New Florida Statute Allows Limitation of Design Professional Liability

Over the past fourteen years, third parties have been able to maintain a direct negligence cause of action against an individual design professional, such as an architect or engineer, arising out a construction project, despite the contractual arrangements being with the design professional’s employer.¹ A new Florida statute will soon change this law.

In other words, if a general contractor contracted with an architectural firm to perform design work, and an architect employed by the architectural firm was negligent in the design, then the owner (the contractor’s client) could maintain its defect claims against the contractor, the architect (assuming no economic loss issues), and the individual architect personally. Or, in the case of a design/build firm, the action could be maintained individually against the architect employed by the design/build firm.

A recent Florida statute that becomes effective July 1, 2013, changes this common law. This new statute, Section 558.0035, allows firms providing professional services, including design/build contractors, to limit by contract the liability of their individual design professionals (architects, interior designers, landscape architects, engineers, surveyors or geologists) so long as:

(a) The contract is made between the business entity and a claimant or with another entity for the provision of professional services to the claimant;
(b) The individual employee who will perform the professional services is not a party (signatory) to the contract itself;
(c) The contract must include a prominent statement, in uppercase font that is at least five point sizes larger than the rest of the text that, pursuant to this statute, an individual employee or agent may not be held individually liable for negligence;
(d) The business entity must maintain any professional liability insurance that is required under the contract; and
(e) Any damages are solely money damages (the statute does not extend to personal injuries or property that is not the subject of the contract).

The new statute is a significant departure from the Florida common law of the past fourteen years. Now, individual design professionals may enjoy limited liability when working for corporate design and engineering firms, similar to the law in many other U.S. jurisdictions. The law also changes an owner’s expectations regarding who may be responsible for alleged design or engineering defects.

If you have any questions about this Legal Alert, please feel free to contact any of the attorneys listed below or the Sutherland attorney with whom you regularly work.

Jennifer W. Fletcher 404.853.8145 jenny.fletcher@sutherland.com
Michael G. Kerman 404.853.8326 michael.kerman@sutherland.com
Kent W. Collier 404.853.8118 kent.collier@sutherland.com
Jennifer S. Lowndes 404.853.8131 jennifer.lowndes@sutherland.com

¹ See Moransais v. Heathman, 744 So.2d 973 (Fla. 1999) (other holding related to economic loss rule reversed by later case).

© 2013 Sutherland Asbill & Brennan LLP. All Rights Reserved.
This communication is for general informational purposes only and is not intended to constitute legal advice or a recommended course of action in any given situation. This communication is not intended to be, and should not be, relied upon by the recipient in making decisions of a legal nature with respect to the issues discussed herein. The recipient is encouraged to consult independent counsel before making any decisions or taking any action concerning the matters in this communication. This communication does not create an attorney-client relationship between Sutherland and the recipient.