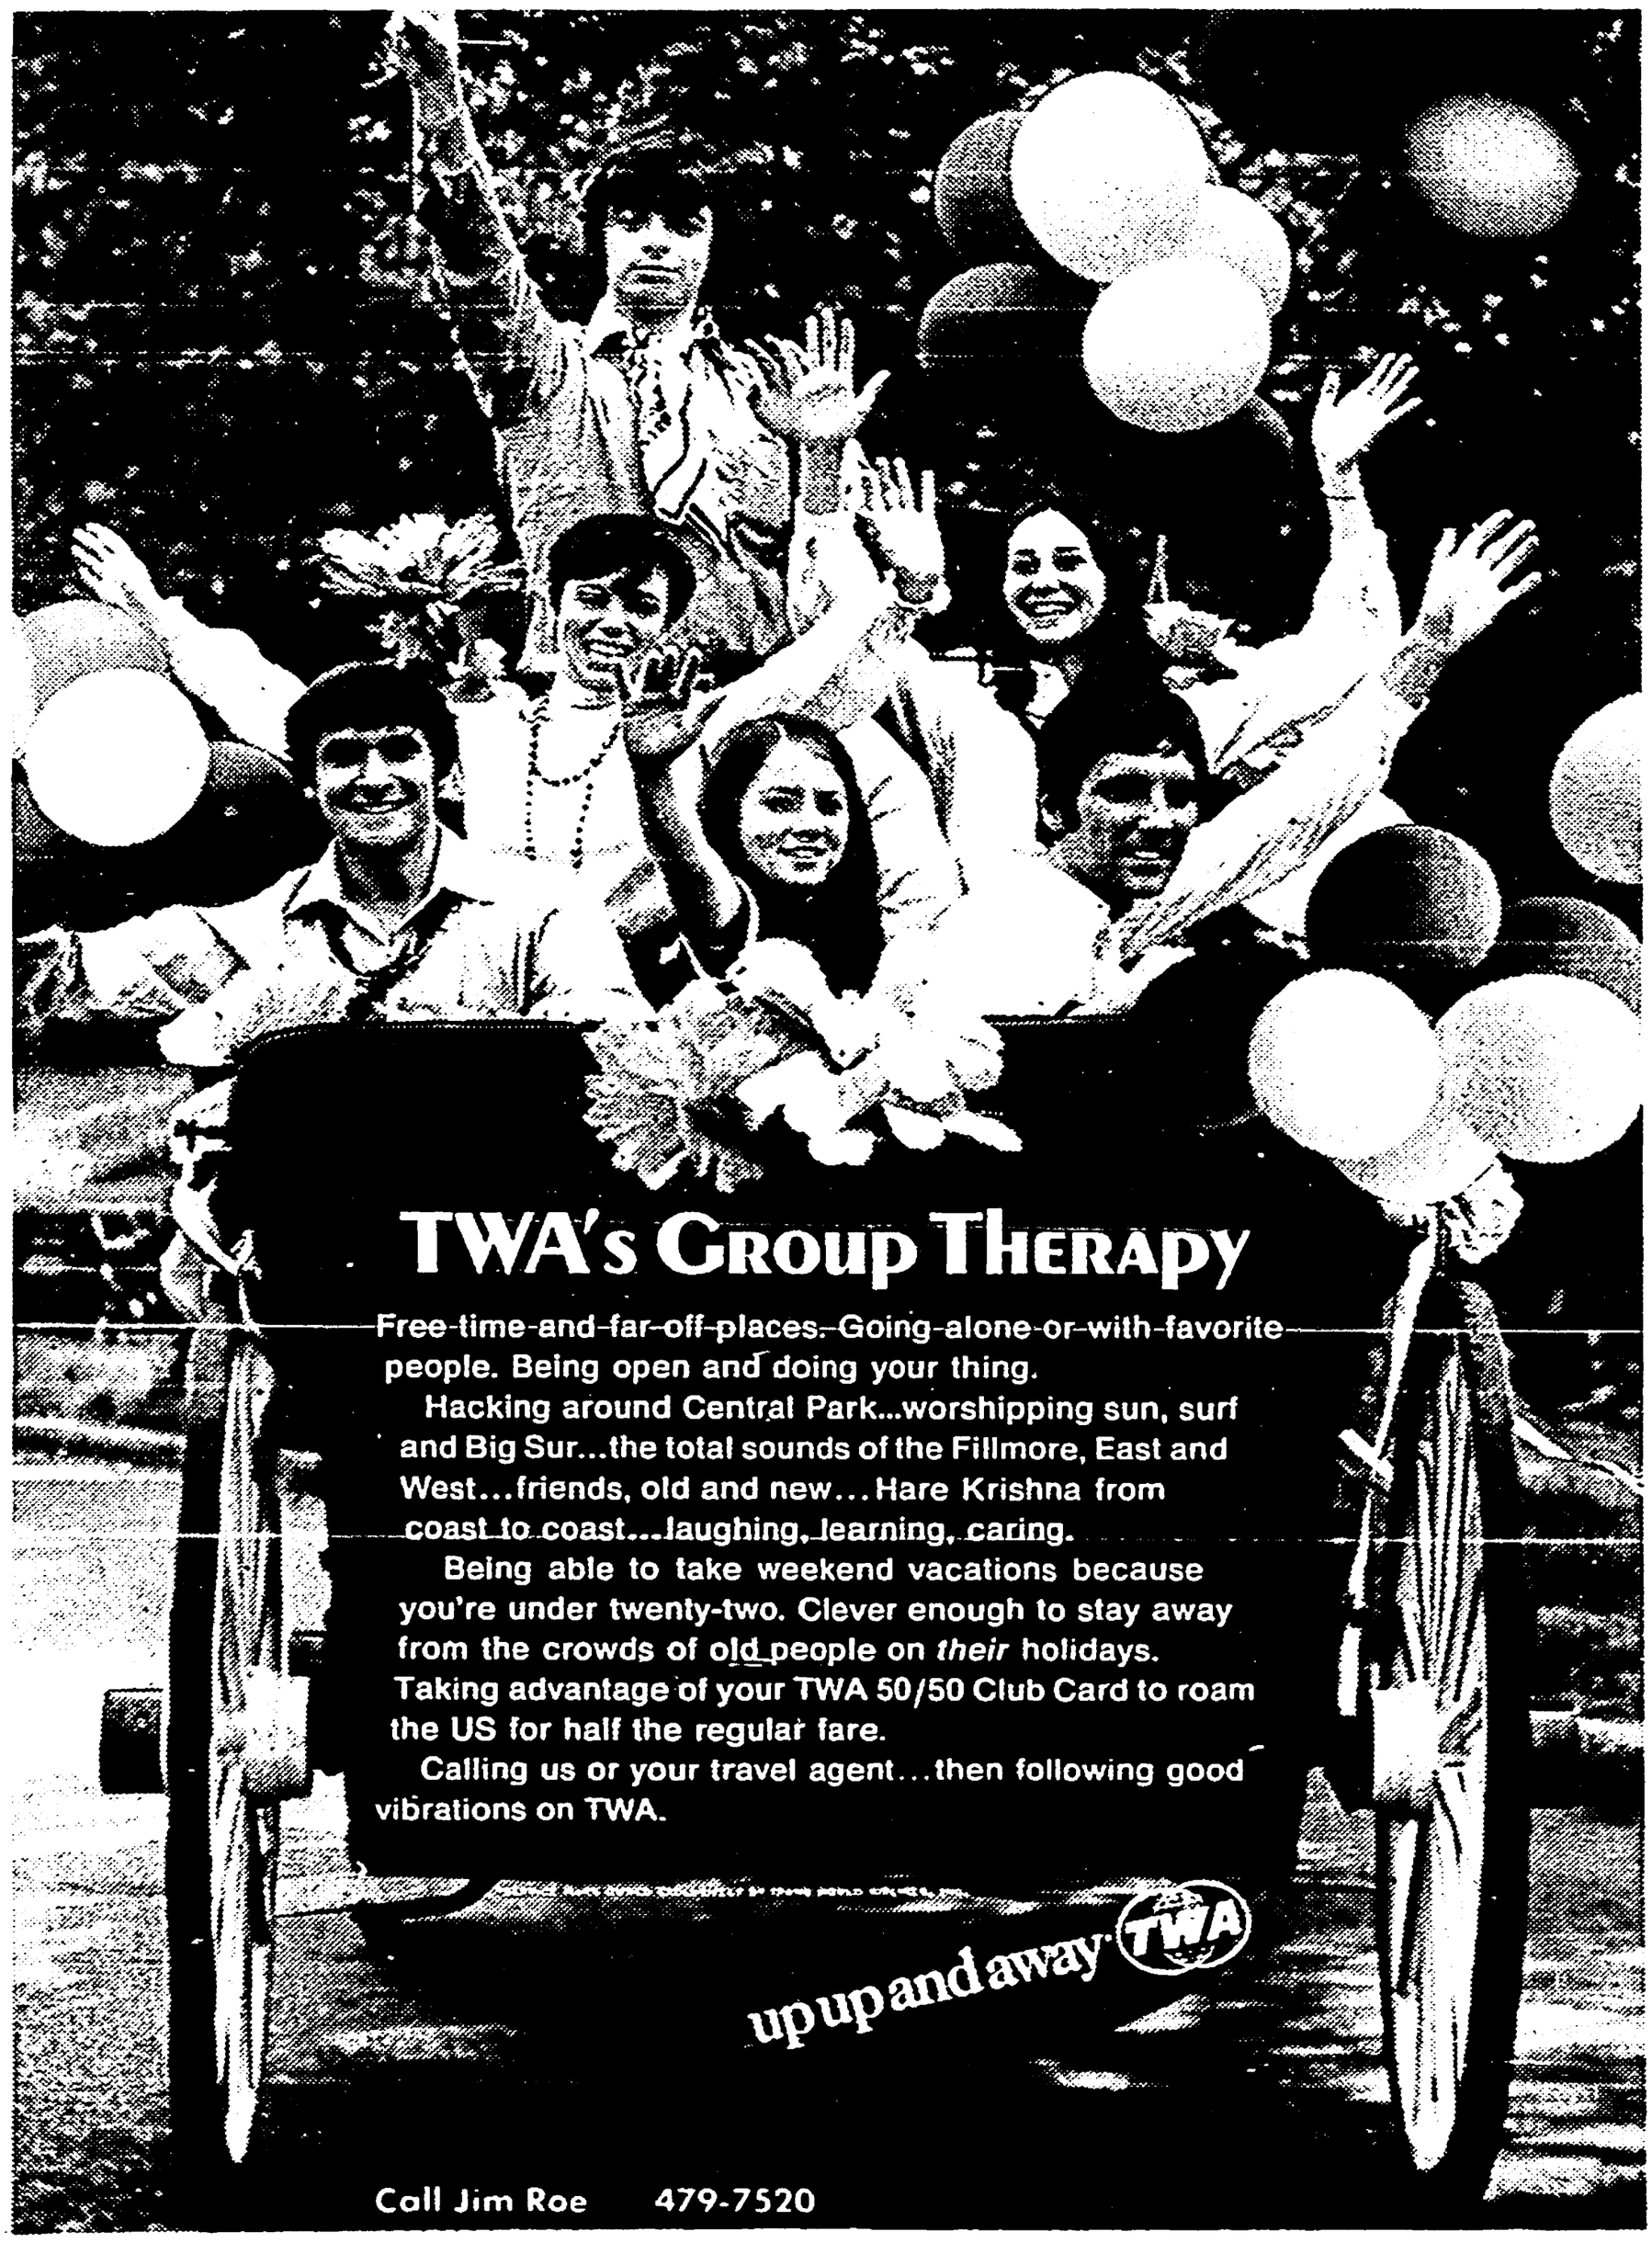
D. Lee DuSell is presenting a bronze sculpture. The surface treatment of his piece is similar to that of the massive outdoor sculpture he is completing for Syracuse's Everson Museum at Community Plaza, but the colors in the larger work will be brighter, Professor DuSell said.

E. Ainslee Burke, returning from a leave of absence, shows work in pastels. Burke's one-man show is at the University of Maine until Oct. 31. Hawaiian-born Tetsuo Ochikubu, who had a one-man show at the Krasner Gallery last year, has watercolors on display.

Some of the design work in the exhibit is available in retail stores. James J. Pirkl shows a phonograph and a radio-phonograph which are being manufactured by General Electric. His models of specialized television studio equipment are in development at G.E. The fabric swatches shown by Donald C. Waterman are manufactured by Maharam Fabrics and are available through designers and office supply firms.

Laurence Schmeckebier, dean of the School of Art, said the galleries are open Monday to Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 to 10 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; and Sunday 2 to 6 p.m.

PRINCETON LECTURER



Prof. Theodore Ziolkowski of Princeton University's department of German languages and literature will lecture in Maxwell Auditorium University campus at 4 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 17. His topic will be "The Discordant Clocks: Aspects of Time in Modern Fiction."

Ziolkowski, 36, is a scholar of 19th and 20th century German and comparative literature. He has written three major works, "Hermann Hesse" (1966).

He is a graduate of Duke University, where he received bachelor's and master's degrees, and of Yale University, where he earned a Ph.D. in 1957. He has studied and done research in Germany and has taught at Columbia, Princeton, and Yale Universities.

His lecture at Syracuse, sponsored by the Humanities Division of the College of Liberal Arts, is open to the public without charge.

Player of the week

PLAYER OF THE WEEK Jerry Ruccio making a key interception to ruin a first half Pittsburgh drive. Ruccio was all over the field Saturday from his position at middle linebacker.

Ruccio sparks defense

By BOB GALLAGHER

Defensive players dream of an interception or a fumble recovery; to do one would be dreamily, to do both doubley dreamily. Last Saturday SU's middle linebacker Jerry Ruccio was doubley dreamily.

The dreamy interception couldn't have been more nightmarish for Pitt fans. The Panthers had taken the opening kickoff and driven to the Orange 25-yard line. There, with third down and nine yards to go, Panther quarterback Dave Havern dropped back to pass. He fired the ball over the middle, intending it for Joe McCain at the 12, but Ruccio was there to pick it off.

"The receiver was running a curl pattern," said Ruccio. "Coach Jim Ridlon, of the defensive backs, explained the pattern to me just before the game. The ball came right to me hitting my chest. If I had dropped it," Ruccio said, "I would never have heard the end of it."

The interception was the first of Ruccio's career. The theft not only stopped a Pitt drive but also started the Orange on an 82-yard march for the game's initial touchdown. "Any kind of a break like that gives one team a tremendous lift and frustrates the other team," he commented.

A big play also tends to give the player a personal lift. Ruccio believes, "it keeps you from letting down. You want to continue to play well."

His dreamy fumble recovery early in the fourth quarter also led to an Orange score. Pitt's fullback Esposito took a hand off on his own 31 and ran up the middle. "He was being hit by someone else," said Russio. "I saw the ball sticking out," he continued, "so I knocked it loose and was lucky enough to fall on it."

In Pitt's previous game they had switched from a passing offense to a strong running attack. However, against Syracuse they again came out throwing. Ruccio said, "with our defensive line so difficult to run against we anticipated they would throw a lot." The defense was extremely hard to run against, yielding only three net yards. However, pass defense was much softer.

"They ran simple down and outs or down and ins, which are hard to defend against," Ruccio said. "We weren't getting a strong rush on the quarterback, he was setting up and releasing the ball quickly," he commented.

If pressured, Pitt's quarterback simply scrambled all over the field. This puts an added burden on the defensive secondary because they are unsure whether to come up to stop the run or stay back with their man and watch for a pass. Says Ruccio, "It's harder to tackle a scrambling quarterback than a drop back passer but when you get a scrambler its usually for a longer loss."

In the second half things were blacker for the Panthers. "Pitt shocked us in the first half," Ruccio thought. "The defense," he believed, "didn't click." "In the second half we knew we needed a rush and that the secondary had to tighten up. After all the offense had scored 24 points in the opening half but were only a touchdown ahead," he concluded.

Overall, Ruccio thought last Saturday was probably his best game. "I got a lot of lucky breaks. I wish it had been against a stronger team than Pitt," said Ruccio.

Future Syracuse opponents might not be sleeping soundly nights wondering if its possible for a dream to come true twice.

Pitt game was not as easy as it looked

By LARRY CENTER

In a wide open, inconsistent and strange football game, Syracuse trounced Pitt Saturday, 50-17, before a happy Homecoming crowd of 32,660 at Archbold.

The lopsided score does not at all indicate the type of game it really was. Both teams showed flashes of brilliance and moments of very sloppy play.

The game turned in the final moments of the first half, when Cliff Ensley returend an interception 53 yards for a score. The Orangemen came out of the locker room fired up and shut out Pitt the rest of the way.

Afterwards, Coach Ben Schwartzwalder said, "We finally bore down and played our football. We got organized and wore them down. The pass rush was the big thing. We started blitzing with reckless abandon and blunted their offense." The coach excused his team's first-half lack of power by saying, "It's hard to get up every week. We were up for UCLA, but it's emotionally impossible to be that high every week."

Ben knew the score didn't show how tough Pitt really was. He said, "They were being scored on through their mistakes, but they move that football and have a real fine offense. We had to battle our way out of it--they weren't giving us anything."

"In the second quarter, (when the Panthers scored 17 points) they were the toughest team we've been up against all year," he said. "That QB Dave Havern is a tough little kid, like an eel out there. This definitely was not an easy game."

The defense mounted a great pass rush in the second half, and two who led that charge were Lou Gubitosa and Gerry Beach.

In the locker room Gubitosa said, "In the first half we fell apart a little, because we weren't up right away. We didn't actually make any adjustments, just got together and realized it was going to be a tough game."

Beach, who helped block a punt that led to a safety, explained, "We practiced that blocking play during the week. We rushed with eight men. The ball went way up in the air and Jerry Ruccio and I were trying to get it. The ball fell about two yards outside the end zone and I just missed it, but those were the first points I've scored in college."

Before the season most football magazines talked about scoreless ties when mentioning Syracuse.Against Pitt, this supposedly weak offense, racked up 543 yards and the most points SU has scored since Floyd Little and Co. routed Pitt, 51-13, in 1965.

Quarterback Paul Pailisso, commenting on this powerful attack, said, "We don't have one great star like Csonka. We were a little short on experience, but we've been able to mature together and do a lot more than last year.

"Balance makes us more threatening and gives us more offensive potential, more of a punch. Newton and Chlebeck both do a great job at fullback. We have three or four good tailbacks and fine set of receivers," he said. "The offensive line is improving every game and really did great against UCLA."

Paul added he liked SU's wide open play because, "I like to pass, but anything that wins for us is good. We've been gambling on fourth down because we wanted to keep that ball and score some more points. As long as you have a good shot at it, and the short side was working real well, you can risk it when you're ahead."

Looking ahead, the junior quarterback said, "Cal will be a big one that could put us pretty high up in the ratings. In two weeks we might lose a little bit of our sharpness, but we'll work hard and it'll give us a chance to heal our bruises." The Orange have an open date this week, and play California in Berkeley on Oct. 26.

The Orangemen man be taking their games one at a time, but many fans are already looking to Dec. 7, when this newly-explosive offense and SU's powerful defense will have its showdown with Penn State.

Sports sidelights

The freshman football team, capitalizing on Navy mistakes, won its opening game of the year by a 14-7 score. The game was played on Saturday afternoon in Annapolis.

The Tangerines have this weekend off, and resume their schedule with a game against the Army Plebes Oct. 25 at West Point.

The SU cross country team was handed its first defeat of the year Saturday by a strong Army team. The West Pointers ripped the Orange by a 15-50 count, sweeping the first seven places in the race over the Drumlins course.

Larry Zuller's eighth place was the lone bright spot for Bob Grieve's harriers, who now have a 1-1-1 mark. After Zuller, SU did not score again until Dale Parfitt's 14th place finish.

The Syracuse University Soccer Club rolled over Niagara Saturday, 9-2, with a well-balanced attack. The Orange was somewhat mean to its hosts, as the Purple Eagles had paid travel expenses for the SU team.

The Club's record now stands at 3-2-2, with a game with Cornell coming up next week. In the future are return matches of ties with Hamilton and Colgate, and a game with Buffalo State, one of the top college teams in the country.

Pinebrook to key on academics, follow-up interest expected

By KAREN WIEDIGER
Campus News Editor

Pinebrook Conferences are designed to bring out ideas by creating an informal atmosphere away from the University, where students, faculty members and administrators can get together and discuss specific issues.

This year's conference, scheduled for Oct. 18—20, will deal only with academics, a departure from past Pinebrooks, which have dealt mainly with social problems of the University, such as drinking, curfews and parietal hours.

Pinebrook gets its name from the Adirondack conference site, one of three owned by the University.

In the past it has been easy for Pinebrook members to lose interest after the weekend is over. However, because the topic is directly connected with education, Pinebrook coordinators feel the interest of faculty and administrators should be evident, along with that of students, after the conference.

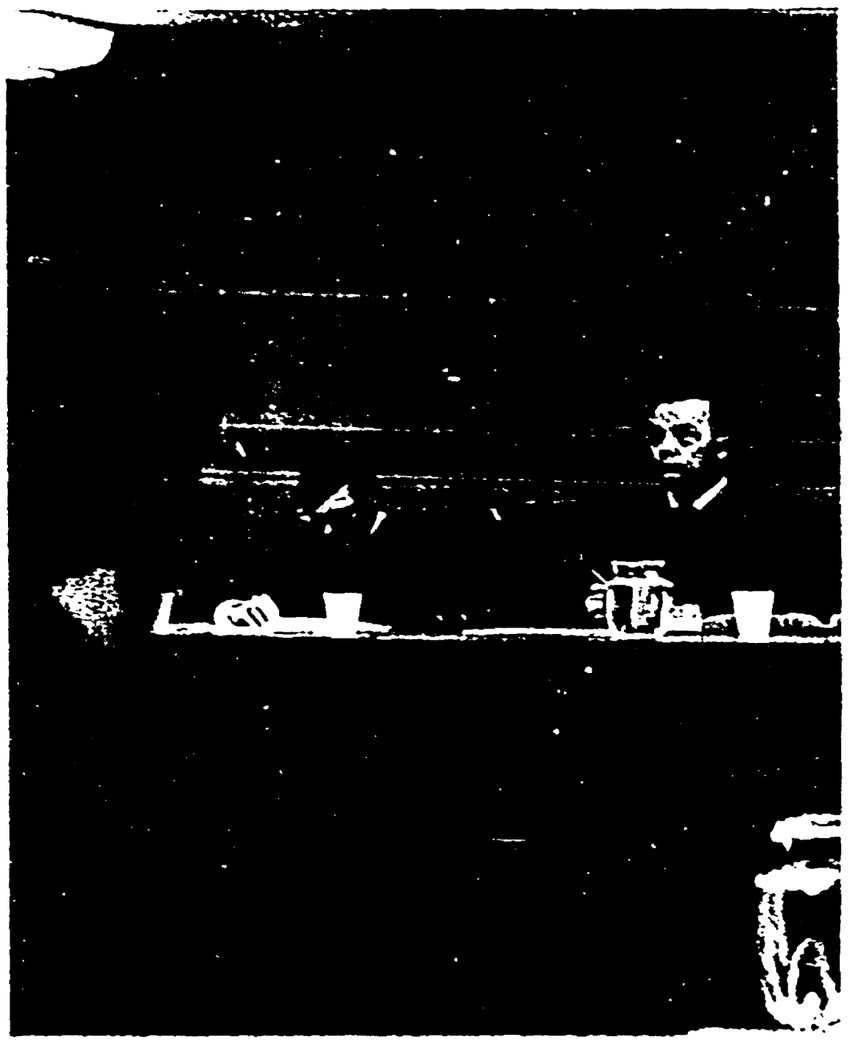
According to Jeff Portnoy, vice president of Student Government, the people who have been chosen to attend the conference have shown they are willing to come back from Pinebrook and work to see the ideas put into effect.

"We hope we will be able to continue the interest in Pinebrook and not let it die after everyone has had a good time," stated Portnoy. "Because we are dealing with the theoretical or philosophical part of education along with the practical aspects of it (course changes, grading), the interest of the faculty members is essential."

After various committees have been formed at the conference and specific questions have been put before members, the groups will break into action committees. Each member will have a specific job to work on through the committee.

The job of individual committee members will be to evaluate one specific idea from the discussion and to report back to the committee at a later date.

The first of six committees which has been formed will discuss the area of academic responsibility.



The Rev. John H. McCombe, Jr., dean of Hendricks Chapel, and Betty Hubbard, a member of the Afro-American Society, will serve as the chairmen and lead the discussion centering around the idea that a textbook education is not the only education that must be acquired in order to be intelligent and well-rounded.

The committee will attempt to answer the questions "Is there a more important education than the one we get from textbooks?" and "What possible areas of community participation are available for educational purposes?"

CAP meets demands for complete reforms

By MARGARET ALLAN

"Any university living center may join the party upon approval of the membership and upon paying the prescribed membership fee."
-- old CAP constitution

"Only duly enrolled students at Syracuse University, acting as individuals, may become members of the party."
-- new CAP constitution

Confronted with the threat of a thorough investigation of campus politics, the Campus Alliance Party threw away its old constitution and submitted a new one to Student Senate Monday night. The new charter includes sweeping reforms in party membership and finance.

The revisions met the conditions set by Fred Tuccillo, chairman of the Senate Committee on Political Equity (SCOPE). Tuccillo had challenged the two campus political parties, CAP and Greek Independent Alliance, to "make it unnecessary for us to investigate the old political system by establishing a new system where students join parties as free individuals, not because they happen to belong to a certain fraternity or sorority."

Campus political parties here have always been composed of Greek houses and a few living centers. The question of which party to join was decided for the individual when he or she became affiliated with a fraternity or sorority. A percentage of house dues was automatically designated for the support of whichever party each house backed.

In CAP's new constitution, memberhip is on an individual basis. Any student desiring to become a member may do so "by paying a party dues registration fee of $1.00 and by signing a pledge not to become affiliated with any other party at this campus for the remainder of the academic year without first resigning from the party."

Senate's Government Structures Committee accepted the new constitution after CAP's executive board agreed to strengthen the wording of the membership clause.

"We wanted it made clear that only students acting as individuals, and not houses or organizations, could join the party," explained Tuccillo.

The full senate will vote tonight on the constitution.

Tuccillo said he was still waiting for GIA to make the same reforms voluntarily.

The primary purpose of SCOPE, to investigate, allegedly, dubious practices of both parties, quickly aroused CAP to revise its charter.

Moot Court hears testimony on legality of U.S. actions in Vietnam

By ETTA FIELEK

A Moot Court proceedings sponsored by Syracuse University School of Law last night ended two days of testimony concerning the case of an Army private, George Ivan Joseph, who sought an injunction to prevent being sent to Vietnam.

Joseph, a college graduate, had requested a conscientious objector's classification on the grounds that he morally opposed the war. His request denied, he was inducted into the Army and assigned to Vietnam. After a request for reassignment was denied, Joseph sought an injunction to keep himself from being sent to Vietnam and a judgment from the court on the constitutionality of the war.

Speaking for Joseph, law student Phillip Abramowitz said, "We want a trial to determine whether the President of the United States and the Secretary of Defense have the right to send this man to Vietnam where he may loose his life."

The legal barrier to the trial of the case, according to Abramowitz, is the political question, as it is the self-imposed policy of a court not to review cases where political decisions are involved. "The political question," he said, "must not be a barrier between a citizen and his fundamental rights."

Also representing Joseph, Richard Glantz called upon the court "to interpret the Constitution, the touchstone of our democracy." He claimed that if the President could wage war which has not been declared by Congress, article 1, section 8,

Constitution vague

Redefining of Student Government roles necessary as areas of campus life change

By JEAN HAVENS
Associate Editor

No one has an accurate copy of the Student Government constitution. Copies exist, but they are vague, undated and no two say the same thing.

John Ross, chairman of the Student Senate's Government Structures Committee which is rewriting the constitution, said, "Campus government structure has moved way past what the authors of the old constitution envisioned. The campus is changing and a redefining of roles is becoming necessary in order to make Student Government more meaningful."

These redefined roles will concern each branch of Student Government and other organizations such as the Inter-Dorm Council, AWS, IFC and Panhel. These organizations are involved in many of the same projects and because of their conflicting roles often get nothing accomplished.

"Each organization has a role," Ross said. "Student Senate will not tell an organization where it belongs, each organization will tell the Senate where they feel they stand and what their roles are."

Ross feels that an organization should be appointed as the actual implementation force for every Student Senate-proposed principle which survives the votes of Senate and the SG president and arrives at the Council on Student Life.

The Senate would therefore introduce principles such as parietal hours and the specific

Its primary goal is status

ADPi shows the Greek system is sick

The Greek system is sick and one of its festering sores is the dispute over Alpha Delta Pi. The sickness is the gap between professed standards and actual practice. Alpha Delta Pi has been caught in the contradictions of the system. Consequently its current members must be kicked aside to make way for those more fit to survive.

The professed standard of the Greek system is brotherhood, the bringing together of students in a sense of comity and goodwill. "Soror," the root of sorority, is Latin for sister. Like fraternity, it implies a group united by familial love.

The actual practice of the Greek houses is to limit brotherhood to the bounds of the house and to kick, scratch and claw their way to the top of the social ladder. There is competition between sororities during rush to pledge the most attractive coeds. Each fraternity seeks to impress rushees with its list of members who have gained titles and positions of leadership on campus. Any Greek knows where another house falls in the social strata. Each wishes to be at the top.

The basic contradiction is compounded by the strains on the Greek system today. Alpha Delta Pi's membership has declined drastically over the past two years. This is not a problem unique to Alpha Delta Pi since many houses on campus are feeling the stress of declining membership and, hence, declining resourses. We do not wish to go into the many reasons why the Greek system is declining. Let us simply observe this declination increases the gap between professed standard and actual practice.

Before we examine the sickness as it applies to Alpha Delta Pi, let us examine what it is not. The problem with Alpha Delta Pi is not racism. To declare it this is to go on a fox hunt and catch a skunk. We presume in its history the SU chapter of Alpha Delta Pi discriminated against Negroes because most houses of its nature did. But the current membership cannot be charged with racial discrimination.

Nor is this simply a protest from the independent point of view against the supposedly closed social systems of the Greeks. The tendency to form closed social systems appears inherent in mankind and not the private preserve of the Greeks. An independent, if placed on a dormitory floor with 100 other students, has complete freedom to interact with any of the 100 he chooses. He chooses to limit this extensive freedom by joining a clique. The clique eats together, plays cards together, and drinks together, thus reducing the original absolute freedom of association to an identifiable system of order and security. If an independent doesn't join a clique he may satisfy his need to reduce the complex mass to a unit with which he can identify by joining an activity or professional organization.

We do not fault the Greek system for creating closed social systems or charge it with discrimination. Rather, it is guilty, of seeking social status by trampling basic human rights.

The national council of Alpha Delta Pi has ordered the recolonization of the local chapter. This means the 15 current members must move into dormitories, despite the fact they have signed year-long contracts, to make way for the new members who will revitalize the house. It is possible after the new pledges are assimilated that some of the current members will be able to "re-petition" and move back in. What seems implicit is that current members will "live in" again only if the national council can't refill the house with new members. In short, the current members have been kicked upstairs to alumnae status and their sisterhood broken up.

It must be conceded it is the right of the national council to do this. By joining a national affiliated sorority, the members of Alpha Delta Pi submitted to the authority of the national council.

The national council sees its SU chapter as floundering and out of character with the image it seeks throughout the country. Alpha Delta Pi wants a chapter at SU with the social status it has on other campuses so it must remake the image of the SU chapter.

The method they have chosen, recolonization, splits up the current membership, who joined seeking "sisterhood." Thus the national council in a remarkable feat of hipocrisy has contradicted the professed reason of creating a sorority in order to pursue social status.

The leadership of Panhel is also contributing this Benedict Arnoldism. What hipocrisy to claim Panhel has "transcended competition" by helping the national council recolonize Panhel. Panhel is acting on the same standards as the national, the pursuit of social status, rather than the concept of sisterhood. Panhel realizes the system is threatened with the failure of any house and is trying to preserve the system by enforcing its worst aspects. The failure of Panhel to insist to the national that the established sisterhood should be built up rather than split up is a disgusting knife in the back of the local chapter.

Before the national council made its decision to recolonize, it investigated the local chapter. It doubtlessly questioned Panhel leaders and the Dean of Women's office, without whose authority recolonization would be next to impossible. Part of the responsibility for the hypocrisy of recolonization lies with the leadership of Panhel and the Dean of Women's office.

We believe when there is a wide discrepancy between what an individual says and what he does, the person is suffering from a psychic sickness. The Greek system is sick because it professes brotherhood while it ruthlessly pursues social status.

The rights of the current Alpha Delta Pi members have been trampled on because they failed the test of social status, not the test of sisterhood. We hope they will find sisterhood elsewhere. We urge other SU coeds to attend the upcoming Alpha Delta Pi rush that more may learn how to flunk out of the Greek system.

Letters to the editor

A D Pi protests

To the Editor:

We, the members of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, feel that we have been unjustly represented in the Daily Orange article of October 15, 1968. Both sides of the story were not given. The opinions expressed in the article were those of several former members who deactivated of their own will. They should have no further concern in chapter matters or the chapter's recolonization. On the other hand, the active chapter's own views have been completely passed over.

In accepting the views of extremely biased individuals without considering their validity and the present chapter's point of view, this paper has misrepresented the sorority as a whole. The bitter opinions voiced by these former members in no way express the truth and our present Alpha Delta Pi chapter resents and totally disagrees with your article and its unfounded and unfair allegations.

The Members of Alpha Tau Chapter of Alpha Delta Pi

To the Editor:

The Daily Orange food service form is an excellent idea, but prompts me to make more comments than I can fit onto one.

I eat at the new St. Mary's dining hall where chaos reigns over every rush hour. Though the hall is lovely, comfortable and spacious enough to seat the number of students who eat there, the serving area itself cannot handle more than a handful of people at a time. The student finds himself waiting in a line a quarter of a mile long to be allowed into a free-for-all from which he is lucky to escape intact and with the food he wants.

Much difficulty seems to stem from the way the area is laid out architecturally; a shame since it is a new hall and people will be suffering in the system for the next fifty years. However it appears that a few simple changes might alleviate the situation. In fact, some have been made as ideas have come from students and others.

The main problem is that food is available on all four sides of the room, encouraging cross traffic. My suggestions are an attempt to cut down on that traffic:

1) All the drinking utensils could be stored together so that if the cups run out, one can easily take a glass without crossing to another area.

2) After this and separated by a small space should come all the sources of drink. Often people in line for a glass of milk block others from obtaining a glass for juice.

3) The bread could be put over with the salads and all of the desserts near the ice cream. This is the logical order of eating and also much of the traffic is caused by people who discover they don't want the ice cream and cross back for dessert.

4) The kitchen is set up to serve two lines the main meal; bars could be set up to guide people to form two lines. If two meals are offered, the two lines could be labelled as such.

5) If it were possible to take the condiments out of the middle of the room and serve them to one side or even offer them outside in the hall, a major obstacle would be removed.

6) Students should be allowed, within reason, to take what they want and the amount they desire the first time through. They find a way to do so anyway and much of the traffic is caused by people crossing back for an illegal second dessert or returning to the serving area after depositing a tray outside.

These suggestions are offered not only for what they may be worth, but to start more people thinking. Constructive change certainly is a possibility.

Republican head here hopes for a major Nixon speech

RICHARD M. NIXON

Richard M. Nixon, the Republican presidential candidate, will speak at a Syracuse War Memorial rally Oct. 29, County GOP Chairman T. Elmer Bogardus announced yesterday.

"The War Memorial will be open to the public," Bogardus said, "and we expect an exceptionally heavy turnout" for what is expected to be "a major speech" by Nixon.

Bogardus added that he expects Nixon to remain in Syracuse overnight, but details of the visit are "in the preliminary stages." Nixon aides will arrive here within a few days, and more information will be available then.

Nixon, on a three-week drive into the most populous states, started out yesterday from Key Biscayne, Fla., with a three-jet, 70-man entourage.

His daughters, Julie and Tricia, And Julie's fiance, David Eisenhower, traveled to Syracuse Sept. 26 for the grand opening of the Onondaga County Citizens' Committee for Nixon and Agnew headquarters on Salina St.

The trio was content with poking fun at Vice President Hubert Humphrey ("Hush, Hush Sweet Hubert" and "Trade Hubert for the Pueblo"), and making friends with local Republicans, apparently wishing to leave any discussion of the issues to the former vice president. The visit was made happier when a rumored demonstration by an SU group failed to materialize.

Nixon, however, with what he seems to think is a comfortable lead over Humphrey, also appears content to mark time and avoid confrontation until Nov. 5.

He has been, for example, less than enthusiastic about a televised debate with the vice president. Senate Republicans, apparently cooperating with his wishes, last week blocked suspension of Section 315 of the Communications Act to allow a three-way debate among Nixon, Humphrey and Wallace.

organizations would be involved in their practical application. As an example Ross cited the "three or four organizations and assorted dorm councils" which were all working on parietal hours at one time and getting nowhere.

Ross explained that each organization would be tied to Senate through the appropriate Senate committee with which it would maintain communications and through the fact that the organization's constitution would have to be passed by the Senate.

"Student government is the place where student organizations are regulated," Ross said. "Students need something to protect them and provide services - under the new constitution this can be made more efficient."

The Government Structures Committee is holding hearings to allow all students, faculty and administrators to make their views known on what they feel the constitution should include. The next hearing will be held to discuss the executive article, Monday, October 21, at 7 p.m. in 204 HL.

A preamble has already been discussed, four different preambles having been presented. The entire judicial section of the constitution was rewritten last year.

Dale Tussing to speak today at Bull Session

Congressional candidate Dale Tussing will talk with students at this afternoon's UU Bull Session.

The SU economics professor is running on the Liberal Party ticket. He opposes the Vietnam war, because he believes the United States is fighting against the Vietnamese patriots.

Tussing wants the welfare system changed to stop humiliating the poor. He would like to see a guaranteed income and meaningful jobs provided by the federal government for the unemployed. Poverty programs should be administered by the poor and black.

The Bull Session will be held at 4 in Chapel House.

Pinebrook Conference . . .

Curriculum and ways of changing it will be discussed by a second committee, headed by Mike Silverman, co-chairman of the Commission of Publication, and Dr. Peter T. Marsh, chairman of the history department.

Questions to be raised include: Who should decide what's to be taught? How should a department decide upon a curriculum? Should the faculty be evaluated, and by whom?

A committee dealing with educational innovations has also been formed. It will deal with the changing methods of education and discuss experimental education, pass–fail, learning dorm and the honors programs.

Cindy Bailey, president of the Association of Women Students, and Professor Thomas F. Green, director of the Educational Policy Research Center, are chairmen of this group.

Changes in student-faculty relations that need to occur will be discussed in a committee headed by Professor George Alexander, associate dean of the law school, and Art Brickman, chairman of the Academic Communication Corps.

Questions that will be raised in this committee are Where are they hiding the professors? Has the faculty grown in proportion to the growth in the student body? How do you motivate a student? How do you motivate a professor?

The fifth committee will deal with the philosophy of Syracuse University. It will evaluate SU and its educational processes and then discuss ways of changing and strengthening the educational environment.

Joey Edwardh, a member of the Council on Student Life, and Dr. Maurice Troyer, professor of higher education, are chairmen.

The final committee will deal with undergraduate and graduate distinctions. Dr. Michael O. Sawyer, professor of political science and Ross Starek, treasurer of SG, will serve as chairmen.

In the pamphlet prepared for the conference, the tasks of this committee are outlined as follows: "There has been much discussion about the change in Syracuse University from an undergraduate to a graduate orientated institution. It will be the task of this committee to decide if this, in fact, is the case."

The committee will then be asked to discuss and propose ways to achieve a more satisfactory balance between the two academic communities.

Speeches will also be given at Pinebrook by Dr. Frank P. Piskor, vice president for Academic Affairs and dean of Faculties; Chuck Hicks, president of SG; Dr. Michael O. Sawyer and Chancellor William P. Tolley.

A slide presentation will be made by Donald P. Ely, director of the SU Center for Instructional Communications, showing recent educational innovations at the University.

In summing up plans for the conference, Portnoy, who is also serving as Pinebrook Coordinator, said "A significant thing of the past has been the lack of follow-up. Ideas have dried up and there has been no way of checking on the proposals that were developed.

"We believe that we have done something to solve this problem by forming the committees and the action groups during the weekend instead of waiting until we return to campus," he continued.

Moot Court . . .

clause 11 of the Constitution would be invalid.

Glantz stated in his testimony that the Gulf of Tonkin resolution could not be considered a declaration of war since it mentioned no specific opposing sides or cause. It was merely, he said, a pat on the back for the President from the Congress for his actions in 1964.

Glantz continued that he is "not asking the court to declare the war unconstitutional, but asks the court to consider that it may be unconstitutional."

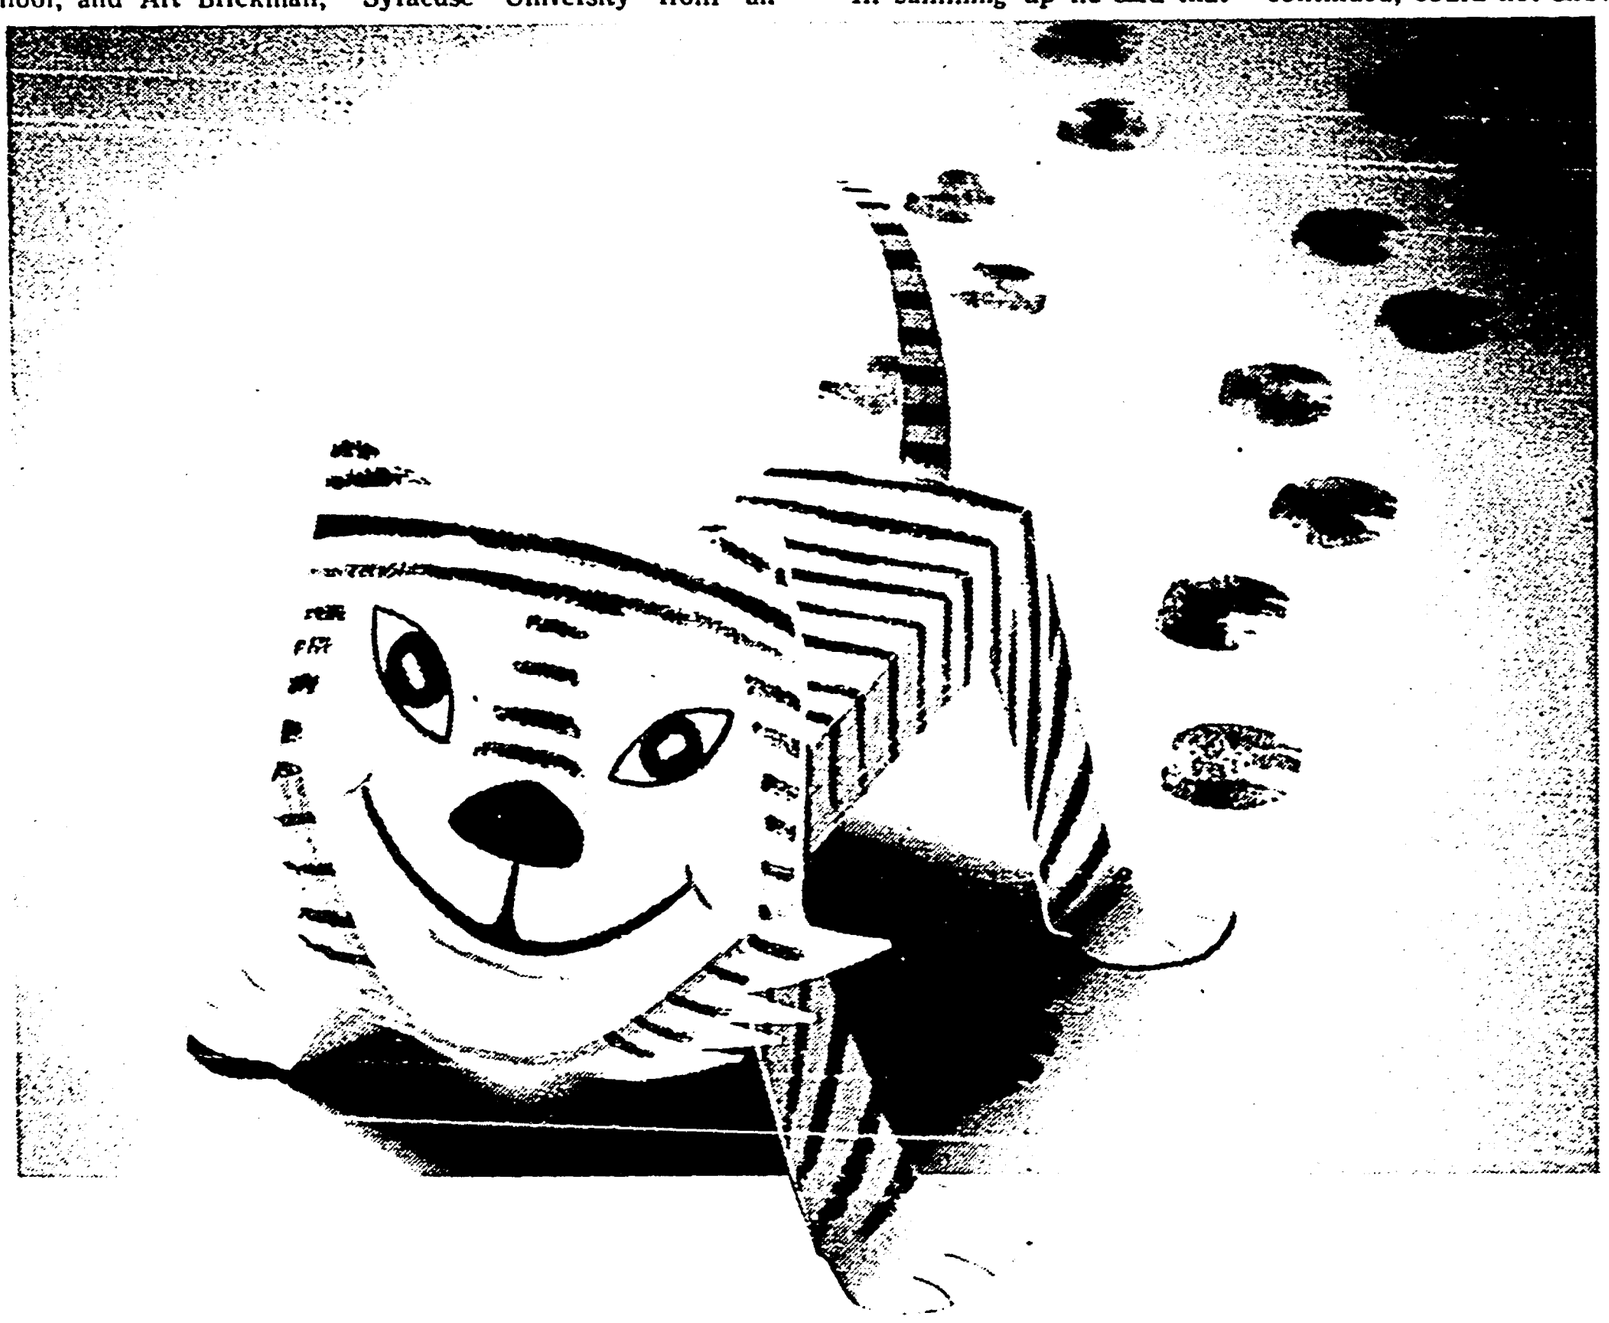
In summing up he said that "the United States should not ask its citizens to participate in a crime."

Representing the United States government, Arthur Thorn claimed that "the issues raised are political and not proper for adjudication by the courts."

He continued that under the Constitution, the President can utilize the armed forces of the nation without a declaration of war.

"Citizenship," he said, "carries with it responsibilities as well as privileges." Joseph, he continued, could not show that his suffering was greater than that of anyone else.

Also representing the United States, Dane Buck cited article 1, section 1 of the Constitution which states, in part, that the United States is dedicated to the "maintenance of international peace." Because of this, the United States has the right to send its troops wherever needed, if national security or treaty obligations are involved.



Since nations have the right to engage in collective or individual self-defense, Buck continued, the United States had every right to answer the call of the South Vietnamese for help.

Ballroom

Margaret Stafford, Director of Social Activities, announces that free Ballroom Dance classes, will be held for all students, staff and faculty in the Recreation Lounge of the Women's Building.

Concentration will be on basic, intermediate and advanced steps in all the Latin and American dances including: Cha Cha, Fox Trot, Rhumba, Waltz, Bossa Nova, Swing, Tango, Merengue and Discotheque. Classes will be held every Wednesday evening for seven weeks from 8:00 to 9:30 p.m. ending on November 20, 1968.

Any student with or without experience who wishes to assist as an instructor or has some talent other than dancing is asked to meet with Mr. Medicis on the night of the classes or call Ext. 2283 or 2284.

PAPER TIGERS NEED NOT APPLY.

Thanks, but they're just not our type. Young engineers who join us are expected to move in on some rather formidable programs . . . with alacrity and lots of gusto. And a willingness to assume early responsibilities on demanding assignments is an attribute which we welcome warmly. It's the kind of engineering aggressiveness that has brought Sikorsky Aircraft to dominant stature in a new world of advanced VTOL aircraft systems.

If our criteria parallel your outlook, you'll find an excellent career environment with us. You would enjoy working (with a select group) on exciting, full-spectrum systems development. And you can watch your talent and imagination assume reality in such diverse forms as Heavy-Lift Skycranes—Tilt Rotor Transports—High-Speed VTOL Commercial Transports—and much more for tomorrow.

Does this responsibility stir your imagination? Then you probably should be with us. There's ample opportunity for innovation in: aerodynamics • human factors engineering • automatic controls • structures engineering • weight prediction • systems analysis • operations research • reliability/maintainability engineering • autonavigation systems • computer technology • manufacturing engineering • information systems • marketing . . . and more.

And your career advancement can be materially assisted through our corporation-financed Graduate Study Program—available at many outstanding schools within our area.

Consult your College Placement Office for campus interview dates—or—for further information, write to Mr. Leo J. Shalvoy, Professional and Technical Employment.

Movie review

Newman and Woodward successful team in 'Rachel, Rachel'

By KAREN DECROW

The readers of this column have undoubtedly read enough glowing reviews of Rachel, Rachel to send them to see it. I concur heartily with the praise. As Rachel, Joanne Woodward is as she always is, perfect. Her walk, her expressions, her way of dressing, her style of eating – all denote that she is a 35-year old spinster schoolteacher, unnoticed by much of the world except her young students, a fellow teacher, and her mother. We have seen Miss Woodward in enough different kinds of roles – the sexy Eve for one – to know her superb performance is as an actress, not as "Joanne Woodward." The Betty Davis shrew is perfect, but the only role Miss Davis can play.

Another cheerful aspect of the film, which is playing at the Riviera, is that it is Paul Newman's first work as a director. Although he doesn't invent any techniques, he uses the available ones in a creative and excellent fashion. The split-second views of fantasy – both wish-fantasy and dread-fantasy – are beautifully done. For example, when Rachel's mother is on a hypochondriacal tirade about her medicine, we see a split-second frame of Rachel's stuffing twenty thousand pills into her mother's gaping mouth (The act will no doubt kill the mother, and at least it will keep the old babe quiet for a minute or two). The brief flashbacks are also better done than in most films.

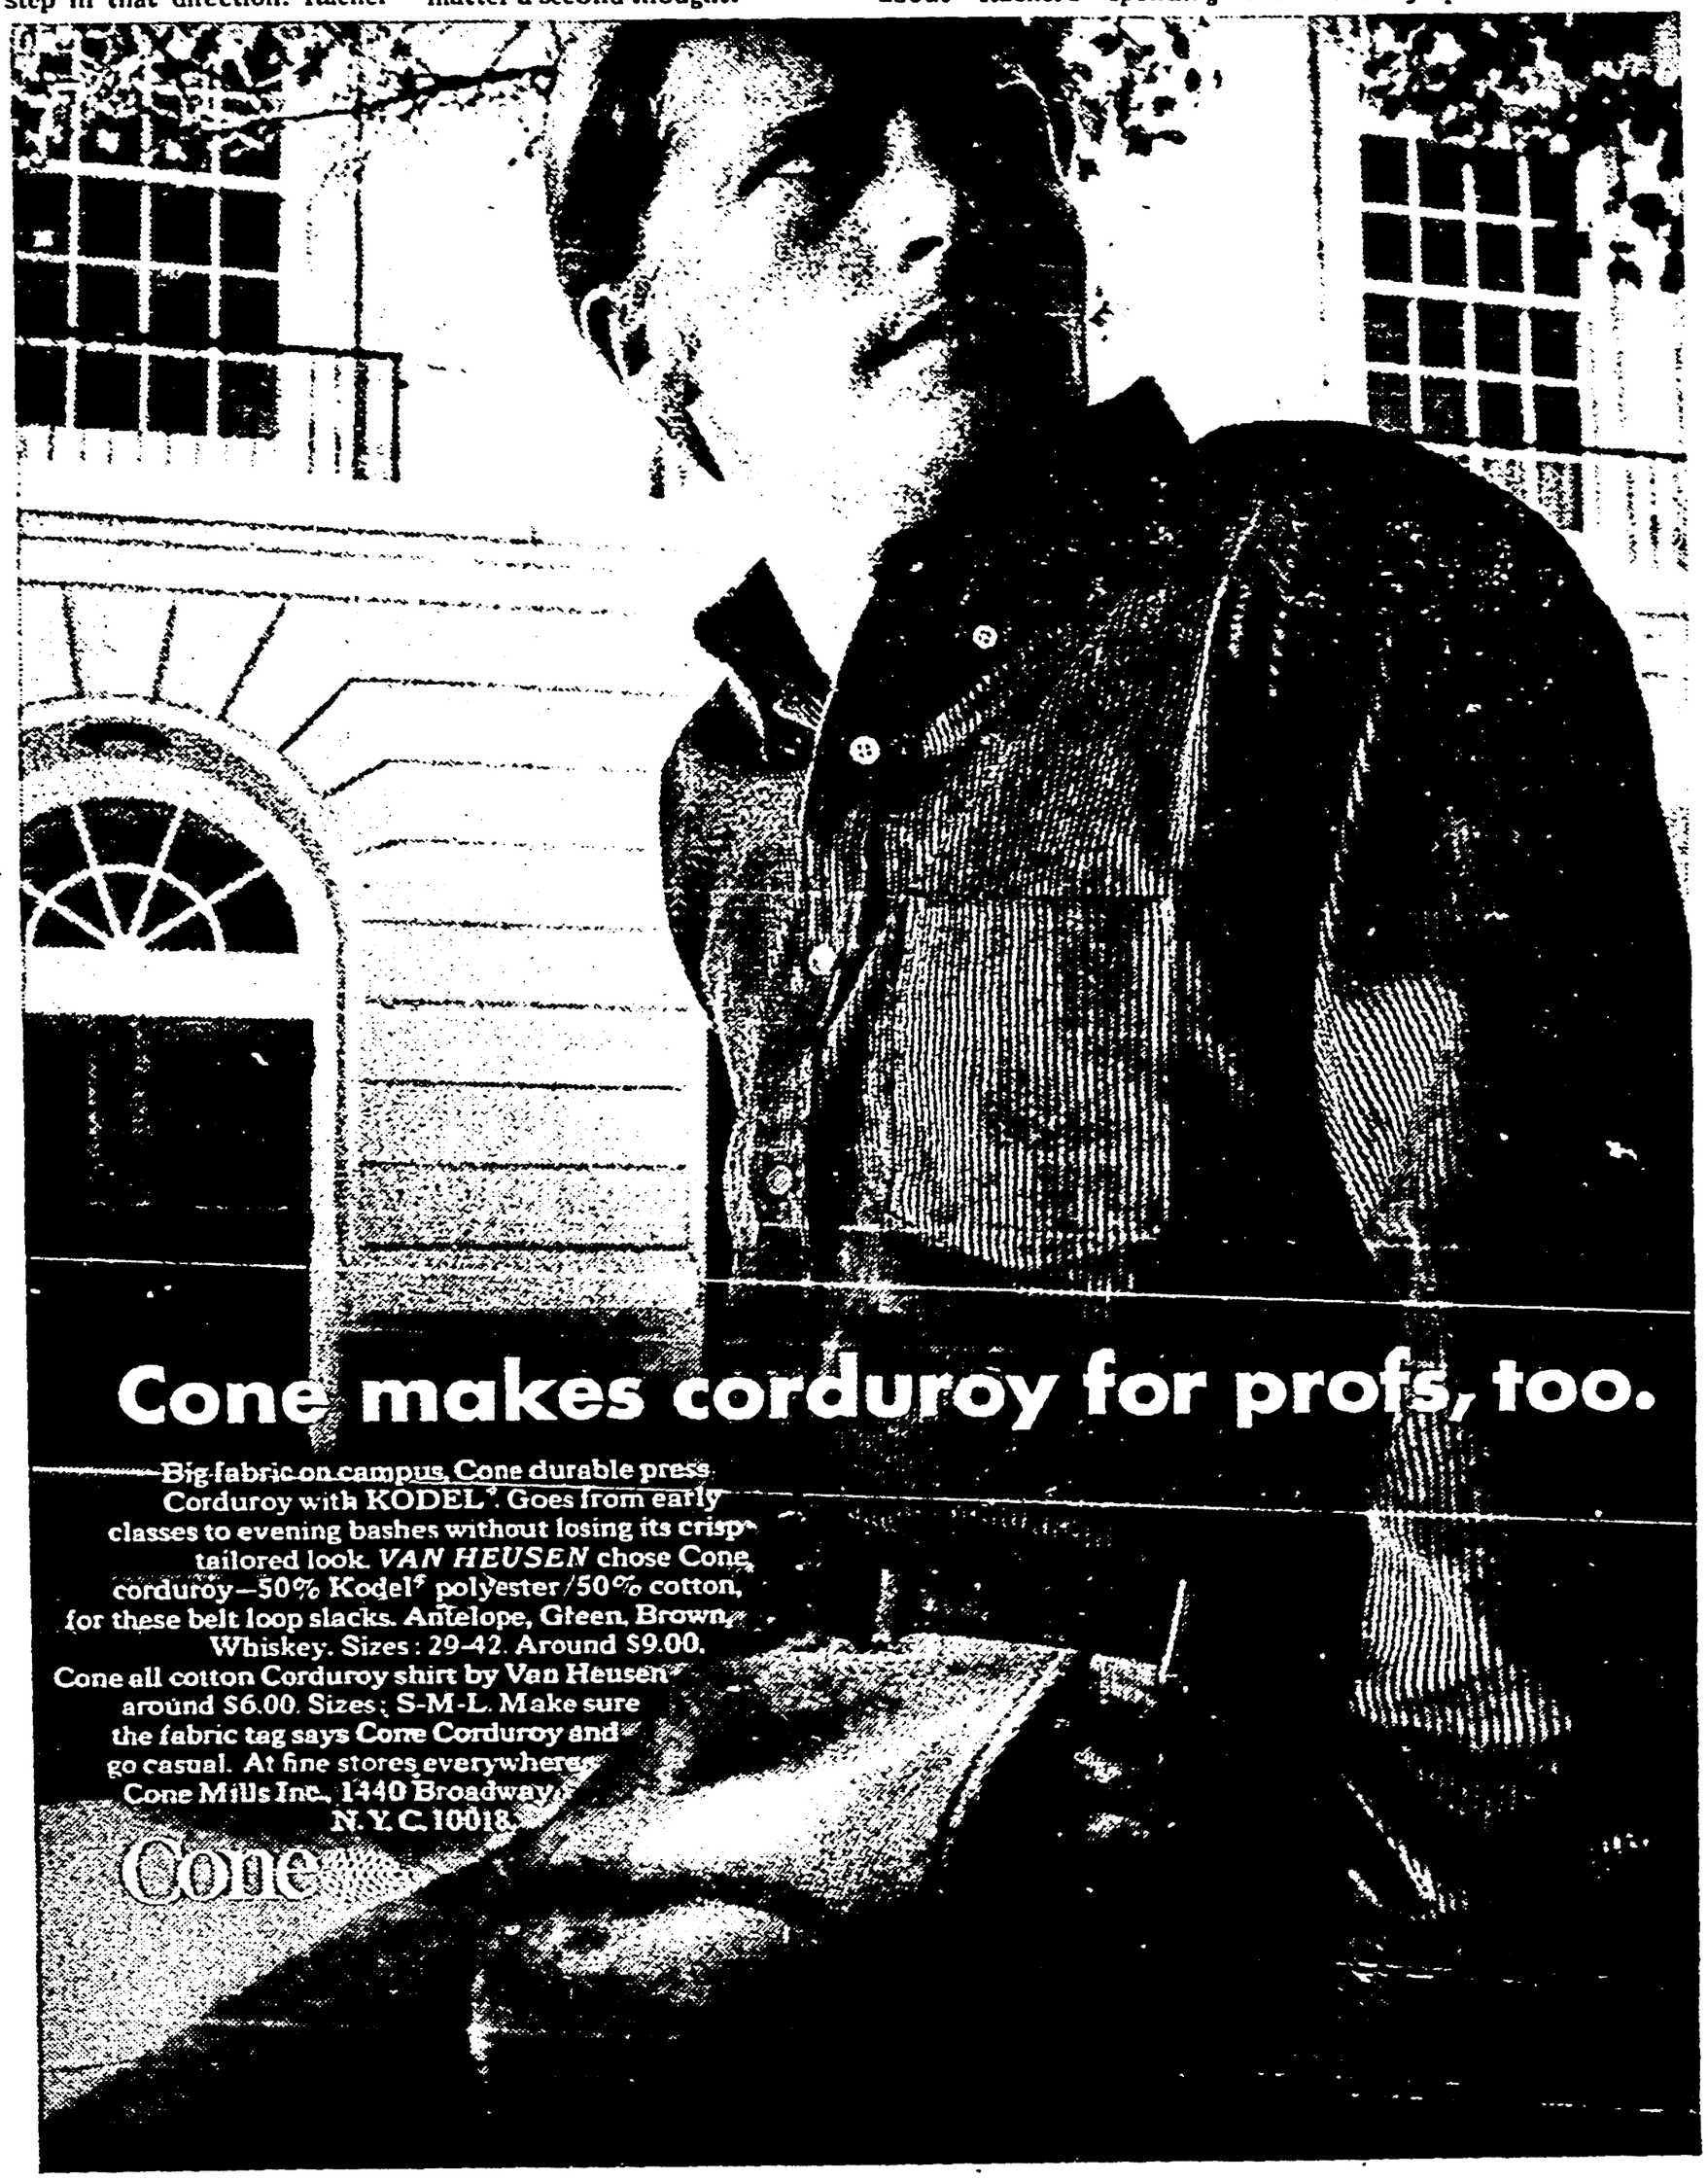
The director's mandate, of course, is not to create effects, but to create a mood. As the cadenza doesn't make a concerto, the zoom lense doesn't make a movie. Newman, although very proficient in his use of effects, shows his talent by setting a mood for us: an eastern small town, where the houses are large and simple, and the subject of conversation is people. Those of us who admire him as an actor are delighted to find he won't spend his middle age dying his hair to play the lover-boy, but instead go on to the real challenge of films, directing.

A friend of mine said, when you are directing your first film, and have to allow your wife to star in it, you are lucky if your wife is Joanne Woodward. But, lucky though he is, Newman is talented. We all become quickly involved in the life of Rachel, and do care deeply what happens to her.

The story is simple. An unmarried schoolteacher lives with her mother above a funeral parlor, which was once owned and operated by her father. When he died the fellow who bought the business allowed her and her mother to stay in the second floor apartment "until they are customers for the first floor establishment," presumably because he purchased the business for a song. Rachel cares for her mother tenderly; her mother repays her by loving her to death and dominating her life. Obviously the relationship is as much designed by Rachel as by the mother. She is attracted to men, but lacks the opportunity or the skill to get a "relationship" going. Her best friend, a female fellow schoolteacher, is attracted to her sexually, but Rachel obviously prefers men. This friend, played to perfection by Estelle Parsons (who was the hysterical sister-in-law of Barrow Gane fame), takes her to a revival meeting)Baptist, hippie, who-knows-what) where RAchel has physical contact (perhaps the first in years) with the worshippers, particularly a most attractive young poet-priest who embraces and kisses her, kisses her, all in the spirit of "religious love." Being Rachel, she is humiliated by the strength of her reaction to this experience. Soon afterward she meets a man, also a teacher from another city, who is visiting his parents for the summer. He makes it clear he wants sex; she agrees. He is totally honest with her, making no pretenses to an emotional commitment, but Rachel falls in love with him, her first lover. She wants to cook eggs for him after they go to bed, and in general, is not satisfied with the pleasures of sex without the pleasures of the kitchen.

The resolution of the film, while not exactly a happy one, is a step in that direction. Rachel tells her mother they are moving to Oregon, and her mother agrees to move with her. She is for the first time in command of her own life. None of us really believes she will find what she thinks she wants in Oregon, but who knows? Better the excitement of the unknown than the family apartment above the funeral parlor.

Before we all relegate our thinking about Rachel to the "poor old maid, with a domineering mother and no babies, and a petticoat that often sticks out" – let us give second thoughts to what the film is about. The viewers and critics have been united in their pity of Rachel. Why was she left behind when her sister married and went off? Why must she live with that beastly mother?



Although I too am antagonized by the mother, played very well by Kate Harrington, I gave the whole matter a second thought.

Why do we all hate the mother so? Rachel turns down social appointments because "it is mother's bridge night, and I serve the sandwiches." Most American women (happy wives and mothers) serve the sandwiches on bridge night, and on poker night, and they also make the sandwiches and wash the beer mugs after the game.

When Rachel works late, her mother asks "Where were you?" A nagging mother, indeed. But how many wives can come home later than they are expected and not have to account for their behavior? Even with the attack on her lateness, she does have a nice lamb chop and potatoes sitting in the oven waiting for her. Although her mother moans and groans about moving to Oregon, not many married women can dicide they would prefer to teach near the Pacific Ocean, and take a job there. Rachel's mother is rather saccharine in her comments about Rachel's spending the night with her lover, ("Did you have a nice time, dear? You must have, you stayed so long.") but she is basically relaxed about the whole matter until confronted with the horror of a douche bag in Rachel's room. In other words, do what you want Rachel, but don't leave any evidence for me to find. Not a very free environment, but certainly freer than most domestic situations.

This is not to say that Rachel has a good, rich life. She doesn't. It is, however, to draw the similarities between her life and that of those who pity her. The main thing she lacks – that those who pity her have – is status.

Mrs. Rachel X. So, this is a plea for upgrading the status of the old maid schoolteacher, not on the grounds that she is preparing the youth of America for democracy, but because we see that her life is not dissimilar to those status-possesing persons who say "poor Rachel."

Trip to Geneva

Student recalls summer of being 'good American'

Rami Khouri, a DO staff reporter, a journalism-political science major and president of Delta Upsilon fraternity, spent the summer in Europe. This is the first in a series of articles on his observations there.

By RAMI KHOURI

"Avez-vous quelquechose a declarer?"

With these words, the customs officer let me into the country, obviously tired of checking the flood of American passports which passes him every day, and people innocently asking if he speaks English.

Some 50 others entered the country with me--the young girl from North Carolina who kept waving out the window to her family as the plane was several miles out over the Atlantic Ocean; the newlyweds, looking forward to unwinding; the young DuPont executive with his wife and three kids, to be stationed in Geneva for three years; the spectacled old man, looking for antique clocks in Switzerland; the 17-year old twin girls, both of whom had obviously swallowed radios prior to boarding ("Oh, Anne, I can't sleep on airplanes."); and finally that hapless group who'd been saving for 50 years to take this trip, the infamous "tour group," here for their three-week life's vacation. Getting off the plane last was an elderly woman with her blind husband, and I couldn't help but wonder who'd really see more of Switzerland in the three weeks.

We had been quite close to each other on the plane. After all, we were together for some eight hours during the flight, and all of us dedicated to the fact that getting there was half the fun. The others not really sure of what was happening, I didn't have the heart to tell them that the other half of the fun was to be getting back. Given the knowledge that experience is the best teacher, I thought they should have their own full experience.

So we all joked about how the pilot was a Cuban who'd never flown before, that we would be landing in either Geneva or Tokyo, that we would never drink European water without boiling it, and what a useless thing seat belts were (everyone knows that more people are killed falling off horses and mules than in airplanes.)

Claiming our baggage, we each went our separate ways. I had suddenly lost 49 friends. As I walked out into Geneva, I looked back to the customs officer; he was the only one not impressed with the novelty of the whole affair, for those same 49 would land every day, and each one of them would wonder why that funny little man with a mustache doesn't speak English.

It had been one year since I'd left my home in Geneva to go back to school in the U.S. And now I was returning, both my home and that unique collection of beings referred to as the "Swiss." True, Geneva was 40% international, only 60% of its citizens being Genevois. But those 40% in Geneva could never leave their mark--certainly, perhaps a coke bottle here and there, a few dollar bills in the exchanges, an old British bumper sticker, even a worn out button-down shirt which had served as a rag thrown out of a passing Chrysler glove compartment, as it would clean no more windows.

What visitors in Geneva would leave could either be thrown out by hand or blotted out by memory. We took very much but seemed unable to contribute much beyond cars and Levis. We came to Geneva to work for the UN, Chrysler, DuPont, American-British Tobacco Company, or Fiat. We never bothered to learn French, for it was easier for them to learn English.

UU flick

University Union will present "Scream of Fear" tonight free in Gifford Auditorium at 6, 8 and 10. The movie is the third and last of a suspense series UU has been showing.

From Paris

Bell bottom pants in high fashion are not going to be a surprise to anybody on this campus or on that of the Sorbonne. (Photo by Clemens)

Parisian philosophy sets fashions reds, bell bottoms, blacks, boots

By SUSAN PEABODY

Paris is the center of fashion in the world, although it's well known that Syracuse is running a close second. However, Paris here and Paris, France design for different philosophies of life.

What is for us to put on and stay warm is for the Parisian to take off. Since a look around campus tells what American students consider high fashion, a letter from Paris might be the thing to tell us where we went wrong or right.

Red, Red, Red. (Please bear in mind this is fashion, not politics.) That is the color in Paris. In sweaters, skirts, suits, blouses, shoes, pocketbooks and anything else the girls in Paris are wearing red. If red is not your color, then there is always black, the "in" color on the Parisian fashion chart. Girls wear black crepe skirts with white crepe blouses and wide belts.

Bellbottom pants in high fashion is not going to be a surprise to anybody on this campus or that of the Sorbonne. Co-eds and the general public are wearing very wide crepe pants with crepe blouses or a red or white sweater. The bellbottomed Levi in cordory is the ultimate for Americans over there who cannot decide.

Black takes over the coat, which must be closely fitted with rows of brass buttons and a back belt. Girls are wearing black cocktail dresses and black "schoolgirl" dresses with white collars.

All the bare feet hanging out on "M" street is one "in" that is "out" along the Champs-Elysees. Boots are everywhere. They are made very sturdily with heavy, fairly high heels. "Chunky" loafers that are so familiar to us became popular via Paris. Again they focus on red tones.

Pocketbooks go with it all. The little pouches on the front and the zipper on the top will finish any concoction.

Just add a belt, boots and get a purse with the things in the closet and it is Paris in New York, the next best thing to Syracuse in France.

Mogish doing juggling act during Fall baseball practice

By DAN SCHLOSSBERG

Coach Andy Mogish is maintaining cautious optimism while working to rebuild the club around returning veterans. Fall practice will end at the end of October, but the ballplayers will have the services of "Iron Mike," mechanical pitcher, all winter before workouts resume in earnest next spring.

Pitching and catching figure to be the club's strong points. The Big Three of last season remains intact. Righthanders John Martell (7-2, 3.52), Greg Lowe (2-4, 2.49) and Mike Barlow (2-1, 4.28) are sure starters, with sophomore southpaw Dave Stone (4-2, 3.76 with the frosh) expected to win the fourth spot. Mike Passarella (0-0, 2.75) returns to relief, and may be joined by newly-arrived lefthanders Lee Phillips and Ron Kogelmann.

John Unger, a slugging catcher who compiled a sensational .444 average with the 1968 freshmen, is certain to open behind the plate and move last year's holdovers, Joe St.Mary (.278) and Jim Gordon, elsewhere. St.Mary, an outstanding utilityman with a big bat, will play somewhere, probably shortstop or third, and Gordon is a possibility at first.

It's easy to see why Unger has a lock on the catching job. Of his 12 hits last season, six were for extra bases: three doubles, one triple and two home runs.

Two varsity holdovers are front-runners for two outfield berths, but a number of sophomores have a chance to break in, Mogish said. Steve Naum, one of four '68 Orangemen to hit .300 or better but the only holdover who hit that well, is slated for plenty of action. Brian Mihalik also returns after missing last season. Other outfield possibilities are Noel Wray, Charley Herrera, Eric Greenberg, Bob Kelton and Bill Muehleck.

Mogish admits his big job is in the infield.

"St. Mary will play somewhere, but we have to find the best guy for each spot," he said. "Everything revolves around shortstop. We'll give everybody a crack."

He has several candidates for each position, including St. Mary, who opened last year at second and also saw service at short and third. Frank Hamblen, a good hitter who sat out 1968, is a potential returnee at first base, but he'll be challenged by Gordon, Charley Reeser, Kevin Clark and possibly Unger or pitcher Kogelmann.

Mike Gareau, Chris Albergo and Jeff Bragman are fighting for second, with Art Tyson and second-string catcher Jay Halpern, a soph, vying for the top rating at short with St. Mary. It may be hard to fill the shoes of Rick Cassata, the all-around super-athlete who led the team with a .352 average last season.

John Hahn and Vince Paolano are the chief candidates for third, along with St. Mary, but a lot can happen between now and the spring.

DAN'S DATE: There are no frosh on the team. The NCAA says OK but the ECAC sys no. SU belongs to the ECAC...Team earned run average was 2.98 last year, and opponents' ERA was balloon-like 4.89. The team batted .264, compared to opponents' .228.

Ed Schreck dies at 23

By ADAM DAWSON

Ed Schreck, ex-Syracuse University football player, died late Monday night in Saint Vincent's Hospital in Bridgeport, Conn.

The 23-year old Schreck graduated from Syracuse last June after earning three varsity football letters. In fact, after graduation he was signed as a free agent by the Detroit Lions of the National Football League. It was at his pre-camp physical that the doctors discovered he had a heart condition.

He underwent open heart surgery for eleven hours Thursday night in what turned out to be a futile effort. Complications arose from the surgery and he died late Monday night.

Schreck came to SU from Milford, Conn. by way of Bordentown Military Academy. Bordentown is the same school that sent Floyd Little, Herb Stecker and Rich Panczyszyn to SU.

He was the starting tight end for the Orange during his sophomore and junior years here. Schreck was noted for his fine blocking. During the 1966 season he tied for the team lead in pass receptions with fourteen.

In his last year here he was moved to an interior line position. Because of his size (6 feet 2 inches), weight (225 pounds) and determination he made the transition from an end to a guard with only minor difficulties.

When head coach Ben Schwartzwalder was aksed for his reaction to Schreck's death he replied, "This is a great shock, of course, for Eddie Schreck was one of the finest boys we've ever had...a dedicated team man, who was only too happy to play wherever we wanted him to play. He was a fine end and he became a real good guard, for he worked at it. He was a peppy, happy kid...one of the most popular on the team. Everybody liked Eddie."

Tom Hermanowski coming out of shadows

By IRA SILVERMAN

Sometimes SU grid fans forget there's a third halfback in the defensive backfield with Cliff Ensley and Tony Kyasky. But Tom Hermanowski has quietly been doing his job, as proven by the statistics, while the "Gipper" and Tony Ky have been getting all the notice.

Hermanowski is currently nursing a bruised calf he sustained in the second quarter of the Pitt game. He missed the rest of the contest, as soph. Gary Bletsch took over. The 6'1", 185 lb., junior will only miss a few days of practice and should be in top shape for the trip to California next week.

The Orange defense was quite vulnerable in the first half against the Panthers, especially against the pass. Things greatly improved, though, after the intermission.

"Coach Schwartzwalder told us at the half," said Hermanowski, "that we were in for a football game. The difference in the second half was that the line was giving a better rush and the backs were more relaxed."

Hermanowski started out as a quarterback in high school in New Britain, Conn. He remained at that position his freshman year here, behind Rich Panczyszyn and Paul Paolisso.

"I enjoy playing defense more," commented Hermanowski. "You get to hit people and it is more of a challenge.

"Cliff and Tony helped me on the switchover," he continued, "in spring practice of my freshman year."

He didn't start until after last year's Pitt game, when Ed Mantie was moved to the offensive unit. He has remained there ever since. But being "Number 3" does not bother him.

"I'm just trying to do my job back there," explained "Herm." "As long as I'm playing I'm happy It really helps to have the two of them back there-they can help on my man."

While Kyasky is guarding the opponent's toughest receiver and Ensley, as safety, is usually helping out where needed, Hermanowski guards the weaker end. Against Michigan State, Maryland and Pittsburgh the Orange used man-to-man coverage, but against UCLA Hermanowski and Kyasky took "sides." This form of a zone was utilized to prevent a long pass, and the safety becomes very important.

"You have to have confidence in your safetyman," said Hermanowski. "Tony and I have confidence in Cliff so we can take more chances."

TOM HERMANANOWSKI

Working with Kyasky, Ensley and defensive backfield coach, Jim Ridlon, Hermanowski became a top performer. "Coach Ridlon knows so much about the position," stated Herm, "that if we listen to him we can't go wrong."

Hermanowski's toughest play is covering the tight end coming across on a split pattern. This is a play where another receiver will try to take him out of the play in order to get the other receiver free. Experience is the key to successfully combating this play, and the low number of TD passes allowed by the Orange this year attest to this experience.

When Hermanowski lines up against his man before the snap, many factors go into his positioning. "I usually play 7 to 8 yards off the receiver, either inside or outside. But this varies, depending upon the formation, down and yardage and field position."

When covering his man, Hermanowski watches the opponents stomach, because he "cannot go anywhere without it." We are told to only look at the quarterback when the receiver does," explained Herm.

Hermanowski, who is one of the fastest Orangemen (10.2 in the 100), is a history major. He would like to teach and coach high school football after graduation. Pro football, of course, is his first choice.

With Bletsch performing so well in place of Hermanowski, his recovery will probably be speedy. "The sophomore defensive backs this year," conceded Hermanowski, "are probably the best soph class ever. They have speed, agility and think pretty well. They are giving the vets a run for their money."

It's going to take a lot more, though, to take away Hermanowski's starting berth. "I plan on staying there all year," he concluded. "I like the game too much."

Sports sidelights

Baseball alum Ed Mantie, who went pro with the San Francisco Giants, hurled a no-hitter for Salt Lake City in a rookie league and averaged better than a strikeout an inning before he was injured in a swimming pool mishap this summer....Frosh pticher to watch: Dave Cohen of Brooklyn, N.Y. He is slated to be a starter...Greg Lowe led the varsity in strikeouts last year with 59 in 65 innings. Jerry Friesinger, who'll be missed, led in homers with three....The pitching staff had 15 complete games last year——not bad for 22 season games.

Senate Senate

Four proposed preambles to new SG pact tabled

By COLETTE STALLINGS

After a short discussion of four proposed preambles to the new SG constitution, the Student Senate voted to table the issue until next week.

The "suicide clause" of the preamble submitted by John Ross, chairman of the Government Structures Committee, which states that "student government shall cease to exist" if the administration refuses to accept as policy "any final result of the duly constitutied executive, legislative or judicial process," was discussed.

"According to this clause," said Senator Ellen Kessler, "Student Government does not exist when you need it."

The proposed preamble and the part of the consitution concerning the executive branch of the government will be discussed at an open meeting next Tuesday at 7 p.m. in 204 HL.

The Campus Alliance Party constitution, which provides that only an individual may become a member of the party, that any member of the party may seek nomination for an office, that nominations must come from the floor of a party convention, and that candidates are to be elected by delegates who are to be elected by the party members, was approved by the Senate.

Commenting on the constitution, a representative of the party said, "This is not a reactionary measure. We are opening our party to investigation if Mr. Tucillo still wishes to investigate."

In the midst of a discussion between the CAP representative and Fred Tucillo, chairman of the Student Committee on Student Equity, Ed Feldman, speaker of the Senate, adjourned the meeting, saying, "The investigation is going on no matter what party does what."

Feldman commented on current action concerning "Rule 1," which, he says, means in effect, "The University can kick you out whenever they damned well please." The Committee on Student Life would modify the statement by adding "through established procedures." These procedures will be codified and made available to all students.

A resolution submitted by the Government Structures Committee that "all student organizations and other subsidary student branches shall have until Nov. 1 to submit consitutions to the Government Structures Committee of the Student Senate" was unanimously passed.

A proposed resolution that "any duly constituted Student Senate Committee has the right to call in regularly enrolled students ... to testify before said committee if it gives proper notice to said student," was declared unconstitutional by Feldman and dismissed.

Appropriate dress for Sunday dinner was decided to be a shirt and tie or a sweater and jacket and a "decent pair of pants," and dresses or skirts and blouses, or slacks and blouses for women. A proposal to write a letter of thanks to Miss Roden, the head resident of Shaw dormitory for her help in accomplishing Freshman elections was unanimously approved.

Tussing: 'self-determination' is key issue in world today

By BARBY GREENSPAN

In an informal discussion yesterday afternoon, Dale Tussing, Liberal Party candidate for Congress and associate professor of economics at the Maxwell School, elaborated his views on party politics and foreign affairs to 15 SU students.

Although Tussing is opposed to our present policies in Vietnam, he believes the U.S. could win the war if there were a change in strategy. The bombing of population and industrial targets should be stopped, he said, and bombing should be concentrated on South Vietnam to stop the infiltration of supplies.

In regard to President Johnson's speech on March 31, calling for de-escalation of the bombing, Tussing thinks there is a question whether this was actually the case. There was a de-escalation in a large area where a small percent of the population lives, he said, but the bombing was increased in a smaller area. Johnson's speech was followed by the formation of a negotiating team to meet with the Vietnamese, a move which Tussing believed strengthened the belief that there had been a de-escalation in the bombing.

Tussing believes the U.S. does not expect the North Vietnamese to agree to negotiations because the agreement was met by tremendous confusion.

In April, May and June the rate of infiltration on both sides was cut down considerably. But the North Vietnamese would not say that they gave reciprocity, nor have they conceded in Paris that they were meeting our demands. Both sides apparently have maintained the same positions they had in the beginning.

Tussing feels "self-determination is the Larvae worm way to dining hall

By ANDRIJ BILYK
Associate Editor

"It could have been the noodles even, how was I to know, anyway, this guy is always looking for something," said Joe Trainor, St. Mary's food director, when approached on the subject of worms dramatically appearing in Tuesday's supper there.

"But I stopped the noodle dish and we checked the stock," he continued. "It was all I could do at that time."

Ross Moriarty, food service's associate director, said that the remaining noodles were shipped back and the company informed of the indiscretion.

Freshman senator-at-large Dick Kane, who brought the tiny specimens to Trainor's attention, found the incident to be a personal one. (He had been eating the stuff).

"They were serving London Broil steak and noodles. The broil was horrible so for seconds I just told them to pile on the noodles. They didn't taste bad so I asked them to pile it on again. It was then that I discovered the worms."

Kane said that when he showed them to Trainor he was told not to worry, that they were probably undercooked noodles. Trainor told him to throw them away, Kane said.

"I threw away the noodles but kept the worms. Later I came back to Trainor with more of them and he told me that he'd stop the dish."

Kane said he then took the "things" to his bio-lab where a microspcopic examination revealed them to be segmented with round little heads.

Dr. Sam McNaughton, of the bacteriology research department, said after examining the specimens that they looked to him like some sort of grain beetle.

Dr. Arnold Kahn, also of bacteriological research, said they were probably insect larvae and Gloria Sessler, laboratory assistant to Dr. Reginald Manwell of the zoology department, confirmed both reports by saying that the alleged "worms" were in fact beetle larvae.

It appears then that "foreign matter," specifically, some part of an insect, did indeed inhabit the food of St. Mary's dining hall Tuesday. However, according to the biology department, such an incident is not uncommon and is no cause for alarm, unless, of course, it becomes repetitious.

A Greek replies

Editor's note:

The Daily Orange invited a reply from a Greek to yesterday's editorial "ADPi shows the Greek system is sick." The following guest editorial from Robert W. Putnam of Sigma Chi is one response.

Virulent attacks on the Greek system seem to be in fashion this year. The Daily Orange has seized on the proposed recolonization of ADPi to make the Greek system the object of its editorial wrath; on Friday the Promethean carried an article alleging that "The Greeks are Losing Control," citing as evidence the fact that of seventeen student leaders "only" ten are Greeks (failing to mention the proportion of Greeks to independents); and on Wednesday the Daily Orange editorialized that "the Greek system is sick." Neither publication, strangely enough, has seen fit to publish a defense of fraternalism.

I cannot in conscience let Wednesday's editorial go unanswered. The logic of infering the degeneracy of the system from the problems to one house is dubious at best; it seems to be yet another example of taking a button and sewing on a vest. I do not know the details of the ADPi case. From my knowledge of the Greek system I would say that it is far more likely that their national council is concerned as a result of a number of sisters deactivating rather than any question of "failing the test of social status." A sorority house simply cannot be maintained with only fifteen active members. But even assuming that the button is well-chosen, the vest is full of holes.

The editorial asserts that the Greek system "is guilty of seeking social status by trampling basic human rights." The evidence for this sweeping conclusion is that fifteen sisters are being pressured to move out of their chapter house. By this measure it would seem, then, that Syracuse University is far more guilty of trampling basic human rights than the Greek system; every year students are forced against their will to move out of cottages. Why not condemn all of Syracuse University as sick based on the Parsons Cottage incident? But there is a further question: by what standard is living in a chapter house a "basic human right?" This bit of name-calling seems almost as extravagant as it is unfounded.

The editorial accuses Greeks of being unprincipled social climbers. Eight times it is asserted that Greeks are devoted to the pursuit of social status. Nowhere is any evidence given to support this assertion. I have pride in my house, and I identify with it, but this does not mean that the system is sick; we encourage brothers to participate in extracurricular activities, but I fail to see where this is culpable; we compete with other houses to pledge the men we consider best qualified, but this does not make us unprincipled scavengers. Greeks support campus organizations and fund drives such as LTE and Campus Chest far out of proportion to their numbers. The recent trend toward dorm councils is in part an attempt by independents to enjoy the benefits of organization long enjoyed by Greeks.

I would urge S.U. coeds to attend the upcoming Alpha Delta Pi rush that more might learn for themselves the benefits of the Greek system rather than relying on the news media.

DOW committee statement

Festival of life

This Friday, Oct. 18, Dow Chemical Corp. is coming to the Syracuse University campus to recruit employees. The Dow Coordinating Committee will counter the Dow Deathmen with a Festival of Life.

Dow quite obviously considers the functions it now serves as legitimate, rational, sane, and humane. Many people, however, feel at least part of the function Dow serves is not legitimate, not rational, not sane, and totally opposed to humane values. Dow's function as a producer of herbicides and napalm for the U.S. Government — which uses those herbicides and that napalm for the genocidal destruction of a people struggling for control of their own lives — the people of Vietnam — is sick and is opposed to life. The Dow Coordinating Committee ranks Dow Chemical Corp. among the great murderers of all time.

We are opposed to genocide and murder —

If genocide is not your thing — join us on Friday as we try to create an alternative for those who are considering becoming partner to genocide and murder — those who are considering talking with the Dow recruiter. Join us in our Festival of Life.

At 11:00 Friday morning we will gather at the steps of Hendricks Chapel to mourn the destruction of a Vietnam village. Then we will move to the Placement Center to enjoy life, listen to life music, read life literature, and recruit students for life functions. Hopefully the Festival of Life will attract all and the Dow Death recruiters will attract none.

On Thursday at 7:30 in Rm. 307 HL there will be a mass meeting sponsored by the groups listed below to decide on more specific plans for the Festival of Life and to make the necessary final preparations. Please join us.

Support HHH

Though I warmly supported Eugene McCarthy for the Democratic nomination, I believe that his conception of the party and of the direction of national policy is now best served by a vote for Hubert Humphrey. Doubtless the Democrats are confused; but at least they remain responsive to serious arguments. In contrast, Mr. Nixon is showing once again that he is not "new" — as in his selective assurances to dealers in securities. I believe that Hubert Humphrey is not "new" either, and that there is a chance to influence him toward decency in Vietnam as well as at home. In other words, the election provides for a real choice, in which the preferred alternative surely is that of the party whose intentions, however complex, are at least clearly visible.

Letters to the editor

Greek system

To the Editor:

Democracy is sick and one of its festering sores is over equal rights. Now that sounds a bit ridiculous because one can't very well knock down an entire system just because one part of it is in trouble. But the Daily Orange is doing just that to the Greek System.

First, you say that the Greek system professes to give a sense of brotherhood and good will. But while we profess this we are actually limiting it to a selected few and are giving our life-blood attempting to climb the Syracuse University Social Ladder. Then you turn around and admit that this tendency to form closed social systems appears inherent in mankind and not just the private preserve of the Greek System. How can you call the Greek System sick when the workings of this sytem coincide with that of the rest of society? Is our whole society sick? Is that what you mean?

I think not. Rather I believe your editorial is a deliberate move to disenchant all freshmen about the Greek way of life. How can you justify such an all-inclusive charge against the Greeks with this one incident? As long as you are emphasizing our terrible weaknesses, why not explain a few strong points. For example: almost everyone wants to be in a group of friends; people they can talk to, be with, and do things with. This behavior is only natural and the Greek system offers this way of life better than most others. Everyone wants a base of action, someplace they feel at home. The fraternity and sorority houses are far superior to the cinderblock university dormitory atmosphere. And finally, there is the matter of the social success ladder. Many important people on this campus are Greek oriented. Many administrators have participated in the Greek system. True, it may be a place where social climbing is available. But what is so wrong with that? Somebody has to be in charge. Some group has to be organized to run efficiently. Take another large group on the Syracuse campus--the Hippies.

They don't practice selectivization or social climbing. They strive for brotherhood. Yet where are they? They are down on Marshall Street grubbing nickels and dimes or chasing after a girl's dress. Well maybe they are searching for their true identities, but what is wrong with being a constructive individual while you are doing that.

The Greek system offers this chance. The Greek system is not sick as some would have it. It is strong and can be made stronger by individuals who wish to be part of a "sick" system which can only make them well-adjusted to our "sick" society.

SG Exec Council

Hicks outlines programs of '68-'69 SG

By LARRY KRAMER

In an address to the first meeting of the 1968-69 Student Government Exec Council last night, SG President Chuck Hicks outlined the purposes and programs of this year's student government.

Hicks asked for broad student involvement in four major campus programs:

Rewriting the SG Constitution.

Hearings being conducted for the choosing of a new dean for the college of liberal arts.

Faculty Senate hearings on Oct. 28 and 29 on the "role of students in the University."

Liberal Arts committee's choosing of the new Council on Student Life.

Hicks then read tentative programs on this year's agenda. He first spoke about a senior advisor's program already in effect, but in need of expansion.

Free University was the next topic. It would, according to Hicks, "create courses students are interested in not already offered by the University, like Black History or sex on campus."

Committees were formed to look into the study of getting credit for both community action taken by students and independent research.

"Students should be allowed to research or study for credit," said Hicks. He then pointed out that only honor students can do this now.

Other programs mentioned were:

Participation in the drugs confeience presently being formed by Peter Friedman.

The creation of a student tax to help cut down on prices of concerts and speakers.

The idea of a coed dorm involving a dorm classroom complex.

The creation of a committee to study the amount of stress on students today.

A book exchange at the end of the semester held in conjunction with Alpha Pi Omega.

Student government participation in, and aid to, Aspiration '72, a freshman-oriented, ghetto—University relation program.

An experimental program headed by Roger Conner that would "seek to involve whites in the civil rights movement."

A survey of all courses, including statements by students in the courses, to be distributed before registration.

A program for preregistration already being worked on which will take some effect soon.

Student support of the National Student Organization.

Hicks then recognized Craig Baumgarten, who related to the council the details concerning the creation of a new course. The course, initiated by the student leaders of Projection '70, will deal with race relations.

SU drama is faithful, flexible, clever in its 'Merry Wives of Windsor'

Dear Dr. Reidenbaugh,

Well, here it is the beginning of a new season for the SU Drama Department, sir. You may remember me from last year: I'm the one who wrote you a letter to tell you how little I liked your production of "Macbeth." Now, since you are still chairman of the Drama Department, and since you are billed as the director of the current production of Shakespeare's "Merry Wives of Windsor," I think you deserve the credit this time for a bright, tasteful, thoroughly enjoyable production.

What I liked best about the production, sir, is its fidelity to the conventions of the Elizabethan Theatre. I felt flattered when I was put in the midst of a "Court" situation, with Queen Elizabeth and her guests sitting toward one side of the stage and enjoying the play key issue in the world today." In ending the war he would first stop the bombing and then proceed to outline a technique for self-determination.

In answer to a question concerning the future of minority parties, Tussing said, "If the political structure doesn't change, it may militate against any long run three-party system."

He feels that national primaries would have a "tremendous" effect on the political system. In a primary there is party backing, he said, and only people with a lot of money stand a chance to win. Tussing speculated that during a primary both parties would split into two factions, one faction supporting a liberal candidate and the other a conservative. Once the party candidate was chosen, both factions would work together to support him.

When asked whether McCarthy's name will appear on the ballot Nov. 5, Tussing said it is a dispute between the letter of the law, which puts him on the ballot, and the spirit of the law, which would not.

A sidelight to Tussing's discussion was his views on poor coverage of political candidates. He feels television coverage has been fair to all candidates, but in discussing newspaper coverage and in particular the downtown papers, he said, "Bias is latent." He was referring to the poor coverage of his campaign and what he sees as a noticeable favoritism toward James M. Hanley, the incumbent congressman.

Engineering and Science at IBM

"You're treated like a professional right from the start."

"The attitude here is, if you're good enough to be hired, you're good enough to be turned loose on a project," says Don Feistamel.

Don earned a B.S.E.E. in 1965. Today, he's an Associate Engineer in systems design and evaluation at IBM. Most of his work consists of determining modifications needed to make complex data processing systems fit the specialized requirements of IBM customers.

Depending on the size of the project, Don works individually or in a small team. He's now working with three other engineers on part of an air traffic control system that will process radar information by computer. Says Don: "There are only general guidelines. The assignment is simply to come up with the optimum system."

Set your own pace

Recently he wrote a simulation program that enables an IBM computer to predict the performance of a data processing system that will track satellites. He handled that project himself. "Nobody stands over my shoulder," Don says. "I pretty much set my own pace."

Don's informal working environment is typical of Engineering and Science at IBM. No matter how large the project, we break it down into units small enough to be handled by one person or a few people.

Don sees a lot of possibilities for the future. He says, "My job requires that I keep up to date with all the latest IBM equipment and systems programs. With that broad an outlook, I can move into almost any technical area at IBM—development, manufacturing, product test, space and defense projects, programming or marketing."

New power base for grad students

By MARTY BLOCK

It appears that graduate students at Syracuse University are finally going to have an effective representative body. The Graduate Student Organization, having survived initial difficulties, feels it has become a power base for graduate students and will increase in stature as the year progresses.

GSO has already put members on the "successor to Chancellor Tolley" committee, and has been requested to contribute to Pinebrook Conferences and other SU decision-making committees.

At Tuesday night's meeting, at-large representatives were approved, standing committee chairmen were elected, and officers were nominated. Special interest at-large delegates approved by the senate were Belgaem Briki (foreign students), Harvey Sprung (Hillel), Thomas McHugh (Resident Advisors), and Marion McDaniel (Head Residents).

Also approved with petitions bearing at least 50 signatures were Henry Anna and Jacques Lebel. Any graduate student interested in becoming an at-large representative may still apply by submitting a petition to Dwight Emerson (151 Hinds Hall).

Also on Tuesday night, nominations for officers were entertained and the following students were nominated:

Treasurer--Jay Morely, Secretary--Marion McDaniel, Parliamentarian--Jacques Lebel, Vice President--John Callahan and Dwight Emerson, and President--Ken Ritzenberg, James Cunningham, Henry Anna, and George Dolch. Nominations will be reopened at the next meeting and, after short speeches, elections will take place.

It is hoped that the Bio-Chemistry, Science Teaching, Zoology, and Art Departments, hitherto unrepresented, will send delegates to the next meeting on Tuesday, at 7:30 p.m. in Maxwell Auditorium.

Alcoholic misuse

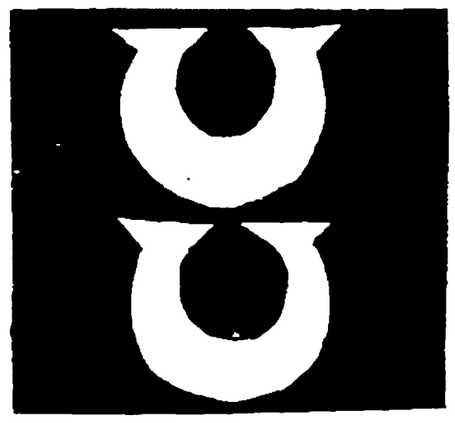
Court punishes student

By DAVE ROBINS

Student Court in its latest session enforced disciplinary action on an SU student brought before the court on three counts: malicious mischief, misuse of alcholic beverages and conduct unbecoming a student.

The first and third charges stemmed from the student's alleged actions during the Pittsburgh- Syracuse football game where he was charged with throwing two liquor bottles into the field behind the end zone.

Charge number two, misuse of alcoholic beverages, arose from the fact that he had allegedly been drinking before the game a private apartment and had proceeded to act "irrationally" by trying to hit the goalposts with the bottles during the game. He was said to have been sitting in the seventh row at the time in a fraternity block.



In what Chief Justice Paul Snyder termed "a prime example of the misues of alchohol as differentiated from possession," the student was placed on disciplinary probation.

This curtails eligibility to receive financial aid, initiation into a fraternity or any other student organization, participation in sports and the receiving of honors.

A decision in one other case found a student innocent after being charged with malicious mischief when he allegedly removed a temporary traffic sign from a tree. The act was found to be not malicious.

[FAILURE]

You'll never get anywhere without it.

Nothing helps a young engineer's career like being given a challenge. Which is another way of saying a chance to fail now and then. To make his own mistakes.

At Western Electric we give our newly recruited engineers responsibility almost immediately. They make their own decisions. Learn from their own errors.

Don't get us wrong. We keep our demands reasonable enough so that our recruits can make their decisions at their own pace. But our thinking is, a man feels awfully good about even a small decision when it's his.

If you're the type who'd like the chance to make your own moves, see our recruiter or write College Relations, 222 Broadway, New York, N. Y. 10038.

A lot of hard work never hurt anyone.

Plan of attack: integrate drama productions with campus

By PATTI WILLIAMS

With a plan of attack, a list of eight productions planned this semester and some innovations, the Syracuse University drama department hopes to succeed in its determination to make the campus interested in its programs, said Dr. Gerald F. Reidenbaugh, chairman of the drama department last week.

"We held an open forum to discuss ways of better integrating the productions with the campus so that our programs appeal to a greater number of students," he said. "The drama department students want the campus to know what they do here."

As a result of the forum, a booth for the sale of tickets to department productions will probably be put on campus, schedules for shuttle bus service to the Regent Theater are expected to be distributed on campus, and posters will be placed in University buildings.

Productions this semester will be, "Merry Wives of Winsor," October 17 through 19; "Captive at Large," October 24 through 26 and 31 through November 2; a one-man show about the life of George Bernard Shaw, November 7; "The Boys From Syracuse," November 8 and 9; still-to-be-selected one act plays to be directed by students, November 14 through 16; "After the Rain," November 21 through 23; a still-to-be- selected play to be directed by Professor Gerard Moses, December 5 through 7; and the Oxford — Cambridge Shakespeare Company performing "A Midsummer Night's Dream," December 18.

The production of "The Merry Wives of Winsor," Shakespeare's comedy, is unique in that the cast consists substantially of last year's freshmen honors acting students.

"We'll see how the honors program pays off," Dr. Reidenbaugh said. "There will be other factors involved besides the honors program, though. Many of the students got experience in the drama department's summer tour and that matured them."

"Captive at Large" is a Pirandello-type play written in 1953 as a reaction to McCarthyism.

"One of the reasons I'm interested in it is that the country seem to be in a similar state of nervousness over liberty and freedom today," said Dr. Daniel Krempel, director of the play.

D. Krempel directed the premiere of the then avant-garde play in 1953.

The one-man Shaw show is being handled by Max Adrian, who did it on Broadway last year. He is touring the country under a government grant.

The Oxford-Cambridge Shakespeare Company consists of students from those universities who are coming to the Regent as part of their tour of eastern United States. Dr. Reidenbaugh said the company is being brought over by the American government to create a closer liason between English students of the theater and American drama students. He said there are few English drama students because there is only one university drama department in all of England.

SU's drama department will also conduct several convocations this semester, to which all SU students are invited. They are held on various Fridays throughout the semester from 4 to 6 p.m. in the Regent Experimental theater. On November 8, Gerald Leider, a vice-president of Ashely-Famous, the largest talent agency in the world, will discuss New York theater.

Among drama department innovations this year is the appointment of Professor Leonard Dryansky as production supervisor for all the dramatic productions in the Regent complex.

"This will create a closer integration of personnel and activity between the drama department and officials of the University Regent theater," said Dr. Reidenbaugh.

This year, Dr. Reidenbaugh also plans to involve more drama students in repertory theater productions which begin in February. A senior, George Wyner, has been assigned work with the company.

"We'll use upperclassmen in the repertory company more this year than before," Dr. Reidenbaugh said. "About 30 students this year will perform in repertory and no other repertory company in the United States has that kind of contact with any drama department. Ours is different."

In two to three years, as many as six drama students could be signed to work with the company, he said.

Five repertory plays will be produced this year, "Three Penny Opera," "Six Characters in Search of an Author," "The Lady's Not for Burning," "Summer Tree," and one play yet to be selected.

Dr. Reidenbaugh predicted, "massive changes" in the repertory company.

"We're going to make more of an effort this year to seek high school support than we did last year," he said. "Two years ago, they came to depend on us but they were not consulted as much last year and the effects showed in box office.

Whether its with a repertory company, television, or even Broadway, finding a job is not difficult for a drama student if the student has ability, said Dr. Reidenbaugh.

"If you really want to act, it will pay handsome dividends but that's the key — you must want to," he said. "You have to have ambition to advance. In business, you can get a job without ambition but in the theater you must have ambition. That's why I like drama students — they're ambitious, they produce."

SU drama students George Wyner and Bridget O'Brien played this tender scene in last December's production of "The Country Wife," directed by Gerard E. Moses. Wyner will graduate this January, while Miss O'Brien is a sophomore.

Reidenbaugh said drama students at Syracuse are different from those at many schools in that they are not conspicuous non-conformists in their personal lives.

"If they want to be different, it's fine but it should be on the stage," he said. "There is ample opportunity on stage. Off stage, we want them to be contributing members of society and all that entails. Difference at their age, generally speaking, is protest without know-how. After they get the know-how then whatever idiosyncrasies they have will be selective ones."

Merry Wives . . .

with the rest of us. (You sure know how to make a playgoer feel good, sir!) I also enjoyed Stuart Raleigh's original score played by that group of musicians almost hidden in a corner of the stage, and the way the lights were kept on in the theater so that the playgoer didn't feel he was hiding from actors. To single out any of these factors for comment, however, is to detract from the total flavor of a production where all the elements seem to be working for each other.

The fact that the production is faithful to conventions, though, does not mean it has to be rigid, and I thought your production was flexibly-staged. There is a lot of visual comedy in it—much of it is slapstick stuff—and while not every trick ticks, the sum total of them equals a fast, clever evening. I particularly enjoyed the duel between the Welsh parson and the French physician, where the former hurls himself backward after his enormous sword.

Your actors seem to be enjoying themselves, which is fine, since it pleases an audience to watch an actor making his task look effortless. (How else would audiences get the idea that actors don't really DO anything sir!) A Shakespearean comedy is perfect for a student production, since it allows for a slew of dazzling, applause-winning performances. There are a number of stand-outs among the lesser stand-outs in "Merry Wives of Windsor": Bridget O'Brien and Jawn Harris McKinley are delectable as the two wives who conspire to fool John Falstaff, the lascivious old man who has sent them both identical love-letters. Dan Ondek, Ron Nolland, Sally Ann Davies, and Morris Vishner are responsible for some magnificent comic bits in the production.

One of the major complaints from the audience was that the actors are speaking too quickly for the playgoer to comprehend what is said. Sir, this is the fault of American actors trying to whip the pace of a Shakespearean comedy and losing syllables along the way; but it is also the fault of an American audience that all too rarely comes out to see Shakespeare, and so naturally has trouble listening and understanding. (Curiously, sir, the first-night audience saved its most enthusiastic responses for a caricature of a Frenchman—Ted Snowdon pulls out every nuance in the role, and earns every bit of applause he receives.)

What hampers your production, though, is the actor who plays Falstaff. I've been watching Howard Roller in Shakespearean drama for two years now, and I've seen him give some excellent performances. But Mr. Roller is playing Falstaff too broadly, as if he were acting before an audience of half-drunk groundlings, and his performance is as puffed-up and as false as the stuffing that goes into his costume before the show. His performance is a condescending one: audiences are too sophisticated now to guffaw at a fat old man holding his foot and groaning in pain. As I watched Mr. Roller's Falstaff I began to wonder where old archetypes go to die when an inadequate performer lets their seams show.

But aside from that, I was pleased. I sat back and relaxed, watched your actors go through their paces, scanned the multi-level setting (not as elaborate as in past productions, but still colorful and integrated), wondered about the cost of the costumes. I had a good time, and I expect more good times from the Drama Department this year. Please don't let me be disillusioned, sir.

Hopefully,
James King

SU stickmen look sharp in fall drills

By LARRY CENTER

Spring lacrosse practice has been in full swing since Sept. 25 and Coach Roy Simmons is very pleased with the prospects for his 1969 team, which will open its season April 1 against Ohio Wesleyan.

The coach was happy about the fine turnout at practice. "55 kids, freshmen and varsity, were given equipment. We've had a great break in the weather with only one practice rained out. We've gotten in a lot of scrimmaging and are beginning to recognize talent and where the potential is."

The team should have good depth this year. The entire attack is back, as is the first midfield. Simmons said his fine junior middie, Jim Smith, "has been out twice observing after having a leg injury, but the doctors assure us he'll be ready."

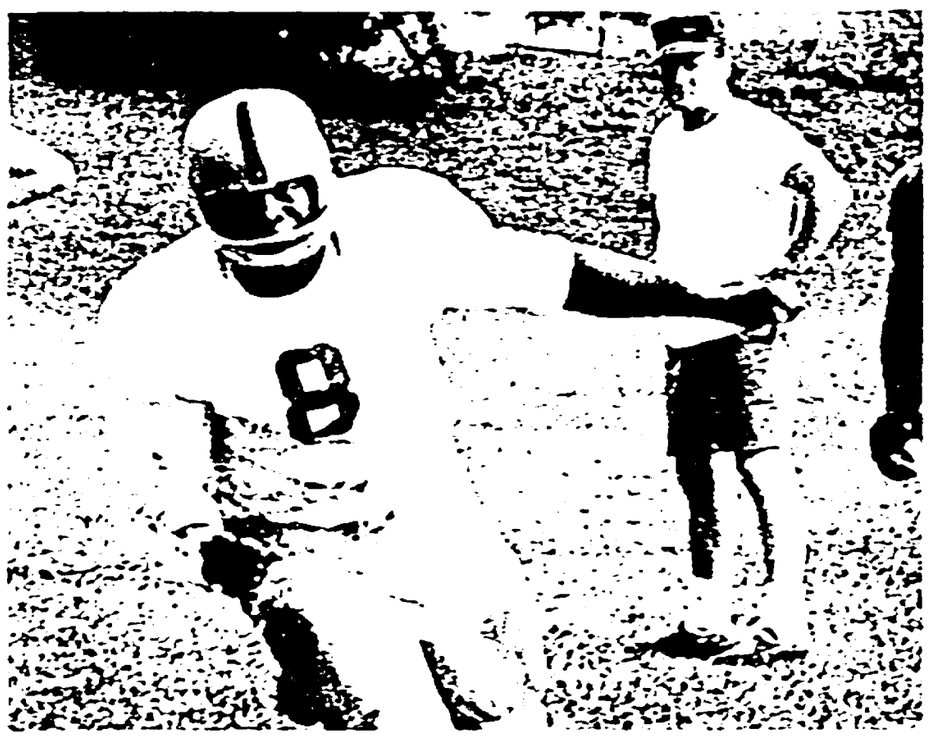
The coach admitted that "we'll miss Andy Lubin--that will be a tough job to fill. Bresca, Farell and John Pappas are also gone, so depth could be a small problem, since we lost eight lettermen."

The attack should be strong. Co-captains Verne Doctor and Jeff Davis and Leo Nolan are back, along with the midfield of Smith, Mark Austerlitz and Dick George, who provide good offensive punch.

Simmons explained that in addition "we have several real outstanding players up from the frosh. Ron Doctor is a great lacrosse player, very adept at getting the draw. Last year this hurt us, we had trouble getting the ball. With a boy like Ron, we should get at least 50% of the face-offs. The offense will get goals pretty fast if they get that ball."

On defense, soph Bruce Weir, ineligible last year, is looking good and, says Simmons, "will push Butch Brown and make a better goalie out of Butch." Cliff Ensley and John Scipione, important on defense, are missing fall practice because of football.

The coach said, "I'm using Frankie Pfau, last year's freshman goalie, on defense. He's a good stickhandler and a heady kid who'll push any of them, except Ensley. Sophomore Rick Kramer, " a real good prospect," Chris Stringer and Ethan Clousner will also see a lot of action.



Lacrosse has one big problem that spring sports don't have to worry about. Eligibility is based on grades for the first semester, which don't come out until February. There is no chance to make up lost credit, no summer school. Thus, Simmons can not be sure of who will be available and who will not.

He said, "If we have everybody here now back in April and they're all healthy, we should have a good team, probably better than last year because of the added experience. We've got manpower at all positions. We can have four pretty good midfields if the soph group of Doctor, Valey and Rick Travers come through, and attack, defense and goal all look pretty solid."

Simmons commented on his players worthy of All-America honors; "Verne Doctor was third-string All- America last yeär as a junior and second or third in the country in scoring with 42 goals. Jeff Davis looks sensational, a great leader. Ensley, Austerlitz and Smith also will be given a lot of consideration."

Syracuse finished tenth in the country last year and hopes to move up. Once again a tough schedule has been lined up, with the first seven games on the road, including contests with powers Kenyon and Denison.

In 1957, the Orangemen, led by Jim Brown, who Simmons calls "the greatest lacrosse player of all time," finished undefeated at 16-0. There are no Browns this year, but the combination of experience, youth and manpower may agian make Syracuse one of the finest teams in the country.

Al Newton not trying to fill anyone's shoe but his own

By MIKE WEBER

The Syracuse University scouting staff may not have known it two years ago, but they pulled off a big upset when they successfully lured Al Newton to the ranks of the Orangemen.

Newton, SU's bruising soph fullback, was wooed by several Ivy League schools, including Harvard, when he played his high school ball for Rindge Tech of Cambridge, Mass.

Newton says he never thought much about Syracuse until he met freshman coach Jim Shreve. "I had always dreamed of playing for Harvard. As a kid, I would watch them play and imagine myself on the field in front of all those people in my home city."

Shreve was notified of Newton's prowess by an SU alumnus, Tom Welch. When Shreve saw Newton play, he definitely liked what he saw and brought him to Syracuse for a weekend.

"I guess it was the players that made my decision for me," says the former All-Cambridge fullback. "They were really great to me. When I also realized that I could pursue my career goals here, I decided this was the place."

Newton says that one thing which mildly bothers him is the constant comparison done by the press between him and All-American Larry Csonka.

"I'm not here to fill anyone's shoes," comments Newton. "I just want to play the best football I can."

"Big Al" has gone a long way in doing just that, as he has amassed 330 yards in 63 carries for a 5.2 average. In addition, he has tallied two touchdowns for the Orangemen.

Newton has nothing but praise for his teammates whom he termed "some of the East's best.

"(Paul) Paolisso is really quite a guy. He runs the team well and his passing has really helped our offense move. And "Panzy" (Rich Panczyszyn) is no slouch either. He came to school in real good shape, and with a one-two punch like we have at quarterback, things look good."

Newton, whose easy-going manner belies his physical size, felt the encounter with Pittsburgh was really two separate games.

"No one was really up for the game. We were so high for UCLA, we just had to come down," he said. "But once the first half ended, we knew we had a game on our hands. We certainly won't be able to do the same thing against California."

The good-looking sophomore has some very wide-ranging plans for his life after graudation.

"I'd love to play pro ball," he admits, "but my world won't end if I don't. My major is math, while my political science minor leaves the door open for law school. So, I figure I've got at least four ways to go after graduation."

That is in his future. Right now, Newton and his teammates are aiming to "bring back the Lambert Trophy and maybe a bowl bid to Syracuse."

Veteran DO gridders meet WAER Wolves on Saturday

It will be every man for himself with no holds barred when the Daily Orange Chickens clash head on with the WAER Wolves in the annual renewal of their blood-spitting football rivalry Saturday.

The Chickens, under the leadership of first-year coach Mike Greenstein, will be looking to make it two in a row over the Wolves, following a 20-13 decision last year.

Greenstein will be fielding a veteran squad with good depth and lists overconfidence as his team's only possible pittfall. "We won't announce our starting lineup until five minutes before game time," says the rookie mentor, "In a game like this you can't concede a thing."

Probable starter at quarterback for the Chickens is 6 ft. 1 in., 185 lb. Ham Biggar. The "Cleveland Comet," who had two interceptions in last year's classic, is a favorite of the fans because of his white shoes.

Bigger than Biggar is stocky center Mike Weber. Larry Center will provide good depth at the center spot.

Top receiving threats for the Chickens should be Greenstein, who doubles as a player-coach and Ed Agranowitz, who also sees action as a poet. Greenstein caught several key passes last year, and may also see some action at halfback.

"If Agranowitz can make the conversion from poet to flanker, then I'll move to the backfield," says Greenstein. "Ed has been coming along well -- he's so coachable."

Evan Richert and Gillie Gillespie are two other versatile DO performers who will see a lot of action. Richert is the backup quarterback, but will probably also see service at end, as will Gillespie.

Abe Wagner and Bob Gallagher join Weber on the bruising DO line known to area sport fans as "The Three Blocks of Balsa."

Dug Gillies, a three year WAER star gridder, is back this year as an assistant coach for the Wolves, and is less than optimistic about his team's chances.

In a conversation with Greenstein yesterday, Gillies noted, "If you guys don't win this year, you'd better give up."

The game holds a little special significance gor the Chickens' Ira Silberman. "I started my first game last year against WAER and got my face pushed into the mud," explains Silverman, "that caused me to be moved to waterboy for the rest of the year."

So the Wolves will have to beware of a revenge hungry Silverman Saturday. Says Ira, "We're going to kick the hell out of them."

SU cares

'Aspira' member is LTE winner

By CHRISTY BYCH

A chapter president of "Aspira," an organization to help Puerto Rican students get into college, is the 1968 Leadership Through Education Scholarship recipient.

Vincent Galindez of New York City applied to Syracuse because he wanted to become an aerospace engineer. He is now leaning toward Liberal arts and considering Law. After his application had been received, he was contacted by Syracuse House in New York City and told of the LTE program. He and four other students were then interviewed by Lester Dye, director of admissions, and Bill During, last year's leader of the LTE fund dirve, and back for the Orange football team. Consequently, Galindez was chosen.

While Syracuse was his first choice, he was also considering New York University because it has a similar engineering program. He preferred Syracuse, however, because he, as many students, "wanted to get away." If it weren't for the scholarship that pays tuition, room, board, and books, that would not have been possible.

Thus far, Vincent likes SU. He knew what to expect of the physical aspect of the campus from slides he had seen at Syracuse House. Coming from New York City, the thought of a large university did not faze him. His only complaints were those typical of many SU students: "Registration was a hassle," and "The food at Watson is terrible." Otherwise, besides a possible switch in majors, he is content.

One highlight of his budding college career is that the first football game he ever saw was SU versus UCLA.

Leadership Through Education was founded by the class of 1968 their sophomore year after an unusually successful weekend. Peter Jeffer,

Dow's foes mobilize milder protests today

By ALAN STAMM
News Editor

Dow recruiters, confronted by a carpet of wall-to-wall students here last term, will be greeted by a "freak-out" as they return today.

The shift of tactics from active obstruction to passive diversion was motivated by student opposition and the protestors' sense of futility.

"Radical action alienates too many students," explained Dave Morton, one coordinator of today's demonstration. "We can probably demonstrate our point more effectively with dramatic skits than with another lie-in."

His reference was to last term's anti-Dow protest, which included a "lie-in" at the Placement Center by about 20 demonstrators. The Center closed several hours before schedule, and Dow's representatives failed to complete their interview sessions.

Today, however, peace groups have decided to offer interview-bound students an "alternative to becoming partner to genocide and murder."

At 11 a.m., demonstrators will gather at Hendricks Chapel to "mourn the destruction of a Vietnamese village," which will be symbolically re-created on the quad.

The cortege will then move to the Placement Center, 804 University Ave., for a "Festival of Life." The Assylum, a rock band, is scheduled to perform if a generator or electrical connection can be secured.

SU's anti-Dow coalition includes Students for a Democratic Society, People for Freedom and Peace, Peace and Freedom Party, Freedom and Peace Party and Students for Tussing and Gregory.

Dow, the nation's fourth largest chemical concern, manufactures 800 products -- including napalm-B and defoliation chemicals used by American forces in Vietnam.

Napalm is a jelly-like incendiary which is dropped from aircraft and clings to anything it touches. It presents a particularly emotional issue to anti-war groups because of its devastating effects. It burns with high intensity and consumes large amounts of oxygen, thus suffocating any enemy hidden underground and charring anything above ground.

Anti-war organizations view the use of napalm as immoral, and link it with their feelings that the war itself is immoral. Lending campus facilities to

WAER begins its annual Folk Weekend tomorrow

By ELLEN BILOFSKY

Folk music buffs of all persuasions are in for a treat this Saturday and Sunday as WAER presents its fourth annual Folk Weekend. From noon tomorrow until midnight Sunday, WAER will broadcast only contemporary folk sounds.

This 36-hour presentation is an acknowledgment of enthusiastic reaction to WAER's regular folk shows, the only such programs on Syracuse airwaves, according to WAER officials.

Requests will be accepted at any time during Folk Weekend by calling the campus station at extension 3801.

WAER's total emphasis of the folk idiom will include both recorded and live music. Featured will be the most popular as well as some lesser known types of folk. For example, such contemporary composers as Paxton, Ochs, Anderson and Gillette are slated for presentation. In addition, featured groups will include Peter, Paul and Mary, Ian and Sylvia and the Jim Kweskin Jug Band. In more traditional areas, music form Doc Watson and Mike Seeger and blues from Robert Johnson will be broadcast.

Highlighting the weekend will be a Folk Concert aired live from Hendricks Chapel Sunday afternoon from 3 to 5 p.m. Local talent will include Dave Maloney and The Down City Ramblers, a popular bluegrass group. Their sound was featured at the Roanoke Bluegrass Festival.

A Folk Mass at Crouse College, conducted by Father Charles Borgognoni, will also be broadcast live at 11 a.m. Sunday.

Another WAER innovation is the exclusive coverage of nine Syracuse Blazer Hockey games this semester.

A play-by-play description of home games will be broadcast from the War Memorial press booth. One announcer covering the games will be Sports Director Lee Shirvanian, who commented, that in his opinion, "Hockey is the toughest sport to cover."

An additional first for WAER in the field of sports announcing is the broadcast of freshman football games. The first one to be aired will be against Army at West Point on Oct. 25.

Olijuin to speak about grape strike

By EVAN RICHERT

A representative of a three-year struggle will be on campus Monday at 12:15 p.m. at the Chapel House.

Uenuciano Olijuin will then go to Grace Episcopal Church at 8 p.m. with his knowledge and experiences in the California grape strike and boycott that began with California's 1965 grape harvest.

According to the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor, "A number of factors" converged on California in 1965, "bringing a tremendous stimulus to the unions, which had been too weak to win but were too much needed to die."

Among these factors were the growth of national awareness of poverty, said the committee, the

Tussing corrects error

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Daily Orange regrets an error in yesterday's report of Dale Tussing's UU Bull Session remarks. We are presenting the Liberal Party candidate's clarification of his Vietnam policy.

A front-page article in yesterday's DO contains a serious misrepresentation of my views.

The offending paragraph reads: "Although Tussing is opposed to our present policies in Vietnam, he believes the U.S. could win the war if there were a change in strategy. The bombing of population and industrial targets should be stopped, he said, and bombing should be concentrated on South Vietnam to stop the infiltration of supplies."

I am not a military expert, so I do not know whether a strategic change could bring an American victory, though I am inclined to think not. Popular opposition in Vietnam to our presence there seems so wide and deep that we could not "win" in the sense of being able to maintain the Saigon dictatorship in power and bring our troops home.

What I did say was that Herman Kahn, a "think-tank" Pentagon advisor, in a book entitled, "Can We Win in Vietnam?," said he thought we could win, if we changed our strategy. One strategic change he proposed was that we cease our wasteful bombing of North Vietnamese industrial and population targets, and that we instead concentrate saturation bombing in the Southern part of North Vietnam. Kahn adds, in his book, that the strategic change could be presented to the world as a "de-escalation," for propaganda purposes.

The purpose of quoting Kahn was to show that the so-called "partial bombing pause" announced by President Johnson March 31 was actually Kahn's proposed strategy change. As a matter of fact, bombing after the March 31 speech set several daily records for missions flown and tonnage dropped.

Discrimination and ADPi

In the letter below two recent Alpha Delta Pi alumnae admit they experienced discrimination against Negro rushees.

"Such occurrences were caused by our inability, as a smaller chapter, to oppose the national office. Such a move would have been suicidal."

We recently published a news story that quoted two deactivated members of Alpha Delta Pi who asserted they were forced to discriminate "in one case by an alum and in the other by upperclass officers."

What is regretable beyond the bigotry against Negro rushees is that the current members of the SU Alpha Delta Pi chapter have been colored as racist. To the contrary, the local chapter has attempted to exert a reforming force upon the national council, and has failed, not from lack of effort but from lack of strength.

The national council now has a great deal to answer for. Four formerly active sisters of Alpha Delta Pi have publicly stated pressure was exerted on them not to admit a Negro. We must presume the alum who advised the officers of Alpha Delta Pi not to accept a Negro must have thought her guidance consistent and backed up by national council policy.

The national president of Alpha Delta Pi has said she cannot ascertain whether any Negro girls belong to Alpha Delta Pi chapters since Federal law prohibits national records from including race breakdowns.

The innocence of this reply is misleading. A recommendation signed by an alum and including a picture is sent to the national council before a member is initiated. It is possible to perceive basic racial differences from a picture, whether Miss Maxine Blake is aware of it or not. Surely she could name at least one chapter with a Negro member.

If an alum can overrule national council policy then it is foolish and negligent for not asserting its authority. If the alum acted with the weight of national policy behind her, then the national council and its spokesmen are liars.

...AND YOU CAN BET YOUR BOOTIES THAT WE'RE NOT GONNA LET ANY OTHER RINKY-DINK COUNTRY GET ONE

Sisters of ADPi defend sorority

To the Editor:

In the present controversy over the recolonization of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority, we, as newly established alumnae, feel that the present actives and immediate past actives have been grossly misrepresented. We do not deny that there have been instances of "discrimination" in the process of membership selection, but such occurrences were caused by our inability, as a smaller chapter, to oppose the national office. Such a move would have been suicidal. Therefore to preserve our Sisterhood, we succumbed to their pressures.

We pledged Alpha Delta Pi because of the members, all of whom we were proud to call sisters. The bond of sisterhood is stronger, perhaps, than many might think. For those of us who remained loyal to Alpha Tau, it will always be there — a bond formed by friendship and respect. Although recolonization of Alpha Tau by Alpha Delta Pi National has meant "decolonization" of Alpha Tau, the sisters of the Alpha Tau chapter we knew will always mean Alpha Delta Pi to us.

AFTER ALL, CURTIS – THE H-BOMB IS FUN, ISN'T IT?

Primary goal is learning Defense of fraternities

By Donald H. Schefmeyer, Sigma Chi

There is an old aphorism especially dear to the college students of the "free" generation which posits: Don't knock what you haven't tried. Indeed, it seems to me that those who attack the fraternity system on the grounds that its members are "status-seekers" who "trample basic human rights" are perhaps not looking deeply enough into the problem itself. And for anyone outside of the Greek system to make value judgements on its goals is a logical absurdity.

In the intervening centruy and a half since their inception on the American college scene, no other college organizations have been so misunderstood, so blatantly criticized, and so totally misrepresented to the public, as college fraternal organizations. When the average freshman arrives on campus he normally has little or no knowledge of the fraternity system. It has been my experience that freshmen regard the Greeks as some sort of anti-intellectual relics from the dim past, primarily interested in having a good time -- a view, I might add, nurtured carefully by Syracuse University's astute and scholarly literary publications. I believe that it is high time that the members of the independent academic community heard the Greek side of the story.

Besides their rich heritage in tradition, national fraternities (including sororities) have retained certain practices and policies over the years which make them paramount in the university environment. In this regard, let's look at a few facets of Greek life which may perhaps place their "social-trampling" in the new light.

Fraternities keep the university's traditions alive. Pep rallies, Campus Chest, the Saltine Warrior, the Crouse College Chimes, to name just a few, are Greek-based institutuions. The vast majority of the Goon squad is made up of Greeks. In short, Greeks have and will continue to have enough school-spirit--esprit de corps--call it what you will--to make up for all of the sickening apathy generated by those who cheerfully refer to themselves (in greek fashion) as G.D.I.'s.

The basic ideal of a fraternity is brotherhood. What is brotherhood? Brotherhood is caring. Brotherhood is trying to put into everyday practice the ideals which the fraternity is based on. Brotherhood is a special kind of friendship which binds its constituents into an unusually close and lasting relationship which does not end at graduation. But most of all, brotherhood is an obligation which is voluntarily entered into by its members to promote learning.

What is the importance of a national fraternity? In a national fraternity, members of each individual chapter will be accepted as brothers at whatever college or university he may choose to visit or attend. National conferences, or workshops are maintained providing the members of individual chapters with the opportunity of meeting their brothers from all over the nation.

Let me pose a question to the most self-righteous and outspoken of the independents: when and if you ever graduate from Syracuse University, do you think that you will ever come back? Categorically, I belive the answer to this question is no. Why? Because there will be nothing here for you but memories of a computerized college career. As an alumnus you will have no ties to the university other than the fact that you graduated from here. Would you honestly come back to visit a dormitory? As a Greek, I can come back--and be welcome--any time after I graduate. Through my fraternity, I will be kept informed about Syracuse, my old classmates, and the various doings of the present university community.

Why join a fraternity at Syracuse? For by doing so you will have taken an important step in the direction of gaining insight into the most important facet of your college career. How? By learning how to live with people. In a dorm if you don't participate in activities no one will say anything to you. If you don't particularly care for someone you can simply avoid him.

Getting into a fraternity isn't easy, you must first be chosen in rush, you must go through a period of pledging, you must work hard to gain the respect of the brotherhood. But, if you think you're good enough to be among the minority that lays claim to most of the pleasure and pain during your college career, give it a try. You might even find it a worthwhile experience. Remember, you get exactly as much out of a fraternity as you are willing to put into it. Anyone for a little social status?!

Flicks?

Dear Film Scheduling Committee:

It is with the sincerest of sentiments that I question your method of planning films and then not bothering to show them.

Friday night, October 11, 1968 there were at least 150 students waiting at one time or another at Gifford Auditorium for the showing of the "Jim Thorpe" film, for the 10 p.m. showing.

It seems that since the film was scheduled at least three weeks in advance-since it was publicized in the SU Campus Calendar-there is no excuse for the failure to screen it.

It is possible that University Union is working against itself if such is the approach which it takes toward its student members.

Maybe you folks enjoyed the concert that night, but my date and I were awaiting a film to be shown by OUR student union group, on Campus.

The least you could have done, as you did all too frequently last year-was to have posted a cancellation notice near the aduitorium.

Hoping this inconvenience will NOT RECUR, I am.

Very annoyed,
Long Evening

Senate

To the Editor:

We are concerned. As juniors and seniors at Syracuse University, tonight we attended our first student senate meeting for the 1968 term. Therein lies our concern.

Ed Feldman, the speaker of the Student Senate, ran the meeting in an extremely inept manner. He editorialized constantly when the comments of the speaker were unwarranted. He railroaded his opinions into the "legislative" body. His knowledge of parliamentary procedure was extremely limited, as was that of his newly appointed parliamentarian.

Unfortunately, their inefficiency might have been due, in part, to the student senators themselves. For example, after discussing a motion to discuss the preamble to the Student Government Constitution for 45 minutes, one senator rose to ask what was being discussed!

It was saddening to see a student action group unable to function as a viable representative body. How can such a group be responsible for managing student affairs when it appears they cannot even manage their own? We are students, and we are concerned.

The Chaumont-Merrill Delegates

Muskie

To the Editor:

LESSON OBJECTIVE: Demonstrate to students the contents and tactics of fascism. MATERIALS NEEDED: One speaker. One group which (explicitly or implicitly) has undertaken a decision. In this case the implicit decision to listen to the views of a political candidate-Senator Muskie. One fascist group which, for whatever their "cause", has decided that a debate should exist after the majority, by their very presence, has decided upon another course of action, i.e. to hear Muskie's views.

PROCEDURE: Let speaker and both groups interact.

RESULT: Students have leaned that liberalism has been used by a fascist group to serve fascist ends. Conservatism can be used in the same fashion. Students have also learned that there is essentially no difference in the hate parties, either the Peace and Freedom Party or the American Independent Party. The only differences are in which groups are to be persecuted. The former searches to persecute the majority and the latter the dissenting majority. Tactically, Wallace is the more intelligent. His program is more easily accomplished (Its easier to get a following to persecute a minority. Even Hitler knew that).

COMMENT: If one believes in the virtues of fascism he should vote for George Wallace instead of the Peace and Freedom Party. Wallace stands a better chance of succeeding.

P.S. It was refreshing to see that Hendricks Chapel was not burned down and the burning blamed on Wallace's people.

Greek Controversy

To the Editor:

It is a well known fact that the editorial policy of the Daily Orange has been and still is anti-Greek in its philosophy, but your editorial on Wednesday cries for a rebuttal.

You say the limits of brotherhood are the bounds of the house. That is true,yet you will find more allegiance and friendliness among fellow Greeks than independents. I cite for an example last year when SAE lost its charter, and the brothers were threatened with eviction. The Greeks didn't simply sit by. Individual houses telegrammed their national and as a result the brothers were allowed to keep their house.

Another statement I take strong offensive at is that the Greek system is guilty of seeking social status by trampling basic human rights. In the case of the recolonization of Alpha Delta Pi, there is no other alternative. The decision made by their national and Panhellenic was the right one. Fraternities and sororities at SU owe allegiance to themselves, but primarily to their national, and when they run into a situation that either means defeat or revitalization, they are bound to put aside their own feelings.

In the long run this means that if they have any concept of the Greek system, they realize that in order for it to survive, sometimes they must sacrifice for a drastic measure, as is the case of ADPi.

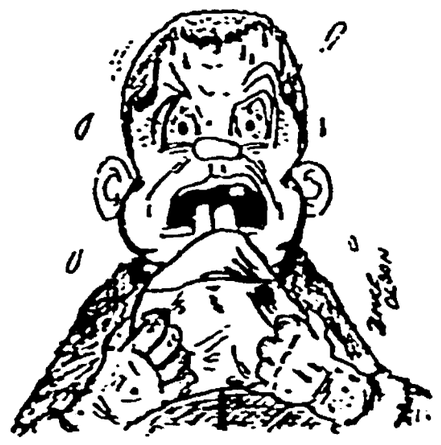
Rather than downgrade Panhel and its national for "pursuing social status rather than the concept of sisterhood," they should be praised for their efforts to recolonize. If there was any semblance of sisterhood at ADPi, it seems strange that they have not been able to pull themselves together prior to this time. Why have most of the sisters quit? Why haven't they been able to get pledges? Because there was a strong weakness in the sisterhood.

What would happen without recolonization? I feel safe to conclude that ADPi would vanish from Syracuse before this school year is over. Would you say that that is better? The existing sisters would still be sent to dormitories, because they wouldn't even exist as a sorority at all. But with recolonization, a strong attempt is being made to save ADPi from such a fate.

If the sisters are not willing to try to help their sorority re-establish itself, but would rather selfishly see it expire because they feel their rights crushed, then they are in no sense of the word Greeks. They should realize they have proven by their own actions that they are incapable of maintaining their sorority, and be thankful that someone has shown the concern to keep it from becoming extinct.

Finally, I would like to say that what you downgrade as the competitiveness of Greek houses to each be at the top is healthy, rather than a sign of sickness. The Greek system is no different from getting the right job, joining the right country club, living in the right neighborhood, wearing the right clothes. Do you knock that? If so, you better prepare an editorial on the entire social system of this country.

The Greek system is not sick. What does a university of this size have to offer students other than the Greek system? A University Union? For those students who have chosen the Greek wya, they know it is a rewarding, fulfilling experience that better prepares one for life. It fosters respect for individuals and for a system. How much empathy does an independent have for the people on his floor? I recommend that the editor of the Daily Orange not knock something he has never tried. It's awful hard to always do your observing from the outside.



Jim Roe
Sigma Alpha Mu

To the Editor:

The Greek system is inherently positive. Like all bodies comprised of individuals it has faults, but these stem from the members themselves and not the system.

Syracuse University, with its "en loco parentis" policy offers parental attention of a restrictive nature with no realistic moral guidance for the individual. The university minimizes the effect of behavior, but the Greek system treats the cause. Every house has academic, social and moral ideals. Every Greek is aware of his responsibility to his house and to the system. You may think this trite. I know it is true.

We are criticized as status seekers squabbling among ourselves in a desperate bid for recognition. Why is status connoted negatively? Status is merely condition or position. Doesn't every Syracuse student obtain a certain status in the "outside" world just because he is a Syracuse student? Furthermore, what may seem to be a mad scramble to surpass other houses in a bid for social and political dominance is truly an effort of each house to realize the full potential of the whole and each member. Each house wants to be the best it can be and success is measured not by comparisons, but rather by mature self-inspection.

Greeks have a spirit and an integrity which endures beyond the undergraduate experience. One of the greatest attributes of the system is that each member can add or subtract as he sees fit without tarnishing the whole. I can only offer my regret that some people have not gained from their experiences as Greeks all that I have gained, and my certainty that the inherent good of the system will speak for itself. Please listen to it.

Let me applaud your editorial on the Greek system for its ability to wade through all the false arguments. Truth shines so much brighter when shorn of irrelevant rainment.

The Greek System:

THE "OTHER HALF" SPEAKS OUT

We "lesser" members of the Daily Orange find it our obligation to remind the students of Syracuse University that the editorials appearing in this publication are the work of one or two people and do not represent the thought of the entire staff.

Aghast at the gross misrepresentation of the Greek system in the editorial of Oct, 16, we find it necessary to voice our own views on the matter.

On the basis of one instance of Greek recolonization (in stories fraught with "unfounded and unfair allegations" according to the members of that house) and a rumor that has been circulating for years, the editor has declared the Greek system to be "sick" and "festering."

When someone states that fraternities are "trampling human rights" by bringing together persons of similiar interests into an atmosphere of group cooperation, he has an odd idea of human rights.

The editor has the right to condemn whom he pleases, but how valid is the judgment of a person whose viewpoint seems to be even narrower than the viewpoint of those he has judged?

Politicians blamed unjustly for tax conflict

The problem of paying taxes has always been difficult for Americans to comprehend. It is a problem, essentially, of conflicting mental images, of conflicting desires, one of which must be rationalized in order to maintain internal mental consistency and to keep from becoming psychologically uncomfortable.

The conflict occurs in that, on the one hand, demands are made on those responsible for the governing and management of society, and yet, on the other hand, no one is very willing to pay the necessary costs to provide sufficient material and training for the governing process.

Americans want good government, good schools, good roads, strong police forces, no slums, etc. but at the same time do not want to pay taxes. The differentiation between desire for goods and services and the reluctance to pay taxes has resulted in a resolution of the conflict by claiming "mismanagement" and "waste" and by throwing blame on politicians. That may be part of the difficulty, but it certainly is not the major factor.

Opposition to taxes is to a great extent a traditional attitude, carried over from days when America was young, individuals were very independent and government was best when it operated at a minimal capacity.

Republicans, for example, seem to run year after year on a program of "fiscal responsibility" (meaning budget cuts) and "lower taxes" or "more tax incentives," never mentioning publicly how this eternal conflict of more goods at less cost is going to be resolved. Instead, they do as Gov. Reagan has done in California -- run on a "cut taxes" platform but increase the budget when elected.

Democrats recognize the American dilemma on taxes too, and without an acceptable answer, usually keep quiet on the issue. This doesn't solve much either.

The fault doesn't really lie with politicians in any case. They are only catering to American desires. The fault lies with American themselves. It takes little time--but great mental effort-to shake off the old concept that "taxes are bad."

The point which must, however, be clearly realized and accepted and absorbed by Americans is that to have a good school, taxpayers must pay for it. To have a good road, taxpayers must pay for it. To have a good policeman, taxpayers must offer the money necessary to attract a reliable man and train him well. It is no different to pay for a good house or a good car. You get what you pay for.

But Americans in general do not take this constructive purchaser-goods attitude. Instead, complaint is invariably in order and the negative prevails. Americans observe very readily that they "paid $3000 in taxes last year" and fail to mention that they took home $9000 and a company car. They cry that government is putting a claim on 28% of their income and fail to mention that only about 7.8% actually goes to the government after deductions and allowances. (Even those at the highest income rates pay only an approximate 29% of their income considering deductions.)

The American tax attitude makes it very difficult to be realistic in presenting and evaluating budgetary problems for the public. The adamant negative approach to payment of taxes forces a continued hypocritical posture by campaigners every election year.

A politician might say, being realistic, "I'll give you better education, better highways, and better policemen, and I'll support a bill to increase taxes 10% to pay for them and their quality." Or another might also say (and usually does), "I'll give you better everything, and we're going to have more tax incentives and fewer taxes."

Which one would you vote for?

'Arabs are not anti-Semitic'

Arab student accuses American press of being pro-Zionist and one-sided

By RONA KAVEE
Associate Editor

"My major complaint is that the American press is pro-Zionist," said Rami Khouri, a junior of Arab parentage. Speaking perhaps for other Arabs living in the United States, Khouri expressed a viewpoint rarely publicized.

Basically pro-Israel, the United States has been "concerned only with Israel" and this concern has yielded a one-sided view of the Middle-East conflict, according to Khouri.

It is his contention that the Balfour Declaration of 1917, in which the British declared their intention to establish a Jewish state in Palestine, was the "first injustice" to the Arab world.

Khouri dismissed the idea that Arabs were always hostile to the idea of Jews living in their midst. Referring to the declaration, he asserted that both Christians and Arabs "welcomed the idea" at the time.

Creation of the state of Israel and the subsequent displacement of Arab refugees in 1948 was the true cause of dissension in Khouri's opinion.

"Arabs have a great sense of pride in being Arab," he said. "They resent the presence of a Jewish nationalist state in their midst." Although they at first were amenable to the idea of such a state, they now feel that "because Jews were persecuted that does not justify Jewish persecution of Arabs."

Khouri does not feel Israeli economic and agricultural success is the cause of antagonism on the part of the underdeveloped Arab nations.

"A different attitude toward life exists in the Middle East," he said. "The primary care of a person is the family unit. Human contact is very much alive--so it isn't resentment against Israel being prosperous."

He also stressed the idea of the Arab-Israeli conflict as strictly a political one. "People don't realize that Arabs are not anti-Semitic. I'm taking out a Jewish girl now," he smiled.

Admitting that the costly wars against Israel have virtually ruined the Arab economy, Khouri conceeded that rationality does not play a dominant role in Arab thought. "The Arab thinks with his heart, not his head," he said.

"It is not the leaders that stir up trouble with people," he continued. "The leaders merely echo the frustration directed towards Israel."

Where then will the conflict end? "We only want the repatriation of Arab refugees," he said. "The tragedy is that the Arabs have yet to learn how to present their case to the world and win their side."

Literature

Prof. Theodore Ziolkowski of Princeton University's department of German languages and literature lectured in Maxwell Auditorium on the Syracuse University campus last Thursday.

Ziolkowski, who is 36, is a scholar of 19th and 20th century German and comparative literature. He has written three major works, "Hermann Broch" (1964), "The Novels of Hermann Hesse" (1965) and "Hermann Hesse" (1966).

He is a graduate of Duke University.

His lecture at Syracuse was sponsored by the Humanities Division of the College of Liberal Arts.

Dow recruiters is viewed as university complicity with the war effort.

Napalm is one-half polystyrene, one-fourth benzene and one-fourth gasoline. It was developed in 1942 by Dr. Louis Fieser, a Harvard University chemist. The United States used it in World War II and Korea, but it is used even more entensively in Vietnam. We used only 32,215 tons during the entire Korean conflict, while Dow produced 54,620 tons in 1966 alone.

Dow has been producing napalm for the Defense Department since 1965, and is now the product's sole manufacturer here. The contract accounted for only 0.5 per cent of the firm's 1966 sales of $1.3 billion. Only about 100 of Dow's 35,000 employees are involved in napalm production.

During the 1966-67 academic year, Dow recruiters were the target of 500 campus demonstrations.

Dow's recruiters are scheduled to return February 20 and 21.

From chocolate bars to Geneva

Student traveller sees Swiss as 'people'

By RAMI KHOURI

Prior to taking up residence in Switzerland, I had always assumed "Swiss" to be an English translation of a word in some strange language found on chocolate bar wrappers or somewhere on the backside of a cow.

A Swiss, or any European, was someone often read about in papers and magazines, but it was often hard to imagine they, too, are living creatures. I usually smiled when thinking they lived on this same earth. Strange how one's mind can be changed over time.

But it was not so much a matter of changing my mind, for my mind was never really made up. I simply ate a lot of chocolate and adore travel posters. What I came to realize was that the Swiss were actually quite normal human beings. And as I realized that Swiss were not merely reading subjects and far-away creatures who spent their entire lives making chocolate for me, I started to take note. The opportunity came about when I studied a bit of their government system back in 207 HL (absolutely horrid place).

In any case, I got rather tired of playing tourist and really preferred to watch them in the streets. So I very wisely closed my mouth, did much travelling in Geneva and the entire country, and just kept my ears open every minute. I watched and listened to the people, read the papers and listened to the news.

In my short stay in Geneva I recalled all that I had learned in four years. I silently went back into the past and quickly grabbed significant facts, forming a fantastic picture of what the Swiss people are like--indeed, what the Swiss on the street really has to do with my Poli Sci 4.

It struck me that in six years, I never once heard any mention of the federal or local government on television. I saw floods, births, deaths, fires, races, accidents, sports, singers, mini-skirts, old ladies, young ladies, policemen, and absolutely everything. In fact, I never missed the government on TV. But I often wondered if the television people were very anti-political. But no, that was not the case. It was the people who did not want politics on TV. They would much rather see new building techniques or the super cow milking machines. machines. The Swiss are not anti-politics; they just don't think one should have politics thrust upon them in their living rooms. They did not want to be bothered with it all after a day's work (and what the Swiss decide they don't want, the Swiss make sure never happens).

Well, I thought, where is the politics, where is this funny collegial executive? It did not take me long to find out, for just as I finished another quick Hail Mary and avoided a maniac in his little English sports car, I almost killed myself by walking into a newspaper stand (very sharp those Swiss newspaper stands). And there they were like fresh tomatoes out for the world to see: Le Figaro, Le Monde, La Tribune de Geneve, La Suisse, La Dauphinée, the many French-language newspapers that were bought as quickly as they could be unpacked. This is where the Swiss dabbled in politics.

Ahah! I thought, I've found it! And I jumped into these newspapers as I did several years earlier into the chocolate bars. I was never satisfied and loved every minute of it. Strange, I said, how I once ruined my face with their chocolate, and now I literally blow my mind with all their ideas. Within the span of perhaps a week, I had almost decided to become an ardent Socialist, Conservative, Liberal, Socialist Democrat, Marxist, Fascist, Communist, and generally an ideological Utopian. I had finally found it, I was there.

One paper seemed to be written by Cohn-Bandit himself, while another was obviously a product of his unloving father. As some papers wanted to have Switzerland turned into a playground for revolutions, others dreaded even changing the traffic lights. In this one small newspaper stand, I witnessed the most fantastic clash of minds conceivable.

The differences were not only in the editorials, but in the entire papers. One front page would cover every student revolt in progress and almost make up a few in the process, while others would report how wonderful it was that the people still make Fondue as they did hundreds of years ago. As some papers talk of nothing else but how the entire country needs a cleaning, others tell how all is running smoothly and what a great thing it is that one could leave for 50 years and come back to the same place. Conservatives fought Liberals, Socialists fought Democrats, young fought old, and men women. In this newspaper stand was a recitation teacher's dream, a lecturer's heaven. Here was every political view point conceivable, every ideology ever expounded.

But as I reached in to drop the money and collect the paper, I found no people inside the pages. I searched that stand thoroughly, but there was no person to be found inside.

Well, I thought, someone must write this stuff. First I learn about it in school, then I pay good money to read it, then who in heaven's name writes it. And where are all the mad socialists and old conservatives? Why isn't there one of those strange little schoolchildren waving a Swiss flag and running up and down the street with Ovomaltine? Someone must read all this and agree with it, so where are they? It wasn't a holiday, for there were many people around, but they all looked strangely normal to me. No student revolts within the block, no demonstrations on the trams, not even a fire to burn an American flag.

And then I was to learn where everyone was, the editors, writers, and readers — the Swiss. And I would grow in time to admire these people.

Hey, that's our job! . . . and unless somebody is trying to tell us something, we don't think we're doing too badly.

Sure, Sun Oil Company needs a lot more people—in Exploration, Production, Manufacturing, Research, Engineering, Sales, Accounting, Economics and Computer Operations. But there are unusual attractions. Besides excellent pay, generous stock plan, and especially good and economical living conditions in the Philadelphia, Toledo and Dallas areas, Sunoco is an exciting company to work for.

This is the company that is pioneering with Great Canadian Oil Sands Ltd. the famed Athabasca oil sands project in Northern Alberta—a $235 million project that can multiply the world's petroleum resources. Also — that sponsors "Sunoco Specials" and the Penske/Donohue team in major auto racing championships to competition-prove and develop Sunoco products for the public; that is planning a new $125 million processing facility in Puerto Rico; expanded its Toledo Refinery to the tune of $50 million; pursues a continuing program for air and water pollution control; beautifies Sunoco service stations throughout the land; and recently broke through the billion dollar a year barrier in sales! Sound interesting? Sun is geared for growth. Perhaps we could use you.

Rod McKuen

Rod McKuen, prophet of today

Restraint unveils restless poet

LONESOME CITIES. By Rod McKuen. New York: Random House. $3.95.

By DON ONDREYKO

Rod McKuen, former stunt man, disk jockey, and what have you, in two years has become America's best-selling poet. Until recently, however, I only knew of him through sporadic news releases andconversational name-droppings. So, when his latest volume of poetry, "Lonesome Cities," appeared, I thought it was about time I make an acquaintance of sorts with this subtle celebrity. I say "subtle" because I've yet to come across a poet who is famous in the usual, spectacularly vulgar way.

My forte is not poetry. In fact, there are times when I prefer a bad novel to a good poem. I have no rationale, only a disposition. Like Sartre, I am so confused by the reciprocity between poetic word and poetic object that I hesitate to call poetry "language." Nevertheless, I respect poetry and those contemporary poets who have not profaned their craft.

And this leads me back to McKuen. For the most part, he exhibits both talent and restraint--two qualities which are lacking among a large number of our modern poets. He has good taste, with little exception. Only twice in "Lonesome Cities" does McKuen irritate my sense of hearing. In "Silence is Golden," he plans a war on jukeboxes and jackhammers, and looks forward to seeing "the worms and the woodchucks dissect their hearts." Such trite phraseology reminds me of the young girl in Huxley's "Genius and the Goddess" who, although drowning in Poe-like emotion, is too inept at the language to turn her feelings into good poetry.

The second instance occurs when, in the middle of a smooth, understated lyric, McKuen says, "Naples is the asshole of the world." Maybe he's right, but he still ruined a smooth, understated lyric.

What surprises me about the book is the continuity of texture and content between poems. Most poets today pride themselves in their versatility. But McKuen proves that you needn't be versatile to be a virtuoso. Paul Simon, of Simon and Garfunkle, recently

Lonesome Cities

There's a few more lonesome cities that I'd like to see
while the wine of wandering is still inside of me.

There's a few more pretty women that I'd like to know,
a bridge or two I'd like to cross
a few more oats to sow.

Maybe when I've done it all,
seen all there is to see,
I'll find out I still cannot run away from me.

But as long as trains keep runnin'
a restless man I'll be,
and there're a few more lonesome cities that I've yet to see.

Product of sex and science

Myra Breckinridge finds her manhood

MYRA BRECKINRIDGE. By Gore Vidal. Little, Brown & Co. 264 pgs. 1968. $5.95. ($1.25 paperback)

By JIM GIES

"Myra Breckinridge" just appeared. There was no advance publicity, no promotion. The hardback edition didn't have one rave review on the inside of the jacket and the only description any place was "A new and very different novel by the author of 'Julian' and 'Washington, D.C.'"

Gore Vidal was playing "underground book" with the perfect promotion for Myra Breckinridge "whom no man will ever possess." (Until the paperback came out it might have been true that at least no college man could possess her at $5.95 a crack.)

A new novel from Vidal is always a pleasure because even when he is at his worst, he's very readable. A "different" novel might be expected from Vidal who never writes the same story twice, except once when he "revisited" "The City and the Pillar." But a "very different" novel could be approached with relish.

Sure enough. Vidal has written the perfect put-on, the underground book to end underground books. Myra is the super hero-heroine. She is born a man of woman and reborn a woman of man. She's a product of Sex and Science, a 20th-Century human being.

There's no simple way to tell it: Myra s mother had a son named Myron who had a crush on Lana Turner; then he got a crush on James Craig. His dentist-psychiatrist arranged surgery ("And when, with one swift movement of the scalpel, the surgeon freed me. . . I amazed everyone by beginning to sing "I'll be seeing you! . . . "). Now named Myra, she began a new life devoted to chasing men, only to fall in love with a woman.
The woman she loves sighs, "If you were only a man, Myra, I would love you so." Myra is hit (from the rear) by a car and while recovering Science fails (or saves) her. Her beard grows, voice deepens, silicone breasts disappear and she wins wins the girl she (no, he) loves. "We were married in Vegas and so were able at last to settle down and live a happy and normal life, raising dogs and working for Planned Parenthood."

But there is more to it than that. Myra Breckinridge is also a great collection of quips and observations. About an acting school where no one ever makes it: "What matters is making people happy and while the kids are here they are happy. . .As long as they scrounge up enough money to pay the tuition they can stay here for life."

Myra observes the problem of communication in the post-McLuhan world: "All bodies and all minds will one day be at the disposal of everyone, and no one will read books for that is a solitary activity like going to the bathroom (it is the proliferation of private bathrooms, which has, more than anything else created modern man's sense of alienation from the others of his kind . . .)"

A friend wrote me that he had read and enjoyed "Myra Breckinridge." He added that his parents had read it, too, and said it was the worst book they had ever seen. "But they did finish reading it and then passed it along to my aunt and uncle, who both said it was the worst book they had ever read. They, too, managed to finish it."

There's hardly a dirty (four-letter) word in the book, but there are a few ideas some might find shocking – like the description of people in a drug store looking for lurid passages in novels "whose crude imagery can be calculated to enliven sexual bouts with 'loved ones' or, as one hippie said to another after sex, 'I'll tell you who I was thinking of if you'll tell me who you were thinking of.'"

Myra's most cogent lines come late in the book: "It is demonstrably true that desire can take as many shapes as there are containers. Yet what one pours into those containers is always the same inchoate human passion, entirely lacking in definition until what holds it shapes it. So let us break the world's pots, and allow the stuff of desire to flow and intermingle in one great viscous sea. . ."

Myra Breckinridge is a freak-out. She's a freak out to show the world that nothing is sacred. Look around you, Vidal seems to be saying, it's a new world. No idea is beyond examining. There's no thought that can't be expressed and discussed. But don't be boring about it and for heaven's sake, don't take it too seriously.

'Come Along With Me'

"Come Along With Me," the novel Shirley Jackson was writing at the time of her death in August 1965, has been published by Viking Press in a volume that also includes 16 of her short stories and three lectures. It is edited by Stanley Edgar Hyman, who was her husband. Only six chapters of the novel were completed--three in final form and three in first draft--before she died.

Miss Jackson read the first chapter of "Come Along With Me" when she visited the Syracuse campus in April 1965 as a participant in the Festival of the Arts.

Also included in the volume is a short story, "Janice," which she wrote while she was a student at Syracuse. In a preface to the book Hyman writes: "'Janice' must be one of the shortest short stories on record. Shirley Jackson wrote it as a sophomore at Syracuse University, and it was printed in 'Threshold,' the magazine published by her class in creative writing. My admiration for it led to our meeting.

Tells what rather than why

"THE LITERATURE OF SILENCE–HENRY MILLER AND SAMUEL BECKETT" by Ihab Hassam. 219 pgs. Alfred A. Knopf Incorporated. New York. 1967.

By NANCY SARGENT

Kazantzakis Zorba will ask his friend, "Why do the young die? Tell me," and when his learned boss answers "I don't know," Zorba attacks him. "What's the use of all your damn books? If they don't tell you that, what the hell do they tell you?"

The young intellectual can only whisper, "They tell me about the agony of the man who can't answer questions like yours."

Perhaps what is most significant about the writings of Henry Miller and Samuel Beckett, exemplars of what Ihab Hassam calls metaphorically "The Literature of Silence," is the total absence in their work even of attempts to answer such questions as Zorba asks. Neither Miller nor Beckett allows himself obsession with the "why's" of man's existence; rather, both respond to the apparently definitive "what's"; and thus their responses are metaphors of the contemporary human condition--their's are flat static words which evoke little but repeated mutterings and occasional laughs over the absurdity of being. Or at least this is all most readers or viewers feel secure in deriving from Miller's novels and Beckett's plays.

Hassam, however, is considerably more daring. His criticism itself becomes a message of hope as he makes of Miller and Beckett odd prophets of the same. Of the author of "The Tropic of Cancer," Hassam admits he can be "tedious, slapdash, repetitious and as a novelist his range is narrow. We sense that his intelligence is not of the first order. And we also sense his courage in the face of life's pain is moderate...Too often his apocalyptic voice appears to betray a compulsive personal need–the need for self-destruction, self-renewal."

Yet Hassam's stronger contention is for the implication of Miller's vulgar vocabulary as it parrots the most disgusting view of human life. "In this century, the immoderate reaction against reason, society, and history which finally swept into a reaction against all forms, against language itself, carried with it covertly the hopes of a saner world." The organic may be gone from Miller's alphabet. Miller himself calls language "a dead form to express dead thoughts." But, Hassam claims "the silence Miller composed out of words proved of major relevance."

The critic makes no apologies for Beckett, though, nor for his own assigning to the creator of "Waiting for Godot."

In "Endgame" Beckett writes: "I used the words you taught me. If they don't mean anything anymore, teach me others. Or let me be silent." Hassam interprets this silence and Miller's as a rehearsal whose "outcome may be an innovation in consciousness." For words, as conveyors of meaning, require a felt separation between men. Hassam's book expects a metamorphosis in the nature of human communication, conscious and unconscious, and sees the literature of silence as a rehearsal for such.

One wonders. Zorba did not babble when his boss could not satisfy his desire for an answer. He danced. Can words "full of sound and fury--signifying nothing" move us to ecstacy?

Restless poet unveiled...

suggested that real poets, like real musicians. are virtuosos. I agree: the true poet should be able to center his entire performance around one mode. For McKuen, this mode is the lyric form.

One of the demands frequently made upon poets is that they be profound: in a subtle way, of course. In other words, their poetry must rely heavily on signification, or instrumentalized meaning, to express ideas with depth. True poets, however, are too greatly aware of the importance of words as objects in themselves to utilize them in such a manner. Their realm is not that of the answer-digest, it is that of the problem-raiser. Chekhov regarded Pushkin as a great poet because, in "Eugene Onegin" in particular, Pushkin knew how to raise questions, not supply answers.

If such a qualification is valid. then McKuen is a true poet. He uses words to recall feelings and moments (the theme of transitory love is dominant): he doesn't overextend himself. In fact, the best poem in "Lonesome Cities," "The Art of Catching Trains," gives us these lines: "Everybody has the answers/ or they'll make them up/ for you./ Just once I'd like to hear/ a brand-new question."

"Lonesome Cities" is a good collection of poetry. And it's nice. "Nice," of course, is an untouchable word in criticism, but I still have to use it in reference to McKuen. I am convinced that the "Nicety" (both nice and subtle) of McKuen is one of the main reasons for his popularity. He dwells upon love, but isn't vulgar. He finds fault with the Establishment, but isn't an anarchist. He is a restless, single person, like many of us are, but his restlessness has not resulted in spite and indignation.

In short, Rod McKuen is one of the few prophets of the new generation who speaks with moderation. But his moderation isn't of the cowardly or disinterested sort. It is as honest and valuable as the most talented radicalism. It seeks out new values in an old way. And for many people, it's a nice change.

Man of strong convictions

Nixon heavily attacks Communism in book

"never a time to relax or let down"

By CHUCK STOFFEL

Richard Nixon demonstrates three things in his book, "Six Crises." First, he is anything but soft on Communism. Anyone who reads the chapter on Alger Hiss can see that his drive and conviction helped save our government from embarrassment and possibly danger.

As Nixon states in his book, "In the years ahead, I would never forget that where the battle against Communism is concerned, victories are never final so long as the Communists are still able to fight. There is never a time when it is safe to relax or let down. When you have won one battle is the time you should step up your efforts to win another--until final victory is achieved."

How would this view fit a president in today's mood of detente and non-proliferation?

At times Nixon's ego becomes a bit too apparent but never would I say he alters the facts to enhance his image.

The second thing apparent to me is Nixon's drive and conviction in carrying out his decisions. "Six Crises" shows in detail the amount of intellect he devotes to thinking through the tactics of carrying them out.

The third important point Nixon revealed was his resourcefulness. He uses all methods at his disposal to gain advantage in a situation. He also accomplishes his goals through consistent respect for his friends.

His reactions in the Caracas incident prove that he has knowledge of all aspects of mobs, ritos, and Communist agitators to outwit and handle almost any situation.

Overall, "Six Crises" is an interesting book about some of the most important and unknown incidents of recent history. In recalling them Nixon proves he has the intelligence, capability and drive to make a successful president.

A disquieting question persists after reading this book as to how in this age of cautious diplomacy, compromise and possible nuclear obliteration, do we live with an uncompromising, hard-line anti-Communism President?

But even this may be better than the alternative.

Failure of Capitalism

Man in society is alone and powerless

THE SANE SOCIETY, By Eric Fromm. 294 pages, $1.45

By ANN CARROL

Possibly, the insanity of our society seems the predominant interest in Erich Fromm's The Insane Society.

Dr. Fromm begins his analysis by considering individual insanity: if an individual can be insane, then surely societies may also be insane. Fromm points to a variety of behavioral examples on the international level, which if performed on the individual level, would be considered to be insane behavior.

Man in his social environment is the most important variable for Fromm. Man as an individual has self-awareness, reason and imagination. He is conscious of his own life and death and is different from animals. The source of all men's psychic forces arises from men's necessity "to find ever-new solutions for the contradictions in his existence, to find ever-higher forms of unity with nature, his fellow men and himself."

As the life of each man is seen to be the process of giving birth to himself, the life of all mankind is a similar unfolding of the development process.

The process involves conflict between two desires--human and animal, freedom and bondage. Once men's animal needs are satisfied, his human needs remain. Man is alone and powerless. Creativity, brotherliness, individuality, a system of orientation and an object of love probide men with the means to satisfy their human needs. Since mental health must be defined in terms of society's adjustment to the individual, a mentally healthy society "furthers man's capacity to love his fellow men, to work creatively, to develop his reason and objectivity, to have a sense of self which is based on the experience of his own productive powers."

Capitalistic society has failed to adjust itself to human needs. The result has been the alienation of its members. Work is performed to make money. It is not performed as a creative or productive endeavor. Security and conformity are the accepted expressions of the well-adjusted personality. In truth, Fromm sees these as expressions of the alienated personality. The emphasis is not on the progressive development of the individual as a human being but rather is on the regressive development of the individual to a prenatal and animal existence.

Love has also been warped in definition: it is now synonomous with sex. Men feel guilty--guilty for wasting their unique talents and guilty for not conforming enough. Because men have stressed the economic aspects of their development with negative human results, they have seriously endangered the existence of their human civilization.

It is nexessary for society to make a variety of changes in economic, political, and cultural spheres. Western man has achieved certain freedoms from secular and sacred authorities but has so far been unable to develop according to his human needs. Men, whether in the American society or the Russian society, have become equipped with great material power but have not become equipped with the reason needed to use this power in the best interests of all men. The greatest danger for humans is that of robotism. Men have a choice--they may choose either robotism and the dehumanization of mankind, or they may choose humanistic and community-oriented socialism or humanization of the present humanoid.

Dr. Fromm's analysis seems at first glance to cover all facets of our American capitalist existence. It places the present social situation in the context of the past and future and in relation to the individual. This analysis covers our alienation, and all of us in the present alienated society seem to be affected with this terrible state of affairs.

The reader wonders how it was that some have managed to escape this most contagious affliction. There do seem to be some individuals who are mentally healthy people, that is, "the productive and unalienated persons, the person who relates himself to the world lovingly, and who uses his reason to grasp reality objectively; who experiences himself as a unique individual entity, and at the same time feels one with his fellow man; who is not subject to irrational authority of conscience and reason; who is in the process of being born as long as he is alive, and considers the gift of life the most precious chance he has." this. Another is given our alienated humanoid form, how is it that we are going to implement Fromm's suggestions for returning to sanity and the human form? Who will make the first steps toward recovery? How will the psychiatrist be able to help the mentally disturbed humanoid find his way to his human form if he, the psychiatrist, finds the humanoid form a normal and healthy state of affairs?

Fromm's book does posit a very useful analysis of a Western capitalist civilization. There seems to be little doubt that our technological advances are quickly bringing men to a point where the Puritan need for work for work's sake will be utterly useless and where men will be able to control their physical destiny as never before. How will men live then? This question Greeks and Buddhists and Christians and many groups have been trying to understand. What is man's purpose for existence? Does a universal purpose exist for mankind? Only God knows--if God exists. In the meantime, Fromm's analysis of this capitalist civilization is very useful in any discussion of men and their societies and man's role in this world.

'dirty little secret'

Book has not 'made it'

MAKING IT. By Norman Podhoretz. Random. 1968 $6.95.

By PAULA SULLIVAN

Norman Podhoretz, the editor of "Commentary Magazine," has written a confessional autobiography concerning one aspect of his life-social climbing. Last spring there appeared numerous reviews of his book, which is not surprising, for Podhoretz is one-time critic himself and a member of New York literary society.

What does Podhoretz have to say? Banalities, masquerading as profound hidden truths. He begins with the eye-catching statement that, just as the Victorians had their "dirty little secret" of sex, our age has the dirty little secret of social status. Supposedly, just as the Victorians suppressed awareness of their secual desires, so Americans profess equalitarianism as they subconsciously climb the social ladder.

How does Podhoretz arrive at this trite conclusion? By introspection. And so he gives the reader a full account of his unconscious scrounging to the top. The reader goes through the sordid details of each A+ in English at Columbia, under such renowned critics as Lionel Trilling, The rest of his "success" route consists of scholarship-financed study at Oxford, book reviewing for "Commentary," teaching in an through his self-image of the sensitive scholar, until his thirties.

The "fully-awakened" Podhoretz now perceives Mailer and other literary lions, including himself the cub, as making a three-point bid for money, power, and fame. It seems that Podhoretz desired to write this book as his latest bid, and wrote about what most interests him.

This book is offensive from one who professes to study a humanistic discipline. Certainly the study of leterature, which affords a wealth of beautiful experiences, is rewarding in and of itself. It is much more than just a means toward the end of social climbing; Podhoretz has oversimplified things. And his selfish and superficial account, in my opinion, has not "made it."

Pumpkin colors and Indian corn

So what if the trees are on fire?
The maple in orange, the birch in yellow.

Who cares if the hills are burning away?
Far-off purple smoking, nearer reds are raging.

What of a full towering oak in blazes?
Heat clusters hung in lucid coolness.

Can't you hear them screaming in the city too?
Each blasted of green and crying out yellow.

So what if the trees are on fire?
Sharp blue fights the singing red embers.

Who cares of the hills are burning away?
Crisp air pinches tingling leaves to flicker.

What of a shimmering field-edge of birch?
The screech of yellow hurts the green, frightens the blue.

Can't you hear them screaming in the city too?
Or is it a different noise you hear?

52-year old novel by Hess finally available in America

BENEATH THE WHEEL. By Hermann Hesse. Translated by Michael Roloff. Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, New York. $4.95.

By DON ONDREYKO

Hermann Hesse's second novel, "Beneath the Wheel," is already fifty-two years old, but until now it has not been available in an American edition. Written in 1906, "Beneath the Wheel" gives evidence of a developing lyrical style which, in 1946, won for Hesse the Nobel Prize.

The novel, set in nineteenth-century Germany, is neither revolutionary nor especially significant; in fact, its story is a familiar one. Young Hans Giebenrath, a precocious student in a village of contentedly mediocre adults, becomes the first of his region to pass a state exam offering theological scholarships. Shortly after entering the seminary, however, he is introduced to the strange world of the spirit and the heart by a rebellious, poetry-writing schoolmate.

Hans' ambitions and convictions are completely shattered, of course, when he realizes that his mental abilities have brought about the suppression of the more important aspects of his humanity. He sees his childhood as unnatural, deprived as he was of the influences and occupations which are generally responsible for a maturing individual's awareness of his place in the world. His father's and teachers' encouragement and task-making are recognized as selfish and opportunistic, serving their own pride rather than the needs of the young student.

The bewildered academician is driven into a state of increasing melancholy by his new awareness, and, after a minor breakdown, is sent home from the seminary to recuperate. Only through a short love affair and his apprenticeship as a mechanic is he able to partially overcome this state of mind, but his frustration reaches its zenith when he senses his ineptness at love and his degradation as an artisan. There is no obvious way out of the situation, and his future can only be tragic.

Evidently, Hesse intended this book as a criticism of an educational system which neglects the humanity of the student: this implication is made clear in the last chapter.

If this were entirely the case, the novel could be considered particularly relevant to our present state of affairs. However, Hesse's story is too romanticized to be effective in this aspect. It lacks the directness of the social novel.

Where it is more significant is in its insights into the dualism of the human personality, a theme to be picked up in Hesse's later work.

"Beneath the Wheel" is a good novel, and representative of the author's work. It may serve as an excellent introduction to Hesse's writings, but, alone, it gives inadequate indication of the abilities of one of this century's greatest novelists.

Rousseau and Revolution

Final volume in life work

THE STORY OF CIVILIZATION X: ROUSSEAU AND REVOLUTION. Will and Ariel Durant. Simon & Schuster, 1091 pages, $15.

By ABE WAGNER

The year 1929 is destined to be remembered in the annals of history as an exceptional year in many respects. Among other timeworthy events, this was the year that a young Will Durant began his monumental "Story of Civilization." In an attempt to write an 'integral history' which would "discover and record the economic, political, spiritual, moral and cultural activities of each civilization." In attempting this, the Durants hoped to integrate these activities into a unified whole they call "life."

In constructing this massive chronicle Will Durant had in mind the goal of "humanizing" this story with lives of some of the major protagonists in it. It is from one of these classic protagonists that the tenth and final volume of Durant's saga gets its title.

For the reader who is unfamiliar with the whole of this work, some further introduction seems in order. In writing "The Story of Civilization," which runs from "The Oriental Heritage" through the French Revolution, both Will and his wife Ariel have travelled around the world twice, and through Europe "unnumbered times" from 1912 to 1966. In going through sixty centuries as well as substantial parts of the world, the Durants have attempted to deal with primary sources as much as possible, relying on secondary materials only where needed. Most of these latter references were in the areas of economic and political development.
